Ascending a broad stairway from the neat granite door way in the centre of the building, an ample hall affords pleasant access to rooms, occupied by the American Board of Foreign Missions, and the American Home Missionary Society, and Committee Rooms, accommodating the New York City Tract Society which occupy, the most of the second story.

At the head of the stairway on the third floor, are the offices of the Secretaries of the Society, ante-rooms for assistants, copyists, agents, and colporteurs visiting the city, and the Committee room. The General Depository, where boxes are packed and sent to all parts of the country, occupies the remainder of the story.

The whole of the fourth story is occupied by the Bindery, and every foot of room is used; in the folding, gathering and stitching department, sixty-three females are now employed, and in the forwarding and finishing department twenty-eight men. Few manufactories present more of an air of neatness, comfort, and industry, than this. It may be worthy to remark, that since the times of Harlan Page, a daily prayer meeting has been held by the females in the Bindery, and a comfortable apartment is appropriated for this purpose, and for use as a dressing room. In the Bindery, are two hydraulic and three hand presses, and other appropriate machinery. To secure the most substantial and complete work, no apprentices are employed in the establishment.

The fifth story is mostly occupied by the Printing Office. Abundant light is secured by windows and sky-lights, the arrangements are very complete. Five power printing presses, and two hand presses, capable of throwing off more than half a million pages a day, are busy in their work. Thirty men and boys are employed in this department. So firm is the building, and so perfect the machinery, that scarcely a jar is felt from the motion of all the presses, though receiving the power from the steam engine five stories below. Much is due to the fidelity and skill of Messrs. Moses and Gardiner, builders, and Messrs. Hoe & Co., machinists. On the same floor with the printing office, a room is furnished for a wood engraver, and a large apartment, with a second or intermediate floor, for storing folded sheets; and all the stories are connected by a convenient hoisting apparatus, worked by steam.

A wing in the rear, of the same height as the main building, furnishes accommodations for drying printed sheets, storing stock for the bindery, a room for three powerful hydraulic presses, and the engine room with a ten-horse steam engine.

Three of the basements are used for storing and wetting down paper, &c., and the sub-cellars for coal and other purposes. A fire-proof vault for storing stereotype plates, extends along the whole front of the building under the street.

The building has neither grates, fire-places, nor stoves, but is heated throughout by steam pipes, or air heated by steam. The rear wing, General Depository, Bindery, and Printing Office, receive their heat mainly from the engine, from which the exhausted steam passes into a steam-chamber, filled with small tubes, through which the external air is driven by a blower, and conducted to several apartments. The stores, offices, &c., are all heated on the plan of Walworth and Nason, of Boston, by steam-pipes, supplied by a locomotive boiler in one of the sub-cellars. A genial and healthful warmth is thus diffused over the entire building, without danger from fire.

Croton water, and gas, are introduced throughout the building, and every convenience afforded for the economical and comfortable transaction of the extended business conducted on the premises. There is nothing for ornament; everything for durability and dispatch.

In all, there are fifty-three rooms, fifteen presses, (printing, hydraulic, &c.,) and one hundred and thirty-six persons, in the executive, manufacturing, and commercial departments, whose entire time is devoted to the business of the Society. Add to this, the more than one hundred and fifty colporteurs in all the States and Territories, and the thousands of Christians who become voluntary distributors of the Society's publications, and some conception may be formed of the extent of the operations in this single department of Christian benevolence.

HOW TO GET RID OF SIN.

He that thinks to expiate sin by going barefoot, only makes one folly the atonement of another. Paul, indeed, was scourged and beaten by the Jews; but we never read that he beat or scourged himself. And if any think that his keeping under his body imports so much, they must first prove that the body cannot be kept under by a virtuous mind, and that the mind can be made virtuous by a scourge; and consequently that thongs and whipcord are means of grace, and things necessary to salvation. The truth is, if men's religion is no deeper than their skin, it is possible they may scourge themselves into very great improvements. But they will find that their bodily exercise touches not the soul, and that neither pride, nor lust, nor covetousness, nor any other vice, was ever mortified by corporal disciplines. 'Tis not the back, but the heart, that must bleed for sin; and consequently, in this whole course they are like men that are out of their way; let them lash on ever so fast, they are not at all nearer to their journey's end. What arguments they have to beguile, poor simple, unstable souls, I know not; but surely, the practical, casuistical, that is, the principal vital part of their religion savors very little of spirituality. POINTED SERMONS.

More than one hundred years ago, there graduated at Harvard University, a man by the name of Rawson, who subsequently settled in the ministry at Yarmouth, on Cape Cod. He used to preach very pointed sermons. Having heard that some of his parishoners were in the habit of making him the subject of their mirth at a grog-shop, he one Sunday preached a discourse from the text, "And I was the song of the drunkard." His remarks were of a very moving character, so much so that many of his hearers rose and left the house in the midst of the sermon. A short time afterwards, the preacher delivered a discourse still more pointed than the first, from the text, "And they, being convicted out of their own consciences, went out one by one." On this occasion, no one ventured to retire from the assembly, but the guilty ones resigned themselves, with as good grace as possible, to the lash of their pastor.

EVIDENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.—The Boston Chronotype says:—"But when we look into the beautiful, simple, natural gospels—sparkling with heaven's own dew, and see the radient face of the Redeemer, as he says, "Go and sin no more,' to the trembling woman taken in adultery, and when we look again into the world and see the humble Washingtonian dividing his last loaf with a fallen brother, saying, 'Cheer up now, put your name with ours, and we'll bury up all the past, and you shall be a man again,' or when we see, as thank God often we do, the rich and learned man devoting himself to daily and nightly toil to heal and comfort the sick or relieve the poor, or when we see a minister of the gospel laying down his life in a loathsome prison, that the slave may be free, we rejoice in Christianity as an achieved fact, which no depravity of men or devils can destroy."

AN UNFAITHFUL MOTHER.—The mother of a rising family was visited by her pastor. Considerations drawn from time and eternity, from heaven and hell, failed to reach her conscience, which seemed to be encased in a triple shield of adamant, until the clergyman, as he arose to depart, exclaimed, "Well, madam, if you, a mother, be indifferent to the welfare of your children, and do not pray for them, who will? The right key was touched. "Very true," said she, her eyes filled with tears, "if mothers monsters prove, what can be expected from others!" By her request, he was now detained to address the throne of grace on behalf of her family. "Remember my children," said she, "and O! remember their unfaithful mother!"

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, February 11, 1847.

HOW WAS THE SABBATH CHANGED?

Mr. Brown's Lecture on Sunday evening last was in continuation of this subject. He had previously shown in part the process by which the Sunday festival came to be substituted in place of the Bible Sabbath;—that it was by the "working" of the "mystery of iniquity," which had begun its movements even in the time of the apostles; that the antiquity of the festival was but a poor argument for its apostolic origin, since the celebration of that strictly Jewish festival, the Passover, dated quite as far back; and that since the principles of Popery were all ready for a rapid development before God's inspired ministers were taken from the earth, the Sunday festival was just as likely to be one of the forms in which those principles were developed, as it was to be a divinely-authorized institution. In view of these considerations, he must look upon those who observe the first day of the week as symbolizing with Popery. Though they might be honestly mistaken, he could not regard that as any justification. The means of knowledge are accessible, and God has declared, "In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

The lecturer then proceeded to consider the historical developments concerning the progress of the Sunday festival from the time of Constantine. The ecclesiastical power was consolidated with the civil under his reign, and sent forth those edicts which stigmatized Sabbath-keeping as Judaizing, and admonished all Christians to "have nothing in common with that most odious brood, the Jews." Soon afterwards the council of Laodicea poured out its anathema against those who should presume to honor God's ancient institution by resting from their labors. By such means the Sabbath was brought into disrepute, while the Sunday was made a day of great dignity. This change, however, was not without much trouble. No doubt the trouble would have been far greater, if the modern notion of its being the Sabbath had been advocated. But it seems to have been regarded as a mere festival, not of divine appointment, but voluntarily undertaken by the churches. In proof of this point, many reliable authorities were quoted. Chrysostom, speaking of the time devoted to religious purposes, says it was "a very small part of the day;" Origen limits it to "one or two hours of the day;" and Heylin, who collected all these authorities together, maintained that this festival was exalted to its high position simply by civil and ecclesiastical influence, by which means it might at any time be taken quite away, or settled upon another day—"a power," says he, "which no man will presume was ever challenged by the Jews over the Sabbath." Indeed, when closely scanned, all the quotations from the writers of this period presented by the advocates of the first day of the week, are perfectly consistent with the historical fact that only a small portion of the Sunday was occupied in worship, while the remainder was freely used for "honest recreations."

In the fifth century lived and wrote St. Austin, who, speaking of the Sacrament, says it was not confined to any one day in particular, but administered indifferently on all alike, except in some few places, where it was restrained to the Sunday. And Socrates, speaking of the custom at that time, says that "all the churches throughout the world do celebrate and receive the holy mysteries every Sabbath day after other." These passages are quite as good proof that the Sabbath was then regarded according to the spirit and scope of the fourth commandment, as they are of the sabbatic character of the Sunday—nay better, since we have abundant evidence that many good people did engage in their labors on Sunday after partaking of the sacrament.

In the sixth century, as the time approached for the Roman Pontiff to be proclaimed universal Bishop and Head of the Churches, new notions began to be broached. Religious teachers were found urging a stricter regard for Sunday, and maintaining that God himself had visited with sore judgments those who had presumed to slight it. But these superstitious notions being found insufficient, the aid of councils was called in. Two or three were held at intervals not very far remote from each other, all having an eye to the enforcing of the Dominical day. That at Mascon, speaking of this day, declared the power of the council to bridle Christians that they should do no ill. The decree then went on to enjoin the strict observance of the day, and to forbid the husbandman to "yoke his oxen for their daily work." It acknowledged that "the Lord did not exact the celebration of the Dominical day by a corporal abstinence from labor, yet enjoined it under severe penalties. The penalty affixed by this council of Mascon to labor on Sunday, was that the husbandman should be corporally punished, while the clergyman, or monk, should be six months separated from his congregation.

The lecturer then glanced hastily at the different steps by which the Sunday festival had been exalted above the Sabbath, with a view to show how perfectly the prophecy of Daniel in relation to "changing times," had been fulfilled. He expressed his wish that God might hasten the completion of "the time, and times, and the dividing of time," when this plant that our heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up, and when the Sabbath of the Lord our God shall be restored to its proper honor, or else be fulfilled in the everlasting Sabbath which remains for the people of God.

The concluding part of the lecture was devoted to a consideration of the question how extensively the Sabbath was observed, during the early ages of the church, according to the scope of the fourth commandment, as a day of rest from all servile labor. Several quotations were introduced. Socrates tells us "that Christians over the world, excepting those of Alexandria and Rome, set apart as well Saturday as Sunday for religious uses." Sozomen has the same exception of Rome and Alexandria, but says that "all or most of the other churches carefully observed the Sabbath." Gregory of Nyssa expostulates thus, "With what eyes can you behold the Dominical day, when you despise the Sabbath? Do you not perceive that they are sisters, and that in slighting the one you affront the other?" Athanasius says, "We assemble on Saturday, not that we are affected with Judaism, but to worship Jesus the Lord of the Sabbath." Other quotations were introduced; among which was one from Grotius, stating that the Christians kept holy the Sabbath, and had their assemblies on that day, in which the law was read to them, which custom remained till the time of the council of Laodicea, who then thought meet that the gospels also should be read on that day. Another quotation was given from Brerewood, who says that the ancient Sabbath remained and was observed by the Eastern Churches three hundred years after our Saviour's passion. From these and similar facts the lecturer argued that the Sabbath had been more or less observed through all ages of the church, although he would not pretend to say exactly with what degree of strictness.

[It was Mr. Brown's intention to have concluded the series with this lecture; but as he had not been able to go through the subject, he gave notice of another lecture on Sunday evening next, at 7 1-2 o'clock.]

LAX PRINCIPLES.

The arguments adduced by Mr. Kincaid and others, for the observance of the first day of the week as a Christian Sabbath, tend strongly to subvert the design of the sabbatic institution, and show plainly that they have nearly lost sight of its primitive character, and of the claims by which it was enjoined upon MAN. They resort chiefly to the example of the apostles and primitive churches, in meeting on a specified day to engage in acts of Christian worship, for the authority and design of the Christian Sabbath! Of course, if this be the authority and design, it is a mere go-to-meeting day—a mere expedient—a day to engage in acts of Christian worship. Thus Christian people regard it; and on those who do not go to meeting, it has no religious influence. Men who have not embraced the Christian institutions, feel little or no obligation to venerate it. I have long observed, that where this view of the subject obtains considerable prominence, no sanctity is attached to the DAY. Any chores that do not particularly clash with attendance upon public worship, are regarded as allowable on that day—cleaning shoes, cutting wood, ironing clothes, gathering vegetables, putting up fences, trimming trees, pulling up weeds from the garden, purchasing candies and cakes to appease crying children, riding out in parties of pleasure, and many other like things, have I often seen among church members. Indeed, an otherwise very worthy minister of a Christian church recently told me, that he regarded such things as no disparagement to a Christian man's character, where they were not allowed to interfere with attendance upon the appointed meetings of the church.

It has ever appeared to me, that the sanctity of the day is a radical part of the primitive sabbatic institution and of the sabbatic law. The book of Genesis says, "God blessed the seventh DAY, and sanctified IT." The fourth commandment says, "The Lord blessed the Sabbath DAY, and hallowed IT." With this agrees the preceptive part of the law—"Remember the Sabbath DAY, to keep IT HOLY." "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," is not a parallel passage; it does not meet the spirit or the letter of the fourth commandment; it is applicable only to local circumstances, at times special or indifferent. But the fourth commandment specifies a regular periodical time; and enjoins exercises for the sanctification of it in all places and circumstances. One is, "Remember the Sabbath day." Remember God's hallowed, blessed Sabbath day! The other is, "Keep it holy!" or as it is expressed, Jer. 17: 22, "Hallow ye the Sabbath, day as I commanded your fathers." To meet this feature of it, Jehovah says, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; WHEREFORE the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." Here it is plainly God's rest day that is celebrated. Public worship is often attended without reference to the Sabbath of Jehovah. It is not necessarily connected with it. If it were public worship principally which is enjoined by the law, there had been no need for the strict prohibition of labor. If animal rest had been the chief design of the law, there could have been no relevancy in referring to Jehovah's rest, for he rested not from weariness or exhaustion, nor for his own refreshment of body. The Lord rejoiced over the works of his hands; and that man might know his Maker and rejoice in his holy name, he sanctified the Sabbath day, and taught man to "call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable." Is. 58: 13. In the same verse, Jehovah calls it "my holy day." Modern divines say, "The holy REST itself is one thing; the DAY on which we are to rest quite another." Jehovah (Ex. 31: 13) calls the Sabbath a SIGN. Modern teachers call it a day for performing acts of Christian worship. Jehovah said to Israel, "My Sabbaths ye shall keep, ... that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you." Thus plainly do the holy Scriptures teach that the sabbatic institution was made for a sign to man, that he might, venerating it, know the Lord that doth sanctify him. It is Jehovah's monumental witness to the world, that he, the Creator, is the rightful possessor and ruler thereof; he alone, by his own institutions, doth sanctify man. Human observances, originating in a doubtful expediency, can never make man holy in the eyes of his Creator.

How far modern teachers make void the commands of God by their traditions, let the reader judge. S. D.

MATTERS AND THINGS AT ALBANY.

The State Library---License Report---Slavery---Our Petitions.

ALBANY, Feb. 5, 1847.

The rooms occupied by the State Library are directly above the Assembly Chamber, and cover the same area. The Library is open to any who wish to examine it or read. The most attractive part of it is the six volumes presented to the State by the King of Prussia in return for the Natural History of this State. These volumes vary from two to nearly three feet in length, with proportional width. They are most elegantly bound, and fastened with gold clasps. The paper is equal to the best Bristol board, with gilt edges. Three of them are architectural, giving views of mansions, palaces, churches, bridges, and gardens, in which the ground works, the inside and outside views, are given, exhibiting the style of the architecture. The plates and printing are in the highest style of the art. The other three relate to Pompeii and Herculaneum. Nothing can exceed the richness and perfection of the views taken from the ruins of these cities. These being all facsimile representations, show the perfection which was attained in that time in mosaic, sculpture, frescoes, &c. The combination of colors, in many of the paintings, exceed almost any thing of modern times, and their continuance for so many years after the destruction of those cities, in so perfect a state, is the best evidence of their skill. It will be difficult for modern artists to even equal most of the specimens contained in the book. The sculpture cannot be surpassed, unless it should be in throwing about it more drapery, most of the figures being in a state of nudity. So highly are these books prized, that they are not to be seen except from 11 to 12 o'clock A. M. And then no one is permitted to handle them but the Librarian, who carefully turns the leaves for those who wish to see them. They are esteemed a very valuable addition to the Library The Law Library, which is connected with the miscellaneous by an ante-room, in which is a good variety of maps, is on the north of the Senate Chamber, and occupies two stories. In this part of the Library there are between seven and eight thousand volumes. In the miscellaneous department, there are nine thousand volumes; making in all over sixteen thousand volumes.

A vigorous effort is being made by the rummies, throughout the State, to secure the repeal of the present Excise Law; and it is more than hinted that fraud is used in this matter. A member from Oneida, a few days since, stated that a petition had been sent here from Utica, containing names of persons who could not be found in Utica, and the names of persons who were dead. I learned from a member of the Committee to which those petitions are referred, that a majority of the members of the Committee were in favor of granting their request, and repealing the law. E. C. Delavan and Azor Tabor have been laboring here to oppose this measure. It is hardly probable that the repeal will be effected; yet the friends of temperance should rally, and send in a flood of remonstrances. A respectable number of petitions have been presented, for the extension of this excise law to the city of New York.

The State of New York has acquitted itself nobly relative to the extension of slavery over any new territory that may be acquired. In both Houses the vote was given with overwhelming majorities; there being only nine in the Assembly, and three in the Senate, to record their votes in the negative. It would be such an anomaly to see our rulers stand up like men, unflinching to the last, in the advocacy and defense of human rights, that it is impossible to divest one's self of the fear, that after all there may not be found enough to carry these salutary and righteous beginnings to a glorious triumph. President Polk and his friends will care but little for the army and the war, if they are not to add to the slave power.

Our Petitions are all referred to the Judiciary Committee in the Senate. It was designed to have them referred to the Committee on Charitable and Religious Societies. Hon. Mr. Beach presented the first petition, and moved its reference to the last-mentioned Committee. To this Mr. Barlow objected. Mr. Beach thought it the appropriate Committee, and desired that it might be so referred. Mr. Barlow persisted in his objection, and said that if it was like the petitions of last year, it involved matter that the Judiciary Committee could best determine; and also that it was probable the petitioners did not understand the difficulties involved in the question. So the petition, with all others, is referred according to his wish. It has been suggested to me by those who have the best means of knowing, that Mr. Barlow has more officiousness than influence in the Senate. The Judiciary Committee consists of Messrs. Hand, Lester, and Spencer. With the latter two I have had an interview; and though they find difficulties in the way of granting our petitions, they have agreed to carefully consider the subject, and do the best they can for us. I have been promised the privilege of explaining our request before the Committee. It is probable that their report, when made, will be adopted, as it is considered one of the strongest Committees in the Senate. Before the reference of our petitions, I had an interview with a member of the Committee on Charitable and Religious Societies, who suggested that a pinch of snuff would be a sufficient compensation for what sin we should commit when the laws compel us to violate our consciences. From that time I thought our interests as safe in the hands of the Judiciary Committee. Again I say, remember your petitions, and send them on immediately, as before directed. I am more than ever persuaded that our petitions must all be for one object, or we shall certainly succeed in none. And our hopes of success in our petitions for protection, are doubtful at best. It will be impossible to obtain any place for a Sabbath Lecture here, if it should be desirable, short of hiring some public Hall for that purpose. Such a thing would operate unfavorably in the present state of matters, but might be advisable at some later time. On the presentation, on the 5th inst., by Mr. Beach, of the petition of several hundred inhabitants of Jefferson County for relief to Seventh-day Baptiss, some inquiries were made, when it was suggested by one of the Senators, that this petition grew out of the decision of Judge Bronson relative to the law of 1839.

A petition of 6,500 inhabitants of the city of New York was presented to-day, by Mr. Wenman of New York, against the repeal of the present excise law and for its extension to New York. So large a petition (being a roll some six inches in diameter) created quite a sensation in the House. J. BAILEY.

MATTERS AT TRENTON, N. J.

TRENTON, N. J., 4th of 2d mo., 1847.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I presume your readers, many of them, will be anxious to hear what the Legislature of New Jersey is doing in reference to the Bill of Equal Rights, which they so unceremoniously turned out of doors last winter. As I happen to be at Trenton just now, I have interested myself to learn something about it. Within the last two weeks, several petitions have been presented from your people, for a repeal or alteration of the existing laws, so as to allow the observers of the seventh day their just, equal, and constitutional rights. These petitions were referred to Select Committees, one in the Senate, and another in the Lower House. As the Committee of the Senate were first in the order of time, they have prepared a Report and a Bill, which were read the first time last fifth-day, and ordered to be printed for a second reading. To-day copies were distributed to each member of both Houses. As the Senate is not in full attendance, the Chairman of the Committee thinks it best to postpone the second reading until the members are more generally present. It is a very respectable document, printed in pamphlet form, and does good justice to your people, so far as the Report is concerned. The Bill I can say but little about, except that it appears adapted to afford all the relief your people ask, from the Act entitled "An Act for the Suppression of Vice and Immorality," short of repealing the whole thing. I conversed with a number of the members, the Committees of both Houses, and other distinguished civilians, at this seat of the Solons; and I find one common wish to afford constitutional relief to all observers of the seventh-day Sabbath. But the general opinion is, that the Sunday Laws are as potent to prevent vice and immorality as the charms of necromancers were to prevent all human maladies in days of yore. Matthew Hopkins, the witch-finder, did not do a better service to society in bringing witches to public execution, than these laws do in bringing heretical Sunday-workers to public punishment at the present day. And as this is the current sentiment of orthodox theologians of these times, and popular feeling goes so much with it, that if the members of the Legislature had to adjust a safety-valve to Mount Etna they could hardly be more afraid of "THE CONSEQUENCES." What, therefore, will be the result of your application to the Legislature just now, remains to be seen; but I think it cannot fail to do good to your people, and the world. It will at least form an avalanche in that crumbling process by which old prejudices are fast falling before the influences of heaven's light and heat.

Yours respectfully, Q. N.

ANTI-SLAVERY IN NEW JERSEY.—We learn from a correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, that the New Jersey State Anti-Slavery Society held a meeting at Trenton on the 29th of January. Strange to tell, no public building could be procured to assemble in. The Town Hall was applied for, but a majority of the city Fathers refused to grant it, for fear that there would be a mob. The County Court House could be had for any purpose in which the people were interested, but not for the purpose of discussing the evils of slavery. The use of a church was requested, but the members could not agree about granting it. In these circumstances, the Society was obliged to convene in the second story of a building occupied as a store, where the only seats were carpets, coffee-bags, and bales of merchandize. The progress of the cause during the past year was there reviewed, and plans for future movements determined upon. It was agreed to call conventions as often as expedient this year throughout the State; to prosecute the suit now pending before the "Court of Errors;" to petition the Legislature to pass resolutions relative to the extension of slavery over new territory, similar to those adopted by New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio; to disseminate information through every possible channel; and finally, to redouble diligence in every department of labor, in hope of the "good time coming," when the doors of every public building in the town shall be open, and the people throng to hear.

☞ It was our intention to have noticed the following from the N. Y. Evangelist somewhat at large. But, upon more mature reflection, we have concluded simply to transfer it to our columns, and let it speak for itself. We find it impossible to treat it as it deserves, such is the infirmity of our nature, without descending to a spirit ill becoming the conductors of a religious journal. A manly, generous, and Christian-like manner of discussing the question that separates us from other orders, would never be avoided on our part. On the contrary, it would be hailed with satisfaction, whether coming from the Evangelist, or any other source. But these mean attempts to injure us, by insinuating that our aim is to injure the public morals and the good of community, coupled as they are with the most studied care to let the discussion of the subject alone, must be suffered to pass with as few remarks as justice to the cause will admit. Future generations will look back with wonder upon the bigoted bitterness cherished against us in this age—a bitterness that cannot speak even of our attempts to carry the gospel to the heathen, without misrepresenting us:—

"MISSION OF THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.—The first mission to the heathen ever sent by this denomination, sailed from this city about a week since, destined to Canton, China. Two clergymen, and their wives, Rev. Mr. Carpenter and Rev. Mr. Wardner, were the missionaries, who were ordained to the work in Plainfield, N. J., on the 31st ult. We trust this precious gift to the perishing will be twice blessed; and that this beginning will be followed up with an energy of faith and self-denial, which may be an example to all the church. Undoubtedly our brethren will find it far more conducive to their personal piety and conscious good feeling, than any attempt to injure the public morals and the good of the community, by opposing well-meant efforts to secure the benefits of some day of religious rest, even if it should not be the Sabbath."

OBJECT OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—A meeting is to be held in New York, during the present month, for the purpose of organizing an American Branch of the Evangelical Alliance. The original object which the general Alliance proposed, was to contradict the assertion of Rome that there is no union among Protestants, by manifesting the real brotherly feeling of evangelical Christians towards each other. If this is to continue to be its principal object, we confess that we can see but little reason for the organization of branches in the different countries. The meeting in London probably secured that object as well as it would be secured by the existence of half-a-dozen permanent branches; perhaps even better, since their multiplication will increase the danger of differences. But we have seen another object stated in connection with the notices for a meeting in New York; and that is, to secure liberty of conscience in matters of religion throughout the world. This is an object worthy of effort. If the members of the Evangelical Alliance would heartily embrace and consistently pursue it, we should feel that they had something to do, and could bid them God speed. We shall wait and watch with much anxiety for the evidences that the importance of this object is appreciated by them, and that they are determined to pursue it.

INTEMPERANCE IN ENGLAND.—Rev. John Marsh, Secretary of the American Temperance Union, says that in Great Britain, with a population of 27,000,000, there is consumed annually 500,000,000 gallons of beer, 20,000,000 gallons of brandy, and 12,000,000 gallons of wine. One result is, that there are in that country 600,000 drunkards, of whom 60,000 die annually. There are three hundred trades in which the fine imposed upon workmen for any failure in duty, or injury done to any part of the work, is a pint of beer. In seven trades alone this fine amounted to £20,000 in one year. The laboring people in manufacturing towns are generally paid off on Saturday night, which has led to the custom of devoting that night to intemperance. In Glasgow it is estimated that 30,000 people retire to bed every Saturday night in a state of intoxication. Who can wonder that poverty and crime abound where such a state of things exists?

SLAVEHOLDERS EXCLUDED FROM THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The London Anti-Slavery Reporter for December says, that the British District Organization of the Alliance was lately formed at Manchester, and that it voted almost unanimously to exclude slaveholders from their body. About five hundred persons were present, representing the leading denominations in the country, and yet only five dissented from the resolution when it was taken. The resolution closed in these words:—"Upon mature deliberation on the whole case, but without pronouncing any judgment on the personal Christianity of slaveholders, we agree to declare, that no holder of a slave shall be deemed eligible to membership."

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE for January has been reprinted by Leonard Scott & Co., with their usual promptness. It is a capital number. Among its articles are "The Court of Louis Philippe;" "Eugene, Marlborough, Frederick, Napoleon, and Wellington;" "Lays and Legends of the Thames;" "Prussian Military Memoirs;" "Reflections suggested by the Career of the late Premier." A new volume, commences with the new year, of which the present is the first number. There could not be a better time to subscribe. Published at 112 Fulton-st.

A new mode of punishment has been introduced at the Clinton County prison, which consists of severe repeated shocks of electricity.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The principal subject of discussion in the SENATE, last week, was the bill appropriating three millions of dollars for procuring peace with Mexico. The discussion upon it took a wide range; the causes of the war, the prospects of peace, and the conditions on which the United States would negotiate, being all brought under review. Mr. Sevier stated that the President and the Government were willing to make peace, if Mexico would give us indemnity for the war, or New Mexico and California. Mr. Miller replied that this was the first distinct avowal of the object of the war; but he did not believe voting the money would secure the object; he thought the expenses of the war would prove to be one hundred millions of dollars for the first year. The subject was not disposed of. Bills were passed to sell the mineral lands in Michigan and Wisconsin, establishing post-routes in Texas, and making various appropriations. A communication was received from the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to Mr. Cameron's resolution of the 7th January, recommending an increase of duties as follows: on coal 10 per cent; iron 10 per cent; on cloths and cassimeres costing over 4 dollars per yard 10 per cent; on brown, white and refined sugar 20 per cent; on cotton prints costing over 30 cents per square yard, 5 cents; on cotton goods not printed, costing over 20 cents per square yard, 5 per cent; on white and red lead 10 per cent. These increased duties he estimates will produce 1,418,000 dollars. Diminished duties of 5 per cent are recommended on axes, hammers, chisels, plough-shares, and cotton goods costing not over 8 cents per square yard, which will produce 55,000 dollars. The tax on tea and coffee is again recommended, reduced to 15 per cent, and some few articles on the free list to be taxed, but none of any consequence.

The HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES had under consideration various approrriation bills. While the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill was before the House, a motion was made to strike out the appropriation for the salary of the President, which led to much talk. Several of the appropriation bills were passed, and others remained on hand for farther discussion.

VISIT TO JAPAN.

The United States ship Columbus has been on a visit to Japan, from which she returned to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, Sept. 9. The Polynesian gives the following account of the visit:—

The ship anchored some distance below the city for want of proper charts and the indisposition of the authorities to allow her to come nearer. The letter from the United States Government was forwarded to the Emperor, explaining the objects of the visit, to which he replied that he heard of the United States, that they were a flourishing and great nation, and that he hoped they would continue to be prosperous, but declined any closer relations with them. The only foreign trade that would be allowed was with the Dutch and Chinese. He begged the ship would supply herself with what she wanted speedily, up anchor, be off, and never return.

Landing was disallowed, but the ship was supplied with such as the country afforded, wood, water, poultry, eggs, and vegetables, for which neither pay nor presents were received in return. Nothing like trade was allowed with the numerous visitors that came on board. Even presents of coin, &c., that Jack gave some of the shore people, were afterward returned. The only productions of the country obtained were a parcel of presents sent by the Emperor to the Commodore, which were declined by him. The Japanese officer having them in charge dared not return without delivering them, and as it was at the dusk of the evening, he threw his packet into one of the quarter boats, and pulled off for the shore as fast as possible. There being no way to return it, the contents were divided among the officers, but they contained nothing of much value or skill in workmanship.

The Japanese had heard of the intended visit of the Columbus, but seemed somewhat surprised at her dimensions. She was visited by many of the inhabitants, evidently with the Emperor's permission, but there were no females among them. Armed boats were kept about her, as in the case of the Manhattan, but they were not of force to resist a man-of-war. The men are represented as a fine, athletic race, inquisitive and intelligent. The shore off which the Columbus lay was rocky, but wooded, fertile, and apparently well cultivated. Hogs and bullocks were not to be had, though other supplies were plentiful. The Columbus lay there ten days.

The uniform of the officers that boarded the Columbus was of a singular descrption, resembling somewhat female attire, according to American ideas, rather than a military or even male costume. So fair and youthful were some of these gentlemen, that were it not for the two swords that each wore, they would have readily been mistaken for women. The military wore metallic armor, protecting the body and limbs. It was richly japaned and flexible. On the back of each individual were the armorial bearings of the chief or clan to which he belonged. These were all painted in circles, and exhibited much intricacy of design and heraldic knowledge.

In China, especially at the northern cities, the American Squadron received marked attention and hospitality from the Chinese authorities. There appears to be a general impression in favor of the Americans along the whole coast, probably from the fact that while their commerce is valuable to the Chinese, they have suffered nothing from them in war.

A subscription has been started for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of the late Commodore Stephen Decatur. The structure, which is to be erected in the cemetery attached to St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, is estimated to cost $2,500, $700 of which is already subscribed.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The following items from a Sandwich Islands newspaper, will show how they do things in that part of the world:—

In the Report of the Minister of the Interior we learn that "the wholesale vending [of ardent spirits] is carried on exclusively by aliens—not one Hawaiian subject is engaged in it. It is thought (says the Report) that the time is not far distant when all respectable persons will cease to deal in that article, which is such a curse to the people of Hawaii and to foreigners visiting the Islands." Only seven licenses to sell spirits by the glass were granted in the year. The King is a tee-totaler. Liquors not exceeding 55 per cent. of alcohol pay a duty of $5 per gallon—over 55 per cent. alcohol, $10 per gallon.

The Minister of the Interior says: "We have heard that there is no port in this Ocean untrodden by Hawaiians; and they are also in Nantucket, New Bedford, Sag Harbor, New London, and other places in the United States. All these are in the prime of life, and many who go, never again return to this country. There are, perhaps, 15,000 young men of the Hawaiian Islands, between the ages of 15 and 30 years, one-fifth of whom are wandering on the ocean or in foreign lands."

"The Polynesian" publishes an advertisement of M. Tebukoff, Governor of the Russian American Colonies, dated "New Archangel, N. W. Coast of America," in which he prohibits all vessels from fishing or taking amphibious animals in the waters near the Russian shores.

The editor had seen "a theatre bill printed in Oregon City, Feb. 3, announcing two comedies and a farce for the evening, under patronage of the officers of the British ship Modeste. A goodly list of players' names (including four Misses) is given, and the whole affair smacks of Thespian fun."

The Hawaiians are rich in Holidays. March 17 is King Kamehameha's Birthday, and is a time of universal suspension of business. The Birthday of the King of France, (May 1,) of the Queen of England, (May 18,) of the American Republic, (July 4,) and the Restoration Day, (July 31,) are all impartially celebrated.

The imports from the United States for the year 1845, were equal in value to those from all other countries.

SANDWICH ISLANDS MARINE INTELLIGENCE.—Ship Columbia, Kelly, of New London, was wrecked on the night of the 6th of January on Sydenham's Island, one of the King's Mill group—vessel and cargo a total loss—crew all saved. They, immediately on coming ashore, were robbed and stripped of everything by the natives—otherwise were treated as well as they could expect. After remaining 20 days upon the Island, they were redeemed by Capt. Pease, of the ship Chandler Price, and carried to Guam, where the crew joined the several ships lying at Port Apra. The first officer went on board the Isaac Hicks. The Columbia had 2,700 barrels on board at the time of the disaster.

The American bark Elizabeth, of Freetown, Capt. Gifford, was burnt at the Foejee Islands in February last. She was lying at anchor, and had boats out forward for the purpose of calking her bow ports, and is supposed to have been set on fire by one of the crew, although the evidence was not sufficient to fasten the deed upon any one.

Ship Inez got ashore on some rocks in lat. 60 N. The Captain and some of the crew pulled for the shore. While gone, the ship thumping heavily frightened the remainder of the crew, and they took to their boats and pulled after him—meeting the Captain, they put back to the ship, when, to their surprise, they saw her going off under sail, at the rate of several knots. She had slipped from the rocks, and was at the mercy of the wind, there being no one on board to guide her. After long pulling and much difficulty the crew succeeded in reaching her.

On the 22d of April the ship Champion experienced a heavy gale, during which a sea broke over her, carrying away jib boom, lee bulwarks, galley and cook.

A part of the Lagrange's crew left her when about 500 miles from land in a boat, and are supposed to have perished.

The American whale-ship Superior, of New London, had two men killed by a whale this season.

A NATIONAL GOVERNMENT MASSACRED.—A horrible massacre occurred in the city of Natmandoo, the capital of the kingdom of Nepaul, in Northern India, last September. The Queen had a favorite, one Gen. Guggen Singh, whom the King caused to be murdered on the 14th of September, at 10 o'clock at night. Her Majesty was so outraged at the loss of her paramour, that she at once instigated the massacre of the prime minister, the members of the cabinet, the nobility, council of state, generals and chief men, to the number of two hundred. The King alone escaped, but his whereabouts was known. A single nobleman only was saved, and the Queen appointed him commander-in-chief. The Queen is the King's second wife. The male children by the first wife, who would have preceded her children in the government, were among those slain or confined in dungeons. Nepaul is a powerful kingdom, having about three millions of inhabitants. The national religion is Buddhism. Most of the people are Tartars, as may readily be inferred from the conduct of the Queen.

OUR POSTMASTER GENERAL.—We are told that one of our merchants who has long been in the habit of sending newspapers to his customers after having drawn a pen around his advertisement, continued to do so notwithstanding the order of the Postmaster General to tear off wrappers and prosecute ever one who should make any mark on a newspaper sent by mail. A few days ago the merchant received a note from the District Attorney, inviting him to call. The invitation was complied with, when the District Attorney produced several of these newspapers which had been wrongfully abstracted from the mails by order of the Postmaster General, and inquired whether the merchant had made these marks or caused them to be made. The merchant said yes, and the Attorney informed him that he had been ordered to commence a prosecution for this violation of Post Office orders. The merchant addressed the Postmaster General, requesting that functionary to inform him where the provision of law could be found which he was charged with having violated. The answer was a discontinuance of the suit. The Postmaster General's arbitrary orders were the sole foundation of the suit. Our impression is, that a suit against the Postmaster General for ordering the envelops of papers to be taken off, and the papers withheld from the proper owners, would be likely to find not only law but public opinion to sustain it. EMIGRATION TO WESTERN VIRGINIA.—The N. Y. Tribune has learned that Thomas Rawlings, Esq., of Brooklyn, received by the last steamer orders for one thousand farms of 150 acres each—in all 150,000 acres—in Western Virginia; the whole tract being intended for a Welsh settlement to be commenced the coming Spring. Of the whole number intending to join the colony, not one can read English. Mr. Rawlings has established agencies in different parts of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, for the purpose of affording facilities to those who desire to emigrate to Western Virginia, and we learn that many respectable farmers, possessing considerable capital, are coming out in the spring, thus making room for those who must remain behind. Mr. Rawlings will go out in the March steamer to superintend the execution of his plans. He has made arrangements by which the money of the emigrants will be deposited in a bank at Richmond to await their arrival. Arrangements have also been made to take the emigrants from this port to Virginia without exposing them to the impositions so frequently practiced here by persons who represent themselves as agents of the various lines of travel.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.—We learn from the Sullivan Co. Whig, that Ann Barcley, aged about 11 years, daughter of Harmon Barcley, was murdered by her step-mother, Mrs. Ann Barcley, in the town of Neyersink, on the 19th ult., and that Mrs. B. immediately committed suicide by cutting her own throat with the same razor which she had just used in cutting that of the little girl. It appeared, on the inquest, that the mother had long imbibed a spirit of hatred toward the child, consequently she had not at all times treated her in a manner becoming a mother, and of late had suffered under a remorse of conscience, an impression of mind that she herself in consequence of her treatment to the child must suffer in despair of that mercy which otherwise she might have been the happy recipient of.

SUMMARY.

A goldsmith's store in Boston, was robbed between Saturday night and Monday morning of $8,000 worth of jewelry and money. The rogues had to break through five locks before they could get into the safe containing the valuables. They seem to have worked very much at their ease, and to have eaten a luncheon during their labors.

A meeting of women opposed to capital punishment was held in Philadelphia on the 23d ult. More than five hundred persons were present; speeches were made; resolutions and a petition adopted, &c.

No less than one hundred and fifty-seven notices of persons wishing to be attorneys were posted on the first day of the term in the Court of Queen's Bench. A wag wrote in pencil at the end of the notice, "Please to take care of your pockets."

Speaking of the mail taken out by the steamship Hibernia of the 1st inst., the Boston Transcript says that it was by far the largest ever yet taken out from this port or any other port in the United States. The number of American letters was upwards of fifty thousand, and the Canadian mail was very nearly as large. As for the newspapers, it is entirely impossible to estimate the number taken, so we put it at "any quantity."

Nathan Beman, a Revolutionary hero, died at Chateaugay, Franklin Co., on the 22d ult., in the 90th year of his age. The Albany Evening Journal says: Mr. B. was Ethan Allen's guide at the capture of Ticonderoga. He was intimate in the Fort, and conducted Allen directly to Capt. De la Place's room. He stood at Allen's side when he told the astounded officer by whose authority he demanded the surrender of the Fort.

Mr. Wise, (himself a slaveholder at home,) says that the U. S. schooner that was condemned at the Navy Yard (Brooklyn) two years ago, has made three successful voyages to Africa after slaves, and is now on the fourth. She sold for $1,500, and in three months cleared her owners, to his knowledge, $9,500. So says a correspondent of the Journal of Commerce. It is a startling and horrible fact, if indeed it be as stated.

Seventeen indictments for selling intoxicating liquors, contrary to law, were found by the Grand Jury at the late term of the Recorder's Court in Utica. The parties, with one exception, plead guilty, and fines ranging from $10 to $75 were imposed, amounting in all to the sum of $495.

B. F. Walker, a member of the Missouri House of Representatives, has been expelled from the House for indecent and insulting conduct to a female in the public streets.

A boy named Allison, of Upper Middletown, Ct., hung himself on an apple tree, because he had been flogged in the morning. He was but 12 years of age.

A bill has been introduced into the Senate of Ohio, which proposes to sell, for six months, the services of all colored persons who return to a township, after having been expelled from it.

The Massachusetts regiment is said to contain fifty or more printers, who have taken with them a small printing press and font of type, for the purpose of publishing reports of progress, &c., &c.

An Act in relation to Fugitive Slaves, similar to the one now in force in Massachusetts, has been adopted by the Legislature of Rhode Island.

The resolve introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature, approproting $20,000 to aid the volunteers of that State, has been voted down, 191 to 74.

On Thursday last, the steamer Mountaineer, while on her way from Bridgeport to this city, discovered a sloop on her beam-ends. The Mountaineer bore up to her, and when sufficiently near a boat was launched, the mate and four hands volunteering to man her, though the sea was raging and the wind blew a hurricane. Before the boat had fairly put off, the steamer had drifted nearly a mile off. On arriving at the sloop five men were found on board of her all so much exhausted that they could not have endured fifteen minutes longer. One was on the verge of death, and when carried on board the Mountaineer had to be wrapped in blankets and rubbed in order to restore him to vitality. The sloop, which was nearly down and must have sunk within an hour, was the Confidence, of Darien, Conn., with a light cargo in the hold, and a deep load of plaster, which shifted and prevented her righting.

A woman named Sabrine Daly, aged about 40. During her illness, her husband was indefatigable in his attentions to her, and scarcely left her bed-side. But the moment she expired he left her room, evincing great agony of mind, and went into another and lay down, expressing a wish that he might die immediately and be buried with his wife. And in ten minutes after he was a corpse. In the course of the day an inquest was held on the body, and the surgeon who examined it, declared that the immediate cause of his death was congestion of the brain.

A correspondent of the Quincy Herald, writing from Springfield, Illinois, states that Judge Pope of the U. S. District Court, has decided that all the titles, under the sale of 1823, are void—the Auditor having failed to allow the time required by law between the advertising and the sale. Mr. Bushnell of Quincy, who was counsel for the party claiming under that tax title, tried to gain the cause in connection with possession for seven years; but the Court adjudged that the Auditor's deed, being void, could not protect the possession.

A sad accident occurred at Humphreysville, Conn., on the evening of the 2d. A young man named Holbrook was driving a horse attached to a wagon, in which were himself and two ladies, when the animal took fright and ran, and the horse, wagon, ladies, and gentleman were all precipitated down a perpendicular height of about thirty feet among the rocks which form the bed of the river. All were dangerously, and it is feared mortally wounded.

A bill for the abolition of Capital Punishment came before the House of Representatives of Ohio, on the 28th ult. An amendment was adopted, leaving it to the Court and Jury to determine whether the punishment should be death or imprisonment for life. The bill was subsequently committed to a Special Committee.

A daring young scoundrel entered the barroom of the Lorillard House while ten or twelve persons were present, coolly took up an overcoat of one of the boarders, walked up stairs, ascended to the roof, and made his escape through one of the adjoining houses.

Prof. Henry has appointed Charles C. Jewett, of Brown University, his associate Secretary in the Smithsonian Institute. His salary is fixed at $2,000.

On the application of the Chaplain of the State Prison at Sing Sing, a grant of five hundred copies of the Social Hymns has been made by the American Tract Society, for the use of the prisoners in their cells and in their services of the chapel.

MARRIED,

In Verona, N. Y., on the 28th of January, by Eld. O. P. Hull, Mr. EDWIN S. BURDICK, M. D., of Alfred, to Miss PHEBE C. BURDICK, of the former place.

DIED,

In Lincklaen, January 27th, JOSHUA A. S., only child of Eld. Joshua Clark, aged 2 years, 2 months, and 24 days. The corpse was removed to Plainfield, Otsego Co., followed by brother and sister Clark, and also a respectable train of relatives and friends. On the 30th a discourse was delivered on the occasion by Eld. S. B. Crandall, and the remains were interred in the family burial place of sister Clark.

We gazed upon his lovely brow, white as the first pure snow,
And felt that o'er his couch of rest no bitter tear should flow—
That not one heart should wish to have his young, freed spirit back
From that bright world, the spirit land, to life's ensuaring track.

Though sad the parting, well we know our child is happy now,
And every trace of pain and grief has fled his cherub brow;
Sure he has left our fond embrace, yet he is there at rest,
Folded within the Saviour's arms, upon his loving breast.

A little harp of purest gold by angel hands is given,
And its melodious strains are heard throughout the courts of heaven;
List! we can almost hear the sounds of our sweet infant's lyre,
As his soft hands, with gentle touch, sweep o'er each quivering wire.

God gave—God taketh—let thy will, thy holy will be done—
Be this our prayer above the dust of our departed son;
Oh! stay our aching hearts on Him who knoweth all our woe,
And he will bear our spirits up—our tears will cease to flow.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of THE ILLUSTRATED FLORA, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty-eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, to whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, LEWIS & BROWN, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work as it is published.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week, $1 00
Room-rent, per term, 1 50
Tuition, per term, $3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term, 25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte, $10 00
Oil Painting, 7 00
Drawing, 2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

PRESERVATION OF MEAT BY FREEZING.

Every body knows, or ought to know, that meet will keep perfectly sweet so long as it remains frozen. Witness, for example, the mammoth which was found some years ago in the north of Siberia, preserved by the eternal frosts of the arctic circle, from the time it was inclosed in the ice, after the deluge—a whole carcase, covered with skin and flesh; some of which was cooked and eaten by the enterprising discoverer, and found to be palatable. But every body does not know that their meat will be tender or tough, according to the method of thawing it.

When frozen meat is brought into a warm room, and thawed by heat, if you have not good teeth, and the digestive powers of an ostrich, you had best leave that part of the dinner for those who have. Therefore, bring from the larder, the night before it is wanted, the meat or poultry intended for dinner, and plunge it into cold water. The next morning a thick coating of ice will be found incrusting the whole piece. Take it off and change the water, and let it remain until the hour for dressing it. If to be boiled, put it over the fire in cold water; if for a roast, put it not before too brisk a fire, as there is always danger that the heart of a large piece may not be completely thawed, in which case it will be spoiled.

Vegetables should be thawed in the same way, and, with few exceptions, they will be better for having been frozen. Potatoes, however, acquire a disagreeable sweetness.

HOW TO RESTORE FROZEN PLANTS.

If you have ever had the misfortune to find your parlor-window favorites frozen stiff when you paid your devoirs to them in the morning, you will appreciate and thank an unknown friend for the following recipe for preserving tender plants from the effects of frost, and restoring them after they have been frozen. Before you allow them to feel the effects of fire, plunge the whole, or as much of the frozen plant as is practicable, into cold water, and keep it under until it has thawed, which will easily be known by its becoming flaccid; then place it where it will warm gradually, as sudden heat will cause it to die. So treated, the most hardy will recover immediately—others will lose their leaves, or even die down to the ground—and some are so tender that the slightest frost will kill them; but generally they will put forth with fresh vigor after a season of rest, and gratefully repay your care. Water sparingly until the leaf-buds are well grown, increasing the quantity when they expand.

HOW TO REVIVE CUT FLOWERS.

When cut flowers begin to wither, they can be revived by placing the stems an inch or more, according to their length, in hot water; if it cools before they recover, change it once or twice, and you will surely succeed. This method I constantly practice with boquets of favorite flowers in winter, and with wild plants for botanical specimens in summer, and always successfully, except where, like the rose and a few others, the flower naturally is short-lived, and falls to pieces as soon as it feels the effects of heated air.

SEASON FOR OBTAINING CUTTINGS.

January is perhaps the best time to take cuttings of myrtles and other hard-wooded plants —at least they strike root very readily at that season; and many a beautiful and rare exotic have I raised from the stems of my boquets, after they have adorned the parlor table for several days, or bloomed for more than one night amid the curls of some fair girl, only less lovely than the flowers she wore. Geraniums, and many other soft-stemmed plants, strike root easily at any season. Some, as oleanders, require no earth, and may be raised very readily by plunging the stems in a bottle of spring or rain water, and hanging the bottle where it will have light and air, but not much hot sun.

ANECDOTE OF DR. NOTT.

On the evening preceding Thanksgiving, not many years ago, two students left the colleges, with the most foul intent of procuring some of the Doctor's fine, fat chickens, that roosted in a tree adjoining his house. When they arrived at the spot, one ascended the tree, while the other stood with the bag, ready to receive the plunder. It so happened, that the Doctor himself had just left his house, with the view of securing the same chickens for his Thanksgiving dinner. The rogue under the tree hearing some one approaching, immediately creeped away, without notifying his companion among the branches. The Doctor came up silently, and was immediately saluted from above as follows: "Are you ready?" "Yes," responded the Doctor, dissembling his voice as much as possible.

The other immediately laying hands on the old rooster, exclaimed—"Here's old Prex, will you have him?" "Pass him along," was the reply, and he was soon in the Doctor's bag. "Here's marm Prex," said the all unconscious student, grabbing a fine old hen, "will you have her?" "Yes," again responded the Doctor. "Here's son John, will you have him?" "Here's daughter Sal, take her?" and so on until he had gone regularly through the Doctor's family and chickens. The old man walked off in one direction with the plunder, while the student, well satisfied with his night's work, came down and streaked it for the colleges. Great was his astonishment to learn from his companion that he had not got any chickens, and if he gave them to any one, it must have been to Dr. Nott. Expulsion, fines, and disgrace, were uppermost in their thoughts until the next forenoon, when both received a polite invitation from the President, requesting the presence of their company to a Thanksgiving dinner. To decline was impossible; so with hearts full of anxiety for the result, they wended their way to the house, where they were pleasantly received by the old gentleman, and with a large party were soon seated around the festive board. After asking a blessing, the Doctor rose from his seat, and taking the carving knife, turned with a smile to the rogues, and said: "Young gentlemen, here's old Prex, marm Prex, son John, and daughter Sal," at the same time touching successively the respective chickens; "to which will you be helped?" The mortification of his students may be imagined.

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVIL LIBERTY.

Such is the title of a sermon, recently published, which Rev. J. N. Granger delivered before the First Baptist Church in Providence, R. I., on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 26, 1846. The following is an extract from it:—

"I need scarcely say that domestic slavery, as it exists in many of the States, is a denial of all civil liberty to several millions of people. Civil liberty has no place in its provisions for domestic slavery. If that exists at all, it exists on different grounds. In itself, it is, as I have said, a denial to the slave of all civil liberty, whatever. It cannot be possible for such a denial to be made, without grave inconsistency on the part of any State claiming itself to be free; nor can it be sanctioned by us, without injury to our national sense of the sacredness of private rights. Yet there are millions among us for whom a government of equal laws exists in vain. It is this great fact, which, if any one fact can, will yet work the destruction of our national compact. It is this which is now dividing the citizens of these States, and imbittering them against each other. It is this which makes so wide a difference between northern and southern policy, and is separating the interests of the two sections more and more every year. It is this which is controlling the politics of the country, and throwing the great strength of one party into the North, and that of the other party into the South; thus weakening the strongest social bonds which now unite us; for the religious bonds have been already broken. It is this which has precipitated this peace-loving nation into a war whose enormous expenses are paid out of the avails of private industry, and the active business capital of the people. It is this which has involved us in a war of conquest; a war whose incipient aggressions have already added an immense slave territory to the Union, and which, in the acquisition of still more, is compelling the free sons of the North to pour out their blood like water on a foreign soil."

PHRENOLOGY APPLICABLE TO THE HORSE.

Mr. Thomas J. Lewis observes, that while reading Dr. Combe's celebrated work on Phrenology, his attention was particularly directed to the article on page 205, in relation to the horse. "It is there shown," it is said, "that the shape of the brain, even in the lower animals, indicates their good or bad disposition. Almost every one," he continues, "is aware that the value of the horse is very much enhanced by his being docile and tractable. According to the article alluded to, when the organ of benevolence is largely developed, the animal is mild and docile; when it is small, they are vicious, ill-natured and intractable. In the horse, the organ is placed in the middle of the forehead, a little above the eyes. When this region is hollow, a horse is invariably vicious and inclined to bite and kick. In mild and good-natured horses, on the contrary, this part extends out as far as the eyes, or even farther. "The driver of a cabriolet at Neuilly," says Dr. Gall, "bought at a low price a horse which nobody could use, on account of its extremely bad temper; but it was an excellent runner. In the first week it bit off two of the driver's fingers and one of his ears. He attempted to correct the evil by redoubled blows, but these only rendered the animal more vicious. He then resolved to try the effect of gentle treatment, and this succeeded to a certain extent. The organ in question was very small in this animal; and the same conformation will be found in all horses which require to be muzzled to prevent them from biting."

ANECDOTE OF HAYDN.

While Haydn was in England, he adopted the custom of shopping, and frequently wandered in the morning from house to house of the music sellers. He used to mention his dialogue with one of these persons. He had inquired for any particular good music. "You are come exactly at the right time," was the shop-keeper's answer, "for I have printed off Haydn's sublime music." "Oh! as for that, I will have nothing to do with Haydn!" "What fault is to be found with it?" Oh, fault enough; but there is no use in speaking about it now; it does not please me—show me something else." The music seller, who was an enthusiast about Haydn's compositions, looked at the inquirer—"No, sir, I have other music, no doubt, but it is not fit for you," and turned his back upon him. Haydn was going out of the shop laughing, when he met an acquaintance coming in, who pronounced his name. The music seller, whose vexation had revived with the sound, turned round and said, "Yes, sir, here is a gentleman who actually does not like that great man's music." The mistake was of course, soon, cleared up, and the person was known who alone might presume to object to Haydn's music.

Death-bed Superstition.—There is a curious superstition in Devonshire, England, that the departure of life is delayed while any lock is closed in the dwelling, or any bolt shut. It is a practice, therefore, when a dying person is at the last extremity, to open every door in the house. This notion extends even to the supposition that a beam over the head of the dying man impedes the departure of the spirit. A clerical friend, who was most indefatigable in the discharge of his duties among the poor of his parish, related to me, that in a village near Collumpton, he witnessed the death of a person, when the last moments seemed delayed by some unknown cause, and the relatives, in consequence, moved the bed, observing that over the place there was a beam concealed in the floor above. In consequence of such removal, as they said, the sick man "went off like a lamb."

Military Discipline.—Frederic the Second of Prussia, vulgarly styled Frederic the Great, during the first war of Silesia, wishing to make some alterations in his camp during the night, forbade every person, under pain of death, to keep, after a certain hour, a fire or other light in his tent. He himself went the rounds; and, in passing the tent of a Captain Zeitan, he perceived a light. Entering the tent, he found the Captain sealing a letter to his wife, for whom he had a great affection. "What are you doing there?" said the King. "Do you not know the order?" The Captain fell on his knees and asked pardon. "Sit down," said Frederic, "and add, 'to-morrow I shall perish on the scaffold.'" The unfortunate man wrote the words, and the next day was cruelly executed.

Erring Brother.—Would you throw a brick-bat to a friend that had fallen overboard? Would you gather stones and pile them on the bank that had fallen on a brother? Would you throw a keg of powder to the person who had fallen into the fire? Then why heap words of reproach upon him who has erred from the path of duty? Why denounce him and spurn him from your presence? Can you be a stranger to the human heart—you who have so often fallen? Shame on you—shame!

He cannot know the human heart,
 Who, when a weaker brother errs,
Instead of acting Mercy's part,
 Each base, malignant passion stirs.

Harsh words and epithets but prove
 That he himself is in the wrong—
That first he needs a brother's love
 To nerve his heart and guide his tongue.

[Port. Tribune.

Origin of "Tee-Total."—The London correspondent of the Boston Traveler, in a late letter, says:—"It is stated that the well-known and universally-adopted word, 'Tee-total,' had its origin in England. Richard Turner, recently deceased, had been upwards of fourteen years a member of a Temperance Society. He signed the pledge while in a state of intoxication. He afterwards became temperate in his habits, and delivered temperance lectures. His speeches were characterized by a mixture of wit and blunders. On one occasion he was at loss for a word which would convey to the audience that he was a total abstinence man, and he said, 'I have signed the tee-tee-total pledge.' The word being short and expressive, was immediately adopted in Lancashire, and ultimately throughout Europe and America."

A Word to Young Men.—Wishing, and sighing, and imagining, and dreaming of greatness, said William Wirt, will never make you great. But can a young man command his energies? Read Foster on decision of character. That book will tell you what is in your power to accomplish. You must gird up your loins and go to work with all the indomitable energy of Hannibal scaling the Alps. It is your duty to make the most of your talents, time and opportunities.

Alfred, king of England, though he performed more business than any of his subjects, found time to study.

Franklin, in the midst of all his labors, found time to dive to the depths of philosophy, and explored untrodden paths of science.

Hint for Mothers.—A medical correspondent of an English paper, attributes the high shoulder and the lateral curvature of the spine, which so frequently disfigure young females, to the shoulder-straps of their dresses resting below the shoulder, and on the muscles of the arm, instead of being on the shoulder, which compels the wearer to be constantly hitching her shoulder to keep up her dress, an action that results in a forcing up of the shoulder, a distortion of chest, and a lateral curvature of the spine. He also states that from this dangerous practice and the consequent exposure of the chest to the cold, inward tubercles are formed, and not unfrequently consumption is engendered.

The Gourd and the Palm Tree.—A gourd wound itself around a lofty palm, and in a few weeks climbed to its very top.

"How old mayest thou be?" asked the new comer.

"About a hundred years," was the answer.

"A hundred years! and no taller! Only look, I have grown as tall as you in a fewer days than you can count years."

"I know that well," replied the palm. "Every summer of my life a gourd has climbed up round me, as proud as thou art, and as short lived as thou wilt be."

Salt for Hogs.—Hogs, during the process of fattening, should be supplied with salt as often as once a week. It is no less advantageous to them than to the ox, the cow, or the sheep, and when liberally given, is a preventative of many diseases, to which, from their continual confinement, and the effects of hearty food, they are inevitably exposed. Store hogs are also greatly benefited by a liberal provision of salt, and will generally partake of it once or twice a week, as eagerly, and to all appearance with as good zest, as they do of corn or meal. Charcoal is also highly salutary in its influence upon the health of swine.

[Maine Farmer.

The true Manure.—Science in its patient pilgrimage is every day bringing to light some fact, or hitherto undeveloped principle, of value to the farmer. A Parisian Journal—the "Phalange"—says that recent experiments have abundantly demonstrated that no manure is so beneficial to a plant as its own leaves. It further remarks that the "vine dressers in that country who have mingled the leaves and twigs of the vine with the earth about the roots, have thus produced the most hardy and prolific grape-vines known."

The Resurrection Impossible?—In his Essay on Death, Drelincourt asks: "Shall I say what is impossible with man, is impossible with God? He has already created the world by His word, and he is able to restore it again by the same. Art has found out methods to make beautiful vessels of melted ashes—and shall not God's hand, unto which all the skill of art, and all the strength of nature, are as nought, be able to gather up the ashes of earth, and to make of it a body full of light and glory?

Mr. Winthrop, of Boston, in a recent speech upon Texas annexation and its results, said the "lone star" reminded him of the star described in the vision of the Apostle on the Isle of Patmos:—"And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon a third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood; and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter."

Bills for Newspapers.—Publishers of newspapers are permitted to transmit their bills for subscriptions due, free of postage, according to the provisions of Sec. 156 of the Post-office regulations. So says the Postmaster General.

VARIETY.

Tupper, in his new work republished in this country, furnishes the following among other beautiful passages: "Love is the weapon which Omnipotence reserved to conquer rebel man when all the rest had failed. Reason he parries; Fear he answers blow to blow; Future interest he meets with present pleasure; but Love, that sun, against whose melting beams winter cannot stand, that soft subduing slumber which wrestles down the giant; there is not one human being in a million—not a thousand men whose clay heart is hardened against love."

In Canada, where the winter is never of less duration than five months, they shoe their horses in the following manner:—The smith fixes a small piece of steel on the fore part of each shoe, which turns up 1-4 of an inch, in the shape of a horse's lancet, and the same to the hinder part of the shoe, turned up a little higher than the fore part, tempered in the same manner. In going up a hill, the fore part gives a purchase that assists the horse, and in going down prevents him from sliding forward.

People should not stop courting when they get married, but on the contrary, should learn to court the more. This laying aside the little endearments that nursed love into being, the very moment that you have sworn to live on it forever, is almost perjury. Where people are joined for life, it is their mutual interest and duty to render themselves as interesting objects to one another as possible.

A lady, the wife of a poor inebriate, the mother of several half-starved children, went to a grocery to sell some rags, that she might obtain the means of giving her children something to eat. The grocer weighed them out, and found they came to one shilling; then, turning to his slate, and finding a charge of ninepence for three glasses of rum against her husband, deducted it, and paid her the remaining three cents. She besought him to think of her half-starved children, but she pled in vain.

It was one of the laws of Lycurgus, that no portions should be given with young women in marriage. When this great lawgiver was called upon to justify this enactment, he observed, "that in the choice of a wife, merit only should be considered; and that the law was made to prevent young women being chosen for their riches, or neglected for their poverty."

A traveler writing fron Cærnavon, Wales, mentions having passed, during a walk, a sturdy-looking dame, who was knitting stockings, had a load of wood on her head, a child tied on her back, and a cudgel under her arm, with which she was driving four cows before her. Nor was her tongue idle, for she scolded the cows in Welsh if they dared to swerve from the path she meant them to pursue.

Mr. Gliddon makes the following statement: —"The granite contained in the great pyramid of Egypt would be sufficient for the building of all the churches and public buildings in Philadelphia, and the quantity of other materials, if converted into brick, would build all the dwellings in that city. There is material sufficient in the three largest pyramids, to erect all buildings, public and private, in the State of Pennsylvania."

Daniel Aikin died at Wexford, Upper Canada, a short time since, aged 120 years. He had, during his life, contracted seven marriages, had 570 children, grand-children, and great-grand-children—270 of whom were boys, and 300 girls.

A thief broke open a store in Philadelphia, and struck a light. The regular watchman looked in, and he told him he had been employed to watch the store. Two other watchmen called in, attracted by the same light, and received the same answer. When the coast was clear, he swept the goods in the store, and walked off.

A lady of Cincinnati, on Christmas eve, had one of her eyes put out by a knitting-needle, which was thrust into the ball, in an attempt to get it back from a gentleman who had playfully taken it from her.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

PROSPECTUS OF

THE NATIONAL ERA,

To be published at

THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The cause of Human Freedom calls for the establishment at the seat of the National Government of a Newspaper devoted to the support of its claims.

Circumstances and the present state of Public Sentiment are peculiarly propitious to such an undertaking.

The publication of an Anti-Slavery paper entitled "The National Era," will be accordingly commenced in the City of Washington, District of Columbia, on the first of January, 1847.

It will be edited by G. Bailey, Jr., assisted by A. A. Phelps, and J. G. Whittier, Corresponding Editors. While due attention will be paid to current events, Congressional Proceedings, General Politics and Literature, the great aim of the paper will be a complete discussion of the Question of Slavery, and an exhibition of the duties of the Citizen in relation to it—especially will it explain and advocate the leading principles and measures of the Liberty Party—seeking to do this, not in the spirit of Party, but in the love of Truth —not for the triumph of Party, but for the establishment of Truth.

The journal will be printed weekly, on a mammoth sheet, of the finest quality, in handsome type, at the rate of Two Dollars a year, always in advance. This will be invariably adhered to.

All necessary arrangements have been made for giving stability to this important enterprise, and it is hoped that it may command the warm sympathy and prompt support of the friends of Liberty throughout the country.

Subscriptions may be forwarded to William Harned, No. 5 Spruce-st., New York City, or to the Publisher of the National Era, Washington.

THE TEACHER TAUGHT.

If I am not mistaken, the American Sunday School Union, or some other publishing establishment, has issued, within a few years past, a work entitled, The Teacher Taught. However that may be, or whatever the illustration may prove, of which I am entirely ignorant beyond the mere title of the book, certain it is, that the title can scarcely be more appropriate to it, than it is to a recent instance, and a very impressive instance, of that kind, brought to my attention by the individual himself involved in the circircumstance, which is replete with instruction, and highly encouraging to the friends of the pure, unadulterated Word of God, that must eventually prevail, to the pulling down of the strong-holds of the Man of Sin, and the complete subversion of all Papal traditions and innovations, whether boldly asserted and defended by the effrontery of an assumed infallible church, or covertly cherished and sustained under the cloak of a Protestant God-Mother.

The individual who communicated the following occurrence to me, is a teacher and the superintendant of a Sunday School. In giving the lesson for the week ensuing, which embraced the subject of the Sabbath, he directed his class to commit to memory all the texts of Scripture referred to in the "Question Book," and all that they might find in the "Union Dictionary." The week passed away, as the teacher said, with his mind so much engrossed with pressing business engagements, that he had not time to examine the subject; but taking a hasty glance into the Question Book and the Union Dictionary, he found that the latter had each proposition distinctly arranged, and a great supply of references to fortify its positions, and so determined to follow that book in the examination.

After going over the authorities for the "Divine institution of the Sabbath," (all referring explicitly to the seventh day,) and the passages in reference to the "sacredness" of the Sabbath, (still all referring to the seventh day,) and proving "the Jewish Sabbath RE-ESTABLISHED under the Gospel dispensation," (for such is the precise language of the heading of the proposition in the Union Dictionary,) to which end Matt. 5: 17, 12: 12, and Mark 2: 27, were adduced, they arrived at the all-important one, "The change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week." Here they proceeded with the passages referred to under this head in regular succession, as follows:—

1. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. Gen. 2: 2.

"Why, Mr. T.," says the boy that repeated it, "that is still the old seventh day."

"Go on, Harry," said the teacher to the next boy, "with the next reference."

2. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it. Ex. 20: 11.

"Still the old seventh day, Mr. T.," said Harry.

"These," replied the teacher, "are only to show the foundation for the institution; the references in the New Testament will establish the change of the day. What is the first reference in the New Testament, Charles?"

3. And they returned and prepared spices and ointments, and rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment. Luke 23: 56.

"What commandment does that refer to, Mr. T.?" asked Charles.

"Go on, James, with the next, you may find it there."

4. Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus, and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you. John 20: 19.

"Is that a commandment?" asked James. "I was always taught, that a commandment is a mandate from one in high authority, requiring a subject to perform certain acts or duties. This only describes a circumstance, and gives the reason for being together—'for fear of the Jews'—does that make it the Sab——"

"You can proceed, John, with the next," said the teacher, interrupting James.

5. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight. Acts 20: 7.

"Why, Mr. T.," said John, bristling up, as he was considered rather a dull boy, and who thought he might display some reflection as well as the others, "you told us the other Sunday, that a day in old times was counted, 'the evening and the morning;' and surely if they met on the evening of the first day, and after preaching till midnight, Paul departed on the morrow, he must have traveled on the Sabbath, and that was desecrating the Sabbath."

"But, John, you see they had met together to break bread on first day; that is an example and authority to meet together for holy purposes on first day."

"But the Scriptures say also," rejoined John, "they continued daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house. Don't that, on the same principle, make every day a Sabbath, or alike appropriate for holy purposes?" Acts 2: 46.

"Never mind that, John; Robert, you may go on with the next."

6. Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Cor. 16: 2.

Robert, who is the son of a merchant, cried out, "That cannot, certainly, mean the Sabbath. Father never has any summing up of his books an Sunday. That would make us do a great deal of work, and keep me from Sunday School, and brother Richard from getting to meeting at all. It would make a working-day for us all in the counting-house, instead of a rest-day."

"Come, Stephen, what is the next?"

7. I was in the spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice of a trumpet. Rev. 1: 10.

"What is the meaning of Lord's day, Mr. T.? I have never seen it in any other part of the Scriptures."

"It is another term for first day, and is used synonymously with Sabbath."

"It don't say so here, Mr. T.," rejoined Stephen; "there is nothing said about first day or Sabbath; I haven't seen any command to keep first day or Lord's day, but only the seventh day. You always tell us, that we must 'prove Scripture by Scripture;' can you inform us where there is any corresponding term in the Scriptures to elucidate the expression, Lord's day?"

The teacher was silent.

"I suppose," said Edward, thinking he had a clue to unravel the difficulty, "it is like one of the saints' days—St. Matthew's day, St. Mark's day, St. John's day, St. Paul's day, St. Bartholomew's day, and——"

"No," replied the teacher, "those are Catholic inventions. This is the day to which the Psalmist alluded: 'This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it.'" Ps. 118: 24.

"That was in our lesson a few weeks ago," resumed Stephen, "and you then said, that it referred to the Gospel day—the day in which Christ should reign triumphant. We were taught that it was the day the Redeemer himself alluded to when he said, 'Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad.' John 8: 56. Paul speaks of it as something yet to come: 'That ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere, and without offence, till the day of Christ.' Phil. 1: 10. 'Holding forth the word of life, that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain.' Id. 2: 16. 'Who shall confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless, in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.' 1 Cor. 1: 8. And in writing to the Thessalonians, the same Apostle speaks of it as being at hand: 'Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.' 2 Thes. 2: 1, 2. Again, we have been taught that it means the judgment: 'The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up.' 2 Peter 2: 10. So it appears that the day of the Lord, or the day of Christ, according to the Scriptures, is not present, and consequently must mean something else; and if Lord's day is not the day of the Lord, and as there is no evidence that the inspired writer used it 'synonymously' with the first day of the week, what day can it mean?"

"Are there no other references than these, Samuel, in the Question Book?"

"No, sir," answered Samuel.

"I was completely confounded," remarked the teacher to the writer, "and I shut up the book, determined that if the New Testament gave no better authority than that, I would not attempt to perpetuate error by urging the traditions of men. My dear friend," said he, continuing his remarks, "I was not aware that the New Testament was so meagre in proofs to sustain the transfer of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. I took it for granted, that it was clearly appointed and established in the New Testament."

The reader must not suppose that I have given a caricature of a very ignorant teacher. Far otherwise. He is a man of good understanding, and, like thousands of others, had never investigated the subject, but had taken it as a received truth, and believed that the New Testament contains all that is needful to establish, most conclusively, that Christ and his apostles had substituted the first day in place of the seventh as the Sabbath. Such is the case with thousands of men of the most intelligence on other subjects. Even among ministers of the Gospel, the like delusion exists, for want of a rigid scrutiny into the matter. When soliciting signatures to the Petition to the Legislature of this State, for the exemption provision in favor of the observers of the seventh day, in the revised statutes, and having obtained, among other distinguished citizens, the names of three first-day ministers of the Gospel, I called on a minister of considerable reputation abroad as a public speaker, and particularly in the metropolis of the Empire State attracts immense crowds whenever he visits that region. He replied:—

"Sir, I love liberty of conscience, and wish to concede it to others, but I cannot sign any thing against the commandments of the New Testament, or any thing that will militate against the sanctity of the Sabbath."

"But, my dear sir, you do not mean that the New Testament commands you to observe the first day of the week as the Sabbath, much less requires you to enforce its observance by fines and penalties?"

"Certainly, it does recognize the first day as the Sabbath."

"Where?"

"In twenty places."

"Point out one, my good sir!"

"O, you can find them in almost any part of the writings of the apostles."

"Direct me to one, and I will cast the petition into the fire."

"O, my good neighbor, you know well enough, that it is commanded in many places, to keep the first day holy."

"I certainly do not know that, but I did think, that you had read your Bible to more purpose. You must be aware, that you have not a single passage which directs the transfer of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day, or that attaches any sacredness whatever to the latter."

"There is no doubt, sir, that Christ changed it, and that the apostles observed the first day as the Sabbrth."

"Blank assertion, sir, will not answer in this case—'to the law and the testimony'—I challenge a single passage."

To this challenge, to find a single passage, he has not replied to this day, although more than twelve months have passed away. If the "blind lead the blind," what can we expect?—or why should we be surprized at the great prevailing ignorance on the subject, and the inveterate prejudices existing in reference to it?—for prejudices always abound in proportion to ignorance of any matter. It then behooves those who have received light, to let that light shine—to be up and doing, in the dissemination of the truth; and with the truth, and nothing but the simple, unadulterated truth, battle, and battle valiantly, until we rout the "mystery of iniquity," which has taken its last refuge in the distracted ranks of deluded Protestants, and has infused its insidious poison, so as to make even them "believe a lie;" whose falchion it deems its surest weapon; whose buckler its best defense; and whose obsequious service must eventually prove its dernier resort to bolster up its tottering pretensions The cloven foot discovered beneath the flowing robes of the mitred Mother, is ill concealed by the slattern vestments of many of the rebellious daughters, who, although they have gone out, have still carried with them, (and in many instances insensibly,) the leaven of maternal inconsistency. Until the Protestant Host cast off, entirely, all taint of the bold Harlot, (under whatever guise she may assume,) and unfurl the banner of the Bible—displaying on every fold, "to the law and the testimony," and never skulk their covenant badge—we cannot expect to see the downfall of the reign of superstition and false tradition, which now sways the multitude, as a mighty flood, and unblushingly stultifies the imperative commandments of the Most High. REPLY TO "D. E. M." ON TEMPERANCE.

It seems unnecessary to controvert with a brother a point on which we both agree in the main. There is only one thing in which we differ. I assume that the Scriptures do not absolutely prohibit the use of stimulants; and he, that they do. I suppose the drink used in the age of the world when the Scriptures were written, was principally wine, as we have no intimation of any other except in indefinite terms. The wine used at that early period was evidently inebriating when used to excess, or Noah could not have made himself drunk. Indeed, it is well known by every man of observation, that the tendency to fermentation is so natural that it requires a considerable effort to suppress it. The warmer the climate, the stronger is this tendency. Hence, in the east, (where in old times the fruit of the vine was considered a great blessing, and the withholding of it a curse,) it is well known that the grapes will ferment while they are carried from the vineyard to the wine-vat. My friend will remember that our Lord talks about new wine bursting old bottles, which is perfectly unintelligible unless there was a strong principle of fermentation in the new wine. The bottles in common use then were made of leather. The new bottles, being elastic, were proper to use for new wine. The old bottles, being stiff and hard, would rend with the pressure of the wine.

But to come at the point upon which I wish to defend myself, I would remark, that in order to raise a fabric that will stand, I must have a good foundation. If I assail a drunkard with an argument against drunkenness, I give him the passages D. E. M. has cited, and he feels their force; he knows they are true; he feels that the evils portrayed in such vivid colors are not merely imaginary, or bug-bears brought to view to terrify him, but realites. When I wish to impress his mind with the duty and necessity of total abstinence as the only cure for a real drunkard, and tell him that the Scriptures equally forbid the use of stimulants, if he has common sense he will ask for chapter and verse where they are forbidden, and I shall feel as much at a loss for an answer as a first-day man is to give Scripture authority for the use of that day as a Sabbath. Suppose I give him the texts you have brought to view, he will look at them, and will very naturally say, Why, these truly forbid drunkenness, but do not require entire abstinence. He will say, If texts are to be considered in this sense, I might be starved to death, for they prohibit gluttony as well as drunkenness; and if I am to refrain eating because I am not to be a glutton, I shall soon be in my grave. He may say, Did not Christ know what an evil king drunkenness was?—and yet he made wine of the richest kind, at a marriage feast, to supply a deficiency of the same drink. He may say, Did not Paul know that Noah disgraced himself by intoxication?—and yet he says to Timothy, take a "little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities." He may say also, Did not the same inspired man know that there was a danger of even Christians going beyond the bounds of sobriety?—hence he says, "be not filled with wine, wherein is excess," and yet he does not prohibit its use. It is true I might tell him about the Rechabites and Sampson, and he will be awake to the fact, that one was the request of a father, and the other an especial care for a peculiar end. To get at the man effectually, I must reason with him in another way. The evil of drunkenness must be brought to view, both as it regards himself and others. He must be urged to break away from such a destructive foe—to make a decided effort to dash the cup from him, lest he drink and die. Let him know that you and your family are healthy and happy without the use of it; bring up to his view cases of reform, and press upon him to note the wide contrast between his present and past circumstances, and indeed whatever sound arguments you please, and I go with you. I do not wish to enter upon a long discussion about this point, however, and if my friend will maintain that a threat against drunkenness, and a prohibition of the use of stimulants altogether, are perfectly alike, I have nothing more to say, only let us be temperate in the temperance cause, lest we stab the thing we intend to foster. THE BLIND BOY.

BY MISS HANNAH F. GOULD.

O! tell me the form of the soft summer air,
Which tossess so gently the curls of my hair;
It breathes on my lip, and it fans my warm cheek,
Yet it gives me no answer, though often I speak;
I feel it play o'er me, refreshing and kind,
Yet touch it I cannot—I'm blind, O! I'm blind!

And music, what is it, and where does it dwell?
I sink and I muont with its cadence and swell;
While touch'd to my heart with its deep thrilling strain,
Till pleasure, e'en pleasure is turning to pain;
What brightness of hue is with music combined?
Will any one tell me?—I'm blind, O! I'm blind!

The perfumes of flowers which are hovering nigh,
What are they? on what kind of wings do they fly?
Are not they sweet angels who come to delight
A poor little boy who knows nothing of sight?
The sun, moon, and stars, are to me undefined!
O! tell me what light is—I'm blind, O! I'm blind!

A CONSTANT REVIVAL.

The late Rev. Mr. McCheyne, a young Scotch minister, who was called to his rest at the early age of twenty-nine, left an example of singleness of purpose, and of ardent, devoted and intelligent piety, eminently worthy of record. In his ministry he was determined to know nothing but Christ and him crucified, and he was wise in the application of this knowledge in such a way as to promote the spiritual interests of others. His preaching was accompanied with a constant revival—and though he labored earnestly, and with his whole heart, his early death was occasioned, not by excessive work, but by typhus fever.

Among Mr. McCheyne's parishoners we are told there was a gentle, noiseless, but almost constant awakening. "He entertained so full a persuasion that a faithful minister has every reason to expect to see souls converted under him, that when this was withheld, he began to fear that some hidden evil was provoking the Lord, and grieving the Spirit." In one of his MSS. he says: "As I was walking in the fields, the thought came over me, with almost overwhelming power, that every one of my flock must soon be in heaven or hell." "Ah, sinners! you little know how I fear that you will lay the blame of your damnation at my door." Of a sermon that he preached on 1. Cor. ix. 27, a hearer said:—"It was like the blast of the trumpet that would awaken the dead!" A stranger wrote to him on one occasion: "It pleased God to bless that sermon to my soul. It was not so much what you said, as your manner of speaking, that struck me. I saw in you a beauty in holiness, that I never saw before. You also said something in your prayer that struck me very much. It was, 'thou knowest that we love thee.'" In his prayers Mr. McCheyne appeared always as in the immediate presence of his God and Saviour, and hence the impression made by his manner of uttering those words.

Just after entering upon his ministry, he wrote: "I see a man cannot be a faithful minister until he preaches Christ for Christ's sake—until he gives up striving to attract people to himself, and seeks only to attract them to Christ." "If worldly motives go with me, I shall never convert a soul." He compared himself to the pole on which the brazen serpent was elevated; the dying must look at the serpent, not at the pole. His idea of preaching was that of one, like Ahimaaz, coming with all-important tidings, and intent on making these tidings known. A countryman who happened to hear him, said: "Before he opened his lips, as he came along the passage, there was something about him that sorely affected me."

His aim was to preach the gospel, and not "about the gospel," as he called it. In a memorandum of a pastoral visit, he says: "M. G. lies sore upon my conscience; I did no good to that woman; she always managed to speak of things about the truth." "It is through the truth that souls are sanctified, and not by essays upon the truth." "Are you not afraid of being short of sermons?" one asked. "No! I am just the interpreter of scripture in my sermons; and when the Bible runs dry, then I will." His divisions are described as "so textual and so feeling; and they brought out the spirit of a passage so surprisingly." He aimed to preach the mind of the Spirit in the passage, and was afraid he should grieve the Spirit if he did not. After an absence of considerable time, he closed his first sermon to his people on returning, in this way: "Dearly beloved and longed for, I now begin another year of my ministry among you; and I am resolved, if God give me health and strength, that I will not let a man, woman or child among you alone, until you have at least heard the testimony of God concerning his Son, either to your condemnation or salvation. And I will pray, as I have done before, that if the Lord will indeed give us a great outpouring of his Spirit, he will do it in such a way as to show that it is the Lord's work, and not man's."

SOURCES OF MENTAL CULTURE.

To say that education is valuable, is almost a truism. In our own country, and under our own institutions, it has come to be regarded by the great mass of the people as indispensable. Yet the full meaning of the comprehensive term education, is not so generally understood. Many regard education as referring merely to that course of instruction which a pupil enjoys in the primary school, the high school, the college, or the university. Professor Haddock, of Dartmouth College, in an article in the Bibliotheca Sacra, makes the following just remarks on the sources of mental culture, which we take pleasure in commending to our readers. We will only add, that the education which he depicts, is one that is going on at every stage of life. The scenes, and associations, and influences of to-day, are preparing us to enter on the morrow—the morrow will prepare us for a still more distant day; and thus day by day the work of education will be going on. And where will—where can the process end?

"The truth seems to be, that systematic education is but an element in our mental culture. Other influences unite with it, and modify it more than we are aware. No system of instruction can be made to monopolize the pupil's attention; no vigilance can guard all the avenues of thought; no agency of ours can entirely control the mental habits of the most docile and confiding. Our own voice is but one of the hundred that are constantly addressing him. The most engaging train of thought we can inspire in him is not a tithe of those which incessantly follow one another through his mind every waking hour of his life. Impressions are everywhere forced upon him; the ear is always open; the eye drinks in ideas from all around and above him. Every office of friendship, every reflection of influence of which he is the source or the object, every consciousness of the presence of external objects, animate or inanimate, every hope awakened or blasted, every change without or within him that serves to mark the progress of his existence, is so much done to form his character, so much to give shape and color to his intellectual and moral being. In this sense of the word, a sense much more comprehensive than that in which we have hitherto used it in these pages, education is always and everywhere going on. We are educated by all we think, and by all we do; by what we see and what we hear. Day and night instruct us; morning and evening, the rising and the setting sun; the moon and the stars, the sunshine and the storm, are all eloquent teachers. Secret influences are incessantly stealing into the heart from every scene of nature, and from every incident of life. It is a great mistake to suppose that precepts and restraints are the principal instruments of education. Your circumstances, your wealth, your poverty, your business, your recreations, your history, your prospects, are all efficient instructors of your children. What you do not say, as well as what you do say; what you omit to do, no less than what you do; where you are and what you are, in public or in private, have as much to do in forming the character of your son, as the institutions you select for him, and the tuition you provide."

"HE NEVER TOLD A LIE."—Mr. Park, in his Travels through Africa, relates that a party of armed Moors having made a predatory attack on the flocks of a village at which he was stopping, a youth of the place was mortally wounded in the affray. The natives placed him on horseback, and conducted him home; while his mother preceded the mournful group, proclaiming all the excellent qualities of her boy, and by her clasped hands and streaming eyes, discovered the inward anguish of her soul. The quality for which she chiefly praised the boy, formed, of itself, an epistle so noble, that even civilized life could not asprie to a higher. "He never," said she with pathetic energy, "never, never told a lie."

The Northern Baptist papers represent the condition of that church in the Northern States as deplorable, because of the general declension of vital piety. The editor of the Baptist Banner, (Louisville, Ky.,) ascribes this declension to the blighting influence of abolition principles!

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, February 18, 1847.

HOW WAS THE SABBATH CHANGED?

This question was farther discussed by Mr. Brown in his Lecture on Sunday evening last. His historical researches had already been conducted through a period of about six hundred years, from the apostles down to the acknowledgment of the Bishop of Rome as the Supreme Head of the Churches. It is the opinion of many, that this was the age of the church's greatest purity. In such an opinion he could not fully coincide. Indeed, he had no doubt that the first hundred years immediately following the age of the apostles did vastly more towards the corruption of the church than is generally supposed. His reasons for believing so, were drawn not only from the developments of history, but also from the multiplied admonitions of the sacred writes concerning the evils which should come in after their departure.

During the period of six hundred years which had been examined, the Sabbath had been losing its glory, and a humanly-devised festival aiming to usurp its place. Among the measures adopted by the church of Rome to destroy the Sabbath, was the conversion of it into a fast-day. This was a direct perversion of its original design, because the day was given to contemplate the glory of God as displayed in creation, and its return was to be hailed with joy, rather than with sadness, as fasting would imply. But notwithstanding the effort of Rome to take away every vestige of the original sacredness of the Sabbath, there were many who continued to keep it. In the early part of the seventh century, there was a class of people who declared "that it was not lawful to do any manner of work on the Saturday." Nearly five hundred years afterward, a similar class of people arose again. In both instances, they were opposed by severe papal censures. In the latter part of the eleventh century, to heap still greater contempt upon the Sabbath, it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary with a mass, by order of Pope Urban II.

As for the Dominical Day, superstitious doctrines concerning its sanctity were promulgated more and more. Some even held that it was the Sabbath of Christians—not, however, in the same way that it was afterwards held by the Puritans. Though they called it the Christian Sabbath, no one ever presumed to appeal to the fourth commandment for its sanction. It was called the Sabbath of Christians merely by way of analogy. They were careful to guard against the notion that it was required as such by any commandment of Scripture, because they had discernment enough to see, that the Word of God inculcated no other Sabbath than the seventh day. But notwithstanding the fourth commandment was not resorted to for a sanction of Sunday, they taught that it displeased God for men to work on that day. Hence the Almighty was represented as interposing by his providence to defend the sanctity of the day. Not only were the afflictive dispensations which actually did happen construed as divine judgments upon the profaners of the day, but a thousand fabulous events were manufactured for the same purpose. The lecturer here introduced several stories of this kind, invented to restrain the simple, which are narrated at length in Heylin's History of the Sabbath. In connection with these stories, a superstitious fancy was taught, that on every Sunday the torments of Purgatory were intermitted. Superstitions like these abounded in the dark ages; and they serve to show by what frauds the Sunday festival was wrought into the texture of society, and with what unremitting zeal the papacy pursued this object.

About the beginning of the thirteenth century, an effort was made to procure greater religious regard for the Dominical day in Great Britain. This was done by the inculcation upon the minds of the people of unscriptural notions very like those made use of on the Continent. Previous to that time, the festival had been partially kept from three o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday till day-break on Monday. But it had not been kept so strictly as was desired. The markets were opened, and Parliament met to attend to the affairs of State. Many of the kings were coronated on Sunday, among whom were Rufus, Stephen, Henry II., Richard I., and John. Richard I. was crowned twice—once in the beginning of his reign, and again upon his return from the Holy Land—and both times on the Sunday. The daughter of Henry II. was on Sunday crowned Queen of Sicily at Palermo. King John was first inaugurated Duke of Normandy, and afterwards crowned King, each event transpiring on the Sunday. Indeed, down to the time of the Reformation, and even later, so much business was transacted on that day that it was any thing but a Sabbath. These facts do not result from an abuse of the sacredness of the day, but are the necessary result of those principles which brought the Sunday festival into use in the first place. From the beginning it was upheld merely as a festival, and was not intended to be regarded as a Sabbath. In most Roman Catholic countries, its original character is still retained, with the exception that labor is interdicted. The after-part or evening of the day is spent in recreation and amusement. For this Roman Catholics are denounced by many Protestants as awfully depraved. But there is reason to question, after all, whether the Catholics, who never pretend that the observance of Sunday is enjoined by Scripture, are more guilty in this matter than their Protestant brethren, who have attempted to father a man-made institution upon Christ and his apostles.

The lecturer next took up the Sabbath controversy in connection with the Reformation. The great point upon which the Reformation from Popery turned, was the doctrine of justification. This doctrine, which is the central one of Christianity, had been well-nigh lost to the world. The unfolding of it necessarily led to the discussion of a great many kindred topics, and among others the doctrine concerning festivals. The Roman Church had multiplied her festivals to a most burdensome extent, and maintained that there was a great deal of merit in observing them, and that the days on which they were observed were inherently more holy than other days. In their zeal to oppose this pernicious doctrine, the reformers went to the other extreme of maintaining that under the Gospel all days were alike. Accordingly the Sabbath was rejected. But they soon saw that it was necessary to have some public occasion on which to bring the truths of religion into contact with the minds of the people. They could not go back to the ancient Sabbath, because that might subject them to the charge of Judaizing. Hence they advanced the sentiment that the church itself had power to appoint such festivals as were necessary to its prosperity, and might alter them to any other day at pleasure. The first day of the week was chosen, because it was already in common use. But it is said of John Calvin, that he once designed to translate the weekly festival to the Thursday, as an instance of Christian liberty. In process of time, these sentiments respecting the day of worship were found to operate disastrously. Hence a class of reformers sprung up who advocated the morality of the fourth commandment, but so interpreted it as to require only one-seventh part of time, or a day of rest after any six days of labor. Probably the first book written in the English language advocating this view, was that of Dr. Bound, published in 1595. The doctrine spread rapidly, and was generally adopted by the Puritans, although opposed by some of the most learned writers in the established church of England. At an early stage in this controversy, we find several able and zealous defenders of the original Sabbath of Jehovah, among whom might be named Brabourne, Ockford, the two Bampfields, the Stennetts, and others. The successors of these men are now laboring, under encouraging circumstances, to restore the Sabbath, and induce men to count it the "holy of the Lord, honorable."

[Mr. Brown gave notice of his intention to deliver his concluding lecture on Sunday evening next, the design of which will be to make a practical application of the whole subject.]

MISSIONARY REPORTS.

The Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association held a meeting in New York, on second-day evening, 8th inst., at which reports from missionaries were read. The following abstract of two of the reports will encourage the friends of the Association:—

Eld. A. A. F. Randolph is laboring in Crawford Co., Pa. He preaches regularly to the Hayfield Church, where a good degree of union exists, and the meetings on the Sabbath are well attended. He has also started an interesting Sabbath School and Bible Class, and has preached once in two weeks in a part of the society remote from the place of worship, on Sabbath afternoons. Recently there has been an encouraging state of feeling in this church, the members having been somewhat aroused, and a small addition having been made by baptism. At the village of Mosiertown, he has preached once in two weeks, on Sunday, and taken charge of a Bible Class and Sunday School. A series of evening meetings has been held at this place, in connection with which professors have been much revived, a few have been hopefully converted, and many others are seeking salvation. There are several in this vicinity investigating the Sabbath question, among whom our tracts have been to some extent distributed.

Eld. Azor Estee has been on a missionary tour in Massachusetts. He remained several days at Springfield, where a brother Morgan embraced the Sabbath some years ago. The circumstances of his change have already been made public. After having been brought up a Congregationalist, he embraced the views of the Baptists. This led to a discourse from his former pastor upon the subject of baptism, in which it was stated that there was as much scripture authority for sprinkling children as for keeping the first day of the week as the Sabbath. Instead of being drawn back to a belief in pedobaptist doctrines by this assertion, he was led to examine the subject of the Sabbath, and came out a decided Sabbath-keeper. In this vicinity Eld. Estee preached to attentive audiences four times on the Sabbath question, and distributed our publications. One discourse was delivered at the Town-House on New Year's Evening; another on the following evening in a distant part of the society; and twice on Sunday he preached at the Methodist Church in Springfield. Besides his regular discourses upon the subject, he conversed with a great number of persons, both ministers and laymen, whom he furnished with tracts, many of whom confessed their conviction of the claims of the Sabbath, although they were not ready to make the sacrifices necessary to keep it. The missionary also supplied several school-districts with tracts, by furnishing them at the school-houses to members of each family. He hopes that the seed which has thus been sown will yet spring up, and bring forth fruit.

THE GREEK CHURCH IN RUSSIA.

A letter from Rev. Dr. Baird, published in the Quarterly Paper of the Foreign Evangelical Society, gives a very full account of the Greek Church in Russia. It seems that this is the national and favorite Church of the empire, although nearly every form of religion is tolerated. The Greek Church in Russia probably embraces forty-six millions, while there are only six millions of Protestants. The Imperial Family, and most of the officers of the Government, belong to the Greek Church. In theory, the Doctor thinks it is better than the Roman Catholic Church, since the parish priests must be married men, the Apocrypha is no part of the Sacred Canon by any decisions of the church, the people are not forbidden by any decree or canon to read the Scriptures, there is no Pope or any other authority claiming infallibility, the Eucharist is given in both kinds, (that is, bread and wine are administered to the people,) and the doctrine of justification by faith is not denied and rejected. But in fact, the Greek church does not differ materially from the Latin; both are apostate, though not in the same sense in all respects, nor equally in heinousness. All the great practical errors of Rome are held in the Greek church—prayers to the Virgin Mary, and other saints, veneration of relics, praying to the dead, belief in purgatory, in absolution, etc. Though the priests, take them as a body, are more moral than those of Rome, there is nevertheless a great deal of drunkenness and avarice among those of Russia. They are but little respected, even by the vulgar, in the large cities, especially when they are out of the church. They are, generally speaking, very ignorant. But few of them are capable of preaching a sermon of their own composition; the greater part do not attempt it. Liturgical services constitute almost all that is done in the churches, either on the Sundays, or the saints' days; and these are performed in the Old Slavonic, which is unintelligible to the masses. As to the Scriptures, the common priests are generally indifferent to their diffusion among the people, and the most of the higher clergy are afraid of it, and therefore oppose it.

MATTERS AND THINGS AT ALBANY.

The Sabbath---License---Licentiousness---Sabbath Protection.

At my boarding place, I am known as a Seventh-day Baptist Domine. The Sabbath is frequently a subject of conversation; so that I have had several opportunities of giving something of the scriptural argument for the Sabbath. This, in connection with the "Address to the Baptists," which I put into the hands of a physician, who is one of the boarders, has settled him in the conclusion that the seventh day is the Sabbath. A Baptist clergyman, and pastor of one of the city churches, being present on one occasion, he called for his argument for keeping Sunday as the Sabbath, which, when given, he very readily refuted in the main. The clergyman's argument was chiefly, that the disciples kept it after the resurrection of Christ, and that apostolic practice was equal to a precept. Being referred to, I informed him that I would here take the issue with him, and rest the argument on the practice of the apostles. He however seemed unwilling to enter upon the argument, though hard pressed by the doctor. And after making sundry assertions, which he wished to have received as conclusive, that it is impossible to keep the Sabbath, that all through the New Testament the disciples could be found observing Sunday, &c., which were promptly objected to, he retired, seemingly disappointed. Now all that this is good for is, to show for "the thousandth time," that ministers generally are both very ignorant of the truth upon this subject, and very unwilling to receive it, and that private individuals are much more ready to acknowledge the truth than to obey it.

More petitions come in daily for the repeal of the present License Law, than for any other object. A Member from New York presented one with 5,000 names for this purpose. I have learned that a very happy method has been adopted of testing the influence that these petitions should have before the Legislature; and that is, by comparing them with the vote that was given on the nineteenth of May last, in the same place, for and against license. It is not probable that the law will be repealed, though some members were elected for that specific purpose. Several very large petitions have been presented from New York City for the extension of the license law to that city and against its repeal.

Several petitions, numerously signed by ladies and gentlemen, have come in for a law to suppress licentiousness, and punish seduction and adultery. It is a matter of serious lamentation, to see the reception which these petitions meet from Members, and Hon. (?) Senators. Some there are who take no pains to conceal their contempt for these petitions, and allow a contemptuous grin to *dis*grace their countenances whenever such petitions are announced. It is in the knowledge of some at least, that several "Members" were arrested last winter at a house of ill-fame, by the city police. And it is more than hinted, that some of them this year are no better. Our Legislature has constantly refused to legislate upon this subject, thus presenting one of the strangest anomalies imaginable. Every matter involving dollars and cents is gravely debated and framed into a law. Every man's pecuniary claim or grievance, is properly attended to. But when a large body of philanthropists, looking upon the moral character of society, and seeing virtue dethroned, the best affections of human nature crushed, the brightest hopes of doating parents destroyed, and every thing that renders life pleasant, and without which this world would be a charnel-house, completely at the mercy of the soulless seducer, send their petitions for the protection of virtue, innocence, purity, our grave legislators refuse to grant the request. Thus they say that a dollar is worth more than a soul; property is better than character; that your pecuniary interests shall be thoroughly guarded, but your daughters, your sisters, shall be ruined by the basest of men, with impunity; and that, while they are left to wear out a life more dreadful than death itself, their destroyers are permitted to roam at large in society, to repeat their hellish mischief. It is time to elect men to our Legislature who regard humanity.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate have reported a bill, in answer to our petitions. It covers, I think, the whole ground we ask. This, however, I am not able to determine, as I have not a copy. It will be printed in a few days, and should it need any amending, there are several Senators ready to propose the amendments, when it comes before the Committee of the Whole. The matter has now passed the most firey ordeal, and from all that I can learn, I think it will not meet any serious opposition. This, however, is not certain. There are several, in both Houses, who have agreed to use their influence to secure its passage into a law. I will endeavor to send you a copy next week.

REVIVAL IN THE 2D ALFRED CHURCH.

We rejoice to learn that several of our churches in Western New York have enjoyed precious revivals within a few months past. The following account, given by Bro. James H. Cochran, of what the Lord has done in the vicinity of the 2d Church in Alfred, Allegany Co., will encourage the hearts of those who love the ways Zion:—

Elder John Green and myself have held a meeting of days in the 2d Church in Alfred, which continued for nearly three weeks, day and night, from which most blessed results have been realized. I have had the pleasure of leading into the waters of baptism sixty-three penitent believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, who have been added to the church. Many old-standing backsliders have been reclaimed, and the church as a whole have been revived and greatly encouraged. The good work continues to progress. Some are anxiously inquiring what they shall do to be saved, whilst others are saying, Here is water—what hinders that we should be baptized?

I have never seen a work of the kind where the meaning of that expression of our Saviour to Nicodemus, in speaking of the office work of the Holy Spirit—"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth"—was more beautifully illustrated in a practical manner, than it was in this instance. Human agency was, comparatively speaking, unnoticed, from the all-pervading sense which I may almost say that every one had, that 'a greater than David was there.' One who made no pretensions to religion, said he never saw a work like it—no noise, no uproar, no confusion, yet every one in the vicinity was searched out. In conclusion, I can truly say, that it is the desire of all our hearts, that the lofty looks of man should be humbled, and the haughtiness of men should be bowed down, and that the Lord alone should be exalted.

Eight of those who have joined the church are converts to the Sabbath.

Revival in the 1st Alfred Church.—A letter from Eld. N. V. Hull informs us that Eld. John Green has been laboring with him for a season past in the 1st Church of Alfred. Twenty-two persons have been baptized, many of those who were backslidden in heart have been reclaimed, and the saints have been greatly encouraged.

CANAL-BOATS AND SABBATH-KEEPERS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I wish, through the medium of your paper, to ask a few questions, and wish also that some one or more who can give correct answers will do so through the same medium:—

1st. Is there, or has there been, a line of canal-boats running upon the Erie canal, owned by observers of the Sabbath?—If not,

2d. Are there a sufficient number of boats owned by Sabbatarians to form a line?

3d. Is there time enough between this and the opening of the canal next spring, to make arrangments for forming such a line?

4th. How have those of our brethren managed who have been engaged in running boats, and what inconveniences have they met with?

5th. Would it not be well, if there is property enough of this kind owned by our brethren, to form a compact, and maintain a consistent course of Sabbath-keeping on the canal, and by the aid of each other avoid some of the inconveniencies which evidently must attend those who go single-handed?

The above queries were suggested to me from the fact that one of my neighbors, who has lately embraced the Sabbath, owns a canal-boat, and wishes to run it, and would like an answer to these questions.

WM. V. HUBBARD.

Richland, Feb. 7, 1847.

The New Haven Courier says that many of the good people of Franklin held a jubilee on Monday, the 25th of January, at the house of their venerable pastor, Rev. Samuel Nott, D. D., who, on the Saturday previous, had attained the patriarchal age of ninety-three years, and who will have completed, on the 13th of March next, the 65th year of his ministry since his ordination, which took place during the period of the American revolution.

☞ The following paragraph, from the Philadelphia Presbyterian, is going the rounds of the papers. No doubt the evil against which it declaims is a crying one. But that it is an "impious defiance of God's law," we do not believe, and challenge the writer to show. God says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath; in it thou shalt not do any work." Now while Christian people continue to make that sanctified day the busiest of the week, we have but little hope that they will reform the reckless and profane by denouncing them for working upon a day concerning the sanctification of which God has given neither commandment nor promise:—

"Daring Outrage on the Sabbath.—No one, who observes passing events, can fail to perceive that iniquity abounds, and transgressors grow bold. One of the most glaring instances of impious defiance of God's law, has recently occurred, which should be held up for public execration. The Directors of the Long Island Railroad Company made an arrangement, and ran a special express train to Boston on last Sabbath, for the purpose of accommodating a company of foreign dancers!! Thus the whole Sabbath was occupied, all the men on the line were forced to violate the Sabbath, and this fearful example of reckless disregard of every thing sacred was exhibited, that a corrupt public taste might be gratified by an earlier arrival of a set of foreign sturdy beggars, the Viennoise children, who are to receive thousands of dollars for their fantastic capers, and that, too, from those who cry out against the extravagance of those who devote a small proportion of the sum thus miserably expended, in the moral and spiritual improvement of their fellow creatures."

A Female Agent.—Rev. E. Hutchins, in a communication upon the subject of missions, published in the Morning Star, says that for more than twenty years a female member of a church in Massachusetts has annually visited every family belonging to the congregation with which she worships, and asked them to give something for the cause of missions. Some years she has walked more than forty miles for this purpose. She writes the names of all the donors in a little book, which she always carries with her when she goes on her soliciting tours. During these twenty years she has collected not less than $1,000 for missions. The church to which she belongs has not one rich and liberal member, nor is it more wealthy than several other churches in the Association; yet at its last session that one church reported nearly as large a subscription to the benevolent objects, as all the other churches composing that body. The first year of her agency, for which she takes no pay, she received less than ten dollars; but since then the subscriptions have amounted to nearly $100 per year. This shows how much might easily be done for the cause of missions, were all Christians to become suitably interested in it.

The New York Evangelist and the Free-Will Baptists.—A correspondent of the Morning Star talks some plain things to the editor of the N. Y. Evangelist, which ought to lead to an explanation or confession. It seems that certain disaffected members of the Free-Will Baptist denomination have held a convention, in which they expressed their views on several points in opposition to the sentiments which that people generally entertain. The Evangelist published a notice of the proceedings of this convention, representing them as expressive of the sentiments of Free-Will Baptists at large, and commenting upon them with considerable severity. Soon afterwards a communication was forwarded to the editor, setting forth the true character of the members of the convention alluded to, and requesting him to recall his "slanderous misrepresentation of fifty-five thousand professing Christians." This, true to his established character, he has not deigned to do. For our part, we are not so much surprised at the result, as we are that any thing different should have been expected.

Short Articles.—The editor of the National Era talks to his correspondents in the following language, which we doubt not many of his brethren would cheerfully adopt as expressive of their own feelings upon the subject:—"Brevity is the life of a good newspaper. The parting words of a worthy mechanic in Cincinnati were, 'give us short articles.' Correspondents must remember this. We claim the prerogative of writing all the long, dull articles in the paper. Correspondents must be short and spicy. A long communication has not half the chance of publication that a short one has."

From the Congregational Journal.

HOW TO PAY FOR A NEWSPAPER.

Mr. Wood—Dear Sir:—While waiting in the store of one of your subscribers, I took up the last Congregational Journal, and was very agreeably disappointed to find it so well filled with interesting and useful reading matter, and resolved at once to subscribe for and read it. I am now taking as many papers as I can afford. I have resolved to begin the new year by throwing off one somewhat expensive and very injurious habit—that of smoking—by which I shall save money to pay for the Journal and all other papers which I take, and in the latter paper shall have one suitable for my children to read.

Note by the Editor [of the Journal.]—The gentleman from whom we received the above kind note is not, as we believe, a member of any church, though an attendant upon public worship, and a man of intelligence and taste. How much does his example shame the conduct of many professed Christians, who complain that they are unable to take a religious paper, even when they are living in competence if not in affluence, and who would shrink from any self-denial, like that of our new subscriber, that they might procure it for themselves and their children!

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The Bill appropriating three millions of dollars for the purpose of securing peace with Mexico, was the principal topic of discussion before both branches of Congress last week. In the Senate, speeches were made by Messrs. Calhoun, Corwin, Cass, Bagley, and others. Mr. Calhoun was in favor of abandoning all offensive operations in the war, and establishing a line, commencing at the mouth of the Rio Grande; thence up the river to El Passo; thence due west, striking the Gulf of California near its head; this line to be held subject to a treaty of peace; thus showing Mexico that we are undertaking only what we have strength to perform, and that we are not attempting to destroy her national existence. Other speakers had different plans for carrying on the war and "conquering peace." In the House, speeches were madd by Cobb, Broadhead, Dickinson, Rathbun, Kaufman, Foote, Brinkerhoff, Paris, Wood, &c. A Committee of Conference on the Ten Regiment Bill, made a report, which was adopted, and the Bill was afterwards signed by the President. It gives the President power to appoint officers of regiments below the grade of field officers, in the recess of the Senate, and without the necessity of subsequent confirmation by the Senate. A resolution was introduced, and discussed with much warmth in the Senate, to exclude from the privileges of the floor and the reporters' gallery the editors and reporters of the "Union," on the ground of abusive and one-sided reports of the proceedings. There was little else done during the week.

[The Three Million Bill was passed by the Senate on Monday, with the Wilmot Proviso against any farther extension of Slavery by the arms or the laws of the United States.]

EIGHTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The new steamship Sarah Sands arrived at New York on Wednesday afternoon last, bringing English news to the 20th of January. The news is important and cheering.

Grain and Cotton had advanced somewhat since the sailing of the previous steamer. There was, however, some trouble in the money market, which, in connection with the increased facilities for importation, it was thought would put a slight check upon the provision markets, and perhaps give them a downward tendency.

Parliament commenced its session on the 19th of Jan., and was opened by the Queen in person. Her speech briefly enumerated the principal subjects which would be brought before Parliament, and referred to the plans of the Ministry for a more full account of them. The following are said to be the three principal things which the Ministry are determined to carry out:—

They are determined to suspend the Navigation Laws, so as to allow the vessels of every country to bring provisions to the British shores. They are determined to repeal the duties of the last session on the importation of grain, which, under the present emergency, have not only been useless, but positively mischievous, by holding out a premium, to the same amount, in favor of France and other countries where corn is wanted. They have determined to prohibit the use of grain in breweries and distilleries, and permit the use of sugar and molasses, under certain restrictions, so that the great quantity of human food required in the distillation of fermented liquors may be saved to the nation. Finally, the whole of the available British navy will be occupied in bringing food from every quarter of the world where it can be had, to arrest the starvation of which Ireland is the scene.

The speech of the King of France, delivered at the opening of the session, was received by this steamer. It calls the attention of Government to the sufferings of the poor population, and requests coöperation for their relief; says that a protest has been issued against the incorporation of the independent and neutral Republic of Cracow with the Empire of Austria; congratulates the nation upon the auspicious marriage of the King's son to the Infanta of Spain; and says that the relations of France with all the foreign powers affords confidence that the peace of the world continues secured.

The speech of the Queen of Spain, at the opening of the Cortes, on the 31st December, was also received. It contains nothing remarkable. Her marriage, peace with foreign powers, domestic tranquility, her inability to arrange the public debt, the necessity of endowing the clergy and the church establishment, and the prosecution of public works, are the principal topics.

Suffering in Ireland continues and increases. The papers publish long accounts of misery and starvation. A terrible disease, almost amounting to a plague, has broken out in some of the poor-houses in Ireland. The deaths in the workhouse of Scariff, County Clare, from this cause, average from four to twelve daily. The English press, it is said, are studiously concealing the condition of the people. Forty-four vessels and 3,000 men are employed by the Government in affording relief to the starving poor of Ireland and Scotland.

The accounts from Mayo, given in the Freeman's Journal, are very painful. In the parish of Cong, 27 deaths occurred within a week; in a neighboring parish, a like number in three weeks. Rev. Patrick Fitzgerland, Roman Catholic curate of Kilgeever, thus illustrates theintensity of the famine:

"I shall never forget the impression made on my mind a few days ago by a most heart-rending case of starvation. I have witnessed the poor mother of five in a family, sending her little children, almost lifeless from hunger, to bed, and, despairing of ever seeing them alive, she took her last leave of them. In the morning, her first act was to touch their lips with her hand to see if the breath of life still remained; but the poor mother's fears were not groundless, for not a breath could she feel from some of her dear little children; that night buried them in the night of eternity."

An office has been opened in London to grant letters of marque and reprisal, according to decrees of the Mexican government against the United States. Three privateers have, it is said, already been dispatched. The rates of insurance by American vessels have in consequence been increased.

The Sirius steamer was lost on the Irish coast, on the 15th ult. Twelve of the crew and passengers were drowned in attempting to get on shore.

H. M. steamship Sphynx, of 1,056 tons, and 500 horse power, was totally lost on the 15th ult. on a reef of rocks near the Isle of Wright.

Letters from Gibralter to the 26th of Dec. state that a heavy gale had taken place there, during which the British brigantine Ocean Queen, and the schr. Ann, ran aground near Campo.

It is discovered that the city of London has been sinking gradually for some years. The water in the Thames is rising in the same ratio.

Joseph John Gurney, who has been so long before the world in the character of a philanthropist, died at Norwich on Monday, 4th January.

By an order of the Imperial Government, Poland has really ceased to exist, and is to be incorporated with the Russian Empire. Warsaw is in a state of consternation.

The popularity of the Pope continues unabated. He has recently raised the wages of the laborers, and given directions for extensive drainage works. The weather in Italy has been unusually severe.

It is stated that the cholera continues to make frightful ravages throughout nearly the whole of Persia.

John Quincy Adams at his Post.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune, under date of Washington, Feb. 13, says: "Quite an interesting episode occurred in the early proceedings of the House to-day. Soon after 12 o'clock, while Mr. Washington Hunt was addressing the Committee in a speech on the Loan Bill, John Quincy Adams entered the House. Immediately Mr. Hunt suspended his remarks, and the House with one unanimous sentiment rose to receive the venerable and venerated patriot, philanthropist and statesman. Mr. Andrew Johnson of Tenn., who has occupied previously this session the former seat of the Representative from Quincy, escorted him to his chair. He relinquished this seat to Mr. Adams, after having addressed him, through the Speaker, in a few eloquent and pertinent remarks; to which Mr. Adams made appropriate response—thanking Mr. Johnson for his courtesy, and expressing to the House his great satisfaction in meeting them again at his cherished post. Members of both political parties, with a common feeling of entire gladness, gathered around him and tendered their congratulations on his recovery. Mr. Hunt made also, in his speech, proper allusion to the scene. Mr. Adams seems to have lost flesh, but neither strength of body or vigor of mind. May both be spared long to himself and country! In the words of a great statesman of another good man, one universal prayer must be, that, "illustrious as are his virtues, far, oh! far distant be that day when any inscription shall bear his name, or any tongue pronounce his eulogy!"

From Mexico.—Letters from Anton Lizardo, dated Jan. 20th, state that the Mexican Congress, on the 9th, after a stormy session, approved the first section of the bill authorizing government to raise fifteen millions of dollars by hypothecation or sale of certain goods of the Church. Santa Anna opposed sternly this measure. The passage of the law created the greatest excitement in the city of Mexico. The Churches closed their doors, the ordinances of religion ceased, and every indication of mourning was manifested, and tokens of resistance were evinced by those who were inclined to support the religious establishment. The Mexican Congress, and the Mexican press everywhere, appear to be thoroughly roused. They are alarmed almost to despair. The issue they make is "Ser o no ser," "To be or not to be."

The committee appointed to proceed to San Luis Potosi, to inform Santa Anna of his election to the Presidency, state that in reply to questions relating to the condition of the army, he boasted of having sufficient private means to carry on the war for six months.

Earthquake at Ningpo.—By a letter from Dr. Macgowan, in the Magazine for February, it appears that there was a shock of the earth at Ningpo, in China, in April last. "It took place a little before four o'clock, A. M., and alarmed every one. The shaking, although not very violent, continued about three minutes." The house of Dr. M. creaked and trembled like a ship under a press of canvass with a strong breeze. It was accompanied with a noise as of a tempest blowing through a forest, though there was a perfect calm at the time. Such phenomena are rare in this province. No earthquake had before occurred in Ningpo within the memory of its oldest inhabitants. It occasioned immediate and universal alarm. Gongs, bells, bamboo sticks, drums, fire-crackers, guns, and human voices, were all sending forth their loudest notes until sunrise. Terror was depicted on every countenance. The houses and chapels of the missionaries were crowded with visitors to ascertain the cause, and not a few referred it to foreign magic.

Ohio Black Laws.—A correspondent of the Pittsburgh Mystery, (edited by a colored man,) writes from Cincinnati as follows:—

A worthy colored man from Mercer County, O., arrived here a few days ago. He stated in a public meeting, that the first Resolution of the ever notorious Mercer County Mob—viz. that no colored person should grind in the mills after the first day of January, 1847, had actually been ratified, and that a poor colored man with a load of grain had been turned off by these half civilized Buckeyes.

He stated that there were between five and six hundred free people of color in the County, worth, at least, two hundred thousand dollars, that none had ever been convicted of any crime, and that they lived in fear of being driven from their homes and firesides (unless the strong arm of the law interposed,) by the whites of Mercer County. Hence his fellow townsmen dispatched him with a letter to Columbus, stating the condition of things in Mercer, and imploring his excellency the Governor, to do what was in his power to stay the impending storm. He (the Governor) read the letter, seemed deeply touched, and opened the way by which the agent from Mercer could lay said epistle before the House of Representatives.

SUMMARY.

The charter of the Bank at Plainfield, N. J., has been repealed by the Legislature. A committee of that body, appointed to investigate the affairs of the Bank, presented a report, stating that they had not ascertained that the Bank had ever been lawfully organized, and that in their opinion its affairs were managed improperly, and in a way inconsistent with the safety of the public. The bill to repeal the charter passed unanimously in both Houses. Joseph C. Hornblower, John S. Darcy, Daniel Dodd, Jr. and Joel Dunn, are appointed Receivers or Trustees for the creditors and stockholders, and are invested with immediate legal control and possession of all the moneys, property and effects of every kind of the company.

The Railroad bridge over the Susquehanna at Harrisburgh, just finished by the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company, is an immense structure. The entire length of the bridge is three thousand nine hundred and ninety-two feet, or within eight feet of four thousand. It is built on an improved double lattice plan, there being two single and two double segments of lattice. There are 23 spans, averaging 173 feet, and 2 arched viaducts—one 53 feet, and the other 84 feet long. There are two carriage ways, above which, immediately under the roof, is the railway track. The entire cost of the bridge, we are informed, is about $95,000; of which about $15,000 were required to repair the damages occasioned by the several accidents.

Mr. Dowden, a Baptist Clergyman, living in Spencer Co., Ky., is said to have been murdered by his wife. The Shelby News says that Mr. D. mistrusted his wife's fidelity, and leaving home under the pretence of being absent a week, returned the next night and found a man in bed with Mrs. D., when she immediately jumped out of bed, went to a bureaux, and got from a drawer a large butcher knife, with which she stabbed her husband three times in the stomach and bowels—wounding him mortally. He made not the least resistance—apparently determined to let her who had so basely betrayed his honor, and destroyed his peace, also rid him of life.

A paper printed at Coburg, Canada, Jan. 20, says:—"We last week recorded a very wonderful convulsion on Lake Ontario. We have this week to mention one equally wonderful as having taken place at Rice Lake, 12 miles to the north of this town. Last Thursday, (Jan. 14th,) the lake was seen in great commotion, the ice 18 inches thick undulating in every direction. Presently it burst with a noise like thunder, and a large piece from the center of the lake was in a few minutes thrown up in a pile to the height of ten feet, in which position it now lies. This is no doubt related to the earthquake which caused the awful commotion in Lake Ontario at Grafton.

Several severe riots have recently taken place on the line of the Erie Railroad between the Fardown and Corkonian factions. Several persons are supposed to have been killed. Not content with these family jars, a large party of Irish attacked a company of German laborers, but were beaten off. The work on the line of the Road has been much interrupted by these riots, but several of the ringleaders having been arrested, some degree of peace has been restored.

It is proposed in the London 'People's Journal,' to get up a kind but faithful Remonstrance against American Slavery, to be signed by 3,000,000 of the people of Great Britain—a number equal to that of our slaves. Such a Remonstrance, if couched in proper terms, not only ought to give no offence, but would undoubtedly exert a good moral influence. Let it be prepared and forwarded, the sooner the better.

The Society of Friends in England have alone raised about a hundred and twenty thousand dollars for the starving poor of Ireland. Queen Victoria has subscribed about ten thousand dollars, many of the nobility have contributed liberally, and the contribution boxes of the English churches are becoming vocal with the silver music of charity.

There is a rage for Doctor's excitements. A new Medical Reform College at Memphis, Tenn, has this year (its first season) no less than ninety students, while the old regular school (the fellows who cling to the calomel and lancet) has only fourteen. A letter from a physician, there says that the time is not far distant when the old practice of medicine will be swept entirely out of the great valley of the Mississippi.

A Select Committee of the Delaware Legislature has reported a bill, agreeably to the wishes of a large number of petitioners, for the abolition of slavery in that State. Any sympathy with political abolition is disclaimed by the Committee, who consider it a subject belonging exclusively to the State in which slavery exists.

There is at present considerable excitement among the Friends in this city in relation to Odd Fellowship. Several young Friends have become Odd Fellows, and it is questioned whether they are liable to be expelled from the meeting for so doing.

The eagle, it is said, can fly at the rate of one hundred and fifty miles an hour; wild geese ninety miles; swallows ninety-two miles; and the common crow at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour.

The London correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser states that three privateers sailed from the port of London on the 9th of January, 1847. They are British ships, but have been re-named according to Spanish regulations, and they carry letters of marque. The names are as follows:

Renia de Castilla, Capt. Moody, 214 tons, 30 men. Sebastian del Cano, Capt. Smith, 153 tons, 30 men. Magallanes, Capt. Lash, 153 tons, 20 men. These three vessels cleared out of the port of London for Manilla, but are really for privateering on the broad Atlantic.

The editor of the New Orleans Bulletin states, on the 3d inst., that he has seen letters of the 7th January from the city of Mexico, and from parties having access to high sources of information, which express, in decided terms, a belief that the differences between the two nations will very speedily be amicably and honorably settled.

DIED,

In Alfred, N. Y., January, 1847, of consumption, Mrs. Lucy Greene, wife of Eld. Ray Greene, in the 46th year of her age. Sister Greene embraced the religion of Christ in early life, and in all the relations of life did honor to her profession. At the time of her death she was a member of the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church of Alfred, and has, beyond all doubt, gone to enjoy that rest which remains for the people of God.

Calm, on the bosom of thy God,
  Young spirit, rest thee now!
E'en while with us thy footsteps trod,
  His seal was on thy brow.

Dust, to its narrow house beneath—
  Soul, to its place on high;
They that have seen thy look in death,
  No more may fear to die.

Lone are the paths, and sad the bowers,
  Whence thy meek smile is gone;
But oh! a brighter home than ours,
  In heaven is now thine own.

Notice.—The third volume of the Recorder is more than half completed, and yet many of our accounts for the volume remain unpaid. According to our published terms, all such accounts might now be made out at $2 50 instead of $2 00. We desire, however, to conduct our business in the most lenient manner possible, particularly towards those who really find it difficult to pay in advance. For this reason we have determined to extend the time of receiving $2 in payment for the volume, to the first day of April. Those who forward their money before that day, will be credited for the present year as if paid in advance. But all accounts remaining unsettled at that time will be made out at $2 50. We hope that every subscriber who is in arrears will avail himself of this opportunity to settle up without the additional expense attendant upon delay. Money may be sent by mail, at our risk, provided the Postmaster is informed of the contents of the letter, and a description of the bills is retained.

Sending Bills and Receipts.—The Postmaster General has decided that "publishers of newspapers may send to subscribers their bills for subscriptions due, free of postage." We shall avail ourselves of this privilege to forward bills to all who are indebted to us after the first day of April next. Again, the Postmaster General has also decided, that publishers of newspapers may not transmit their receipts free of postage, but that receipts sent in newspapers subject the papers containing them to letter postage by weight and distance. For this reason we shall not hereafter send receipts in our papers, as heretofore, but shall indicate in our acknowledgments the number of the paper to which the money pays. This will obviate all necessity for receipts, and prove, we trust, as satisfactory to subscribers as our old arrangement.

NOTICE.

There will be a Quarterly Meeting held with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in DeRuyter, N. Y., on the last Sabbath in February, which the churches and ministers associated and in the vicinity are invited to attend.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of The Illustrated Flora, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty-eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, to whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, Lewis & Brown, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work as it is published.

Miscellaneous.

SOMETHING CHEAP.

BY CHAS. SWAIN.

There's not a cheaper thing on earth,
Nor yet one half so dear;
'Tis worth more than distinguish'd birth,
Or thousands gained a-year;
It lends the day a new delight;
'Tis virtue's firmest shield;
And adds more beauty to the night
Than all the stars may yield.
It maketh poverty content,
To sorrow whispers peace;
It is a gift from heaven sent
For mortals to increase.
It meets you with a smile at morn;
It lulls you to repose;
A flower for peer and peasant born,
An everlasting rose.

A charm to banish grief away,
To snatch the frown from care;
Turn tears to smiles, make dullness gay—
Spread gladness everywhere;
And yet 'tis cheap as summer-dew,
That gems the lily's breast;
A talisman for love, as true
As ever man possess'd.

As smiles the rainbow through the cloud
When threat'ning storm begins—
As music 'mid the tempest loud,
That still its sweet way wins—
As springs an arch across the tide,
Where waves conflicting foam,
So comes the seraph to our side,
This angel of our home.

What may this wondrous spirit be,
With power unheard before—
This charm, this bright divinity?
Good temper!—nothing more!
Good temper!—'tis the choicest gift
That woman homeward brings;
And can the poorest peasant lift
To bliss unknown to kings. [Lit. Gazette.

THE BROWN SILK DRESS.

BY MRS. PHILLIPS.

"Why, Eliza! what a strange choice for a wedding dress! Your other dresses are in very good style, and you have plenty of them, considering the changes in fashion—but a brown silk to be married in!—who ever heard of such a fancy in a girl of eighteen!"

"'Tis true, aunt, that my choice may seem somewhat sombre, but you know very well that I am about to become the wife of a poor mechanic, who depends on his daily labor for support. As the wife of such a man, I must necessarily limit my expenditures to my circumstances, and I have thought it better to purchase something which would be useful for some time to come, than to consult my appearance as a splendid bride for one short evening—especially as I am to see no strangers."

"There is something in that. There is my Maria's wedding-dress. She will never wear it again in the world. She had a white satin, with a lace dress over it. Oh, she did look so beautiful! I do admire a handsome bride."

"Yes, it is very well for those that can afford it. But it would be quite absurd for me to purchase an expensive dress for one, or even for a few evenings, when by the expenditure of half the money, I can procure that which will be serviceable for some years. But come, put on your bonnet and step over to our new house. It is all furnished, at least all that is finished; I value it more highly than I should if it was not so near my mother's."

"There, William has left this small parlor, this sitting room, and three chambers, to finish at his leisure, when he is out of employment. See how every thing is arranged. So handy for my work."

"You don't say you are going to do your own work!"

"Certainly I do. There is only one apprentice, and I should think it strange, if I could not do it all with ease."

"My heart, what strange fancies you have! To be sure, it is well enough, if you can bring your mind to it, but then folks do so differently now-a-days. There is my Maria, she has moved into an elegant house; all furnished from top to bottom. She keeps a great girl to do the work, and a little one to wait and tend. Oh, things do go on beautifully, I promise you!"

"Her husband is a young lawyer, is he not—is he wealthy?"

"Oh! he is very well off. He does not get much practice yet, but I dare say he will in time. He has a thousand dollars at interest; besides, Maria never would have married a mechanic—their hands get so hard and black, and their complexions, especially if they are exposed, get so brown. I would not wish to hurt your feelings, but I do think that for pride's sake, for the sake of the family, you might have made a different choice."

"Oh! aunt, excuse my laughing—I have yet to learn that a man's honest occupation, whether it produces hard hands or white soft hands, whether it gives the cheek a brown or a pale hue, is any disparagement to him. You must get acquainted with William, and hear him converse. You will not think of his hard hands; and his animated, intelligent countenance will drive his bronzed skin quite out of your head. But come, you don't say any thing about my furniture—and you see my nice closets."

"Oh! your furniture is well enough. The less you have, the less you will have to take care of, you know."

"Yes, we could not get much furniture. I insisted upon William's taking the money which my grandfather left me, to pay off a few hundred dollars which he owed for this place, in order to enable us to begin even in the world. We both have such a horror of debt, that we are determined never to incur any, if we can possibly help it. See what a nice press for bed-clothes this is."

"Why, what a quantity of bed and table linen—it is really nice, too. You have more than my Maria has, I declare."

"Yes, I always want an abundance of such things. This drawer is filled with towels—this is for my ironing sheet and blanket—and this closet contains my tin and wooden ware."

"I declare, Eliza, you are a strange thoughtful child! I must tell you one thing about Maria, that made us have a good hearty laugh. The Monday morning after she was married, the girl came to ask where the tubs were, and don't you think the child had actually forgotten to buy a tub, a clothes' line, or pins! She said it never popped into her head. But, la! it wasn't strange—she had never been used to do any thing of the kind."

"I believe, aunt, I have shown you all now. We will go, if you please. I hope you will not let my brown dress or William's brown hands frighten you away this evening."

"Oh, no! But as I must take the stage for Maria's early in the morning, you must allow me to retire early."

* * * * *

"What fellows these Yankees are for combining elegance and usefulness," said a Southern gentleman to himself, as he stood on the piazza of the hotel in the town of ——. "Sir," said he, addressing himself to a venerable looking man near him, "can you tell me who resides in that elegant cottage, where the grounds are laid out with so much taste?"

"Oh! that is 'Squire Bill Thorndike's. You must be a stranger in these parts, not to know him."

"I am, sir; and since he is such a prominent member of society, I should be happy to know something of his history."

"Oh! there is nothing remarkable in it, nothing at all, sir. His father was a man of great learning, but he nearly run through a fortune in trying to live in style. He died, and left three boys. Their mother, who went from this place, was a woman of strong sense. She sold the property, paid off all the debts, and had enough to buy this little house to the left. It has but two rooms, and there is a garden attached to it. Here she put her boys out to trades; one to a mason, one to a wheelwright, and this Bill to a carpenter. Bill staid, however. He married the widow Perry's daughter. She was smart as a steel-trap. She was a right good scholar, and she made an excellent wife. They have got along wonderfully. Every body wondered how it was. He did not make better wages than other men, but somehow the money increased. It was no mystery to me though, for I watched them pretty sharp. You never saw no great display of finery—such as laces, and flounces, and furbelows; you never saw him, before he kept a horse, riding much for pleasure. No, they both pulled one way, and took their pleasure in being sober, industrious, and useful, and now they reap their reward in being universally respected. Why, there ain't a man that has so much money to let as 'Squire Thorndike, and he is never hard and screwing about it as some are. He is n't stingy either. He has taken the two children of one Lawyer Willis to bring up, and he does as well by them as he does by his own. Lawyer Willis' wife was a kind of cousin to 'Squire Thorndike's wife. She was a dashy, showy gal. You'd ha' thought the richest folks upon airth were married, when they had the knot tied. Poor fellow, he had a hard time notwithstanding, to support his wife in style. He took to drink and died. I've heard say that she turned up her nose at her cousin's match; but she little thought her boys would be glad to go to that same cousin for a home, while she would be glad to take up with the little house that 'Squire Thorndike's mother lived in.

"Ah! sir," continued the old man, "this is a changing world; but to my mind, if folks would be more prudent and industrious, and give up hankering after things beyond their means, there would be more real good done in the world, and fewer changes."

ABD-EL-KADER.

Abd-el-kader is little, being not more than five feet high! his face long, and of excessive paleness; his large black eyes are mild and caressing; his mouth small and graceful; his nose aquiline. His beard is thin, but very black. He wears a small moustache, which gives his features, naturally fine and benevolent, a martial air, which becomes him exceedingly. The ensemble of his physiogomy is sweet and agreeable. Mr. Bravais has told me that an Arab chief, whose name I have forgotten, being one day on board the "Loiret," in the captain's state-room, on seeing the portrait of a woman—Isabeau de Baviere—whom the engraver had taken to personify Europe, exclaimed, "There is Abd-el-kader!" Abd-el-kader has beautiful small hands and feet, and displays some coquetry in keeping them in order. He is always washing them. While conversing, squatted upon his cushions, he holds his toes in his fingers; or, if this position fatigues him, he begins to pare the bottom of the nails with a knife and scissors, of which the mother of pearl handle is delicately worked, and which he has constantly in his hands. He affects an extreme simplicity in his dress. There is never any gold or embroidery upon his bernoue or cloak. He wears a shirt of very fine linen, the seams of which are covered with a silken stripe. Next to his shirt he wears his haick—a covering of very thin wool, worn as a wrapper over the head and shoulders. He throws over the haick two bernous of white wool, and upon the two white bernous a black one. A few silken tassels are the only ornaments which relieve the simplicity of his costume. He never carries any arms at his girdle. His feet are naked in his slippers. He has his head shaved, and his head-dress is composed of two or three Greek caps, the one upon the other, over which he throws the hood of his bernous.

[Five Months Captivity among the Arabs.

SLAVERY IN AFRICA.

In that part of Africa called the Gold Coast, or Guinea, domestic slavery is carried on to a very great extent; and is, of course, attended with many evils. There is one small State near the Kong Mountains, which is tributary to the King of Ashanti; and I was told, while in Kumasi, that this State alone sent to the King every year, as a part of their tribute, three thousand slaves of the finest young people that could be obtained. These must all be sent by a stated time, or else a heavy fine is laid upon them.

Besides this tribute, there is a regular trade carried on by the Ashantis in slaves. They proceed from Ashanti to the far interior, and purchase slaves in great numbers. These are brought back to Kumasi, and are sold as domestic slaves, either to those Ashantis who may want them, or to those tribes who occupy that part of the country which lies between Ashanti and the sea. These poor people are bought and sold just as a farmer buys and sells his horses. The usual value of a slave in Kumasi is from thirty to forty-five dollars. The women, provided they are strong, are worth from five to seven dollars more than the men. These poor creatures are sometimes treated with great severity, although this is not always the case. The master has great power over them; for although he may not kill them when he likes, yet if his slaves offend him, he may punish them so as to cause their death. I have frequently known them to have their ears, noses or lips cut off. I well remember one poor boy who, for tasting his master's dinner, had his lips so burnt, that when they healed, his mouth was so contracted that he could scarcely speak. And instances of this kind are of very frequent occurrence. Indeed they are hardly secure of their lives for a day. If a man is only suspected of crime, they have no great difficulty in finding him guilty by means of their fetish. A person accused has to pass through a kind of ordeal, which sometimes consists in drinking a very nauseous draught, composed by the fetish-man, of the bark of a particular tree. The man is either condemned or acquitted according to the manner in which it operates. They have also other modes of finding out guilty persons, which are all very foolish.

It is Christianity only that can put a stop to slavery in Africa. Trade has been carried on for ages on that part of the coast of which I am now speaking, and England has sent out several vessels to that coast for many years; yet neither trade nor armed vessels have put it down. Nothing less than the Gospel can overcome it. My young readers will easily anticipate the conclusion to which I would lead them. I need only say, therefore, that I hope they will do all in their power to send that greatest of all blessings, the Gospel, to Africa. [Rev R. Brooking.

DEATH OF MIRABEAU.

His end approached. Presentiments of death mingled with his vast projects, and sometimes subdued his flights of fancy. Philosophy and gayety divided his last moments between them. Pale, and with his eyes deeply sunk in their orbits, he appeared quite different in the tribune. Moreover, he was subject to frequent and sudden fainting-fits. Excess in pleasure and in business, together with the excitement of the tribune, had in a short time undermined his vigorous constitution. On his last public appearance he spoke five different times, left the Assembly exhausted, and never afterwards went abroad. He had enjoined Cabanis not to call in any physicians; he was, nevertheless, disobeyed, and they found that death was approaching, and that it had already seized his lower extremities. An immense crowd collected around his abode, and filled the avenues in the deepest silence. The Court sent messenger after messenger; the bulletins of his health were transmitted from mouth to mouth, and each progressive stage of his disorder excited fresh grief. He himself, surrounded by his friends, expressed some regret at the interruption of his labors, and some pride at what he had accomplished. "Support," said he to his servants, "support this head, the greatest in France." The visit of his enemy, Barnave, who called upon him in the name of the Jacobins, excited in him a soothing emotion. The Assembly was about to direct its attention to the right of making wills. He sent for M. de Talleyrand, and put into his hands a speech which he had just written. "It will be curious," said he, "to hear a man speaking against wills who is no more, and who had just made his own." The Court had, in fact, requested him to do so, promising to pay all the legacies. Extending his views over Europe, and foreseeing the plans of England, "That Pitt," said he, "is the minister of preparations; he governs with threats; I would give him some trouble if I should live." The priest of his parish came to offer his attendance, which he politely declined, saying with a smile, that he should gladly have accepted it, if he had not in his house his ecclesiastical superior, the Bishop of Autun. "You have promised," said he to his friends, "to spare me needless sufferings." So saying, he earnestly begged for opium. As it was refused, he demanded it with his accustomed violence. To quiet him they resorted to deception, and handed him, a cup with water which they said contained opium. He took it with composure, swallowed the draught which he believed to be mortal, and in a moment afterwards he expired. This was on the 2d of April, 1791.—[Thiers' History of the French Revolution.

"CAN'T TAKE CARE OF THEMSELVES."—We cut the following from the New Orleans Delta of the 21st ult. The "intelligent negro" here mentioned must be either bond or free. If the former, does he not deserve his liberty? If the latter, whether bond or free, answers all the books in the defense of slavery that ever were written:—

Ingenious.—We yesterday saw a steamboat whose dimensions would admirably suit the inhabitants of Lilliput. It was one foot and a half in length, depth of hold two inches, and, as an Irishman would say, 'tonned' about 10 pounds. The boilers were heated by means of spirits of wine, and in every respect the machinery was perfect. The maker of this is a very intelligent negro, who for some time past has been engaged in the up-river trade. Only think of it—a man carrying a steamboat, all fired up, under his arm! In the Quartermaster's office, where it was exhibited, all were delighted.

ABORIGINAL RELICS.—Mr. John Howard, of Fairhaven, while digging sand in his field, about a mile north of the village, found the remains of a human skeleton, which had apparently been buried in a sitting posture, and had upon its head a brass kettle with an iron bail and rim, containing a remnant of plaited matting, a girdle of sheet brass, about four or five inches wide, and several brass arrow heads. The left fore-arm, which rested on a triangular piece of brass, had a portion of the integuments still adhering to it, preserved, doubtless, by the salt of the corroded metal. No tradition of the use of this spot as an Indian burial ground exists; and, therefore, it is supposed that the remains discovered, were interred in the earliest years of the colony.

HOW TO JUDGE CATTLE.—In all domestic animals, the skin or hide forms one of the best means by which to estimate their fattening properties. In the handling of oxen, if the hide be found soft and silky to touch, it affords a proof of tendency to take meat. A beast having a perfect touch will have a thick loose skin, floating, as it were, on a layer of soft fat, yielding to the slightest pressure, and springing back towards the finger like a piece of soft leather. Such a skin will usually be covered with an abundance of soft glossy hair, feeling like a bed of mossy skin. But a thick-set, hard, short hair, always handles hard, and indicates a hard feeder.

VARIETY.

The fresh blossoms and succulent stems of buckwheat have been applied in Europe to the purposes of dyeing wool, &c. The infusion, by the addition of preparations of bismuth and tin, produces a beautiful brown color. From the dried flower bundles, different shades of green are obtained. The Siberian species of wheat, in particular, yields a fine yellow, which, upon boiling the wool still longer in the dye, changes into a golden tint, and at length becomes a beautiful yellow.

Bishop Hughes, of the New York Diocese, makes light of the alledged secession of German Catholics in that city, and what he calls the gullibility of Protestants in relation to it—says that no one of the several Pastors of his Diocese "knew anything about such a movement," and "had not missed a single recognized member of their respective flocks."

The Philadelphia Sun says it will be gratifying to the friends of "Old Rough and Ready," to know that he is a "staunch tee-totaller," and has not drank a glass of "the ardent" for twenty years past. A Brooklyn paper says that a company of 100 German emigrants are now in that place, waiting the opening of spring navigation to proceed to Michigan—being a part only of a colony who intend to settle there. They are represented to be thrifty and industrious persons, having all the means and appliances for converting the wilderness into a garden. They are accompanied by their own minister and physician, but did not take a lawyer with them, inasmuch as they are too harmonious in their disposition to need the services of such a functionary.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

MISSIONS.

The time has arrived in the history of our denomination, for which we have long prayed, when some part might be borne by us in sending to the heathen the gospel of the grace of God. Our brethren, filled with the spirit of missions, in answer to the prayers of the church, have come forth and said, "Here am I, send me." We have responded to their request, and gladly sent them out; and thus, by our act, have said, We will be laborers with you in the good work. They have left us with an assurance that we will be faithful to our trust. Upon us they have many strong claims. Do we feel them? Let us for a moment, in imagination, place ourselves in their circumstances; and to be without feeling then, is to be without the gospel spirit, and almost without the common principles of humanity. They expect our sympathies and our prayers. God's people are a tried people, in all places and at all times; but reason teaches us that the trials of those who labor in foreign lands will be increased an hundred fold. Who will not sympathize with them—away from friends, from Christian society, exposed to the dangers of a change of climate, to all the vexatious evils of heathenism, and possibly to premature death in a heathen land? Yet say they, "This we undertake with cheerfulness."

They expect an interest in our prayers. The monthly concert of prayer, the evening after the first Sabbath in each month, will be an interesting season to them, as it is to us. They will assemble, that little group of four, and with hands and hearts uplifted to God, will realize that at that time hundreds of their dear Christian friends in America are interceding with God at the mercy seat for success to attend their efforts. And is there a church, or even a Christian, so heartless in the work, as to forget that time, or to neglect mingling with the faithful praying few on these interesting occasions?

They expect from us a competent support. The means of support have been given to the churches; we have it in charge as God's stewards, and soon we must give an account of the use we have made of the Lord's money. Can we appropriate it to a better object than this? What means can be adopted that will be best adapted to carry forward the plan, and accomplish the object? The Executive Board have this business in charge, but the treasure is in the churches. It is customary among other denominations to have agents in the field to collect funds, and this plan has hitherto been pursued by us. The Executive Board may be under the necessity of adopting the same means again; but could we dispense with it, it would be better. Agencies are attended with many inconveniences, and many personal trials. The agents must journey through all places where their mission leads them, in all weather, and by some be unkindly received, because they are asking the people to pay their honest dues—the interest of what has been committed to them as God's stewards. They must be absent from their families most of the time, while they receive as a compensation barely enough for their support and necessary traveling expenses; yet they feel the burden of families that may be left, should they find a premature grave, without the comforts of life; while many of those with and for whom they labor, are securing a competence for old age, and their children after them. Such an agent will need as much to support him as a missionary in a foreign field; and could that be appropriated directly to the object, it would result in much good to the cause. We have but few men among us, who are so circumstanced in life as to engage profitably in such an agency. They are needed in the several churches over which they preside, and many more such could find employment to great advantage. Whenever an agent is employed, a place of importance is left vacant. I am not of the opinion that the labors of such a man will be lost; far from it. A prudent and pious man cannot labor among the churches, and scatter forth the seeds of the kingdom, in vain. His labor will be of lasting benefit, aside from the collecting of funds for the support of missions. But the question is, must we have an agent in the field, or can we sustain our institutions without one? To do without one, the pastors of the several churches must immediately interest themselves in the work, and then it can and will be done. It appears to me, that we ought to adopt the most simple means possible, with the least ostentatious show, and without making noisy appeals to the public. Let every pastor do his duty faithfully in his own congregation. Let him take his subscription paper, visit every family, and get their liberality, and all will be done that is necessary for this object. If circumstances forbid his doing it, let the church appoint some judicious one over this business, whose soul is fired with a zeal for missions. Such a work will be of lasting benefit to any one, whether a minister or a private member of the church, and through his labors others will be strengthened. This will make every minister a missionary agent, and every church a missionary society, according to apostolic practice. The best auxiliary societies that can be devised, in my opinion, are already formed at our hands, in our regularly-organized churches. They meet every Sabbath, and abundant means are at hand to adopt and carry out all necessary measures. This is not a society formed upon the spur of the moment, but many of the churches are of long standing; their foundation is sure, and upon such churches as are gospel-wise, both in principle and practice, we calculate with some degree of assurance, that they will not withhold in a day of trial. Let the churches thus consider themselves as organized missionary bodies, and that the principles of gospel discipline require them to carry out this object; then there will be an impetus given to the denomination that will be felt for ages to come. Something must be done. We have put our hands to the plough, not looking back. Our way is onward and upward. Let it never be said of us, that we began to build without counting the cost. It is not so. It is a subject upon which there has been much thought, and we withheld until we dare not withhold any longer. Here were brethren and sisters ready to go at our bidding, believing that God had called them to this work; our churches have come up nobly in raising the necessary means for their passage and outfit; and from the same fountain we trust the stream of liberality will continue to flow, for it is supplied by God himself.

MISSIONARY STATIONS IN CHINA.

Canton is said to be the only one of the free ports of China at which foreigners are badly treated. There affairs seem to be growing worse every day. Dr. Brigham, of whose ill treatment we gave an account several weeks ago, sent in a complaint to the native authorities, who replied very coolly, that "he ought not to go so far from his own house." One of the missionaries at Hong Kong says, that "Canton is a bad place, ten times more closed against the gospel than it was ten years ago." We rejoice to learn, however, that in the northern part of China, particularly at Shanghai, to the vicinity of which place our missionaries have been designated, the feeling of the Chinese towards foreigners is very different. The Southern Baptists have determined to commence operations at Shanghai, and have designated to that place Messrs. Shuck, Tobey, Yates, and James, who are expected soon to sail from this country. A report of the Foreign Committee of the Episcopal Board of Missions for the United States, contains some valuable information respecting Shanghai and its vicinity. The following is an extract:—

This city, one of the five ports opened by treaty, is situated on the river Woosung, near its mouth, and lies in the southern part of Kaing-su, a province which contains more than thirty-seven millions of inhabitants, giving thus an average of one thousand persons to the square mile—by far the most thickly settled country of its extent on the globe.

Shanghai is surrounded by a very fertile country; and, independently of its agricultural advantages, it is also the seaport of two of the most populous cities of the empire, viz. Su-Chow-Fu and Nanking, which are distant from the first, thirty, and from the second, one hundred and fifty miles, places of high literary character, and of great wealth and commercial influence. The first of these is considered the metropolis of classic literature, the center whence the rays of native philosophy are dispersed over the millions of educated Chinese; the other, Nanking, is the old capital of the empire, and retains still a great influence over the other portions of that vast territory. In addition to these favorable circumstances, Shanghai approaches nearest to Pekin, the present capital, and from its position near the junction of the Yangt-sz-Kiang, and the grand canal of the empire, it has a communication with its most distant extremities.

Besides its own immediate population, amounting to two hundred thousand, and its advantages for disseminating the Gospel through the interior by means of a native agency hereafter to be employed, Shanghai opens, above all other places in China, a prospect of extending to other regions beyond the empire, a knowledge of the truth. It already possesses an extent of commerce exceeding the united amount of all other free ports, exclusive of Canton, while, at a distance of but little more than two days' sail, lie towards the south-east, the interesting group of the Loo Choo Islands, and to the north-east, Japan and its pagan millions. The climate of Shanghai, a matter of great importance, has so far proved healthy to the European constitution. The summers, though hot, the thermometer ranging as high as 100 deg. F. in the shade, are short, there being only about ten days of such intense heat, and about two months during which it ranges between 80 and 85 deg. The other months of the year are pleasant; and the winters are cold and bracing, the thermometer having during the last winter ranged between 15 and 20 deg. F. during six successive weeks; so that missionaries, who have resorted to it from the islands in the Indian Archipelago, have found themselves greatly improved in health.

The demeanor of the people of Shanghai towards our missionaries is also highly encouraging. So far from molesting them, the magistrates extend to them great courtesy, and the people exhibit none of the arrogance and dislike manifested by the inhabitants of Canton, but, on the contrary, much kind feeling and good will. The missionaries mingle freely with all, both within the city and in its neighborhood, without having ever met with the slightest difficulty.

The dialect of the place approximates more than elsewhere to the court dialect, which, notwithstanding local corruptions, is generally, with certain limitations, intelligible in all parts among the higher classes.

It is in reference to this city, in connection with the city of Ningpo, that the Rev. Mr. Smith, of the Church Missionary Society, after the closest investigation, makes the following report:—

Viewed as combining in themselves the several distinct advantages of salubrious climate, eligible residence, and friendly disposition of inhabitants—direct communication with Europe—comparatively quiet insolation from foreigners—contiguity to the strongholds of native science—local proximity to the second largest city in the empire—central position in reference to the whole of China—and of future bearings, of the most magnificent order, on the evangelization of the surrounding Archipelago, I cannot hesitate to pronounce the united stations of Shanghai and Ningpo as presenting one of the noblest and most promising fields in the East.

I would point to the map, and, after surveying their mutual compactness, their largeness of scope, and their central position amid surrounding regions, where one unexpected event of Providence may place millions of idolaters within reach of Christian philanthropy, can fearlessly and unhesitatingly challenge any spot on the Chinese coast, now open to us, uniting in itself so many facilities as these two stations, on either side of the bay, which forms the embouchure of the Tsien-Tang-Keang.

DEATH.

For what is death to him who dies
With God's own blessing on his head?
A charter—not a sacrifice—
A life immortal to the dead.
And life itself is only great,
When man devotes himself to be,
By virtue, thought, and deed, the mate
Of God's own children and the free.

A SAILOR'S PRAYER MEETING.

The following, from the Sailor's Magazine, is truly interesting, and at the same time instructive to one who reflects on the wide influence which may be exerted by pious seamen:—

Sometimes these meetings have an interest peculiarly their own. The place imparts interest. It is the Sailor's Home, and so unlike the haunts of dissipation and vice to which he has formerly resorted. The persons impart interest. Here the Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians; the dwellers in England, America, and Germany; the French and Finns, strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Chinese and Sandwich Islanders, speak in their own tongues, the wonderful works of God. Such was the meeting on the second evening of the present year. The good spirit summoned all hands, belonging to at least eight nations, to take a part.

After singing, prayer, and reading a portion of the Scriptures by the superintendant, a German sailor arose, and said, he "tank'd Got, his heavenly Fadder, for this meeting. It did his soul goot to meet his brudder sailors once more."

He was followed by a Finnish sailor, who, in broken English, praised the Lord for the deliverances of the past, and the mercies of a new year.

Then a Danish sailor, who but two months before had confessed Christ, arose and gave utterance to his full soul. It was strange to him that he had come all the way from his native country to find an omnipresent and precious Jesus.

Another prayer was offered, when an American sailor addressed his shipmates with much effect. He wept freely as he spoke. He had experienced at sea the love of God shed abroad in his heart. It was on board the ship Brooklyn, on her last voyage to Italy. And he had experienced much of the goodness of God since. "Oh, my shipmates, let us be more faithful for Him, who has done so much for us!"

An English sailor then spoke in a similar strain. He had been in this Home and at this Saturday evening prayer meeting before. How often had he thought of this blessed spot in his watches at sea. Thankful was he for his return, and the privilege once more of joining his brethren in prayer and praise.

A Swedish sailor next addressed the meeting with much good sense. The readiness with which he quoted Scripture showed what is his chief companion in the house of his pilgrimage.

A Scotch sailor followed, summing up the instructions and impressions of the hour in a very forcible and happy manner.

In the progress of the meeting two or three others had taken a part; one of whom was a well-educated French sailor. If his shipmates had much to bless God for, he had more; for he had been rescued, not only from those sins to which sailors are addicted, but from the errors and dangers of Romanism. On board the ship "Silas Holmes" he had made the acquaintance of a pious sailor by the name of Montgomerie, from Scotland.

This allusion to Montgomerie recalled to the minds of some present the circumstance of his having arisen in a similar meeting in the same room about three months before and addressed them. He had that evening come directly from his ship, and stood before them a stranger. His remarks were substantially as follows:

"It was in this room I received my first religious impressions, and resolved on seeking the salvation of my soul. I went to sea, and during the whole voyage found no comfort. It was not till I returned to this Home, and to the meeting in this room, that I found peace in believing on Jesus."

The French sailor continued, "Montgomerie was very faithful to me. He showed me wherein my religion was deficient, and directed me to the New Testament to learn what I must do to be saved. Said he, you pray to the saints and to the Virgin Mary; but is that the way? Where does the Bible teach you to pray to them? If you want any thing of the captain, and he is accessible, do you go to the cook, or directly to the captain? Jesus Christ never told you to go to the cook, but to come to him. And blessed be the Lord, I did leave my Roman follies, and go to him. And what joy did I have then! What times we had on board the 'Silas Holmes!' But, my shipmates, one month ago this day he fell overboard and was drowned!" With an appeal to those present to be also ready, the French sailor finished his remarks, when the superintendant, after reminding those present of the approach of another Sunday, the importance of preparing for it, and of keeping it holy, closed the meeting. It was a blessed occasion; an emblem of that meeting gathered out of every nation to sing before the throne, Worthy the Lamb.

THE LITTLE BLIND BOY.

"To err is human,
To forgive, divine."

A little blind boy was asked what forgiveness was? He replied, "It is the odor that flowers breathe when trampled upon." Did not this sweet youth, to whom the world was dark, who could never more see the pleasant light of the sun, give the true idea of forgiveness? It is not difficult to feel kindly towards those that love you and confer favors upon you. But to have a store of good wishes and kind deeds for those that abuse and treat you ill—to be like the cinnamon tree that sheds a sweet perfume around the axe-man that wounds it, this is hard! But it is what the meek and lowly Jesus did, and what his true children do. Here, then, little folks, is a test to know if you love Christ. "If ye love them" only "that love you, what thanks have ye?" How do you feel when your playmates treat you ill? Can you return good for evil? Can you pray for those that injure you? If so, you are "the children of your Father which is in heaven, who maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good." Remember, now, that one way to manifest the spirit of forgiveness is by kind words. A missionary in Jamaica was questioning the little black boys on Matt. 5th, and asked, "Who are the meek?" A boy answered, "those who give soft answers to rough questions." This accords with what Soloman says, "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but greivous words stir up anger."

"Then deem it not an idle thing,
A pleasant word to speak;
The face you wear, the thoughts you bring,
A heart may heal or break."

FEMALE INFLUENCE.

Under God, I owe my early education, nay all that I have been or am, to the counsel and tutelage of a pious mother. It was, peace to her sainted spirit, it was her monitory voice, that first taught my young heart to feel that there was danger in the intoxicating cup, and that safety lay in abstinence.

And as no one is more indebted than myself, to the kind of influence in question, so no one more fully realizes how decisively it bears upon the destinies of others.

Full well I know, that by woman came the apostacy of Adam, and by woman, the recovery through Jesus. It was woman that imbued the mind, and formed the character of Moses, Israel's deliverer. It was a woman that led the choir, and gave back the response of that triumphal procession, which went forth to celebrate with timbrels, on the banks of the Red Sea, the overthrow of Pharaoh. It was a woman that put Sisera to flight, and composed the song of Deborah and Barak, the son of Abinoam, and judged in righteousness, for years, the tribes of Israel. It was a woman that defeated the wicked counsels of Haman, delivered righteous Mordecai, and saved a whole people from their utter desolation.

And not now to speak of Semiramis of Babylon, of Catharine of Russia, or of those queens of England, whose joyous reigns constitute the brightest periods of British history, or her, the young and lovely, the patron of learning and morals, who now adorns the throne of the sea-girt isles; not now to speak of these, there are others of more sacred character, of whom it were admissible even now to speak.

The sceptre of empire is not the sceptre that best befits the hand of woman; nor is the field of carnage her field of glory. Home, sweet home, is her theatre of action, her pedestal of beauty, and throne of power. Or if seen abroad, she is seen to the best advantage when on errands of love, and wearing her robe of mercy.

It was not woman who slept during the agonies of Gethsemane; it was not woman who denied her Lord at the palace of Caiaphas; it was not woman who deserted his cross on the hill of Calvary. But it was woman who dared to testify her respect for his corpse, that procured spices for embalming it, and that was found, last at night and first in the morning, at his sepulchre. Time has neither impaired her kindness, shaken her constancy, or changed her character.

Now, as formerly, she is most ready to enter, and most reluctant to leave, the abode of misery. Now, as formerly, it is her office, and well it has been sustained, to stay the fainting head, wipe from the dim eye the tear of anguish, and from the cold forehead the dew of death. [Dr. Nott.

THE RIGHT RELIGION.

There are four kinds of religion upon the earth, assuming the power to effect these great objects—that of Sentiment, that of Form, that of Feeling, and that of Principle. The religion of Principle consists in the intelligent adoption of a rule of right, and adhering to it. The rule is adopted, not from whim, or caprice, or custom, or civil authority; but because it is believed to be the will of God. It is adopted, not because it is beautiful, not because it will contribute to popular favor, but because it is TRUE. It may appear rough and rugged, harsh and severe; it may infringe on many customs in society, or even the laws of the land—it may require that our strong natural feelings should be suppressed, and the tender ties which bind to country and home should be sundered; but the will of God is regarded final in the case. It is not whether the matter at stake is of greater or less value, or whether what is done will be blazoned abroad or will be unknown. What is done, is done because it is RIGHT, not because it is beautiful or grand; what is resisted, is opposed because it is WRONG, not because it is an evil of vast magnitude, and the resistance will immortalize the man. In matters indifferent and not enjoined by the high authority of God, it is as gentle as the breathings of an infant, and yielding as an osier or aspen leaf. But in all that is matter of duty, it is like the oak on the hills. There it stands, its roots fixed deep in the earth, and perchance clasping some vast rock below the surface, its long arm stretched out, and its upright trunk defying the blast. There it stands—the same—whether the sun shines calmly on it, or the heavens gather anger, or pour upon it the fury of a storm. [A. Barnes.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.

The last ordinary meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society for the year was held on Saturday, when the chair was taken by Professor Wilson. A letter was read from Lieutenant Newbold, giving an account of his recent visit to the Seven Churches in Asia, showing the remarkable coincidence of the present condition of their sites with the prophetic predictions of the Apocalypse. Ephesus, although it gives a bishop to the Greek church, all the rest being but suffragans, contains but one hut inhabited by a Christian family. Smyrna is well known as the most flourishing of all these ancient cities, with a population of 130,000 inhabitants, with three Latin, two Protestant, and five Greek churches, and eight Jewish synagogues, and several Christian schools, although those established by the Protestants have failed. In Pergamus also Christianity flourishes, there being two Greek and one Christian church, one of the former being pointed out as the church of the Apocalypse. Thyatira was for a long time unknown, until restored by the Turks, at the latter end of the sixteenth century, though it now contains a Greek and Armenian church; and Sardis is more forlorn even than Ephesus, there being only two Greek Christian shopkeepers in the place. Philadelphia, which ranks next to Smyrna, and is the residence of a Greek bishop, contains twenty-five churches, in twenty of which service is performed, whilst that of the Apocalypse is pointed out. The condition of Laodicea is very melancholy and forlorn, and the site was for a long time unknown, as it has long gone by a different name. [Ch. & State Gaz.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

The two elder sons of Time were the fair To-Day and the dark To-Morrow, and they both loved Virtue's noble daughter, the blue-eyed Duty, each seeking her for his bride. But Duty, won by the energy of To-Day, cared not for his brother, the dreamy To-Morrow. So she mated with the first-born, and Virtue, her loving mother, blessed their union. Then To-Morrow, moved by envy, went sorrowing to his father Time, and the gray-beard, folding him in his shadowy arms, drew his ill-gifted boy to his bosom, and thus consoled him:—"Grieve not, my child, that the greater vigor of thy brother hath found more favor than thyself in the eyes of the grave maiden, Duty—grieve not, for I will give unto thee, for thy partner, gay Folly; her whose laughing looks and merry mood hath won her countless followers, and whose realm is all the world. And, as a dower, I decree that twice the third part of that which belongs to Duty and To-Day, shall henceforth be set apart for Folly and To-Morrow." But when even-handed Virtue heard the harsh resolve, indignant that what was rightly her children's should be transferred to others, she ordained that the first-born of Folly and To-Morrow should dispossess them of their marriage portion. And when the child was born, they called it Procrastination.—[The Good Genius that turned Every Thing into Gold.

TEST OF PIETY.

If our path be one of daily, weekly, monthly, yearly progress—if we are growing substantially better as we grow older—if we are more penitent and kind, more meek, humble, and obedient, more diligent and self-denying, more anxious about being what we ought to be, and less anxious about feeling so or appearing so; then we may have hope that our religion is somewhat substantial—that it can stand against scorn and contempt without, and also against impatience, fretfulness, and despondency within—that we are, in some faint degree at least, unworthy as we are, yet in some degree "adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour"—that the path we have entered on is the path of the just, and will be found to be as the shining light, that "shineth more and more unto the perfect day"—even that perfect, glorious, endless day, when to Christ's humble, lowly, penitent servants, the Lord shall reveal himself as their everlasting light, and "the days of their mourning shall be ended." RIDERS.

There is a class of persons, frequently to be met with among Christians, for whom we can think of no more appropriate name than that of riders. They generally profess a deep interest in the popular benevolent enterprises of the day, and not only advocate them earnestly, but contribute liberally for their support. Indeed, from observing their movements, and hearing them talk, on public occasions, one would be inclined to think that their zeal for the cause of God was burning them up; or, at least, that no sacrifice was too great for them to make in order to promote that cause. Yet, strange as it may seem, these same persons, if you chance to fall in with them in their private walks, are as timid and cautious there as they were bold and confident in public.

Perhaps you have visited a person of this class for the purpose of enlisting his sympathies in some new enterprise, which involves the necessity of arduous labor on the part of somebody. The importance of the object he is ready enough to acknowledge; nay, he even professes a desire to see it accomplished. But having done this, he feels himself at liberty to commence raising objections, without being liable to the charge of opposing you. He sees all the real difficulties of the undertaking, and his imagination frames a thousand others, which it magnifies wonderfully. A mole-hill grows into a mountain before him. The way is hedged up, and guarded by lions. It would be, in his estimation, the height of folly and rashness to attempt the thing proposed. At any rate, he is resolved to wait a while, and see how it works, before he will hazard his reputation by becoming identified with it. Should the trial be made, and prove successful, he will be ready to take hold. But if it should not succeed, and that speedily, he will stand ready to taunt those who were less cautious than himself.

Perhaps you have visited one of these men for the purpose of giving him light in relation to some long-neglected truth, the knowledge of which you deem important to the salvation of the world. He lends an attentive ear to what you have to say, and it may be acknowledges that your views seem to be sound and healthful, although they conflict with his own practice. Sometimes he will go even farther, and express his surprise that any different views should ever have been entertained. But here he stops, and begins to suggest difficulties. He wants to know how many there are who believe with you, and whether there is any reason to hope that this truth will ever be generally received by the world. If you can make him believe the doctrine will yet become popular, and that without much labor on his part, you have secured him, and he will profess a willingness to go with you to any extent. But while he has a doubt on this point, all argument or persuasion is vain. It does not touch the spring by which he is moved, and may therefore just as well be spared.

Now the persons who answer to either of these descriptions we call riders. They can not think of engaging in the work of preparing the way of the Lord, and making his paths straight. That they would regard as degrading. But the moment the way is prepared, the track clear, and the car begins to move, they are ready to jump on, clap their hands, and stun everybody else with their boisterous exclamations of joy. After all this riding is sorry business. Better a thousand times cultivate that earnestness in religion which will fit you for actual labor. Then may you enjoy daily the satisfaction of doing something, and finally receive the reward of good and faithful service.

REVIVAL IN CRAWFORD CO., PA.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Presuming that a few words relative to our present religious condition will be interesting to you, and the readers of the Recorder generally, I hasten to say, that we are in the midst of an interesting meeting in the small village where I reside, (Mosiertown.) The meeting has been held on first-days and evenings for some six or seven weeks. Our congregation is made up of five or six different denominations. The union which has prevailed thus far is gratifying to behold, and has called forth the admiration of unbelievers themselves. All have united in recommending to the returning prodigal and the awakened sinner the Bible as the only rule, and an all-sufficient rule, of faith and practice. The result has been, that its truths have taken effect. Pedobaptism has stood by the water to see its former friends immersed, and Sunday has been given up in some instances, and the Sabbath of the Lord God has been welcomed in its place. An interesting inquiry on the subject of the Sabbath is now going on in this place, the result of which, thus far, is gratifying. The physician of the place with his whole family, a Christian minister who has labored with us during the meeting, and one or two others, have embraced the Sabbath. There are many more investigating the subject, some of whom acknowledge frankly that the evidence is in favor of the seventh day. Seven persons have united with our church by baptism. Brethren, pray for us.

CIRCULAR.

To the Members of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination throughout the United States:

Dear Brethren,—It has been made known to you, through the columns of the Recorder, that our missionaries, brethren Carpenter and Wardner with their wives, have sailed for China, to make some part of that vast and benighted land the scene of their future labors. We are, therefore, as a people, fairly committed to the work of Foreign Missions.

According to a resolution of the Executive Board, adopted at its last quarterly meeting, it becomes my duty to advise you, that the funds you have hitherto contributed have been barely sufficient to start the work. After purchasing their necessary outfit, and paying their passage, a small sum remained for our missionaries to take with them, which will probably be consumed very soon after their arrival in China. It will be necessary to make them remittances at a very early day, and again from time to time as opportunity offers. We hope, therefore, that you will consider it, not only your duty, but your privilege, "to lay by in store according as God hath prospered you," for this object, and that without any delay. You have put your hands to the plough; do not even think of looking back. Let the zeal which you manifested when the design of sending missionaries to a foreign field was first conceived, suffer no abatement. The enemies of the Sabbath have eyed our undertaking with amazement, and said, "What do these feeble Jews?" We have replied, that we have counted the cost, and are prepared to meet it. We trust you will enable us to carry out our promise. It was the last parting exhortation of brother Carpenter, "Let me entreat you not to give up this glorious enterprise." His words were as the solemn voice of a dying man. Let them sink deep into every heart.

We desire that our ministering brethren in the different churches—and where there are no ministers, deacons or other leading brethren—consider themselves as agents to see to this business in their respective fields. If each minister would interest himself in the work according to its importance, the necessity of a traveling agent might be entirely superseded. Some of our brethren, we understand, complain that so much of the funds contributed is absorbed in the support of an agent. Gladly would we remove this cause of complaint. Only show us your readiness to help, by stirring your people and forwarding your contributions, and it is all we ask; no agent will then be sent to you.

It is desired that remittances be made to the Treasurer as soon as possible; and we sincerely hope that you will not wait to be called on by an agent, but that on the contrary we may have it to say, the people 'were willing of themselves.'

We desire also your earnest prayers for God's blessing on this work. We hope, that in your public assemblies, and in your private supplications, you will not cease to implore the God of missions to look kindly on our dear brethren who have gone to the heathen, and to open for them a great door and effectual, though there may be many adversaries.

On behalf of the Board,

SABBATH PETITIONS IN NEW JERSEY.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The readers of your paper often inquire what the Legislature of the State of New Jersey is doing with the report of the Committee to whom was referred the petitions of the Seventh-day Baptists for a repeal of certain oppressive laws. The first petitions having been presented in the Senate, the Select Committee of the Senate reported in favor of ganting the prayer of the petitioners. Their report embodied a full statement of the grievances of the petitioners, together with a bill for their relief, which was adopted and ordered to a second reading. The Committee in the House of Assembly, to whom the petitions presented there were referred, have not yet reported, but are waiting the action of the Senate in this matter. When the bill reported in the Senate came up on its second reading, a Member offered a substitute, and urged its adoption, which was accordingly done. This substitute, I believe, is similar to the provision in the laws of the State of Connecticut for the relief of those inhabitants who observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. I have not been apprised what farther action the House has taken on the bill. As soon as they come to the final conclusion of the matter, I will inform you, and forward for the Recorder the Report of the Committee, together with the substituted bill.

The Legislature seem inclined to do something for our relief; yet they move very slowly and cautiously, as though they were entering upon a treaty with half the inhabitants of the globe. It looks as though they were fearful that something will be done to militate against the popularity of Sunday—the great Diana whom they and nearly all the world worship. It is an easy matter to obtain relief for persons presenting different claims; pension after pension is granted; power is given some to enter into large and profitable enterprises; and others are having their names changed, together with their whole families, to enable them to obtain what they represent to be their right. But when the Seventh-day People respectfully petition for relief from unconstitutional and oppressive laws, they are put off and their claims unheeded or indifferently noticed, as though it was with the representatives a small matter. Such a course needs an apology. I can look at it in no other light than that they are fearful, if they grant us our constitutional right, that it will weaken the prejudices against the Sabbath of the Lord, and consequently lessen the veneration for the "Christian Sabbath," or first day of the week.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN NEW JERSEY.

Bordentown, N. J., February 19, 1847.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have just received from Trenton, a copy of the Bill to protect Sabbath-keepers, which passed the Senate by a vote of eleven to six. The Bill is entitled—

An Act for the relief of Persons who observe the Seventh Day of the week as a Sabbath or day of Public Worship.

§ 1. Be it enacted, by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That no inhabitant of this State, who conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall be liable to the penalties for performing secular business or labor on Lord's day, or first day of the week, prescribed in the revised statutes of this State, chapter xxiii., title 21; provided, such inhabitant disturb no other person while attending the duties of public worship.

§ 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect immediately.

This Bill, although not the one asked by our friends, may answer our purposes very well, as it removes the invidious ban over our heads, and virtually acknowledges equal rights to us. The bill originally reported was recommitted to the Judiciary Committee, and that Committee reported the above, whether of their own accord, or at the suggestion of any of our friends, I know not. The Member in the House from this place, informs me, that there is a good prospect of having it passed in that body, and that it will become the law of the land; but as the Legislature will adjourn on the 26th inst. some of our friends ought to be there to urge speedy action, and make interest for it, or it may still be lost.

MATTERS AND THINGS AT ALBANY.

Albany, February 16, 1847.

An Act to amend an Act entitled, "An Act in relation to the Seventh-day Baptists," passed May 7, 1839.

Sec. 1. The first section of an Act entitled, "An Act in relation to the Seventh-day Baptists," passed May 7, 1839, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"No writ, summons, warrant, order, execution, or other process, in any civil suit, shall be served or executed on the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, against any person whose religious faith and practice are to keep said seventh day as a day set apart by divine command as the Sabbath, and dedicated to the worship of God; nor shall any process be returnable, nor any trial be had, or any judgment be rendered on that day, in any civil suit, in any Justice's Court, against such person; nor shall such person be compelled to sit as juror in any Justice's Court on that day. Provided, that nothing in this section contained, shall prevent the service on that day of any writ, summons, or other first process in any civil suit, when the plaintiff, or his authorized agent, shall file an affidavit with the Court issuing said process, stating that the defendant, if the action be for trespass, has committed willful and malicious trespass, or, if for a debt or claim in contract, that the defendant is about to abscond, or is about to remove any of his property out of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought, with intent to defraud his creditors, or has assigned or disposed of, or is about to dispose of, any of his property, with intent to defraud his creditors."

When this comes before the Committee of the Whole of the Senate, an amendment will be offered, that "no such person" shall be compelled to attend as witness. In this shape, I am assured that the Bill will pass the Senate. It will then go to the House. I have conferred with several members of the Judiciary Committee of the House, and have received from them the encouragement that they will favor its passage.

This Bill may not meet the wishes of our brethren, but I can assure them that I have tried to have a law made that shall in all respects make us equal to Sunday-keepers. But I have been told, We can pass so much into a law—if you add more, it will defeat the whole. Again, it will be remembered, that in the Bill now before the Senate, we have all that we at first designed to secure; and we shall find much relief if we obtain only this. It will be several weeks before the House will take action in the matter. I shall therefore return home, where any who are dissatisfied, or wish to make suggestions, can address me. A longer continuance here at present, would create expense without a corresponding profit.

J. BAILEY.

Dr. Baird.—A letter in the Journal of Commerce, dated at Athens, Nov. 28th, says that Dr. Baird expects to return from his European tour to the United States by the Liverpool steamer of the 4th February. After his arrival he designs to deliver a series of discourses 'On the State and Prospects of Evangelical Religion in Europe.' He says: "I intend to speak of every country in Europe, if I can command time to prepare so many discourses—ten or twelve—and which I hope to deliver in New York and Brooklyn in the first six months or a year after my return."

Catholicism in New York.—Bishop Hughes, of New York, has published a Pastoral Letter, in which he congratulates his people upon the progress of Catholicism in this community. When he entered upon the administration of the diocese in 1839, the number of clergymen in the mission was between forty and fifty. There was then no seminary or college for the education of candidates for the ministry, or of Catholic youth generally. To fill the want, an ecclesiastical school was commenced in the northern part of the diocese, and in 1841 removed to St. John's College, Fordham, where it has lately taken possession of a building erected expressly for it. For the College $13,000 have been contributed by the diocese, and upwards of $100,000 have been expended in all. It has been put into the charge of the Society of Jesus. St. Joseph's Theological Seminary has also been completed and occupied. The cost of the Seminary and Chapel has been between $37,000 and $38,000. During this period the congregations have more than doubled in number, besides increasing in size. From 55 to 60 new churches have been built, and the number of clergymen has increased from some 45 to 120.

Baptist Mission in Oregon.—Letters of a very interesting character have just been received at the Home Mission Rooms, from Rev. Ezra Fisher, of Twallity Plains, (about twenty-five miles northwest of Oregon City,) Oregon Territory, dated August 15th and 19th, 1846. They contain statements of difficulties and hardships endured by the missionaries in that country, but they are spoken of as such as were anticipated; and are endured not only without murmuring or discontent, but in a spirit of rejoicing that they are accounted worthy to endure them for Christ's sake. The prospects of the Baptist cause in Oregon are represented as quite encouraging. Mr. Fisher thinks it might be greatly advanced by the emigration of intelligent and pious men from the east, who would be able to give form and character to society.

Protestant "Popery."—The Catholic Herald, printed at Philadelphia, says: "The Sabbath Recorder attributes the religious observance of the first day of the week instead of the seventh, to the 'working of the mystery of iniquity, which had begun its movements even in the time of the apostles.' It is also stated in the same paper, that 'those who observe the first day of the week,' are to be regarded as 'symbolizing with Popery.' Our Protestant brethren will not relish this much. But there is certainly much truth in the latter part of the paragraph. It is impossible for them to defend the change of the Sabbath without resorting to the very arguments which Catholics, employ with still greater force, to defend other points which Protestants deny. There is certainly no express authority in Holy Scripture for the change. Consequently all consistent Protestants should be Sabbatarians."

Buying a Man.—Most of our readers are aware, that Frederick Douglass, the colored man who has been making such a stir among the English abolitionists for a year past, was a fugitive slave, and of course liable to be captured and taken back into slavery again. Several of his British friends, to prevent the possibility of such an event, purchased his freedom of his former master for $750, and made him a Christmas present of himself. This transaction is regarded by a portion of the anti-slavery press as not only impolitic, but as acknowledging the unsound principle that one man may hold property in another man. We question whether his words on behalf of the enslaved will ever again have the weight which they had when he could say of himself, "I am a Slave, under the Constitution of the United States."

Piety Extraordinary.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune, giving an account of a visit to the London Zoological Gardens, says: "It is a trait of English piety, which would, no doubt, find its defenders among ourselves, not to feed the animals on Sunday, that their keepers may have rest—at least this was the explanation given us by one of these men of the state of ravenous hunger in which we found them on the Monday. I half hoped he was jesting with us. Certain it is, that the eagles were wild with famine, and even the grandest of them, who had eyed us at first as if we were not fit to live in the same zone with him, when the meat came round, after a short struggle to maintain his dignity, joined in the wild shriek and scramble with the rest."

Revival among the Lutherans.—The Lutheran Observer says, that a mighty work of grace is in progress in the Lutheran Church in Virginia. A respected correspondent writes: "The Lord is doing wonders for us in Western Virginia. We have had four protracted meetings during the fall and winter—two in brother Hawkins' charge, one in brother Greever's, and one in my own; and during these meetings about two hundred and seventy professed to have experienced a change of heart. Yes, the Lord has done great things, whereof we are glad!"

Sailing of Missionaries.—The Christian Chronicle has learned that the missionaries of the Southern Baptist Convention, Messrs. Shuck, Yates, Tobey, and Johnson, with Yong Seen Sang, expect to sail from Boston for China, in the ship Ashburton, on the 25th of this month.

Carlow's Defense of the Sabbath.—The American Sabbath Tract Society has recently issued a new and greatly-improved edition of George Carlow's Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. The work was first printed in London in 1724, and afterwards reprinted in this country in 1802. The present edition has been prepared for the press by a Committee of the Sabbath Tract Society, and is really a valuable addition to the list of the Society's publications. For pungency and heart-searching character we do not know a work superior to it.

"Land of Steady Habits."—The American Messenger states, that a volume agent found in one town in Connecticut, thirty-nine distilleries in full blast. In one parish in the town there were thirty-eight in operation and two not at work. In one street he passed four distilleries, in one afternoon, in the space of forty rods. There are five or six rum-selling taverns in the town, most of which are kept by professors of religion! He met with complaints against the Society's publications, because they say so much about temperance.

Jewish Missionary House Abandoned.—More than a year ago, the American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews established a Mission House in New York for the purpose of furnishing a home for needy inquirers. After trial for a twelve-month, the Board of Directors have felt constrained to abandon this specific mode of action, and will confine themselves in future to the more familiar and acceptable instrumentalities of missionary operation.

Sabbath Lecture.—Mr. Brown's concluding Lecture upon the subject of the Sabbath, which would regularly have been delivered on Sunday evening last, was postponed on account of a severe storm. He intends to deliver it on Sunday evening next, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh-st., between Bowery and Third Avenue.

Benevolent Operations in 1846.—A correspondent of the Boston Atlas, reviewing the events of the year 1846, speaks of benevolent operations as follows:—

"It is cheering to learn that all the great benevolent Societies, which mark the age, have been steadily advancing, and enlarging their operations. About seventy new missionaries, sustained by different denominations, in addition to the many hundreds now shedding light from prominent stations throughout the pagan world, have been sent out from the United States the past year. While nearly two thousand Home Missionaries, and several hundred Colporteurs and Religious Book Distributors, have been sustained by the same benefactors, in the more destitute portions of our own country—including large numbers laboring especially among our immigrant population, with a view to make them good American citizens, as well as good Christians. And last, not least, a vastly greater amount of religious intelligence has been diffused through the secular press, than at any former period."

AID FOR IRELAND.

The accounts of poverty and starvation in Ireland seem to have aroused the humane and benevolent throughout our country. Public meetings have been held in all the principal cities and towns, and measures adopted for the immediate relief and future supply of the starving. Private individuals have in some cases given a thousand dollars each for the object. The inhabitants of the town of Northampton, Mass., raised five thousand dollars at their first meeting. Mr. Giles delivered a lecture in Brooklyn in behalf of the suffering poor, from which about five hundred dollars was realized. A committee appointed for the purpose in the city of New York, has received over thirty thousand dollars, a portion of which has been paid for corn-meal which is on its way to Ireland. A bill is before Congress, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to "expend the sum of five hundred thousand dollors in the purchase of articles of subsistence for the people of Ireland, now suffering from famine, and in paying the cost of transporting such articles to proper agents in Ireland, for gratuitous distribution." A Central Executive Committee has been appointed at Albany, to act on behalf of contributors in the State of New York. They have issued a Circular, inviting the speedy and cordial coöperation of their fellow citizens, and recommending as follows:—

That relief societies be organized in each town and ward in the State:

That contributions be made in money, flour, corn, rye, wheat, peas, beans, cotton or wollen cloth, shoes, stockings, or even second hand clothing, as the naked are nearly as numerous as the starving:

That the articles contributed be packed with great care, in boxes or casks, numbered, marked with the name of the town and county whence they come, and directed to "Thomas James, Albany; for relief of Ireland," the latter words being added, in order that they may come freight free, where canals and railroads, as many of them will, transport such articles gratuitously:

That the packages be delivered through the agency of intermediate societies or otherwise at the most convenient place, on railroad or canal, free of charge, to proper agents, and receipts taken and forwarded by mail to Thomas James, Albany, and the Corresponding Secretary, John W. Ford, also furnished by mail with a list of articles forwarded from each town or society, and the estimated value:

That all money be sent by mail enclosed to Theodore Olcott, Treasurer; and the Corresponding Secretary, John W. Ford, also advised by letter of the amount sent.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the SENATE, the Three Million Bill, with the proviso excluding slavery from any acquired territory, was under consideration all through the last week. Most of the speeches upon it had reference to the slavery question.

Mr. Calhoun made some interesting remarks relative to the Wilmot proviso, predicting the most fearful consequences to the Union, should its principles be carried out. He concluded by offering a series of resolutions, setting forth:— 1. That the territories of the United States are joint and common property of all the States. 2. That Congress, as the agent of all the States, has no right to make any law by which they shall be deprived of full and equal rights to any territory acquired or to be acquired. 3. That any law which would deprive the citizens of any State from emigrating with their property into any territory of the United States, would be in derogation of this perfect equality, and in violation of the Constitution, and tend to subvert the Union. 4. That the imposition of any condition upon a State, in order to its admission into the Union, other than that its Constitution shall be republican, would be a direct violation of the Constitution, and conflict with the principles on which our system rests. Mr. Calhoun asked that the resolutions be printed, which was agreed to. He hoped, when taken up, Senators would be prepared to vote on them. It was high time for the South to know where they stood.

Mr. Webster offered two resolutions: first, that the war with Mexico ought not to be prosecuted for the acquisition of territory to form new States to be added to the Union; and, second, that our Government ought to signify to Mexico that the United States does not desire to dismember that Republic, and is ready to treat for peace, for a liberal adjustment of boundary, and for a just indemnity for claims due by either Government to the citizens of the other. On his motion the resolutions were laid on the table to be called up hereafter, when he will speak on them.

A Bill to provide for the construction of four steam frigates was passed; also a bill to extend naval pensions for five years.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the bill for the admission of Wisconsin into the Union was passed. The Territorial Bill, to aid in the construction of certain roads in Wisconsin, was rejected. The bill to establish a new Territorial Government in Itaskia was passed. We do not notice any thing else of general interest done by the House.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston on the afternoon of the 20th inst., sixteen days from Liverpool. The following summary of her news is taken from the Tribune:—

The great feature of the news by this arrival is a decided decline in the prices of grain, flour, &c., in the chief British markets. The decline is not extensive, but universally conceded, and, being based upon immense receipts and stocks, as well as an increased stringency in the money market, is pretty certain to hold, and quite likely to be carried farther. Provisions generally (meats, butter, cheese, &c.) exhibit little change.

There was no abatement of the famine in Ireland, but contributions were beginning to flow in, and we hope that there will be less actual starvation hereafter than there has been. But portions of Scotland, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Hungary, &c., are only less exposed to this scourge than unhappy Ireland.

The proceedings of the British Parliament have been full of interest. The measures proposed by the Ministry in view of the existing dearth and dearness of food throughout the united Kingdoms are, 1. An entire remission of the duties on the importation of grain, which are now very low; 2. A suspension of the Navigation Laws, so as to allow the importation of foreign grain in any vessels, while it has hitherto been confined to British and those of the country wherein this grain was grown; and, 3. A remission of the sugar duties. The two former will pretty certainly be adopted.

France is suffering under a revulsion in money and business, and is threatened with famine, though so large a proportion of her industry is agricultural. The Government is doing its utmost to avert the crisis, reducing the duties on grain and provisions to a mere shadow, and itself importing 100,000 barrels of flour from this country, 35,000 of which had arrived, and the remainder was on the way. The exportation of potatoes and other vegetables, has been prohibited. The King appears to value a good understanding with this country, and is taking thorough measures to prevent the fitting out of privateers by French men or money to cruise against our commerce under the Mexican letters of marque so freely proffered. Still, our war upon Mexico is freely canvassed in the Paris journals. The Journal des Debats, the Ministerial organ, in giving place to a part of Mr. Polk's Message, combats its defence of the war, and declares that war, as it had frequently before declared it, unjust. It states that all Europe is unanimous in censuring the war, not from sympathy with Mexico, but because it shows that the United States have abandoned that policy of respect to law in which they so greatly distinguished themselves.

The deaths of Capt. Rathbone of the packet ship Columbia, of Capt. Pierce of the Utica, and C. Grimshaw, Esq. the well-known emigration and shipping agent, have caused much sensation among those interested in American trade. Capt. Pierce died on the passage of his vessel out to Havre; Capt. Rathbone, with his first and second mates, five seamen and a boy, was washed overboard from his vessel in a gale on the 13th ult. while on their passage hence to Liverpool, where his ship arrived on the 27th; Mr. Grimshaw died on the 1st inst. Capt. P. had been in bad health for some time, and purposed remaining in France on that account; Mr. Grimshaw died quite suddenly.

PERILS OF THE SEA.—Intelligence was received by a late arrival from Europe, that two passengers and two seamen were landed early in January, at Sicily Island, taken off the schooner Theodore Frelinghuysen. The Providence Journal says:—

"Mr. Israel Wood of this city, well known as a stucco worker, sailed from New York in November last, in the 'Theodore Frelinghuysen,' bound to North Carolina; and no account having subsequently been received from the vessel, it was generally supposed that she must have foundered at sea, and all hands perished. There is now too much reason to believe, that this was the fate of the vessel and residue of those on board; but we are happy to learn that Mr. Wood and his son, with two of the crew, were saved."

A letter from Mr. Wood, dated Liverpool, states that for 31 days after leaving New York, they were subjected to a succession of violent gales, driven a long way from the coast, their vessel much shattered, and their provisions and water nearly all consumed. On meeting an English ship, they requested to be taken off, which could not then be done, in consequence of the heavy sea; but the Captain promised to lie by until better weather. Soon after which, during the night, the two vessels came together, and before they separated, Mr. Wood and his son, and two of the crew, climbed on board the ship. In the morning the schooner could not be seen.

DESTITUTION AND AVARICE.—In New York, on Monday, 18th inst., a woman 59 years old, named Betsey Rich, having a broken arm, and living alone in a little room at 267 Sixth Avenue, while cooking a miserable meal with wood shavings in her fire-place, accidentally exposed her apron to the blaze, and was instantly enveloped in flames. Her cries speedily brought a crowd around her, but too late—her clothes were extinguished when nearly destroyed, and at the recommendation of a physician, she was conveyed to the Alms-House, where she died on Thursday morning. As she adhered to the Episcopal denomination, though not a member of the Church, a clergyman of that Church attended to give her a Christian burial, and an Episcopal lady volunteered to pay the funeral expenses, when the clergyman suggested that her apartment, which had been fast locked meantime, might as well be searched, to see whether she did not leave enough to pay the sexton. The suggestion was followed, when, to the astonishment of all, especially of the philanthropic gentleman who had been foremost in smoothing her dying pillow, and on whose charity she had subsisted all winter, there was found a good Bond and Mortgage for $2,800, (besides $100 accrued interest, which had been offered her, but she insisted on its being retained to draw interest with the Bond,) a Savings Bank book on which stood $96 69 to her credit, $38 in gold and silver in three purses wound up in list balls, besides a full chest of bedding, clothing, &c.

SUICIDE.—We regret to learn from the Utica News, that the Rev. Mr. Baily, pastor of the Baptist church in West Hartwick, Otsego Co., committed suicide last Saturday night, the 6th inst., under the following singular circumstances:—He had been observed to be deranged for nearly a week. He seemed oppressed with the idea that some person or persons had a design to poison him, and regarded his food with much suspicion. His friends were alarmed about him, and on the night of the fatal occurrence, the gentleman with whom he boarded slept with him, fearing some harm. About 12 o'clock, he said he wanted to smoke, and got out of bed and went towards the door. The gentleman with him started up, when Mr. B., with great expertness, sprang through the window, sash and all, ran three or four rods to a well, and plunged headlong into it. No cause is given for his derangement, except excessive study. He was a single man, about 34 years of age. His relatives reside in Connecticut.

SUMMARY.

The Providence Journal of Feb. 13, says that Mr. Frazer, who lives at the Spring Green Factory, was stopped on the Pawtuxet road, near Arthur Green's tavern, early Tuesday evening, by three men. He was knocked down, and one of the robbers held a pistol over him, while another rifled his pockets of $26. Mr. Frazer was walking by the side of his wagon when he was attacked. The same men made two other attempts to stop travelers on the road, but in both cases the horses were too quick for them. Mr. Frazer was severely wounded by the blows of the ruffians.

Mr. Robert Owen publishes in the Washington National Era, his plan for the abolition of slavery, viz. that all slaves born after the 1st of January, 1850, shall be educated by the State governments and prepared to become good and useful citizens, and after serving an apprenticeship equal to their assumed value to their owners, they shall be colonized in some territory set apart for them by the government; those in servitude at the date named, to remain in servitude, or otherwise, at the pleasure of the owners.

A large cotton planter near Vicksburgh asserts that he would prefer making corn at 25 cts. per bushel, to cotton at 8 cts. per pound, and has offered to plant his entire plantation in corn this year if he can contract for the same at 33 cts. per bushel, delivered on the plantation or on the bank of the river. A large corn operator offered to contract at 30 cts. per bushel, but the parties did not close.

The office of the "Voice of the People," the Equal Rights organ, published at Delhi, Delaware Co., was broken into, and the type for one half the paper, which was set up to be worked off the next day, taken off, together with the subscription list. The burglars are unknown. The outrage was perpetrated, it is supposed, to prevent the publication of certain anticipated strictures of a personal character.

A volunteer, writing from Parras, Mexico, says that he attended service in one of the Catholic churches there, and after the ceremonies were over, was politely invited into the sacristy by the attending priest. There he and his brother officers were regaled with cigars, wine and brandy. The priest was talkative, jovial, and very good company. The "boys" will certainly "join his church."

It is stated that the War Department, under the ten Regiment Act, will accept seven companies from New York and three from New Jersey, making one regiment for these two States. From Rhode Island, one company; Maine, three; New Hampshire, two; Connecticut, two; Vermont, two; or one regiment from New England. From Maryland, four companies; Delaware, one. It is said that Pennsylvania and Ohio will each furnish a regiment; and that North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia conjointly will furnish one. The companies will be accepted from Illinois. The mounted regiment will probably be raised in Tennessee and Kentucky.

Indian corn is now selling at Terre-Haute, Indiana, (on the Wabash river and canal) for twenty cents per bushel—that same corn which is here worth a dollar, and in Ireland over $2 per bushel. Trade and transportation receive four times as much for bringing corn from the Wabash to this city as the farmer obtains for growing it, and then navigation charges twice and a half the farmer's price in addition for conveying each bushel to Liverpool.

The steamboats Oregon and Knickerbocker are to run to Stonington. A new line between this city and Boston, via. Fall River and the Old Colony Railroad, is to be formed by the Massachusetts, and a new boat now building, to be called the Bay State. This last mentioned steamer, it is said, will be larger than the Atlantic, and is to be fitted up in a style superior to that ill-fated vessel. Messrs. Brown & Bell are building a large boat for the Norwich and Worcester line. The Oregon is being altered and improved materially, strengthened and supplied with an additional mast.

THE BILL TO SUPPRESS GAMBLING, which has passed one House of the Pennsylvania Legislature, makes gambling a penitentiary offence, and authorizes the officers of the law to break open houses to search for gambling apparatus, upon the oath of any person made for the purpose before the justice of the peace, and also subjects the offender to heavy fines for breaches of the law. If any person shall invite another to a place of gambling, he shall be held personally responsible for all losses the person thus invited shall sustain, and be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, nor less than fifty dollars.

We know not when or where the experiment of comparative freedom was ever more successful than in Great Britain under the cheap postage system. The result is that the annual income to the Government from the mail service, over all expenses, exceeds four millions of dollars, although letters are carried throughout the Kingdom for a penny, in advance, and newspapers for nothing, and both are delivered to individuals, at their doors, without charge.

The Marshal Print Works, located near Hudson, in Columbia Co., N. Y., were recently destroyed by fire. The works and the material which they contained were estimated at $200,000. Everything is lost. Scarcely a wreck remains; and, as we understand, there was not one dollar insurance.

The New Haven Palladium mentions a singular suicide which occurred at Wolcottville, Conn., a short time since. A young man joined a party of skaters on a mill-pond, and borrowing a pair of skates, remarked that he would "show a trick the devil couldn't do." After adjusting the skates, he started off at full speed, and deliberately run over the dam into the deep water below, when he was carried under the fall, and soon drowned.

NOTICE.—The third volume of the Recorder is more than half completed, and yet many of our accounts for the volume remain unpaid. According to our published terms, all such accounts might now be made out at $2 50 instead of $2 00. We desire, however, to conduct our business in the most lenient manner possible, particularly towards those who really find it difficult to pay in advance. For this reason we have determined to extend the time of receiving $2 in payment for the volume, to the first day of April. Those who forward their money before that day, will be credited for the present year as if paid in advance. But all accounts remaining unsettled at that time will be made out at $2 50. We hope that every subscriber who is in arrears will avail himself of this opportunity to settle up without the additional expense attendant upon delay. Money may be sent by mail, at our risk, provided the Postmaster is informed of the contents of the letter, and a description of the bills is retained.

DR. CHARLES H. STILLMAN takes this mode of giving notice to those who have made inquiries, that he is prepared to receive under his care a limited number of patients affected with diseases of the Eyes, particularly those requiring surgical operations, at his residence, Plainfield, N. J.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of THE ILLUSTRATED FLORA, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, to whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, LEWIS & BROWN, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work as it is published.

Jan. 10th, 1847.

Miscellaneous.

ON THE DEATH OF A CHILD.

BY SHERIDAN.

In some rude spot where vulgar herbage grows,
If chance a violet rear its purple head,
The careful gard'ner moves it ere it blows,
To thrive and flourish in a nobler bed.
Such was thy fate, dear child,
Thy opening such!
Pre-eminence in early bloom was shown;
For earth too good, perhaps,
And loved too much—
Heaven saw and early marked thee for its own.

A CHILD'S EVENING PRAYER.

BY S. TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

Ere on my bed my limbs I lay,
God grant me grace my prayers to say.
O God! preserve my mother dear
In strength and health for many a year;
And, O! preserve my father too,
And may I pay him reverence due,
And may I my best thoughts employ
To be my parents' hope and joy;
And O! preserve my brothers both
From evil doings and from sloth,
And may we always love each other,
Our friends, our father, and our mother;
And still, O Lord, to me impart
An innocent and grateful heart,
That after my last sleep I may
Awake to thine eternal day! AMEN.

ALEXANDER PUSHKIN.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

On the 29th of the 1st month, 1837, in one of the stately mansions of the Northern Capital, on the banks of the Neva, a great man lay dying. The rooms which led to the chamber of suffering were thronged with the wealthy, the titled, the gifted, of St. Petersburg, anxiously inquiring after the condition of the sufferer. A great light was going out. Alexander Pushkin—the poet and historian, the favorite alike of the Emperor and people—stricken in a fatal duel two days before, lay waiting for his summons to the world of spirits. And when, at last, the weeping Jukovskii, himself only second to Pushkin as a poet, announced to the anxious crowds in attendance, that his friend was no more, prince and peasant bowed their heads in sorrow. The cold heart of the North was touched with the pang of a great bereavement. The poet of Russia, the only man of the age who could wear with honor the mantles of Derzhavin and Karamsin, had passed beneath that shadow, "the light whereof is darkness."

Now, who was Alexander Pushkin? Can it be possible that this man, so wonderfully gifted, so honored, so lamented, was a colored man—a negro? Such, it seems, is the fact, incredible as it may appear to the American reader. His maternal grandfather was a negro, named Annibal, who was patronized by the Czar, and became an officer in the marine service. Of his African origin, Pushkin bore, in his personal appearance and mental characteristics, the most unequivocal marks. An article in Blackwood, for the 6th month, 1845, describes him as follows:—

"The closely curled wiry hair, the mobile and irregular features, the darkness of the complexion, all betrayed his African descent, and served as an appropriate outside to his character."

At an early age, Pushkin became a pupil in the imperial Lyceum, then recently established and richly endowed by Alexander. While here, the young man, after reciting one of his pieces, on a public occasion, was pronounced a poet by the aged Derzhavin, the author of that sumblime ode to the Supreme, which has no equal out of the Book of Books. On leaving the Lyceum, in 1817, he was attached to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. While in this honorable position, he published his first poem, which immediately attained a high degree of popularity. He now became a traveler, visiting all the romantic sections of the vast empire. His principal poetic work, "Evgenii Oniegin," is said to be the fullest and most complete imbodiment that exists in Russian literature of the nationality of the country. His small poems and brief stories or novelettes, were published in several volumes in rapid succession. His tragedy of Boris Godunoff is spoken of by the writer in Blackwood, whom we have quoted, as belonging to the highest order of dramatic literature. He had just finished his History of Peter the Great, when he became involved in the quarrel which resulted in his death, at the age of thirty-eight.

He was not ashamed of his negro ancestor. On the contrary, he seems to have been proud of his descent. He has consecrated more than one of his smaller poems to the memory of the black sea captain, and his works contain frequent allusions to his African blood.

We have alluded to this remarkable man for the purpose of exposing the utter folly and injustice of the common prejudice against the colored race in this country. It is a prejudice wholly incompatible with enlightened republicanism and true Christianity. It degrades the possessor as well as its victim. With our feet on the neck of the black man, we have taunted him with his inferiority; shutting him out from school and college, we have denied his capacity for intellectual progress; spurning him from the meeting-house and church communion, we have reproached him as vicious, and incapable of moral elevation. What is this, in fact, but the common subterfuge of tyranny, seeking an excuse for its oppression by maligning its unhappy objects, and making the consequences of its own cruelty upon them an apology for its continuance? With such examples of the intellectual capacity of the colored man as are offered by L'Overture and Petion, of Hayti; Dumas, of France; Pushkin, of Russia; and Placido, the slave poet and martyr of Cuba, to say nothing of such men as James McCune Smith, Frederick Douglass, Henry H. Garnett, and Henry Bibb, in our own country, it is scarcely in good taste for white mediocrity to taunt the colored man with natural inferiority. Do not Toussaint's deeds for freedom, and Pushkin's songs of a great nation, waken within all hearts the sympathies of a common nature?

"There spoke our brother! There our father's grave Did utter forth a voice!"

In the colored man's follies and crimes, his loves and hatreds, his virtues and weaknesses, we but recognize our common humanity, and realize the truth of the inspired Apostle's language—"GOD HATH MADE OF ONE BLOOD ALL THE GENERATIONS OF MEN." [National Era.

A HEBREW WEDDING.

A few days ago, a Hebrew wedding took place in this city, between a young couple who had been engaged some year and a half to each other. In order to give all their friends and companions an opportunity of being present on the occasion, the Minerva Rooms in Broadway were engaged.

The ceremony was to take place in the afternoon, and the carriages continued to arrive with ladies and gentlemen until 3 o'clock. The gentlemen repaired to the large saloon, which was brilliantly illuminated with gas. In the afternoon, prayers were said by the officiating priest, and the ceremony of singing and witnessing the contract then took place—the bridegroom only singing the various obligations in use since the Babylonish captivity. That concluded, a canopy of crimson damask was opened, and held by four young gentlemen, wearing the insignia of groomsmen, and from an opposite door the bride entered, dressed richly in white satin, her head ornamented with white flowers, from which was suspended a rich veil which covered her face. A troop of bridesmaids, dressed in white, followed in her train, together with her mother and a large number of ladies, dressed for the occasion. The parties were placed facing each other, sustained at each side by parents and friends; the priest, holding a glass of wine in his hand, chanted the marriage ceremony with becoming solemnity—when the bridegroom, taking a ring from a waistcoat pocket, exhibited it to those around him, to satisfy them of its genuine character, saying in Hebrew, as he placed it on the fore-finger of his bride, 'Lo, with this ring do I wed thee, according to the laws of Moses and Israel.' Then tasting the wine, over which the blessing had been said, the bridegroom dashed the glass to pieces, in proof of the instability and insecurity of all earthly blessings, and the usual congratulations and embracing of parents, relatives, and friends, took place. The whole party then retired to one of the saloons to partake of various refreshments. The ceremony was so very impressive, that their wedding-day will be the theme of conversation, and a day of jubilee, for the rest of their lives. So Jacob married Rachel, Moses married Zipporah, and King Ahasuerus married Esther. [M. M. Noah.

COMBAT BETWEEN A HORSE AND A LION.

A nobleman, in the early part of the reign of Louis XV., having a very vicious horse, which none of the grooms or servants would ride—several of them having been thrown, and one killed—asked leave of his Majesty to have him turned loose into the menagerie, against one of the largest lions. The King readily consented, and the animal on a certain day was conducted thither. Soon after the arrival of the horse, the door of the den was accordingly drawn up, and the lion, with great state and majesty, marched slowly to the mouth of it, when seeing his antagonist, he set up a tremendous roar. The horse immediately startled and fell back—his ears erected, his mane raised, his eyes sparkled, and something like a general convulsion seemed to agitate his whole frame. After the first emotion of fear had subsided, the horse retired to a corner of the menagerie, where, having directed his heels towards the lion, and having reared his head above his left shoulder, he watched with extreme eagerness the motions of his enemy. The lion, who presently quitted the den, sidled about for more than a minute, as if meditating the mode of attack, when, having sufficiently prepared himself for the combat, he made a sudden spring at the horse, which defended itself by striking his adversary a most violent blow on the chest. The lion instantly retreated, groaned, and seemed for several minutes inclined to give up the contest, when, recovering from the painful effects of the blow, he returned to the charge with unabated violence. The mode of preparation for this second attack was the same as the first. He sidled from one side of the menagerie, to the other for a considerable time, seeking for a favorable opportunity to seize his prey; during all which time the horse still preserved the same posture, and still kept his head erect and turned over his shoulder. The lion at length gave a second spring, with all the strength and velocity he could exercise, when the horse caught him with his hoof under his lower jaw, which he fractured. Having sustained a second and more severe repulse than the former, the lion retreated to his den as well as he was able, apparently in the greatest agony, moaning all the way in a most lamentable manner. The horse was soon obliged to be shot, as no one dared to approach the ground where he was kept.

M. THIERS A LAW-STUDENT AT AIX.

An amusing and characteristic anecdote is related of the early period of his career. A prize was offered for competition in 1819, the subject of which was an eulogy on Vanvenargues, by the Academy at Aix. Thiers determined that he would compete for this honor, and accordingly sent in his manuscript, in the customary manner, accompanied by a sealed packet, containing the name of the author, not to be opened except the composition was declared to be successful. It had, however, transpired, that the author of the piece, which was, beyond comparison, the best of those which were tendered, was the turbulent little Jacobin, who had excited, to such a degree, the fears and hostility of the professors, who were chiefly Royalists. It was consequently declared that the prize would not be granted to any of the pieces, but would be postponed to the following year. When the next year arrived, the piece of Thiers was again offered, as before; but to the infinite delight of the superiors, a composition had been transmitted from Paris, incontestibly superior, to which the prize was awarded; but, in order to compensate Thiers for the decision of the preceding year, they granted him an acccssit, which is an official acknowledgement of his piece having held the second place of merit. On opening the packet, containing the name of the candidate to whom the prize itself was awarded, the astonishment and mortification of the Professors may be conceived at finding, that the individual, on whom they must confer the honors, was M. Thiers himself. In fact he had caused the second essay to be transcribed by another hand; and the more completely to blindfold the judges, had sent it to Paris, from whence it had been forwarded to them, thus impressing them with the idea, that it came from a Parisian candidate. Both the prize and the accessit were, in spite of the hostility of the heads of the Academy, conferred on Thiers.

POVERTY AND SHORT LIFE IN BOSTON.—Not long since, a large public meeting was held in Boston, to devise ways and means for providing the poor people with better and cheaper tenements than they now have. A long report was presented to the meeting, speaking of which, the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal says:

1. The present population of the first section, says the report, is nearly as dense as that of the central parts of London. 2. The number of individuals to the house, throughout the whole city, is greater than in the principal commercial and manufacturing towns in England. 3. The distribution of the population is shockingly unequal, producing crowds in certain sections rarely surpassed. 4. The proportion of deaths among infants has been steadily increasing, and the average duration of life decreasing. 5. Infant mortality is vastly greater among Catholics, than in the whole population, and the average duration of life with them less. 6. The average of life in Boston is less than in London or Ireland! 7. The average duration of life among the Catholics of Boston, is less than that of operatives and laborers in the great cities of England.

These statements are gleaned from a document drawn up with great care, and it is enough to excite the attention of philanthropists. To what is this blighting mortality of infantile life to be attributed? The report declares that the bad, miserably filthy, unventilated, dark, pig-stye houses of the poor, up the narrow lanes, under low dark arches, and under-ground places which they occupy, is the true cause of this sad waste of human beings. And the report is right, for we can bear testimony to the truth of all its declarations, from years of observation.

THE DIAMOND.—Carbon is known by the names of diamond and charcoal, from the fact that the two latter substances, although so different, and almost opposite in physical characters, are, according to unexceptional experiments, chemically almost the same.

The diamond is simple carbon, as shown by the following experiment. M. Morveon exposed a diamond to intense heat, shut up in a small cavity; he found the diamond entirely gone, and the iron around converted into steel. This shows that it is pure carbon which combines with iron to form pure steel, and not charcoal, which is generally an oxyd of carbon. The peculiar harshness of steel is to be ascribed to its union with a portion of pure carbon or diamond. It is no uncommon thing for jewellers to expose such diamonds as are foul, to a strong heat, imbedded in charcoal, to render them clear; but in this process, great care is taken to have a sufficient quantity of charcoal to exclude the atmospheric air; otherwise, the intense heat would produce combustion.

ANECDOTE OF A COW.—Some years ago, having occasion to reside at a farm-house in the country, I was much alarmed one morning by the unusual bellowing of a cow under the window of the apartment wherein I was sitting. Looking out, I perceived her to be one belonging to a herd, which I previously understood were enclosed in a field near a mile distant. Alarmed at her appearance, I went out in order to take her back; but as soon as I left the house she ran before me, apparently in the greatest concern, frequently looking back to see if I was following. In this manner she continued across several fields, till she brought me to the brink of a deep and dangerous morass; where, to my surprise, I beheld one of her associates nearly enveloped in the swamp underneath. The distressed animal after much difficulty was extricated from its perilous situation, to the no small satisfaction of the other, which seemed to caress and lick it as if it had been one of her own offspring.

CHOKING.—Neat cattle, fed on apples or potatoes, are very liable to get choked, and many a valuable animal has been lost from not knowing how to afford relief in time to save life. The following remedy is therefore published, with the fullest and most confident reliance in its efficacy:—

As soon as an animal is found to be choking, pour into the mouth, from a bottle, a pint of oil, rubbing the throat externally at the same time, with the hand. A friend who, by the way, is a skillful veterinary surgeon, assures us that he has never known this remedy to fail, and the relief afforded is almost instantaneous. The oil lubricates the gullet, and facilitates the ejection of the obstructing substance, without the slightest pain. If oil is not immediately attainable, soap and water may sometimes be substituted with equal success. [Maine Farmer.

PULPIT INGENUITY.—A popular preacher, at the close of a sermon soliciting a contribution for a certain object, added the following short address: "From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is one thing I am afraid of, that some of you may be inclined to give too much. Now it is my duty to inform you, that justice, though not so pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be waited upon in your respective pews, I wish to have it distinctly understood, that no person will think of putting any thing into that plate who cannot pay his debts." This produced an overflowing collection.

LABOR.—The more we accomplish, the more we have to accomplish. All things are full of labor, and therefore the more we acquire, the more care and the more toil to secure our acquisitions. Good men can never retire from their works of benevolence. Their fortune is never made. I never heard of an apostle, prophet, or public benefactor, retiring from their respective fields of labor. Moses, and Paul, and Peter, died with their harness on. So did Luther, and Calvin, and Wesley, and a thousand others as deserving, though not so well known to fame. We are inured to labor. It was first a duty. It is now a pleasure. Still there is such a thing as overworking man and beast, mind and body. The mainspring of a watch needs repose, and is the better for it. The muscles of an elephant, and the wings of a swift bird, are at length fatigued. Heaven gives rest to the earth because it needs it; and winter is more pregnant with blessings to the soil than summer with its flowers and fruits. But in the war for truth and against error, there is no discharge. [A. Campbell.

VARIETY.

A temperance lecture was delivered at Columbus, Ohio, on the 28th ult. before the inmates of the 'prison house,' and on a vote being taken, it appears that out of the 480 males then present, only 84 had been totally abstinent before their incarceration; 60 had in some manner been connected with the sale or manufacture of ardent spirits; and 180 had committed the crimes for which they were then paying the penalty either as a consequence of drinking ardent spirits, or when under its immediate influence. A vote was also taken on their determination, when released from their present bonds, to abstain in future from the use of intoxicating drink, when all excepting two persons arose and expressed their determination to abstain.

Oregon City contains 500 souls and 80 houses, two churches, two taverns, two blacksmith's shops, two cooper's shops, two cabinet shops, four tailor's shops, one hatter's, one tannery, three shoe shops, two silversmith's, and a number of other mechanics; four stores, two flour and two saw mills, and a lath machine. Three years ago it was a dense forest of fir and underbrush, and was laid out by Dr. McLaughlin on the west side of the Wilamette. Opposite the city and falls is Linn City, which contains one tavern, one chair manufactory, one cabinet shop, and one wagon shop. Multnomah City immeditely adjoins Linn City, and boasts as yet of nothing but a "beautiful site."

The police reports of the Richmond Republican afford us occasional instruction as to the iniquitous laws by which the "peculiar institution" is sustained. The report of the 1st inst. states that Wm. Pleasants, a free negro, who had been committed to jail and subsequently sold to pay jail fees, "was delivered to his owner this morning." Also that a slave boy was whipped for playing marbles in the street. The pure moral code of Richmond even punishes a white boy for playing marbles in the street. The white boy, however, is subject only to a fine; but the slave receives not less than 15 lashes for each offence!

There are thirteen men in Boston who are worth $22,000,000. Seven millions, divided among them, would give to each a fortune of $540,000, or an income of $25,000 a year, equal to the salary of the President of the United States. The remaining fifteen millions would supply the whole of the starving population of Ireland with 3,000,000 barrels of flour; that is, 9 barrels to each family of eight persons, of the 312,500 pauper families. How easy it were to relieve all the sufferings on earth, were the rule of Christian benevolence strictly conformed to by the millionaires of the world!

The Commercial speaks of a clergyman who can look back on twenty-five years' connection with his present congregation, during which time he has administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to his people quarterly, making one hundred times, and on every occasion, save three, has admitted members into the church. During the time he has received into church fellowship eight hundred and seventy-three persons, and seven other churches have sprung out of the one over which he presides.

An enterprising Yankee at Canton has recently built a Chinese junk of 300 tons, fitted and rigged entirely after the Chinese mode, which he intends taking to New York, loading her with every species of Chinese knicknacks, curiosities, etc., to be sold on board after her arrival off that city. He takes also a Chinese crew, a theatrical and juggling company, males and females, and everything curious, illustrative of the manners and customs of the Celestials.

Among the petitions presented in the Massachusetts Legislature, Monday, was one from John P. Andrews, for the erasure of the motto from the State seal, and the substitution therefor of the words, "It is only the sword of the spirit, which is love, that conquers;" and two from Jonathan Blake and others of Leominster, and sundry citizens of Abington, for the peaceable secession of Massachusetts from the Union.

Since May, 1846, 24,770 volunteers have been received into the service. The latest returns show a falling off of 4,000. Of these, 76 were killed at Monterey; 637 died ordinary deaths; 2,202 were discharged, nearly all disabled; and 331 deserted; the balance are on the sick list. And all this within the period, for the most part, of sixty or ninety days after joining the army in the field.

An old lady being asked her opinion of a neighbor, replied: "Why, I don't like to say any thing about my neighbors, but as to Mr. Jones, sometimes I think—and then again I don't know—but, after all, I rather guess he'll turn out to be a good deal such a sort of a man as I take him to be."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

The Sabbath Recorder.

☞ Some two months ago, an editorial article appeared in the Philadelphia "Christian Chronicle," the organ of the Baptist denomination of Pennsylvania, favoring a thorough discussion of the Sabbath question. This article drew forth comments from one of the correspondents of that paper, which were replied to by another correspondent. Hence arose a discussion, which is yet in progress. We give below the remarks of the editor, together with the first two articles of his correspondents. The remaining articles will appear in the future numbers of the Recorder. It is seldom that the editor of a denominational paper will open his columns to such a discussion. In pursuing a different course, especially at the present time, the editor of the Chronicle has set a noble example to his brethren. Our readers will agree with us, that the articles are exceedingly instructive. In due time it may be deemed advisable to suggest some of the reflections to which they naturally give rise.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

The Rhode Island correspondent of the New York Baptist Register says, that "lately a meeting of Sunday-School teachers was held in Providence, where, among other questions, the following was discussed: 'Is there sufficient in the New Testament to prove the first day of the week the Sabbath?' The time would not allow arguments sufficient on both sides; the meeting was adjourned to meet in the lecture-room of the First Baptist Church, the third Monday evening in December, to renew the discussion. Friends of the Seventh-day Sabbath are invited to be present and advocate their views. It is said Rev. Dr. Cleveland, of the Congregational Church, and Rev. Mr. Granger, of the Baptist, are to take a prominent part in the discussion—of course, in favor of the first-day Sabbath."

That is right. Persevere in examination till the truth is discovered. This is the true policy. The advocates of the seventh day are active, and are making it expedient for others to examine the reasons for the observance of the first day. It would have been better had the question been—"Is there sufficient in the New Tesment to prove the seventh day of the week the Christian Sabbath?" We apprehend that a full examination of the Sabbath question will make it necessary for some old notions to be surrendered. Let each one ask only what the Bible teaches. We are opposed to all that goes beyond or falls short of what is therein enjoined.

Mr. Editor:—Your paper of Dec. 23, records a notice of a discussion of the Sabbath question, lately occurring in Providence, Rhode Island. I agree with you, that all points of difference in doctrine among the professed followers of Christ, ought to be fully, fairly, and amicably discussed. Truth is the gainer when her claims are canvassed. This Sabbath question seems to me to be most strangely misapprehended. The very expressions, "the first day," and "the seventh day," seem to mislead the mind. The form of the question as presented before "the meeting of Sabbath-School Teachers," is a virtual surrender of it to the Sabbatarians. "Is there sufficient in the New Testament to prove the first day of the week the Sabbath?" Now, sir, using the phrase according to the prevailing notion of Christians on the subject, "the first day" as opposed to "the seventh," I unhesitatingly answer, No. The law says unequivocally the "seventh day;" and, allowing the law to have binding force still, as most believers in the Sabbath do, there is not, in the whole New Testament, one syllable whispered about a change. The Sabbath was enforced by a special statute; expressed in language definite and explicit; and carefully recorded, for preservation. This law, being moral and permanent, can be changed in none of its essential provisions, except by statute or its equivalent, emanating from the same source with the law. The New Testament no where records such statute or its equivalent. You search in vain for it. They who attempt it only prejudice their own cause. This ought to be conceded frankly and at once. The "first day of the week," as we currently designate it, was distinguished among Christians immediately after the resurrection. This our opponents ought to concede. That they observed it as a Sabbath, cannot be proved. The probability is that the day, which, from such a circumstance as the resurrection of Christ, became so marked among the disciples, gradually among the Jewish, and completely from the first among Gentile converts, supplanted what is commonly called "the seventh day." It is a fact, that the "first day" now is, and from very early times has been, observed as "the Christian Sabbath." There must be a cause for this. That cause was not the arbitrary act of the Roman Emperor. He found the day distinguished among Christians, as a day of worship, and gave to it the sanction of law. Since then it has been almost universally received, as the accredited "Sabbath" of the church. In vain then do we look for a divine sanction, either by precept or apostolic example, for the substitution of one day for another. He who insists that "the first" and not "the seventh day" is the only lawful Christian Sabbath, will find it hard to make good his position. Christianity recognizes a Sabbath. Christ and his apostles sanction it. That Sabbath is the one enforced in the law.

The whole question, then, about the day is to be determined by the law. What are the provisions of the law? "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." This quotation contains the substance of the law. It contains two points only. Six days shalt thou labor. The seventh is the Sabbath. How may this law be violated? If I work five days and keep the sixth—if I work seven days and keep the eighth—if I keep portions of two days in the seven, for the law says, "Thou shalt labor six days," and not five, nor seven; nor yet two parts of days—not the seventh portion of the time, but the "seventh day." This is all the law embraces. It does not say, Thou shalt keep Sunday, nor Saturday, nor yet Friday! It expresses the seventh day, nothing more. He who insists on Saturday, or Sunday, or any other particular day, as exclusively the Sabbath, adds to God's law. I ask him for the law to justify such demands. "Where there is no law, there is no transgression." If any brother asks me my warrant for keeping Sunday, I point to the law, as requiring the seventh day to be kept holy. If he replies, the law does not specify Sunday; I rejoin, it does not specify Saturday. He may say, It requires the seventh day to be kept. I say, I keep the seventh day; and ask him to count his fingers. If I, being a servant, am commanded by my master to go to Philadelphia, I may ride or walk, go by railroad or steamboat, without being a transgressor. If a fellow servant insists that I must walk the distance, I ask him to show me that in the command. Saturday is no more the seventh day than Sunday is. If it is so, will you, my brother, show it to be so. Show us the law. Such an attempt, I am inclined to think, would be very much as if a blind Ethiopian, with an unlighted candle, in a dark cellar, at midnight, should search for a black cat, which, after all, was not on the premises. The law of the Sabbath, as interpreted by some of both parties, enjoins an impossibility. As it stands in the sacred code, written by the finger of God, it is perfectly feasible, and is a provision of the highest service to man. "To the law and the testimony." These additions, changes, substitutions, and modifications, are the cause of many divisions in the one church of Christ our Lord. E. W. D.

Mr. Editor:—I am glad to see that the subject of the Sabbath is engaging the attention of yourself and your correspondents. It is one which I have long wished to have candidly and thoroughly discussed, particularly in our own denomination; for I frankly confess, that my mind is not satisfied with the prevailing views, as at present advised. The spirit of your few remarks, two or three weeks since, pleased me well, as inviting consideration to the subject, and the appearance of an article touching it, with the signature "E. W. D.," redoubled my gratifycation. On reading this article, however, I must say, that my hopes were not sustained. I cannot but think that your correspondent's argument is a more direct "surrender of the question" to the Sabbatarians than "the form in which it was presented before 'the meeting of Sunday-School Teachers.'"

He seems to think that we have no specific instructions in regard to the Sabbath in the New Testament; that the notices of the first day of the week do not justify us in supposing that it was then held as the Sabbath; and yet "Christianity" (where, if not in the New Testament?) "recognizes a Sabbath." "Christ and his disciples sanction it." Must it not be some other day, then, than the first of the week? is a question which naturally arises in the mind of the reader. How is it answered? By a reference to the law—i. e., the Jewish law as given by the hand of Moses—which says, "six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." The seventh from what? The obvious answer is, The seventh in some well-understood order then existing, which order, if it still exists, as is commonly allowed, will teach us at once what day is the seventh, and therefore the Sabbath. But this would lead to Sabbatarianism, and your correspondent takes a different course.

If I understand him, he holds that the "seventh" may be reckoned from any point; that it matters not which is the first, nor what the order according to which we reckon; but that having fixed on some beginning, if we regularly keep the seventh day holy, this answers the demands of the law. I fail to see, as yet, why, if each seventh portion of the citizens of this city, had fixed on a different day of the week to observe as their Sabbath, each day that passes over our heads would not be the Sabbath of Jehovah our God. And this might well be, perhaps, if the law in question had been an independent statute, communicated without any history of the circumstances, or statement of its design. But when we consider the circumstances, that a day had already been set apart in the wilderness, the order of whose recurrence was fixed and well known, how can we suppose that the law meant any thing more than to give the solemn sanction of Sinai to this very order which had already been divinely enjoined? And when we add to this, that the day was set apart as the rest-day of the people, the ends of which could hardly be secured without uniformity in its observance, and farthermore, that one incidental object of its appointment was to commemorate God's rest-day, which was the seventh in an order, supposed, at least, to be identical with the one now recognized, is it possible that there can be any mistake as to what particular day is meant by that law? Would the Jew have been held innocent by Jehovah if, during the former dispensation, he had chosen to say that it mattered not whether he kept the first, third or seventh day in the existing order, provided only he worked six, and regularly kept some one of the seven? And if the Jew would not be innocent, how can we, if we come under the same system, and place ourselves on the same platform with the Jew in this respect, be less guilty while doing that very thing?

These doubts are suggested, I trust, in the spirit of candid inquiry, to elicit information and truth. Not that I have the slightest practical leaning towards Sabbatarian views, or a particle of difficulty in regarding the first day as the Christian Sabbath, if, indeed, it be proper, which I doubt, to apply this designation at all to the Lord's Day. But the above queries indicate something of my perplexity in endeavoring to base the religious observance of the Lord's day on the fourth commandment, or connect it in any way with the Mosaic law. And now let me propose one question more, and the question, after all, as I suppose, which needs to be more thoroughly settled, in order to the satisfaction of many minds. What right has your correspondent to say that "the whole question about the day," a question of such immense moment to us as Christians, "is to be determined by the law" of Moses? What practical concern have we with the weekly Sabbath there enjoined, more than with the sabbatic year, or the year of Jubilee? If it be said, "this law," i. e., the particular statute relating to the weekly Sabbath, "is moral and permanent," on what ground does this assumption rest? Is it the circumstance that it is found among the ten commandments? Then how does this circumstance, of itself, prove the law spoken of to be "moral and permanent?" The difficulty is, in short, as to what authority that law, or any part of it, has, to decide for us, as to the religious celebration of any day. Light on this subject from any quarter will be cordially welcomed by

RELIGION IN SHANGHAI.

The following letter from a lady in Shanghai, to Bishop Meade, will give some idea of the state of society and of religion in that place:—

"The religious state of these Chinese is, to me, a very surprising one. Wherever we walk through the city, we meet the priests of Budha, and see spacious temples dedicated to him, all, of course, supported by the people; and yet they seem to care not a straw either for priests, temples or idols. The most bitter reproach they can bestow upon an idle young man is to tell him he is fit for nothing but to be a priest; and when we have seen religious ceremonies performed, there was not the least semblance of devotion in either priest or people.

"Their only objects of reverence seem to be their ancestors and dead friends, and these, certainly, have a very strong hold upon them. The Roman Catholics are quite numerous here, and a few miles from Shanghai they have a village inhabited altogether by them. But although there are many priests here, they seem able to do little more than preserve the faith among the descendants of those who were converted many years ago, in the reign of Kang-hi, by the Jesuits; very few proselytes are said to be made now. It is really a most depressing thing to walk through these crowded streets, and see the hundreds of children growing up untaught, and the hundreds of old people just ready for the grave, who have never so much as heard of the Saviour; and then think of the fewness of our numbers, and of the time that must pass before even we, who are here now, can make any direct effort for them.

"Is it possible that there are still no young men at home, who are willing to leave their friends, and come here to labor? I say, 'leave their friends,' because really that is almost our only trial. We have all the necessaries, and most of the comforts of life in abundance, and are not entirely without society. There are said to be nearly one hundred English merchants now living here, and the number is increasing. It is a great comfort to us to know that this is a far more moral foreign community than is usually found in eastern cities. It is the only city out here, I believe, in which the merchants close their houses on Sunday; and the English service at the consulate is well attended."

AN ABYSSINIAN CHURCH FESTIVAL.

Early on the 14th of November, accompanied by Lik Atkum and Getana Mariam, I rode to Koskam, in order to be present at the festival in memory of Christ's return from Egypt, which is celebrated with peculiar solemnity in the church at that place. Numerous groups of people, some on foot, others mounted on mules, but all with clean clothes, were proceeding along the road from Gondar to Koskam; and when we arrived there we found the church already so crowded that it was only through the influence of Lik Atkum that we obtained a place, which, as it was close to the ark, enabled us to take a share in the festival. Outside the church were stretched awnings, with blue, white, and red stripes, a foot in breadth, in order to screen the crowd from the sun. The attention of those present was directed to a group of priests in the foreground, who, with a fearful howl, which in this country is called singing, convulsively moved their bodies, and sprang by turns wildly in the air. This dance was intended to glorify the Deity. Each priest had in one hand an Egyptian rattle, in the other a long staff resembling a crutch; and most of them had also a book, containing the text of the hymns. The rattle is shaped like a two-pronged fork, which is closed at the top by a small cross stick; and on it are fixed several metal rings, which, when shaken, serve by their rattling noise, to beat time to the singing and dancing priests. In the midst of contortion-making priests, one sat on the ground and beat a large Turkish drum, made of silver plates. After this religious diversion had lasted some time, all the priests formed a procession within the church, round the sanctuary containing the ark. Two of them wore on their heads very large semi-spherical helmets of gold plates, richly embossed. These are the two crowns which the Emperor Joas, and his father, the Emperor Jasu, wore during great solemnities, and which were presented to the church of Koskam by Jasu's mother, Itegeh Mantouab. Some of the priests wore a kind of chasuble of brocade, which was very thread-bare; others carried staffs with large Greek crosses of bronze, and over the superior was carried a large blue satin canopy, fringed with gold. The whole solemnity was disorderly, and excited, at least in me, rather an inclination to laughter than any religious feeling.—[Reise in Abyssinien, von Dr. Ruppell.

OBEDIENCE.

BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

God bade the sun break forth in light,
And yonder paler flame,
With silver lamp to lead the night,
And stars to beam with cresents bright;
And heedful of his word of might,
Each to its oribt came.

God bade the Spring awake, and tread
On Winter's icy reign,
She touched the snow-drop in its bed,
The iris at the brooklet's head,
And tinged the queenly rose with red,
With green, the leafy plain.

God bade the Autumn yield its store,
And bending o'er the world,
The trees resigned the fruit they bore,
The berry burst its luscious core,
While harvests to the sickle pour
Their sheaves of ripened gold.

God to the heart hath said, "be still,
When sorrows o'er thee sweep!"
And doth it, heedful of His will,
O'er rifled bower and perished rill,
Even when its bitterest tears distil,
In meek submission weep?

God to the heart hath said, "be mine!"
And hastes it not to bring
Its buds that blush, its flowers that twine,
The earliest clusters of its vine,
Its first affections to the shrine
Of its Almighty King?

TEACHING SUBMISSION.

The relations between parents and children are of the most interesting and important character, both for this world and the world to come. One of the first lessons which parents ought to teach, and children learn, is prompt and entire submission. Children who never learn submission to their parents, will, it is to be feared, never learn submission to God, and will, therefore, never enter heaven. The following stories are printed for the benefit and instruction both of parents and children:—

THE THREE BOYS.

This story is to teach submission, as related by a parent who had taught his children this important lesson.

My son, of four years, says, "Father, may I ride with you to-day?" "No, my child, you must not go to-day." He turns away without strife, but disappointed, and melts into tears. From the moment he heard his father call for the carriage, he had set his heart upon the ride, and he could not cheerfully give it up. He has yet something to learn of submission. Perfect submission sheds no tears.

My three boys are fond of going to church. Sometimes they can all go together; other times one or two must stay at home; and the question often is, which shall go. On a bright Sabbath morning, they will all spring up from the breakfast-table, and hanging upon their father:

"Papa, may I go to church to-day?"

"Only one of you can go to-day."

All three at once, "Then, papa, let me go."

"Which wants most to go?"

"I," "I," "I."

"Which is most willing to stay at home?"

No reply.

"Which of you will stay most willingly, if your father requires it?"

No reply. And the two youngest, who are oftimes denied, look sad.

"Now, my dear boys," says the father, "you might all go, if I thought best; but does either of you wish to go against your father's will?" All reply, "No." "Who, then, will stay at home most cheerfully, if your father requires it?"

"I," "I," "I."

"Well, my children, that pleases me. The oldest may go, and the two younger may remain at home."

So Edward qiuetly goes to prepare for church, and Alfred and George as quietly seat themselves with their hymn-book and catechism; and their father is happy to see them so cheerfully yield their wish to his.

ANOTHER LITTLE BOY.

A father of my acquaintance relates the following:—

"I placed my little boy, at eight months old, upon my knee, took his rattle from him, and laid it on the table, directly before him, and within his reach. When he placed out his hand to take it, I drew back his hand, and spoke sharply to him. He looked up in my face, half frightened, half grieved, gave a deep sigh, and again reached out his hand for the rattle. I spoke sternly again, and again drew back his hand. He burst into crying with grief and anger; and after a violent struggle of ten minutes, ceased crying, and again reached after the rattle. I then let him take hold of it, but held his arm extended, continued to speak sternly, and snapped his fingers lightly with my pen, till he let go the rattle. He cried long and bitterly before he let it drop; and several times, at short intervals, took it up again. But I bore with inflexible though gentle authority upon him, till he perfectly understood my intent, and submitted; and then, after a few moments diversion of his thoughts to quiet his sobbing, he turned, with the tear standing in his eye, and fell to patting and rubbing his hand on the table, without touching the rattle, though it lay all the time within his reach. After a few moments, I held the rattle before him. He directed in my face a fixed look of solemn inquiry, which I met with an inviting smile, still holding the toy before him, till he took it and turned to his play. The next day I took him again upon my knee, and in a mild but firm tone, bade him lay it on the table. He looked deeply serious for a moment, sighed, and obeyed.

"My boy is now eight years old; and I do not remember to have seen him since that time shed a tear in any conflict with his feelings against his parents' will."

JEWS' BURIAL GROUND AT GLASGOW.

The cemetery at Glasgow, called the Necropolis, has a high and pleasant locality on the banks of a stream, surmounted by what is figuratively and appositely called the "Bridge of Sighs." Though it was opened only in 1833, it contains many imposing and costly monuments. A doric column, and colossal statue are erected to John Knox on the apex of the hill, and were placed here several years before the spot was set apart for the purposes of general sepulture.

It was a bright morning when we walked there, and the sun rested pleasantly upon the homes of the dead, the turrets of the fine old cathedral in its vicinity, and the noble city stretching itself beneath. That portion of the cemetery appropriated to the Jews was deeply buried in shades, and had an air of solemnity bordering on desolation. Over the entrance was inscribed, "I heard a voice from Ramah, lamentation, mourning and woe, Rachel weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted, because they were not."

On the shaft of a column, which is finished in imitation of Absalom's pillar in the King's dale at Jerusalem, are the stanzas from Byron's Hebrew Melodies, commencing—

"Oh, weep for those, who wept by Babel's stream."

How adapted to the dispersion and sorrow of the chosen, yet scattered people, is the close of that pathetic effusion:

"Tribes of the wandering foot and weary breast,
Where shall ye flee away and be at rest?
The wild dove hath her nest, the fox his cave,
Mankind his country, Israel, but a grave."

On the opposite side of the column is the magnificent poetry of one of their own prophets: "There is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again unto their own border. How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven to the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger. But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies. For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men."

PRES. EDWARDS' VIEWS OF HOLINESS.

This eminent servant of God, in a brief narrative of his religious history, gives his views of holiness, at an early period of his Christian experience, in the following language:—

"I remember the thoughts I used then to have of holiness; and said sometimes to myself, I do certainly know that I love holiness, such as the gospel prescribes. It appeared to me, that there was nothing in it but what was ravishingly lovely; the highest beauty and amiableness—a divine beauty; far purer than any thing here upon earth; and that any thing else was like mere defilement, in comparison of it.

Holiness, as I then wrote down some of my contemplations on it, appeared to me to be of a sweet, pleasant, charming, serene, calm nature; which brought an inexpressible purity, brightness, peacefulness and ravishment to the soul. In other words, that it made the soul like a field or garden of God, with all manner of pleasant flowers; enjoying a sweet calm, and gently vivifying beams of the sun. The soul of a true Christian, as I then wrote my meditations, appeared like such a white flower as we see in the spring of the year; low and humble on the ground, opening its bosom to receive the pleasant beams of the sun's glory; rejoicing, as it were, in a calm rapture; diffusing around a sweet fragrancy; standing peacefully and lovingly, in the midst of other flowers round about, all in like manner opening their bosoms, to drink in the light of the sun. There was no part of creature holiness, that I had so great a sense of its loveliness, as humility, brokenness of heart, and purity of spirit; and there was nothing that I so earnestly longed for. My heart panted after this—to lie down before God, as in the dust; that I might be nothing; and that God might be ALL, and that I might become as a little child."

Duty First.—A pious monk, one day when he had been unusually fervent in his devotions, found his darkened cell suddenly illuminated by an unearthly light, and there stood before him a vision of the Saviour, his countenance beaming with godlike love, his hand outstretched with a gesture of kind invitation. At that same moment rang the convent bell, which called the monk, in the regular course of his duty, to distribute alms to the poor at the gate. For an instant he hesitated; but the next instant found him, true to his vow of charity, on his way to the gate. The poor relieved, the work of love complete, he returned in sadness to his cell, doubting not that the heavenly vision had taken flight. But to his surprise and joy, it was still there, and with a smile even more full than before of divine beauty and ineffable love; and there came from it the words, "Hadst thou staid, I had fled." [A. P. Peabody.

A Fragment.—When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tomb-stone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see the tombs of parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow; when I see kings lying by those who deposed them; when I consider rival wits placed side by side, or the holy men that divided the world with their contests and disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions, and debates of mankind; when I read the dates of the tombs, of some that died as yesterday, and some six hundred years ago, I consider that great day, when we shall all be contemporaries, and make our appearance together. The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, March 4, 1847.

CONCLUDING LECTURE ON THE SABBATH.

On Sunday evening last, Mr. Brown delivered his concluding lecture upon the subject of the Sabbath. He commenced by saying, that he had now unfolded the distinguishing doctrine of that class of Christians known as Sabbatarians or Seventh-day Baptists. They hold that the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, is the only Sabbath enjoined by the Bible, and that it is their duty, on that day, to lay aside all worldly business, to assemble for the public worship of God, and to occupy the entire day in such exercises as are in strict consonance with the nature of a Sabbath. They begin their Sabbath at the closing in of the evening on the sixth day of the week, and end it at the same hour on the seventh day, according to the injunction of Scripture, "from evening to evening shall ye celebrate your Sabbaths." On the first day of the week, they claim it to be their privilege freely to attend to their ordinary work as on any working day. In respect to all other doctrinal points, they agree with the Baptist denomination generally; holding with them to the congregational form of church government, and that each church has a right to manage its own affairs, without being amenable to any ecclesiastical judicatory, bishop, or pope. In illustrating their views of the Sabbath, he had aimed to magnify the Word of God, and to build upon it. He had shown, however, that in the department of history, they have nothing to be ashamed of; the ancient Sabbath having been recognized by the Christian Churches of the East for at least six hundred years, and having found advocates here and there throughout the thousand years of papal darkness. No Protestant denomination can trace its organization farther back than the Reformation, although nearly every denomination claims to have discovered some traces of its principles at an earlier period, particularly among the Waldenses. The observers of the seventh day claim to be quite equal to their fellow Christians in this respect. In presenting the scriptural argument, he had aimed to show that the Sabbath was a commemorative institution, designed to be a standing monument against Atheism and Idolatry, which purpose it could not serve, unless it was observed as originally given upon the seventh day of the week;—that it was an important part of the religion which God would have proclaimed to all men in all ages of the world;—that although the Sabbath was one of those institutions which theologians call positive, yet it was bound up with a code of laws confessedly moral, and therefore formed an important part of that system of religion usually denominated the Moral Law;—that it was not designed to be limited to the nation of Israel, but was intended for all mankind;—that those texts of Scripture usually adduced to prove a transfer of the sabbatic rest to the first day of the week, prove no such thing;—and that the argument in favor of the first day, drawn from a supposed analogy between the work of redemption and that of creation, was unsound, the analogy being altogether defective.

These arguments, Mr. Brown thought it not too much to suppose, had made an impression upon the minds of some of his hearers too strong to be easily effaced. This impression he had from the outset designed to make if possible. But he did not design merely to unsettle their minds with regard to the sacredness of a day they had been accustomed to venerate. He had a higher and holier object, which was to bring them to obedience to the law of God. Many professing Christians, even after their judgment is thoroughly convinced, so that they will give it as their deliberate opinion that the seventh day of the week is the true Sabbath, and that the Bible requires no other, still rest quiet in the neglect of duty. Do they mean to say that God is not worth minding? Such is the language of their actions, although they would be horror-struck at the idea of speaking out such a blasphemy from their lips. God has said that his wrath is revealed against such as hold the truth in unrighteousness; that those who know their Master's will, and do it not, shall be beaten with many stripes; that the soul that doeth aught presumptuously, reproacheth the Lord. Indeed, sterner rebukes, and more startling admonitions, are dealt out against those who act contrary to the convictions of their judgements than against any other class of persons. Such conduct has a most disastrous influence upon the hearts of those who are guilty of it. It is only by means of the truth that God sanctifies his people and makes them free. Hence those who resist even one item of truth, not only deprive themselves of just so much of its sanctifying power as resides in the portion which they reject, but they commit an act of rebellion against God, thus hardening the conscience, and rendering themselves less susceptible of sanctifying impressions from the rest of God's word. Such conduct on the part of Christians also operates disastrously upon those who witness it. It strengthens unbelieving sinners in their determination to resist the whole system of gospel truth. Though the Christian himself may act under the mistaken notion that he is rejecting only a very small item of truth, yet the most fearfully mischievous results may hang upon it.

When the claims of the Sabbath are presented, some persons endeavor to quiet their consciences with the idea that by keeping the first day of the week they comply with the spirit of the law, although they do not comply with the letter of it. This idea was answered by showing that the spirit of a law may embrace more than what the letter of it requires, but never less—just as the law, "Thou shalt not kill," embraces the prohibition of even angry emotions. And certainly, if the spirit of the law never requires less than the letter, it cannot be met by the performance of something directly different from what the letter of it enjoins. Sunday-keeping, instead of being a compliance with the spirit of the Sabbath law, is an entirely different thing, and does not pretend to commemorate the same event.

There are other persons who, when the claims of the Sabbath are urged, comfort themselves in the assurance that the first day of the week must be a heaven-approved institution, because the observance of it has been attended with such great blessings. But who knows that God has put his blessing upon the first day of the week? The preaching of the Gospel on that day may have been blessed to the conversion of multitudes of souls. But then the divine blessing was not upon the day, but upon the truth; and had the same truth been preached on any other day to the same people, no doubt the blessing would have been quite as great. In all this reasoning, a false cause is assigned for the effects. God has overruled the observance of the day for good, but has not placed his blessing upon it. The seventh day needs not the evidence drawn from such occurrences, since it has the express declaration of the Bible, that "God blessed and sanctified it." In this connection, the lecturer expressed himself firmly of the opinion, that the observance of the first day of the week has, on the whole, been a curse to the world rather than a blessing. The adoption of it conceded a fundamental principle of Popery, that the church has power to ordain festivals, and to command men under sin for the neglect of them. Besides, by making void an express command of God, it led to erroneous and perverse reasonings about the divine law, which resulted in the multiplication of heresies and sects that have arrayed themselves in hostility to one another. Those who consider what a curse Popery has been to the world—how she has carried upon her front the names of blasphemy, and has made herself drunken with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus—will be slow to admit that the introduction of the Sunday festival, which gave countenance to the papal system, was a blessing.

The lecturer then took up the objection that the discussion of the Sabbath question tends to mar the existing union among Christians, and to introduce confusion. He showed that the only union to be desired is a union in the truth. Those who refuse to consider and embrace the truth, instead of promoting union thereby, pursue a course exactly adapted to perpetuate discord, and to retard the time when all the followers of Christ shall be one, as He and the Father are one. Having thus answered the principal objections raised by inquirers, the speaker closed his series of lectures by a solemn appeal to his hearers to "buy the truth and sell it not."

☞ On Sunday evening next Mr. Brown proposes to preach a discourse at the Chapel upon the subject of Christian Union, which the public are invited to attend.

ENCOURAGING MISSIONARY REPORT.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have just returned from a missionary tour in Lewis and Jefferson Counties, where I spent about six weeks, laboring principally in Pinkney, Lewis Co., and Philadelphia, Jefferson Co. I left home on the 5th of January, and arrived in Pinkney on the 8th, where I found a precious revival in progress. A Seventh-day Baptist church, consisting of twenty members, had been organized about two weeks before, by a council from the church at Adams. About two-thirds of the members were from the church at Adams; one was from the Methodist Church; the rest were recent converts, who were baptized by brother Langworthy.

I tarried in Pinkney and vicinity something like four weeks, preached nearly twenty discourses, visited most of the families, baptized five persons, and received eight into the church, two of whom embraced the Sabbath while I was there. There is a prospect of farther additions soon.

I left Pinkney, and went to Philadelphia, where I met brother Varnum Hull, who had been laboring there a few days, but who left for Diana the next. There are a few Sabbath-keepers in Philadelphia, who, until within a few months past, were in the observance of the first day. I found a number of families who were pretty thoroughly convinced of the truth of the seventh-day Sabbath, some of whom I am satisfied will soon commence its observation. A number more said they would investigate the subject, and, if convinced, would embrace it. I found the religious denominations, consisting of Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists, very jealous of Seventh-day Baptists, and it was apparent that they used a secret influence to prevent people from hearing me. Of course my congregations were small, especially at the commencement. There were, however, some honorable exceptions. I found it difficult to get up appointments which would be generally attended, as there would be other appointments, either religious, literary, or social, which would prevent my getting a full congregation. It seemed that I was the occasion of making Pilate and Herod friends. I tarried in this region about ten or twelve days, preached eight times, attended two prayer meetings, and one temperance meeting, where I heard an excellent lecture from the celebrated Mr. Coffin, made a number of family visits, distributed a number of Sabbath Tracts, and held conversation with a number of individuals on the subject of religion in general, and the Sabbath in particular, with some apparent success.

I think that if a missionary, in whom were united the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove, were sent there at the proper season of the year, a respectable Seventh-day Baptist Church might be established. The season most favorable for missionary operations, I think, would be the fall of the year, as soon as the evenings become long enough to hold evening meetings. I recommended to the friends of the Sabbath to hold regular Sabbath meetings, and when they could not have preaching, to hold prayer and conference meetings. This advice they approved of, and I think it will be adopted. I gave them an assurance that I would use my influence with the Central Association to send them a missionary next fall. ELI S. BAILEY.

Brookfield, Feb. 19, 1847.

CHURCH ACTION ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

The following Preamble and Resolution, together with a Report by a Committee appointed for that purpose, were adopted by the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Pawcatuck, R. I., at a meeting held Feb. 14, 1847:—

Whereas, in the opinion of this church, the institution of Oddfellowship, and other Secret Societies, are unnecessary in the promotion of Christianity, benevolence, and truth—in their nature dangerous to republican institutions—and corrupting in their influence upon the church and the world; therefore—

Resolved, That it is inconsistent with our professions to countenance or aid them, and we shall deem it a subject of grief for any of our brethren to unite with or continue in their Society.

The following is an abstract of the Report adopted:—

In considering the subject presented to your Committee, they will confine their observations more particularly to the Order of Oddfellows, as embodying the essence of all that is good or evil in kindred societies. Bound together by the holiest ties of association, and a common interest that knows no selfishness, the Christian Church has justly been regarded as the great engine for the advancement of civilization, benevolence, and truth. It was instituted to carry on to a glorious consummation the work begun by its great Head, viz. the salvation of souls and the melioration of the condition of mankind. Pure in its principles, and expansive in its benevolence, no mystery may be thrown around its actions to hide them from the world. "Ye are the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid; let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." It is her peculiar province to cheer the widow and orphan in their afflictions, to relieve the destitute, to undo the heavy burdens which a selfish world has bound on the helpless, and to be forward in every enterprise calculated to benefit mankind and lead them to God. Such being the design of its great Founder, we may safely conclude, that any other association not necessarily growing out of this, which has for its object the accomplishment of the same ends, is unnecessary in the promotion of Christian benevolence and truth, and without a warrant from Christ the living Head.

Having thus briefly premised the design and duty of the church, we come to examine the principles and practices of Oddfellowship, so far as the veil of mystery which it has drawn around itself admits of development, that the church and community may better judge whether it is worthy of their confidence. Holding honor and truth as its motto, charity and benevolence its cause, friendship and peace its standard, love and unity its shield; composed alike of professed Christians, men of the world, haters of God, profane swearers, Sabbath-breakers, &c., styling themselves "sons of light;" they "seek to restore the unity of the race, which the unhappy divisions of the Christian church have so deplorably disturbed, and to realize in a more beautiful and efficient form the holy ideas of charity, love, and brotherhood." See Modern Eleusinia, page 44. Such is their object, as given by one of their members, who professes to be not only a disciple of Christ, but a preacher of his word. They characterize the Eternal as the Supreme Grand Master, "whose approbation alone they seek." The kingdom of heaven they represent as the Grand Celestial Lodge above, and promise to its votaries an entrance there through the efficacy of Oddfellowship alone. The proof of this is from their own documents. See Introduction of Narragansett Lodge, No. 7.

"If we faithfully perform our duty as men and ODDFELLOWS, be assured that heaven will shed its rays of light and glory around the impressive emblems of our Order. The tear on the widow's cheek shall be succeeded by the widow's joy; the orphan shall be rescued from penury, want and ignorance; and the reign of humanity shall not cease, until by all the dwellers on earth its plastic influence shall be enjoyed in the peaceful bowers of a second paradise, more beauteous than the first."

"To accomplish so glorious a consummation, may we ever continue to cherish the sacred principles of our beloved institution—to guard well the avenues to our temple against improper intrusion, and then, should a storm of persecution surround us with the chilling influence of its cold and icy wind, a stronger than Moses will guide and safely conduct us to the land of peace and rest, where we will better understand the sacred principles of Friendship, Truth, and Love."

"To him of benevolent heart and broad philanthrophy, it is the home of the heart, and, next to his own fireside, the shrine of his best affections."

Such is their language, and such undoubtedly is the meaning intended to be held out to a large class of its votaries who have long sought to climb to heaven by some other way, and to enter the portals of bliss without the cleansing efficacy of the blood of Christ, and the humiliation and self-abasement that characterize the followers of the lowly Redeemer. We view it as one of its worst features, that while such is its manifest tendency, it has an air of religious sanctity thrown around it, to allure the unguarded professor into its fine-woven snare, and secure his influence in the propagation of its own pernicious sentiments. It stands the great competitor of the church, and the antagonist of religion, aiming directly at the overthrow of the one, and the subversion of the other. Claiming "the heart's best affections," which, next to our own fireside should ever cluster around the church and its interests, it draws them off and centers them around an institution professing to aim at the same ends, while it embraces many who are hostile to the religion of Jesus Christ, and who would glory in its downfall. Professing to ensure the present enjoyment of the sacred fruits of friendship, love, and truth, it perverts those social virtues, which are as expansive as the universe, by making the payment of money an indispensable prerequisite; thus rudely dragging those heaven-born attributes of religion down to the mean level of dollars and cents. By withholding membership from those who are unable to contribute to its funds, and in general confining its beneficence to its own members, it excludes those most worthy of the consoling effects of charity and benevolence, and resolves itself, in essence and fact, into a Mutual Insurance Association, for the benefit of its own members. We object not to this feature of the institution, while passing under its own appropriate name; but we believe such benevolence is but the effusion of selfish hearts, unworthy of the name, and in all its features unlike the benevolence inculcated by the great Head of the church. Whatever may be the character of its meetings, (except so far as thought best to publish,) the stamp of eternal secrecy is placed upon them. The fettered victim can never know the depth of the pit till he pays for the privilege of sinking still deeper, and pledges himself never to reveal the scenes it may unfold.

Bound together from one end of the nation to the other—their designs and proceedings veiled from the view of the world, and even from its own members, except as they pass through the successive steps of the higher orders—with a rapidly-increasing fund—we cannot but view it as an engine of immense power, and dangerous to all our republican and religious institutions.

Again, we are presented with an association, professedly organized to promote morality, secure the triumph of truth, turn the widow's tears of grief to joy, and bring peace to the sorrowing sons of earth, expressly forbidding the discussion of national, political, local, or religious subjects, such as slavery or abolition, temperance or anti-temperance, moral reform, &c. Now, in the effects of the enumerated evils and remedies is involved the misery or happiness of all men, and therefore they open to the Christian an extended sphere of philanthropic and benevolent action. But, as an Oddfellow, he is forbidden to give utterance to a single emotion touching these questions; and the causes and remedies of all the ills of earth cannot be mentioned in an Oddfellows' lodge-room dedicated to friendship, love, and truth.

It claims Christianity as its central idea, and affirms without qualification, "that there is no human institution which has so many claims upon our reverence and sympathy"—that there is no religious organization, no Christian church, more vigilant in watching over the conduct, or more strict in its discipline of its members." While it professes "to have done more for the civilization of the world, and the progress of society, than all other means combined," and to receive none but moral men to its mysteries, no religious test is required, and its doors are thrown open to violators of every precept of the divine law, thus virtually admitting that swearing, Sabbath-breaking, &c., are consistent with morality and religion.

Having thus taken a brief view of the design and duty of the church, and also of the claims and professions of Oddfellowship, we are led to inquire, What fellowship can exist between them? The former, in its designs, is as expansive as the universe, and as pure and disinterested as the source whence it emanated; while the latter, making equally high pretensions, lowers the standard of benevolence to a mere name, undermines the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and is in its tendency dangerous to republican institutions, and corrupting in its influence upon the world. What communion, then, can they have without a compromise of principles which all Christians cherish. "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath light with darkness, and righteousness with unrighteousness; and what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" In coming to the conclusions expressed in the preamble and resolution, we entertain no other than the warmest sentiments of Christian affection for those our brethren who may differ with us. We doubt not their sincerity and good intentions, and cherish a hope that a candid review of the subject will induce them to renounce it as opposed to Christianity and the best interests of the church.

DARWIN E. MAXSON, } Com.

Rev. Dr. Baird.—Dr. Baird returned to this country by the last steamer, from a tour of religious observation in nearly every part of Europe. On the 25th of January he gave, at Exeter Hall, in London, an account of his travels in Portugal, Spain, Italy, Greece, Malta, Turkey, Switzerland, France, and other continental countries, and explained the position and prospects of evangelical religion in each. His views are very encouraging, as they lead to the hope that a revival and extension of pure religion may be expected at no distant day. An English paper, after speaking of the Doctor's address, says:—

"We congratulate the religious bodies of America on the service they render to the cause of truth and liberty by the agency of our honored and distinguished friend. Europe is his debtor; and not a few of her crowned heads feel and own the obligation. With some of them he holds intimate personal intercourse, and by some of them he is honored with familiar correspondence. Nor would we forget that, by these services, he confers honor on his own, his native land. We have the testimony of a gentleman holding high office in France, that no American citizen has ever gained more of the confidence of enlightened Europeans, and done more to recommend his country and her best institutions to the attention and admiration of the subjects of monarchial governments. His large and comprehensive views—his benevolence—his philanthropy—above all, his unostentatious piety, fit him to become of on a large scale, the friend of freedom and of man. May he long live to benefit Europe and honor America!"

Religious Liberty in Germany.—The "London Universe" announces, upon authority entitled to implicit reliance, that the King of Prussia is about to issue an edict or law granting a very large measure of religious liberty to the inhabitants of his kingdom. The measure is understood to be so comprehensive that it will cover completely all such movements as those of Czerski, Ronge, and their adherents. In a word, whosoever is dissatisfied with the existing Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish modes of worship, may have such as they prefer, upon engaging to support it at their own charges, and to maintain a due regard to the existing laws which enforce good order and propriety. This act of the King is considered as constituting a most important epoch in the history of religion in Germany. It is worthy of the enlightened and excellent monarch of Prussia—a man who fears God, and seems desirous of doing what he can to advance the interests of true religion.

Dr. Wolff and the Nestorians.—The celebrated Dr. Wolff has published in a London paper a characteristic address to the "noble-minded and generous people of England," in behalf of the Nestorian Christians. He says that "the tyrant Bader Khan, a Kurd, whose cruelties and atrocities are well known, for his people inflicted upon myself, when traveling in Mesopotamia, in 1824, two hundred lashes, has threatened to exterminate the whole body.' Hence he calls upon the people to petition Parliament for measures to stop "the horrid bloodshed now going on in Koordistan." He professes himself quite ready to face the Koordish tyrant, though he is "tired, fatigued, and worn out," by his late expedition to Bokhara, but has no doubt that Government will be able to adopt "more energetic measures than merely sending forth such an humble individual" as himself.

Pastoral Change.—The Rhode Island correspondent of the N. Y. Baptist Register, under date of Westerly, February 4, says: "The Seventh-day Baptist Church of this village is soon to change its pastor. The Rev. Mr. Campbell, a most devoted and faithful man, and one who will be a blessing to any community, is, on account of ill-health, to return to his old home at DeRuyter, and the Rev. Mr. Moore, from New Jersey, is expected to take his place. Mr. Moore appears to be a very fine man, and has lately united with that denomination, from among the Baptists. It is often a matter of congratulation with other denominations, that so many from the Baptists unite with them. It ought to afford Baptists equal joy, that they have so large a number of good men as to be able to afford so many efficient laborers to feebler denominations."

Revival.—Rev. B. S. Williams writes to the Baptist Register, from Plymouth, Chenango Co., New York, that fifty-five, in that place, have recently given evidence of a change of heart; "numbers of backsliders have been reclaimed from the error of their ways, and many of the drooping sons and daughters of Zion have been revived, and led to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!' Among the converts are a number of heads of families, and men of extensive influence. God grant that it may be wielded henceforth on the side of God and truth."

The Hutchinson Family.—These inimitable singers have come to town again, and are to give a concert at the Broadway Tabernacle on the evening of March 5th. The character of their pieces is well known to be of the highest order, and the style of their execution has won almost universal applause. They deserve to be greeted with a full house.

Blackwood's Magazine for February has been reprinted by Leonard Scott & Co., and was laid on our table just twenty-eight days after its appearance in Edinburgh. Among its contents are "Memoir of the late John William Smith, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law," "Modern Italian History," "The Reign of George the Second;" "The Early Taken;" "A Ride to Magnesia;" "Direct Taxation," &c. Published at 112 Fulton-st.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The SENATE passed the following Bills: To provide for [the transportation of the mail to Oregon, to extend the franking privilege of members of Congress, and to purchase the Madison Papers. Mr. Crittenden introduced a bill appropriating $500,000 to be expended in provisions under the direction of the President, and in transporting the same to the famishing poor of Ireland and Scotland in a national vessel. The principal subject of discussion before the Senate was the Three Million Bill, which was debated more or less every day of the week. Speeches were made by Messrs. Benton, Calhoun, Evans, Breese, Hannegan, and Niles.

The HOUSE passed the Army Appropriation Bill, a Bill making appropriations for the services of the Post Office Department, the Indian Appropriation Bill, and a great number of private bills. Mr. Boyd, from the Military Committee, reported the Senate bill organizing the ten regiments into brigades and divisions, and making provisions for an additional number of general officers, with amendments—one giving the President power to assign the chief command of the army, until the expiration of the war, to any General, Major or Brigadier, regularly commissioned, of the Regulars or the Volunteers, without regard to the date of commission. These amendments were passed.

Monday.—The bill appropriating $500,000 for the relief of Ireland, after passing the Senate, was sent by the House to its Committee of Ways and Means, which is considered as equivalent to putting it asleep. The Lieutenant-General Bill seems more likely to be killed in the Senate. Congress will adjourn on Wednesday.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

A Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune says that by arrivals at New Orleans, Tampico dates have been received to Feb. 8th, Brazos to the 6th, Matamoros to the 5th, Camargo and Vera Cruz dates to the 2d, the city of Mexico to the 29th Jan.

A detachment composed of eighty Kentucky and Arkansas cavalry was cut off when thirty miles beyond Saltillo, by Gen. Minon. They formed an outpost, and were surprised and taken prisoners without resistance. Maj. Borland, C. M. Clay, and Maj. Gaines, were captured.

The capture of Lieut. Ritchie and 10 dragoons, with dispatches from Gen. Scott to Gen. Taylor, is confirmed. One account says that they were cut off between Monterey and Victoria, and were all killed. The dispatches are said to have contained the whole plan of our operations. Another account says that the ten dragoons had reached Victoria in safety, but there is no doubt of the death of Lieut. Ritchie. Young Ritchie was lassoed and dragged across a corn field.

An officer of the Ohio Regiment, supposed to be Lieut. Miller, had been murdered near Chihuahua, and awfully mutilated, by the Mexicans.

Gen. Scott was to embark immediately on his destination to Lobos, a distance of 75 miles from Vera Cruz. The attack on Vera Cruz, it was supposed, would take place about the first of March.

The ship Ondiaka was wrecked about thirty miles south of Tampico. She had on board the 2d Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. A detachment sent out to their assistance, is said to have been made prisoners, and all the volunteers of Capt. Magruder's forces had started for the wreck, and the whole brigade were said to have followed. The main body of the volunteers who were wrecked, had certainly not reached Tampico; and at last accounts from them, were engaged in conflict with a body of Mexicans, far superior in numbers and equipments.

The U. S. ships Statesman, Prentice, and Catharine, were off the Bar at Tampico on the 9th inst., filled with troops. The Mississippi Volunteers were on board of the Statesman, suffering terribly by sickness, and dying daily in great numbers. The New Yorkers on board of the Catharine were in good health. About 7,000 troops were at Tampico, of regulars and volunteers. Lieut. Gibson, of the second artillery, died on the 6th, of fever.

The rumored assassination of Santa Anna turns out to be unfounded; so also does his active opposition to securing the Church property.

There are some farther accounts of the capture of Chihuahua. The Mexicans admit that over one hundred of their numbers were killed.

LETTER FROM FATHER MATHEW.—The Freeman's Journal publishes the following letter from Father Mathew to Rev. Mr. Kelly of Jersey City. It is dated at Cork, Jan. 11, 1847, and may no doubt be relied upon as giving a true account of the state of things in Ireland:—

"No sum of money, in the present state of this country, could afford such relief as shipments of Indian corn, and other breadstuffs—and to be sent immediately. The individuals concerned in the corn trade of England and Ireland, have raised the price to an enormous amount. Indian flour is to-day in this city £19 the ton, and in the country £28. Our wretched population is rapidly pining away and sinking into the grave. The only consolation we have is the pious resignation with which they submit to this dire visitation of an all-wise Providence. We have seven months of famine still before us. But with the bright prospect that now opens upon us, of having our markets reduced to reasonable rates by the benevolence of our commiserating brethren in the States, we hope to stay the ravages of famine.

Untoward, unexpected impediments, have obliged me reluctantly, for the last two years, to postpone my visit to your happy country. Until the Lord, in his mercy, stay the hand of the destroying angel, that is now decimating the Irish people, I cannot promise myself the happiness of spending a few months in America."

"HOW THE OTHER HALF LIVE."—Attended by polite officers, and a few curiously disposed gentlemen from out of town, we lately paid a visit to the old "Brewery Building" in Anthony street. We had to pass through what is called 'Murderer's Alley," which is about 100 feet long, when we found ourselves in a very large and rickety building, which was cut up in small rooms. The number of families which are supposed to call that their home is sixty, and a more miserable set of beings we have never seen. Our visit was in the night-time, and most of the residents were at home. In one room we saw a husband and his wife, with three children, sound asleep, on a bed of shavings, and the furniture of the room consisted only of a pine box, a wooden bowl, which was full of meal, and a tin cup, while on the hearth of the empty fire-place, were scattered a few meatless bones. In another we saw a woman in a beastly state of intoxication, whose child, wrapped in some filthy rags, was lying upon a bed of warm ashes, in one corner of the fire-place. In one room a lot of half-clothed negroes were fighting like hyenas; and in another a forlorn old man was suffering with delirium tremens. As our leader walked on, peering into the dark rooms of poverty and infamy, we were forcibly reminded of Dante's description of Hell. The majority of women were widows, and we were informed that the rent they paid varied from 2 to 6 shillings per week. Our guide directed our attention to the back-yard, where, within the last two years, upwards of twenty persons have been found dead. Their histories remain in mystery, and we were told of the very strange fact that a funeral has not been known to occur at the Brewery for many years—as it is the market place for anatomists and their menials. We could hardly believe, until we saw it, that such a place as the Anthony Street Brewery, actually existed in the Empire City.

MESMERISM AND SURGERY.—The Zoist, a large and respectable Magazine of Magnetic Surgery, Physiology, etc., published in London, and now in its fifth year, gives in its January number a multiplicity and great variety of cases of surgical operations performed while the patients were respectively under the mesmeric influence, in India, France, various parts of Great Britain, &c. &c. Among these are the removal, by Dr. Esdaile, in Calcutta, of an enormous tumor weighing over one hundred pounds, in the presence of seven physicians and four other gentlemen, without pain or peril to the subject, although the loss of blood was appalling. The patient was utterly unconscious throughout. In another case Prof. Durand, at Cherbourg, France, removed a large and deep-seated tumor from the neck of a young woman, on the 19th of September last, as is attested by fifty of the first citizens. She knew nothing of the operation till awakened after its conclusion. A third case was the removal of the diseased tonsil of a child, by Mr. Aston Key. One tonsil had previously been removed without mesmerism, causing intense agony, and rendering the child consequently adverse to any farther operation, and almost thrown into convulsions by the bare mention of it The child was partially awakened by the violence of the process, but did not know any operation had been performed. In a case of amputation of a crushed leg at Kilmarnock, the patient, (who had been then mesmerized for the first time,) was awakened by the sawing of the bone. Cases of the extraction of the most painful and difficult teeth, are frequent and well attested.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT IN THE MINES.—The Pottsville (Pa.) Miner's Journal of Feb. 27th, says: On Friday morning of last week, one of the most dreadful accidents that ever occurred in our vicinity, happened at the mines of George Spencer & Co., in Minersville. It is supposed to have occurred by a spark of fire falling from a lamp carried by William Brennan, into a cask of powder, near which he was seen standing a short time previous to the explosion. Brennan was instantly killed—his body being horribly mangled. The couplings and props in the gangway for a distance of about fifty yards, were thrown down, causing a fall of dirt and coal, which killed Patrick Lawless, Patrick Donohue, who lived for some time in that terrible situation, conscious of the efforts which were being made to save him, and conversing with those who were endeavoring to extricate him—all their efforts, however were in vain, and the rubbish settling down upon him, ultimately caused his death. Lawless was a young man, and had only been married the preceding week. Donahue is spoken of by those who knew him, as being an excellent man. Four other persons were injured by the accident. Thomas McAvoy had his leg broken, and the injuries of the others were comparatively trifling.

MARRYING IN NEW YORK.—There is probably no place on this continent where persons wishing to get married may be done for with greater expedition, or at a cheaper rate, than in this City. A Baptist clergyman, a few days since, had a call for his professional assistance in this line. The juvenile aspirants were soon made one flesh by the declaration of the Parson, according to Scripture, when the groom, with a satisfied air, told his reverence he would call in a day or two and settle. Now our minister was not one of the green ones, and having been gammoned in this way before, determined not to let off the happy pair so easy; so he told the swain he would have his certificate ready when he called; hereupon the newly married, putting his hand in his breeches pocket, exclaimed, "I guess I might as well pay now," so the certificate was filled in a jiffy and handed over, and the minister received in exchange a small parcel wrapped carefully in a piece of paper, which on examination, after they had retired, was found to contain the monstrous sum of FOUR CENTS. The Albany Evening Journal says: We cannot accustom or familiarize ourselves to the magical rapidity with which intelligence passes over magnetic wire! Ten minutes after the steamer Cambria arrived at Boston, on Saturday, the fact was announced to us. This morning we received a request from the editor of the Toronto (C. W.) Colonist for the Cambria's news, by telegraph. An answer referring them to Buffalo for the news, was returned, and a response received saying that they would get their news from Buffalo, all in the space of half an hour!

SUMMARY.

In the British House of Commons, Jan. 21st, Lord Palmerston, in reply to questions from Mr. Roebuck, stated that the British Government had no knowledge of the existence in that country of any office for the issue of Mexican letters of marque; and that with respect to a notice given by the Government of the United States, some time since, that any foreigners found serving in Mexican vessels of war would be treated as pirates, he (Lord Palmerston) had instructed the British Minister at Washington to express his expectation that such threat would not be carried out against British subjects.

In the first twenty-three days of February there were 124,772 bbls. flour and 956,148 bushels of grain exported from New York. Reducing the flour to wheat, the aggregate exports were over a million and a half bushels of grain, equal to about 4,900,000 bushels per month. This is truly enormous. In addition to this, a large quantity of corn meal has gone and will go forward, which will increase the quantity to at least two millions and a quarter of bushels, worth three millions of dollars.

The ship Venice, from Liverpool, arrived at Boston on Monday evening, with 170 steerage passengers, no less than twelve having died at sea on the passage. The survivors are represented by the Boston Post to be in a most deplorable condition. The ship, while lying to in a severe gale, under a close reefed main-topsail and mizen-staysail, had her topsail blown away, which caused her to fall off, when a tremendous sea broke over the quarter, which swept away a boat, broke down the top of the house aft, filled the cabin with water, and washed away the wheel-house with two men in it, who perished.

The Housatonic train for Albany from New York, Feb. 25, was run into near Great Barrington by a freight train. A car of the passenger train had got off the track, and while it was being replaced, the freight train came up. A boy who resided at Great Barrington was standing in front of the car which was off the track, and was thrown down by the collision of the trains, and so dreadfully mangled that he died instantly. Two of the passenger cars sustained some damage, but no other person was hurt.

The Utica Gazette gives the proceedings of a meeting on the 18th, of the officers and patients of the Lunatic Asylum in that city, for the relief of Ireland. Dr. Brigham was in the chair, and one of the patients acted as secretary. Appropriate resolutions were adopted, and some of the convalescent patients addressed the meeting in eloquent speeches, and an ode written by a young lady, a patient, was received with great applause. The sum of $106 38 was contributed by the officers and attendants only; many of the patients desiring to add thereto, but being refused by the superintendent.

The Boston Advertiser learns that the British Government has made provision for the transportation free of charge to Great Britain, of aid from this country to Ireland and Scotland. A letter from Mr. Burritt, which has been accidentally delayed, is published by the Christian Citizen, at Worcester. It contains a note in answer to a letter by Messrs. Hill & Warren, to Lord John Russel. This answer is dated Feb. 2, and states that the Lords of the Treasury will be prepared to pay the freight of any provisions or clothing which benevolent persons in the United States may send to the distressed in Ireland or Scotland, on proper proof of its character.

The steamship Sarah Sands sailed from New York on Wednesday last, for Liverpool, taking the following cargo:—

The packet-ship Constitution sailed on the same day, with the following cargo—

Wheat, bushels	10,000
Corn, bushels	25,000
Corn meal, barrels	2,700
Flour, barrels	4,000
Soda biscuit, boxes	160
Cotton, bales	661
Clocks, boxes	42

Ship Eliza Warwick, Capt. Loring, from New York, at Liverpool, reports: At 8 P. M.. on the 12th Jan., was pooped by a sea while scudding, in lat. 44 N., lon. 42 30 W., which instantly killed Capt. Loring and the two men at the wheel—carried away round-house wheel, binnacle bulwarks, carved-work from stern, and stove in the after part of house, filling house and cabin with water.

A subscription of over five hundred dollars was raised among the passengers of the Cambria for the benefit of the suffering poor in Ireland and Scotland. The subscription was set on foot by Rev. Dr. Baird. Gen. Tom Thumb headed the list with the sum of fifty dollars. The little fellow, before leaving London, presented one hundred pounds sterling to the charitable fund for the same benevolent object.

The British Government has lately received information from its agents on the western coast of Africa of a frightful occurrence, which, however, is not yet so novel in the annals of slavery. A negro chief having 2,000 slaves upon his hands, and being unable to dispose of them, had them all killed before his own eyes. The French Government had also been made acquainted with this horrible massacre.

The citizens of Hatfield, Mass., have contributed 300 bushels of corn for the Irish poor. The Day Police of Boston have given two days' pay ($100) for the relief of the Irish. If the capitalists of the country would contribute two days' income (which they can much better afford to do than the laborer) what a bounteous sum would be raised.

Dr. Hitchcock, of Middleboro, Mass., and Mr. McKennison, were so severely injured by a collision on the Fall River Railroad, at Randolph dépôt, that both died.

The Boston Times states that the steamship Hibernia must have earned a rich freight on her recent trip. The specie paid half per cent, or about 14,000 dollars; the passengers $15,000 or more, and the goods probably ten or twelve thousand; making in all some $40,000, besides the great purse of the British Government for the mail.

The united population of Great Britain, France, Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark and Sweden, is 73,735,000. The united people of this little social circle of kingdoms are saddled with an aggregate war-debt of £1,027,000,000 which is £13 18s. to every person of the aggregate population. The interest of this debt at five per cent. would amount to £51,355,000.

The beautiful Congregational Church in Brimfield, Mass., was consumed by fire on Sunday forenoon last. It broke out during divine service, and took from one of the stove-pipes in the ceiling through which it passed. Loss between $5,000 and $6,000; insured $3,000.

Mr. C. D. Wright, of Haddam, Ct., has recently invented and put in operation, a tail block for saw-mills, with important improvements, whereby the position of the log is adjusted in either direction as required by the machinery, connected and secured in its place, without any immediate attention from the sawyer.

There are seven cotton factories in Allegany city, opposite Pittsburgh, which consume about 5,000,000 pounds of cotton every year, which, at ten cents per pound, costs $500,000. The manufactured articles produced are worth about $1,000,000, thus leaving a created capital of half a million of dollars.

It appears by the census of 1845, that the total agricultural products of the State of New York, together with the income of all mechanics and manufacturers, and the amount earned by the public conveyance of merchandize and travelers, amounts to $280,000,000.

It is stated that the amount of money now in the Chancery Courts of the State of New York, exceeds nine millions of dollars, which will be liberated by the abolition of these courts.

The Swedish Government has resolved, gradually, to abolish slavery at St. Barthlomew's, and has devoted £2,000 per annum for that purpose until the slaves are liberated.

A petition has been presented to the court at New Orleans, to set aside a will, on the ground that the person who wrote it was blind at the time.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
—AND—
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of THE ILLUSTRATED FLORA, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, LEWIS & BROWN, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work as it is published.

Miscellaneous.

CHINESE DOMESTIC LIFE.

Mr. S. W. Williams, who has spent twelve years in China, and is well-informed on all questions pertaining to that interesting country, is delivering a course of lectures at the Central Presbyterian Church in Broom Street, which are very justly commanding a good deal of attention. We are indebted to the Journal of Commerce for an interesting report of his third lecture, the subject of which was Chinese Domestic Life, embracing under this general head the Chinese architecture, social intercourse, dress, food, &c :—

The architecture of the Chinese, he said, was peculiar, retaining the original form of a tent, in all its parts; indeed, it has never been a study, as in India; and it is remarkable that, in a country so full of people, so little attention should have been paid to it. The usual materials are brick and mud. The color of the former is blue, owing to some peculiarity of their composition, while their tiles are red. The bricks have the same size as with us, and are laid with considerable skill. The mud used in building is a compound of sand, lime and oil. The walls are laid up between boards, and the mortar beaten together. Thus formed, they are more durable than the walls built of brick. This material is most frequently employed in towns and villages near rivers, where the sand is easily obtained. The poorest classes live in houses of mats.

The pagodas, so peculiar to China that any views of that country are hardly complete without them, are edifices both of a religious and superstitious nature. They are not only temples of the Buddhist religion, but are supposed in some way to affect the harmony of the elements; for this purpose they are built on eminences, and reared to a great height. They have always an odd number of stories, and only the smaller pagodas are used as temples. The celebrated Porcelain Tower is two hundred and twelve feet high, and covered with porcelain tiles; it has nine stories, and some twenty or thirty images in each; it is still in a good state of preservation.

The appearance of a Chinese house is that of a dead wall with a large gateway. The roof projects over the doorway, and under it are suspended lanterns inscribed with the name of the owner, and his title if a public officer. Entering the gate, one passes into a small paved court, on each side of which a roof covers the passage to the principal apartments. The door-keeper and servants have small rooms near the entrance, and on the left side, in a niche, stands the god of the threshold. The principal room appears very gay when the lanterns and furniture are new; when these are a little faded it looks cheerless and poor, the floor being of tiles, or sand and lime, and the walls unbroken by windows, the light entering only from above; in the summer, however, the front of the room is left open, and in winter closed by folding-doors. At the head of the wall is the altar, and behind it some tutelary divinity, an image, or a picture. The host receives his guest at the entrance of the hall, and conducts him to a broad sofa. On each side of the room are commonly four chairs with tables between them. The furniture is rich and heavy, being made of a species of ebony, but it is not beautiful. On the walls are hung long scrolls containing passages from their classics, and between these landscape paintings.

Their gardens have received much attention, and display a great deal of skill and taste. Some years ago there was a garden in Canton, in the vicinity of the factories, which embraced about two acres, and was said to have cost $125,000. A small stream meandered through it, forming a lake in the center, in the middle of which, on a rocky island, stood a summer-house; summer-houses were also built around its margin. Rocks scattered in the wildest combinations, and artificial hills and valleys, were part of its plan; and its apparent size was greatly increased by the curious device of uncouth figures, half finished, in the shelly walks, which beguiled the visitor to delay and study their incomplete forms, till the winding path seemed long. The imperial gardens are said to cover five or six square miles, and contain fields, mountains, forests, dells and caves.

The structure of the temples is similar to that of the houses. The god stands in a niche at the head of the first room; before him is a mat on which the devotee kneels, and a drum and bell which the priest strikes to rouse his godship's attention. The priests live in the rear of the principal hall. Temples are built on commanding sites, and much skill is displayed in disposing the ground and improving its natural features.

The general appearance of a Chinese town or city is very plain; an extensive succession of red-tiled roofs, with the long flag-staffs rising above them, which designate the houses of the principal officers; on a gala day five or six banners, hung transversely, stream from each of these, giving the city a very gay appearance. The streets are more lively and imposing. The shops are open, and the counter projects so far that the customer can be served in the street. The streets are never more than ten feet in width; in Canton the average will not exceed seven. There are no sidewalks, no carriages, and women are seldom seen walking, as they use the sedan chair when they go abroad.

The shops are not numbered, but the streets are divided by gateways, and the sections differently named. Small towers rise at intervals of fifteen or twenty rods, on which the watch are stationed to give alarm of fires, and to cry the hours.

The Chinese Government raises the poor tax by quartering the beggars upon the different streets of the city. They are mostly women and children, many of them blind, and are allowed to go from shop to shop in their sections. They seat themselves at a shopman's door, and commence singing, shouting, or creating a noise in some way, and if he has a customer, he is glad to give them a cash (the eleventh of a cent) to get rid of them; if not, it is a trial of patience between the parties. The beggars from the country go to the temples to importune the votaries, and there such sights of misery as one can hardly conceive are often witnessed; the diseased, at night, cold and starving, and the living covering themselves for warmth with the corpses of the dead; while above them the shouts and merriment of the theatre roll on unheeding.

After describing the junks and the population of the rivers and harbors, Mr. Williams proceeded to speak of the dress of the Chinese, which he pronounced both comfortable and imposing. The material is silk or cotton, the favorite colors blue and purple; furs are highly prized, and handed down from father to son; indeed, as their houses are without fire-places, the defense against cold is by an accumulation of garments, and sometimes as many as ten gowns are put on at once. The conical cap is of bamboo, or felt, covered with silk; the boots are also of silk, with soles not less than an inch thick. Those who can afford it carry two watches to regulate each other. They have also pouches for the betelnut and tobacco, which is in very general use among both sexes, and sometimes for the chop-sticks and fan.

The dress of the female is modest and elegant. That which attracts the attention of foreigners soonest, is the compression of the feet, a custom which is well nigh universal. It is done in infancy, by bandages, and occasions but little severe pain. The large toe is bent directly back till it lies flat on the foot; the other toes are bent under, and the smallest is laid across the others; the foot thus compressed is some three and a half inches long. The gait is awkward, but the women walk quite rapidly, and the custom does not seem prejudicial to health. Its origin and object are alike unknown to foreigners and natives.

Their diet is nutritious and abundant; their rice is hulled, and cooked by steaming; their wheat ground and boiled; they never make bread. The products of the dairy are not in use, and when we reproach them for eating kittens, they think it a triumphant reply that we eat cheese.

They have most of our vegetables and fruits, and some very valuable varieties which have never been introduced among us; they have excellent grapes, but make no wine; they raise many plants for their oil, as the pea-nut and castor bean; sugar is used in great quantities; their liquors are tea, and spirits made from rice; they have not even a name for coffee; their principal meats are poultry and bacon. Fish are used along the coast more than in any other country; indeed, the Chinese eat every thing that comes from the sea, except a kind of porpoise.

Mr. Williams concluded with a description of the usual marriage festivities in China. These give occasion for manifesting all their love of display and parade. The betrothal is made by the parents at a very early period, At the appointed time, the procession starts from the house of the bride; the betrothed is borne in the "flowery sedan," attended by a procession of seventy-five or one hundred persons, bearing tablets inscribed with the rank of her father, heralded by music, and followed by her dowry. Her approach is announced to the bridegroom, who receives the sedan in the hall, and taking the key, opens it to behold his bride for the first time in his life; they then worship together. A goose, the emblem of conjugal love, is present at the ceremony, and the sacrifice to his ancestors is the banquet of the festival to which her relatives are never invited; she is considered dead to them, and some days afterward goes formally to renew acquaintance with them.

Many evils result from this early betrothal, and suicide is not unfrequent among the unhappy victims of an unfortunate union. On the other hand, there are few unmarried persons in China, and the welfare of the community is doubtless greatly promoted by the universality of the domestic relation.

THE BEAR AND THE SAILOR.

A sailor who belonged to the crew of a ship employed in the whale fishery, once undertook to attack a large Polar bear which he saw on the ice at a distance. It was in vain his companions tried to persuade him to give up his design. He laid hold of a whale-lance, and approached the bear. The bear was, however, as brave as the sailor, and stood waiting for the attack. The sailor, seeing him so bold and powerful an animal, grew faint-hearted, and after standing for some time motionless, took to his heels. The bear pursued him with monstrous strides, when the sailor dropped the whale-lance, his cap, and then his gloves, one after another, to prevent the bear from following him. Bruin examined the lance, tore the cap in pieces, and tossed the gloves over and over; but, not being satisfied with his spoil, he still pursued the sailor, whom he would without doubt have torn in pieces, had not the rest of the crew, seeing the danger of their companion, sallied forth to rescue him. The affrighted sailor ran towards his comrades, who opened to him a passage, and then prepared to attack the bear. The bear was, however, as prudent as he had proved himself to be brave; for, after surveying the force of his enemies, he effected an honorable retreat. The valiant sailor, who had fled before his courageous enemy, never stopped for a moment in his flight, until he had reached the boat, preferring to be laughed at for a coward, rather than remain to encounter a bear.

SINGULAR INSTINCT OF A PELICAN.

When a British regiment was returning to England from the expedition to Egypt under the talented and gallant Abercrombe, there accompanied it a tom Pelican which had been taken in Egypt with a broken wing, and which had been amputated by the surgeon. It so happened, that while it was on board the ship the other wing was also broken, and it had to undergo the same operation. Severe as this was, however, the bird recovered, but always appeared alarmed when the surgeon came near him, though perfectly familiar and at ease with the rest of his fellow passengers, both those of the regiment and the ship's company—taking fish and other food with great familiarity out of their hands. One day, however, he appeared very ill, so much so that all thought he was dying—when with the fine point on the end of his huge bill, he opened a vein under the stump of one of his wings, and thus let himself bleed—after which he soon recovered, and was brought by the officer to whom he belonged to Scotland. This singular bird was well known to many persons in Edinburgh, having attached himself to the lady of the house, and fortunately to the cook, both of whom it would follow like a dog. But it was observed to be exceedingly afraid of going into the water, aware probably that by the loss of its wings, it had lost its balance, which is so necessary to birds both on the water and on the wing.

Poison.—Cyrus, of Persia, when a young prince, visited his uncle Cyaxeres; and to show that there was no merit in being a good cup-bearer, took the cup from Sacas, who acted in that capacity.

Astyages, history informs us, admired his skill, but laughingly observed, "The young waiter has forgotten one thing."

"What have I forgotten?" asked Cyrus.

"To taste the wine before you handed it to me and your mother."

"I did not forget that, but I did not choose to swallow poison."

"Poison?" exclaimed the king.

"Yes, there must be poison in the cup, for they who drink of it sometimes grow giddy and sick, and fall down."

"Then you never drink in your country?" inquired Astyages.

"Yes, but we only drink to satisfy thirst, and then a little water suffices."

This occurred nearly two thousand four hundred years ago, yet it is as true as if it were an event of yesterday, that intoxicating drink is a "poison."

◆

Revenge.—Many years since, a gentleman in Newington, a parish of Weathersfield, Conn., who was a very religious and conscientious man, married one of the most ill-natured and troublesome women he could find in the vicinity. This occasioned a universal surprise wherever he was known, and one of his neighbors ventured to ask him the reasons which had governed his choice. He replied, that having had but little trouble in the world, he was fearful of becoming too much attached to things of time and sense, and thought that by experiencing some afflictions, he should become more weaned from the world, and he married such a woman as he thought would accomplish his object. The best part of the story is, that the wife, on hearing the reasons why he married her, was much offended, and, out of revenge, became one of the most pleasant and dutiful wives in the town; declaring that she was not going to be a pack-horse to carry her husband to heaven.

◆

Peter Parley.—Daniel Webster, (the Newburyport Herald is our authority for the anecdote,) after his return from Europe, asked a friend to guess whose were the American names better and more universally known and admired in England than all other American names put together. His friend answered, Washington and Chief Justice Marshall. No, said Mr. Webster, I mean living persons; and they are Judge Story and Peter Parley; for while the former is known to every lawyer in England, and generally among the educated classes, the latter has entire possession of the young hearts of old England—that whenever he went into an English family, and the children were brought in and presented to him as Mr. Webster, an American gentleman, they would be sure, with scarcely a single exception, to approach him, and looking him in the face, with the utmost anxiety expressed in theirs, would ask, "Do you know Peter Parley?"

◆

Try.—There was once upon a time a good little dwarf named Try, who was so powerful that he overcame almost every thing he attempted; and yet he was so small and ill-favored, that people laughed when they were told of his wondrous powers. But the tiny man was so kind at heart, and loved so much to serve his unfortunate and desponding brethren, that he would go and beg of those who knew him better, to intercede for him, so that he might be allowed to help them out of their troubles; and when once he had made them happy by his noble deeds, they no longer despised him or drove him from them with sneers, but loved him as their truest friend. Yet the only return this good dwarf sought for all his services, was, that when they heard of any one who wanted a helping hand, they would say a good word in his favor, and recommend them to—TRY.

◆

Longevity of Quakers.—It has been ascertained, from authentic statistics, that one half of the human race die before reaching the age of twenty-one years; and the bills of mortality published in large cities, show that one half die before attaining the age of five years. With these undisputed facts before us, it will seem strange that the average age of Quakers in Great Britain is fifty-one years, two months, and twenty-one days. This is, no doubt, attributable to the restraints and moderation which the principles of that sect impose upon its members—the restraint they are under in mingling in many of the dissipations and pernicious indulgences that hurry thousands to premature graves. What an excellent example for the instruction of the world.

◆

Irish Mode of Boiling Potatoes.—Wash the potatoes clean without breaking or cutting the skins. Drop them into a pot of boiling water, adding a little salt, and let them remain until sufficiently soft for a fork to be easily thrust through them. Pour off the liquid in which they have boiled, and dash in cold water in its stead. Let the potatoes remain two minutes, pour off the cold water; place them over a slow fire, with the pot-lid partially removed, and let them steam until nearly dry. Then peel and place them on the table in an open dish.

Gibbon, author of the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," had a face that showed signs of any thing but intellect. His cheeks protruded so far as to be on a level with his nose. On his being introduced to a blind lady, who was in the habit of passing her hand over the faces of those who were presented to her, in order to form some idea of their features, she pushed him away, exclaiming, "Take off that mask—such jesting is scandalous!"

A French paper informs us that a new plough has been constructed at Vitry sur Seine, the invention of M. Blot. It is provided with three shares, one or all of which may be used at a time, as the operator or character of the surface may require. The trial of this instrument was, it is said, perfectly successful. With this plough a man and a span of horses will easily plough six acres per day. So says the French account.

VARIETY.

A visitor in Lowell writes:—"In looking over the pay rolls or book, which I accidentally picked up from the table, I found on twenty-seven consecutive pages containing eight hundred signatures, nearly all girls, but a single one that had made a mark of X, all written in a good, and many of them in a most elegant hand. The clerk observed to me that Lord Morpeth, when on a visit to this country some years ago, happened to be present on pay day: 'What, do your operatives write?' 'Certainly, sir,' said the clerk, 'the Americans all write.' Directly there came in a man who made his mark. 'Ah!' said his lordship, with a smile, 'I thought you said all wrote.' 'All Americans, your lordship'.—this was an Englishman."

It is stated by those who keep night watch in the menageries, that in cages where there is more than one animal, it is always the custom for one to keep watch while the other sleeps. The sentry is relieved with as much regularity as in a well-regulated camp of soldiers, although not probably with as much precision in regard to time. The sentinel paces back and forth, and is very careful not to do any thing to arouse his comrades. Occasionally he lies down, but always with his head towards the front of the cage, and never sleeps until relieved.

The Scientific American says that a new cannon has recently been invented by a Mr. Detheredge, of a novel and convenient construction for being carried by hand or on horseback over mountains, forests, or marshes, where an ordinary cannon would be altogether useless. The cannon consists of staves, hoops and screws, all made of wrought iron, and nicely finished; and while it is stronger than common cast iron cannon, it can readily be dissected, and each section may be shouldered by either pedestrian or equestrian artillerists, and when required, the parts may be put together and secured ready for action in ten minutes.

The Scientific American learns, from an exchange paper, but without any specification of time or place, that a combination of the Daguerreotype and the Microscope has recently been invented, by which impressions are taken in a magnified state. With a compound microscope, a spider's claw measuring by the micronometer 1-60 of an inch in its longest dimension, was transferred to a plate, a beautifully defined figure, magnified 75 diameters, or superficially 5,625 times. Severel other objects have been tried with equal success.

A cow will give more milk when kept warm than when exposed to the cold. Every farmer knows that cattle eat more in severely cold weather; and notwithstanding cows then give less milk; still few farmers take sufficient care to protect their stock from the severity of the weather. Hogs, also, gain more on the same food when kept warm.

Various pictorial representations have from time to time been made of the Divine Being. One person of the Trinity has been painted as an aged man, another as a youth, a third as a dove. How prone are men to forget that "God is a spirit!"

Men are more civilized by their pleasures than their occupations. Business dispenses not only with ceremony, but often with common civility; and we should become rude, repulsive, and ungracious, did we not recover in our recreations the urbanity which in the bustle of our labors we disregard.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

CORRECTION AND EXPLANATION.

In the Recorder of the 28th of January, I find an article by "CRYPTIC," containing strictures on an article written by myself in answer to INQUIRER, on the propriety of churches having "a written Covenant and Articles of Faith." It appears to me, that Cryptic's remarks have done me injustice. This is done by setting up a new issue, and by making improper quotations with remarks upon them. The question asked by Inquirer is plain, and cannot be misunderstood. To this I replied. Cryptic says, "The question is, I think, whether the covenant and rule of faith, written under the direction of the great Author and Finisher of our faith, will admit of any other not possessing like evidence of inspiration." This is another question altogether, to which I have not replied. I shall not hold myself responsible for any conclusion deduced from my reply, when applied to Cryptic's question. I know that it is the right of Inquirer to explain or correct his question; but as he has made no such explanation or correction, I understand, as before, that he meant what he said. This is all that I think his remarks call for in this part of his article. But still, under the circumstances, to save myself from misapprehension in the minds of others, I would add a few things.

Cryptic says, he thinks it is universally admitted among Protestants, that we should take the New Testament covenant as a church bond. He also says, "The question is, I think, whether that covenant and rule of faith, written under the direction of the great Author and Finisher of our faith, will admit of any other not possessing like evidence of inspiration." I suppose that the Protestant world is as much agreed on the last as on the first. No Protestant church that I know, suppose that they have a right to form a new covenant, as a church covenant, essentially differing from the one in the Gospel. Do not understand me to say, that man has not made a different covenant; this is another question. Farther, there can be no gospel churches but such as are bound together by a gospel covenant. I did suppose that the expression "gospel-wise" would fully guard me against any misunderstanding. Cryptic says, "But he saith not who is to be the writer of this covenant—whether the Holy Spirit, or some modern world's convention," &c. True enough, I did not, neither was it my business, for this was not the question. It is a matter of no importance, "only let the covenant be gospel-wise." Again, he says, "Now if Bro. Prestonian wished to say that it was proper for a church to have this divinely-inspired covenant, he was answering, I think, an unasked question." So I think. The question is not whether we may have an "inspired" or "humanized" covenant. This cannot be a question, for Cryptic says that it is admitted by all Protestants, that we should take the New Testament covenant as a church bond. He says again, "It is evident that there can be no church without this same new covenant." No one has denied it, that I know of. He also says, "God has given us a covenant, a perpetual covenant; this is gospel-wise, none other can be." Just so I think.

In remarking upon what I said relative to Articles of Faith, Cryptic says, "Prestonian says, 'as to Articles of Faith, I would ask, Is it proper for churches to have faith? Most assuredly; for by it the elders obtained a good report, and through faith we understand that the worlds were made by the word of God, and by it they wrought righteousness. In fact, without faith it is impossible to please God,' &c. Here our brother proceeds to cut and slash the above into parts of firstly," &c. This is not correct. Cryptic will please read again. No wonder that he should think I "jumped at my conclusions." I do not suppose there was any design to misrepresent, but I think there should be a little more carefulness. But what surprises me most of all is, that he should assert that Paul "said nothing in favor of articles of faith; and as all the sacred writers treated them with the same neglect, I think that I am safe in such good company, and think the church is infinitely better off without them." Then we MUST be in a sad plight if we have "articles of faith."

Brother Cryptic, there seems to be a difficulty in talking on this question. The notion prevails, that Articles of Faith exist only where they are "written" or spoken. Out of this mistake, I think, the difficulty grows. We should remember, that the writing and speaking of articles is one thing, and the articles themselves is altogether another. What I understand to be "Articles of Faith," is simply the various doctrines of the Scriptures, as, for instance, the existence of God, the fall of man, the atonement, &c. Whoever believes these doctrines, has articles of faith, whether they are written or unwritten. I do not know whether you hold to these articles of faith or not. But the church to which I belong does. Now can you say that we would be "infinitely better off without them." No; take away these articles of our belief, and dark infidelity hangs in prospect over our path, and all our joys are gone; yes, forever gone. The cup of hope is dashed from our lips, and trembling seizes every nerve. Time, with its mighty current, is urging us on our heavy and downward way to the dark abyss. Every moral restraint is thrown off, and we say, "What advantageth it me that I have faught with beasts at Ephesus?—let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Will you say, that "Paul said nothing in favor of these articles?" Read that portion of my communication giving the quotation from Hebrews, which you left out, and there you will find that he has said, "He that comes to God must believe that he is." As to the fall of man, "As in Adam all die." As to the atonement, "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." If Paul does not speak in favor of Articles of Faith, I should not know how to. It is of no use to say that he did not say, "through articles of faith," and "by articles of faith." The articles are here, name or no name, not by proxy simply, but in person. I shall not strive about words. We have the substance, and not the sign. I do not think that it is wicked for a man to write down what he believes, and consequently I think we may have written articles of faith.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

Reply to "Indagator."

MR. EDITOR:—I find in your paper some exceptions to an article of mine on the Sabbath question. At this I am not surprised. "Indagator" seems to think my argument surrenders the question to the Sabbatarians. In this, I think he is utterly mistaken. I have not my article before me; but, it is presumed, I remember the views there stated. I "think we have no specific instructions in regard to the Sabbath in the New Testament." If we had, it would be an end to all controversy. Where are those "specific instructions?" I "think that the notices of the first day of the week do not justify us in supposing that it was then held as a Sabbath." I "think that Christianity recognizes a Sabbath." "Christ and his disciples sanction it." The frequent notices of it in the New Testament are "recognitions" and "sanctions;" and not "specific instructions."

I hold that the "seventh" may be reckoned from any point. The law does not specify either Saturday or Sunday. It does specify the "seventh day." It says just nothing about any settled order of succession. This is one of many human additions. It is an addition, moreover, which renders the observance of the law, under some circumstances, an impossibility. The order existing when the law was given, was purely incidental. It was not fixed by law. In the nature of things it could not be. God's laws are practicable. Human additions introduce confusion and controversy. "If each seventh portion of the citizens of this city, had fixed on a different day of the week to observe as the Sabbath, each day that passes over our heads would be the Sabbath of Jehovah our God." Just so. The law indicates no preference. It says, simply and only, "Six days shalt thou labor. The seventh—i. e., the day after the sixth—is the Sabbath of Jehovah your God." Where there is no law, there is no transgression. If I work six days, and keep the seventh, I fulfill the law to the very letter. Tradition may have fixed another. God never did. If he did, let it be shown when and where. If citizens choose to keep different days, it would be very inconvenient, and foolish, and capricious, and hence sinful. Its sinfulness, however, would not lie in its opposition to the sabbatic law.

"What right has your correspondent to say, that the whole question about the day is to be determined by the law of Moses?" I must defer this question till "a more convenient season." It may involve difficulties, not so easily settled, as to the character of the law. I will now briefly observe, that "Indagator" has not carefully studied my language. "The question about the day" is universally referred to the law of Moses. Why is it that the seventh day, rather than the fifth or the eighth, is observed? Is not this determined wholly by the law of Moses? Where, in the whole Bible, is there any other specification on the subject? Partizans of both sides of the Sabbath question refer to the law of Moses. The controversy must be settled by the law to which all direct us. The New Testament contains no law on the subject. If the law of Moses is not now in force, we are without law on the subject.

"If it be said, 'this law is moral and permanent,' on what ground does this assumption rest?" If it be a mere "assumption," we need not care about the ground on which it rests. If the sabbatic law be moral, I presume its permanency will be conceded. What makes any law moral? Is it not its essential utility? The law prohibiting theft is "moral and permanent," because the welfare of the human race is promoted by its observance. The Lord says: "The Sabbath was made for man"—for the benefit of man. It is universally confessed that the observance of the sabbatic law is deeply interesting to mankind—i. e., it rests on a moral basis. It is as clearly moral as any commandment of the decalogue. If it be intended to commemorate the rest after creation, does not this relate to all the tribes and generations of men?

These few desultory remarks must suffice for the present. I should be happy to join "Indagator" in an investigation of the deeper points of the sabbatic law. While the law is regarded as in force, the interpretation of the law is to determine the controversy. My argument was intended to be an argumentum ad hominem. How far the law may be binding on the Christian church, may involve doubts in the minds of good men. I do not think the Sabbath question is scripturally inculcated by writers on the subject. I have herein indicated my views, so far as the interpretation of the law goes. The law determines what day to be kept. It does not enjoin either Saturday or Sunday. He who properly keeps either, keeps the law. His brother has no right to condemn him. I simply say, in closing, that I regard the sabbatic law as still binding.

From the Christian Chronicle of Feb. 3.

MR. EDITOR:—I lately ventured to propose some queries to your correspondent "E. W. D." with a design to elicit light on the subject of the Sabbath. Their particular aim was two-fold—to test the interpretation which he had given in your paper, of the law of the Sabbath in the fourth commandment (allowing this to be still binding;) and then to call in question the validity of that law altogether, so far, at least, as we are concerned. The more natural order would be, perhaps, to inquire first, Is the law of the Sabbath referred to, binding on us, any more than that, for instance, of the sabbatic year; and if it is, then, secondly, does it not restrict us to the religious observance of the seventh day of the week?

Now it is apparent that until the former of these questions is settled affirmatively, we need feel little concerned about the other. I am quite content, therefore, to pass over, for the present, what "E. W. D." in his "few desultory remarks" last week, has advanced in support of his opinion that the law does not designate any particular day of the week as the Sabbath; and to proceed to "an investigation of the deeper points of the sabbatic law." In quitting this subordinate point, I would barely add, that if he admits, with most writers, if not all, the division of time into weeks, as having been established before the age of Moses, and that some day of the seven (which were probably called the first day, second day, &c.,) was intended to be set apart as a day of public rest and worship; and yet holds that although the law specified the seventh day, the Jew might observe any other as well, why then indeed I must wonder at the elasticity of his hermeneutical principles; though I have no disposition to press the point. According to this, they are justified who, from the prohibition "thou shalt not kill," because absolutely expressed, infer, in the face of all the limitations and applications of this general principle in the law itself, the unlawfulness of capital punishment for murder. I suspect that if our Saviour, standing triumphant over the rifled sepulchre, had said, "Ye shall keep the first day holy, and labor the remaining six," we should none of us think it indifferent what day of the week Christians observed. As little ambiguity or want of definiteness was there in the law of the Sabbath to those for whom it was given; and the man seized while gathering sticks, would have been justly held guilty, I apprehend, even though he could have alledged sincerely that his Sabbath only came on a different day from that of the Lord his God. Would not "the sinfulness of his conduct have lain in its opposition to the Jewish law." But I did not mean to say ten words on this topic.

If we were intent on searching thoroughly the common interpretations of this law, we should have reason to inquire whether it, as stated simply in the Decalogue, is "practicable," as "E. W. D." affirms, or even, for practical purposes, intelligible. Could a mind not enlightened from other sources, gain from the fourth commandment alone, more than the faintest idea of the real design of the Sabbath, and the manner of observing it? And while seeking for information on these points, through the law at large, would he be left in doubt as to the appointed time?

It was for the very purpose of securing an "investigation of the deeper points" of this subject, that I addressed to your correspondent the principle question above stated; and I hope that at the first "convenient season" it may receive his deliberate attention. Are we bound to keep the weekly rest prescribed in the fourth commandment? No one denies that in general the body of the institutions and precepts of the Jewish system, is abrogated. Such is the case with circumcision, the festivals, sacrifices, and many other things. Why not with the Sabbath also? What is the reason for regarding this as permanent, while all the rest have "waxed old and vanished away." This is to my mind the question. If the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes His disciple free from the law of sin and death, why should he be constrained by the statue touching the Sabbath, and not by those of circumcision and the distinction of meats? If it be said that the law written in the hearts of Christians requires obedience to things which are commanded, the question at once comes back, where has God commanded us to keep the Sabbath?

The common answer to this is that the law of the Sabbath is moral, (as distinguished from positive, or ceremonial, or civil, &c.) which, if it were true, in the sense commonly attached to the term "moral," would prove our duty to keep the Sabbath, not merely because it is enjoined in the Decalogue, but equally whether it were enjoined there or not. "Moral duties," says Bishop Butler in his Analogy, "arise out of the nature of the case itself, prior to external commands." The other duties prescribed in the Decalogue may be, and are, I think, all of this description. But is that of keeping the Sabbath? So far from it, the very ground on which a moral character is claimed for this by many is, that it is commanded in the Decalogue. It cannot be in the above sense, then, that "E. W. D." can maintain that the law of the Sabbath is "as clearly moral as any law of the Decalogue." He seems, indeed, to set up another standard of morality, in "essential utility;" but I see not how he can so apply this, if it were correct, as to distinguish the morality of the Sabbath from that of other Jewish institutions which are now obsolete. Many practices, surely, are "deeply interesting to mankind," which have not the same obligation upon our conscience as the fundamental principles of the great law of love.

Having thus, under the pressure of very engrossing duties, re-stated, with some enlargement, the difficulty which I have felt in admitting some of the common views of the Sabbath, I shall await with interest, the further developments of "E. W. D." in relation to the vital points of the matter. Though I have freely propounded my doubts and queries, it is only that they may be clearly seen, and with the fervent hope that they may be fairly and satisfactorily met; and as he does not think that the truth here has been "scripturally inculcated" by others, I am anxious to see his deliberate views. And I cannot but think that while Sabbatarians on the one hand are leaving no stone unturned to spread their sentiments, and the great "World's Convention" on the other, with difficulty secures the recognition of any Sabbath, truth, simple, scriptural, Gospel truth, pertaining to the question will be eagerly embraced by many besides

INDAGATOR.

LYRIC.

From an unpublished Opera, entitled 'Life according to Law.'

BY EBENEZER ELLIOTT.

Sabbath holy!
To the lowly
Still art thou a welcome day;
When thou comest, earth and ocean,
Shade and brightness, rest and motion,
Help the poor man's heart to pray.

Sun-waked forest,
Bird that soarest
O'er the mute empurpled moor,
Thostle's song that stream-like flowest,
Wind that over dew-drop goest,
Welcome now the wo-worn poor.

Little river,
Young forever!
Cloud, gold-bright with thankful glee,
Happy woodbine, gladly weeping,
Gnat, within the wild rose keep;
Oh, that they were blest as ye!

Sabbath holy!
For the lowly
Paint with flowers thy glittering sod;
For affliction's sons and daughters,
Bid thy mountains, woods, and waters,
Pray to God, the poor man's God!

From the fever, (Idle never,
Where on Hope Want bars the door,)
From the gloom of airless alleys,
Lead thou to green hills and valleys
Where Lord-land's trampled poor.

Pale young mother,
Gasping brother,
Sister, toiling in despair,
Grief-bowed sire, that life-long diest,
White-lipped child, that sleeping sighest,
Come and drink the light and air.

Tyrants curse ye
While they nurse ye,
Life for deadliest wrongs to pay;
Yet, oh Sabbath! bringing gladness
Unto hearts of weary sadness,
Still thou art "the Poor Man's Day."

THE WAY IN WHICH IT IS DONE.

The home work of foreign missions needs the help of every member of every church. It is no less true that every member needs the blessedness of helping in this work; and that every church needs the influence of such a helper. But the question is, how can every member of every church be made a laborer in this service?

We spent a part of a Sunday in the month of January with a church in one of the thriving villages of Massachusetts. The whole number of its resident members, composed chiefly of farmers, mechanics, manufacturers, and tradesmen, is two hundred; and the gross amount of their taxable property is perhaps one hundred and ten thousand dollars. This church has done its missionary work through the same system for five years. It embraces the wider diffusion of missionary knowledge; the more faithful observance of the missionary concert of prayer; the increase of the number and amount of the contributions to the missionary treasury. The results are these:—

Forty-four copies of the Magazine, and one hundred and sixteen copies of the Macedonian, pay their monthly visits to all the families in the church and congregation; the missionary concert is the largest, most attractive, and valuable evening meeting in the month; last year all the resident members of the church, and many individuals in the congregation, were contributors.

In the first year of the present system, the church made an advance of one hundred per cent. on the contributions of the preceding year. The following table will show the increase in the five years:—

Years.	Con. coll.	Gen'l coll.	Total.
1842	$50 71	$78 00	$128 71
1843	90 00	190 00	280 00
1844	105 88	261 68	367 56
1845	135 60	300 00	435 60
1846	138 42	560 03	698 45

Within these five years the congregation has become as large as could be accommodated in their place of worship, and would have become still larger but for the want of such accommodation. One hundred dollars have been added to the pastor's salary; an old debt of some sixteen hundred dollars has been paid; other benevolent objects have been liberally aided; but owing to removals and other causes the property of the church remains about the same that it was five years ago.

All this has been accomplished in this way. The pastor of that church determined to give his people a missionary education. He matured a system through which the pulpit, the press, the monthly concert, and individual effort, were to unite in the work of educating a missionary church. The fruits were to be gathered, except the gleanings of the concert, once a year, and by a committee of twelve, composed of six males and six females. The church and congregation were to be divided into districts, and these districts were to be divided between the committee of twelve; thus all the members of the church and congregation were to be called upon for their offerings.

These annual calls are made in the month of January, after a Sunday devoted to the consideration of the facts and claims of the missionary cause. On the Saturday preceding such a Sunday in last month, we saw the twelve small books which the pastor had carefully prepared for the twelve solicitors. In each book were written the names of the expected contributors in a district, not excepting his own. On the next Monday evening the committee were to meet at the pastor's house, to receive the books, and to pray for the divine blessing on their effort.

All that we saw in that church declared the presence of missionary life. At the close of the afternoon service the desirableness of using a missionary map at the evening meeting was suggested. We were asked to take our choice of four. When the meeting came, we found Colton's map of the world suspended before a large congregation, not on nails driven for the occasion, but in a place which it seemed to claim as its own; and when the time had come to use it, the ordinary solar lamp was removed from the table, and replaced by another with a reflector so arranged as to illuminate the whole canvass.

We left the place grateful for so good an illustration of the way in which every member of every church may be made a helper in the missionary cause; and more fully convinced than ever that a missionary pastor, educating the people by precept and EXAMPLE, will make a missionary church. TOUCHING STORY.

The following beautiful and touching story was related by Dr. Schnebly, of Maryland, at a meeting lately held in New York, to hear the experience of twenty reformed drunkards:

A drunkard, who had run through his property, returned one night to his unfurnished home. He entered its empty hall—anguish was gnawing at his heart-strings, and language is inadequate to express his agony as he entered his wife's apartment, and there beheld the victims of his appetite, his lovely wife and darling child. Morose and sullen, he seated himself without a word; he could not speak; he could not look upon them. The mother said to the little angel by her side, "Come, my child, it is time to go to bed;" and the little babe, as was her wont, knelt by her mother's lap, and gazing wistfully into the face of her suffering parent, like a piece of chiseled statuary, slowly repeated her nightly orison; and when she had finished, the child (but four years of age) said to her mother: "Dear ma, may I not offer up one more prayer?" "Yes, yes, my sweet pet, pray." And she lifted up her tiny hands, closed her eyes, and prayed: "Oh God! spare, oh, spare my dear papa!" That prayer was wafted with electric rapidity to the throne of God. It was heard on high—it was heard on earth. The responsive "Amen!" burst from that father's lips, and his heart of stone became a heart of flesh. Wife and child were both clasped to his bosom, and in penitence he said, "My child, you have saved your father from the grave of a drunkard. I'll sign the pledge."

AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLE.

The Rev. Adolphe Monod gives the following illustration of the effects of the reading of the Bible:—

"The mother of a family was married to an Infidel, who made a jest of religion in the presence of his own children; yet she succeeded in bringing them all up in the fear of the Lord. I one day asked her how she preserved them from the influence of a father whose sentiments were so openly opposed to her own. This was her answer: 'Because, to the authority of a father I did not oppose the authority of a mother, but that of God. From their earliest years, my children have always seen the Bible upon my table. This holy book has constituted the whole of their religious instruction. I was silent, that I might allow it to speak. Did they propose a question, did they commit any fault, did they perform any good action, I opened the Bible, and the Bible answered, reproved, or encouraged them. The constant reading of the Scriptures has alone wrought the prodigy that surprises you.'"

DEATH-BED EXPERIENCES.—Schiller, when dying, was asked how he felt. "Calmer and calmer," he replied. Perhaps this serenity was mainly due to the state of his body; for that degree of physical weakness which no longer suffers the will to employ the muscles, but yet arrests not the internal action of the brain, is usually attended by an indescribable calm of mind. If indeed the conscience be reconciled to God, it is complete; for then the torment of conflicting afflictions is over, and the soul sees only that he is heir to a rich and eternal inheritance. Thus a tranquil ecstacy is often witnessed at the death-bed of the Christian—

"Is that a death-bed where the Christian lies?
Yes; but not his; 'tis death itself there dies."

TOUCHING.—A recent traveler gives an account that when he was walking on the beach of Brazil, he overtook a colored woman with a tray on her head. Being asked what she had to sell, she lowered the tray, and with reverend tenderness uncovered it. It was the lifeless form of her babe, covered with a neat white robe, with a garland round the head, and flowers within the little hands that lay clasped upon its bosom.

"Is that your child?" said the traveler.

"It was mine a few days ago," she replied, "but the Saviour has it for his angel now."

"How beautifully you have laid it out!" said he.

She added cheerfully, "Ah, what is that to the wings it wears in heaven.

A STRIKING THOUGHT.—Among the feelings caused by the loss of domestic friends, few things are more striking than the impression of their absolute and entire surrender of the things that specially and individually belonged to them. This or that was his or hers, peculiarly and personally so; perhaps a favorite article; but they make no claim to it now; it is totally yielded up; let go absolutely and forever; it is now a thing infinitely indifferent to the person that called it "mine;" it may be taken for any person or for any use. The late proprietor wants it no longer, knows it no more. [Foster.

INTERMEDIATE STATE.—After all our conjectures, imaginings, and almost impatient speculations in regard to the intermediate state of the departed, here we still are in front of the awful impervious veil that hides its secrets from us. How striking to consider, while we stand here, that one and another of our friends, with us just yesterday, inquisitively conversing perhaps on this very subject, are now, at this instant, in the midst of the reality; have experimental knowledge of two worlds, while as yet we are confined to one. SUNDAY LAWS—PROGRESS.

Much light has been shed upon the subject of Sunday Laws within a few years past. The fruit of it is beginning to appear, and is of a character adapted greatly to encourage the friends of religious freedom. Christian statesmen and jurists are rapidly coming to the conclusion, that Sunday Laws are opposed to the spirit of our National Constitution, and dangerous to our Republican Institutions. Hence they do not manifest that tremor which they formerly did at the proposition to abolish them, but in many cases frankly confess that their repeal may be safer than their multiplication and enforcement. In view of what has already been accomplished, there is good reason to hope that the day is not far distant when the statute-books of our land will cease to be quoted in support of a human institution, and in opposition to a divine commandment.

Some of our readers may not be acquainted with the facts upon which this hope is based. For their information, as well as for the encouragement of those who are fearful upon this subject, we will place together several circumstances which seem to us very important and significant.

The first circumstance to which we will refer occurred at Richmond, Virginia. The Common Hall of that city, in their zeal to promote the better observance of Sunday, passed an ordinance imposing a heavy fine for working upon that day, over and above the penalty imposed by the State laws. This ordinance proved exceedingly obnoxious and oppressive to the Israelites, who were in the habit of observing the Sabbath, and engaging in their ordinary labors on Sunday. Hence they presented a petition to the Town Council, representing their grievances, and asking for a repeal of the ordinance, on the ground that it favored one form of religious belief in preference to another, and was therefore unconstitutional. Their petition was referred to a Committee, with the District Attorney for its chairman, who reported an opinion, that as to what day one should observe as a religious Sabbath, or what he should do on that day, provided his conduct is peaceable, and neither obstructs others in their religious worship, nor disturbs the good order of society, should be left to man and his Creator, without any other ordinance than the fourth commandment. They accordingly introduced a resolution, "that it is expedient to repeal the ordinance for the more effectual suppression of Sabbath-breaking." This resolution, after considerable delay and debate, has been adopted, and the ordinance repealed.

Another instructive circumstance, is that which occurred in Cincinnati, Ohio. The Council of that city passed an ordinance prohibiting trading, bartering and selling on Sunday. The Jews, finding that this ordinance was to be applied to them, so as to enforce their resting on Sunday, notwithstanding they observed the Sabbath, resisted it. After one or two trials in the inferior Courts, the question came before the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio. That Court decided the ordinance of the Cincinnati Council to be void as to those who conscientiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath—thus vindicating the rights of conscience, and rebuking all attempts to enforce the observance of Sunday upon Sabbath-keepers.

A circumstance somewhat similar to the above has recently occurred in Charleston, South Carolina. The City Council passed an ordinance long ago for the better observance of Sunday, one section of which reads as follows: "No person or persons whatsoever, shall publicly expose to sale, or sell in any shop, warehouse, or otherwise, any goods, wares or merchandize, upon the Lord's day; and every person so offending shall, for every such offence, be liable to be fined, in any sum not exceeding twenty dollars." In accordance with this ordinance, the City Council of Charleston brought a case into Court against Solomon A. Benjamin, a Jew, charging him with selling one pair of gloves on Sunday. At the trial, the City Attorney admitted that the defendant was an Israelite, and that he kept the seventh day of the week or Jewish Sabbath. On the part of the defendant, the selling of the gloves was admitted; but it was contended that the ordinance in question was inoperative and void, because in violation of the 8th article of the State Constitution, which reads: "The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever hereafter be allowed in this State to all mankind; provided that the liberty of conscience thereby declared, shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State." This question was ably argued on both sides. Judge Rice, who presided on the occasion, has published his opinion, with a lengthy statement of his reasons. He thinks that the ground taken by the defense was sustained, and that the ordinance of the City Council, in its application to the defendant, is "in clear and palpable violation of the 8th article of the Constitution of the State, and therefore invalid, inoperative, and void."

Such are the opinions of judges and influential legal gentlemen in regard to the constitutionality of Sunday laws in their application to Sabbath-keepers. They show a gradual modification of the antiquated and superstitious notions about the intrinsic wickedness of working on Sunday, as well as about the policy of attempting to prevent such work by statutory enactments and penalties. They encourage the hope, that the day for the legalized persecution of Sabbath-keepers is drawing to a close. God grant that this hope may be realized.

FATE OF THE BILL IN NEW JERSEY.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I hasten to inform you, that the Bill for the Relief of Sabbath-keepers, which passed the Senate of this State, (N. J.,) was lost in the House by one vote—the yeas 21, nays 22. I know not whether any of our friends went to Trenton to make interest for it since it was sent to the House from the Senate. I have not heard of any, although I wrote to some, urging them to be on the ground, to insure success.

It is perfect folly to get up petitions begging for relief, getting a bill reported, and then abandoning it to its fate. Here was a bill, as good as we can expect the Legislature to pass for us, actually passed the Senate by a handsome vote —eleven to six—and failed at last, for want of its friends turning their hands to save it. Such a course is highly culpable. It is trifling with public time, and prejudices our cause exceedingly. I may be mistaken as to the delinquency on the part of its friends, or rather those to be benefited by it; but I cannot learn of any having appeared on the ground to look after it. The projectors of such an enterprise will find the friends get tired of appealing to the Legislature, if not followed up by a corresponding vigilance on the part of those who move in the matter, to carry it to a successful issue. Another golden opportunity has been lost; and I make the above remarks for no other purpose, than to explain the cause of failure, at the moment when we were about to be crowned with deliverance. The same has taken place before, and will again, unless our friends exercise more wisdom and prudence hereafter, in seeking redress at the hands of a body, that has but little disposition to act in the matter, but rather that it should be smothered—"choked off." Vigilance—"eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

W. M. F.

BORDRNTOWN, N. J., March 7, 1847.

☞ We give place to the foregoing communication, because it contains information for which many of our readers are anxiously looking. We must beg leave, however, to dissent from the opinion of our respected correspondent as to the persons upon whom rests the blame of failure in this case. The subject has been fully and fairly presented to the Legislature of New Jersey, not only by our petitions, but by personal and familiar explanations to many members of both Houses. The Report upon it, by a Committee of the Senate, shows that there was no lack of information, and leaves no room for an unbiased and liberal mind to doubt the justness of our claims. That Report, which was printed by order of the Senate, and is placed upon its records, will stand as a witness against the truckling policy of those who dare not grant equal rights for fear of endangering their own favorite religious opinions. The result of the failure is easily foreseen. The subject will continue to be agitated, increasing light will be thrown upon it, and the Legislature will find no rest until it grants what a majority of its members have acknowledged to be right.

—Presuming that some of our readers will be glad to have the Report and Bill, as finally acted upon, for future reference, we place them together below:—

The Committee to whom was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of this State, praying for a repeal of certain laws, beg leave to submit the following REPORT:—

Among the laws of this state, is one entitled "An Act for the suppression of vice and immorality," which makes it a penal offence to perform any kind of worldly business on the first day of the week, and recognizes that day as the Sabbath. A large and respectable number of the citizens of the state, in the exercise of their private judgment in matters of religion, which the constitution fully guarantees to them, firmly and conscientiously believe that the seventh day of the week (commonly called Saturday) is the only Sabbath enjoined by the Bible; and that there is nothing in the scriptures which makes it their duty to suspend worldly business on the day commonly called Sunday. On the contrary, they believe it to be their privilege to pursue each one his calling on that day, to the same extent as on other days. This class of our citizens compose part of a denomination of Christians which is not of recent origin, raised up under the influence of what many might consider the fanatical excitements peculiar to the present age, but is an old established sect, having been known in our country from its early settlement. Under the pressure of the strongest motives, drawn from popularity and worldly interest, to renounce their faith, they have continued to cherish it with earnestness; thus giving proof that they are as sincere and conscientious in their views as the more popular sects of the land. Their character as citizens is above reproach. Their forefathers were opposed to British tyranny, and made great sacrifices to obtain our independence. They are a people who pay their taxes for the support of government as cheerfully as their more highly privileged fellow citizens do; and readily sustain the officers of justice in the execution of the laws, and faithfully and impartially discharge the duties assigned them under the laws of the state. To them the constitution of the state grants, in common with all its citizens, equal privileges and rights. The power to legislate these rights away, they have never delegated to any man or set of men; but hold them as sacred as the freedom of speech or the liberty of the press. These loyal and peaceable citizens of the state, have submitted a memorial to the legislature, praying for a repeal of certain statutes, and setting forth grievances under which they have labored for nearly half a century. They represent that the law entitled "An Act for the suppression of vice and immorality," has been made to operate to their great annoyance and vexation; for it not only casts a stigma upon them as vicious and immoral persons, by making their labor on the first day of the week a penal offence, and classing it with other acts which are confessedly immoral, but in the hands of the lawless and profane, for whose restraint the said act was originally designed, it becomes an instrument of oppression. They conceive that the great sacrifices they are called to make in worldly matters, and their upright deportment, together with the integrity they maintain in their dealings with those from whom they differ in matters of faith and practice, ought to shield them from all suspicion of being actuated by a turbulent or seditious spirit, and fully protect them from being stigmatized as vicious and immoral; and that, at all events, the legislative authority, towards which they demean themselves with so much loyalty, should be the last source from which any such charge should emanate. They also believe, and most earnestly represent, that the aforesaid law violates both the spirit and the letter of the constitution, from the fact that it establishes one religious sect, or at least one form of religious belief, in preference to another. At the last session of the legislature they petitioned for relief in a respectful manner. Their petition was referred to a select committee who reported a bill in their favor. The subject being but partially understood, from the fact that but few of the members were acquainted with the circumstances connected with the case, the bill was lost. Your committee bear in mind the veneration entertained by the great mass of our citizens for the first day of the week, and therefore would not urge the direct repeal of those laws which they regard as necessary to the welfare of the community, yet we can see no reason why the prayer of the petitioners should not be regarded; and as we wish to preserve harmony, and maintain our character as a free and independent people, affording protection to, and an asylum for the oppressed of all nations; and as the petitioners are a part of this confederacy, and are considered by all classes as good and wholesome citizens, we therefore beg leave to report the following bill.

An Act for the relief of Persons who observe the Seventh Day of the week as a Sabbath or day of Public Worship.

§ 1. BE IT ENACTED, by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That no inhabitant of this State, who conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall be liable to the penalties for performing secular business or labor on Lord's day, or first day of the week, prescribed in the revised statues of this State, chapter xxiii., title 21; provided, such inhabitant disturb no other person while attending the duties of public worship.

§ 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect immediately.

☞ We gladly acknowledge our obligation to the editor of the Christian Chronicle for the following liberal remarks upon a subject concerning which our paper has had considerable to say. May the time be hastened when similar expressions of opinion shall be so common as not to attract particular notice.

SABBATH LAWS.

The question in regard to laws enforcing the external observance of a Sabbath, is agitated in England as well as in America. Sir Culling Eardley Smith, the president of the Evangelical Alliance, has expressed himself decidedly against such laws. He says:—

"I will contend as strongly as my Committee for the duty of Parliament, in legislating on matters within its sphere, to embody avowals of divine truth. But it is one thing to acknowledge the law of God—another thing to enforce it. Religious liberty is with me a part of my religion; and desiring unfeignedly to hold myself open to conviction if I am wrong, I must avow my present opinion, that to forbid Sabbath trains by law would be inconsistent with religious liberty."

For this, a writer in the Presbyterian takes him severely to task. He points to the example of Nehemiah, (chap. 13,) and assumes that all legislators ought to go and do likewise. This is the tone held by many at the present day. They would have the civil ruler enforce the fourth commandment now, just as it was enforced by the Jewish rulers—only with the change of the day, and some modern modifications.

There are many who seem to regard the repeal of existing Sabbath laws, or the refusal to enact such where they do not already exist, as a virtual sanction of infidelity and immorality. They forget, perhaps, that for the first three centuries at least, the gospel lived and advanced rapidly without such laws—and that the era when legal enactments were first made, was the very era when the corruptions of Christianity began to display themselves in all their ugliness. Have not men, and even Christians, overlooked the native and inherent power of the Gospel, when they feel that human laws are so absolutely necessary to its progress, and even to its existence? It made its most rapid advances and won its proudest triumphs without the aid of civil laws. And the course of events seems to be rapidly tending to a division between that form of religion which, in conscious weakness, demands the support of civil enactments, and that purer form which relies in simple faith on the power of God.

UNITED STATES OF AFRICA.—Gov. Roberts, of Liberia, has issued a call for a vote of the colonists on the the question of their becoming an independent republic. This is done by the direction of the American Colonization Society; it being the policy of the United States not to hold colonies, and the time having arrived when something should be done in relation to the government of Liberia. It is supposed the colony will vote in favor of the establishment of a republic; and that the other colonies will eventually unite with Liberia, and form a nation of African republics that will hereafter be known as the United States of Africa.

INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.—We have received the Twenty-eighth Annual Report and Documents of the New York Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, for 1846, which was presented recently to the Legislature of the State of New York. It is a neatly-printed pamphlet of 110 pages, and contains much valuable information. The Institution is in a prosperous condition. The number of pupils is 208—117 males, and 91 females. Of these 160 are beneficiaries of the State; 16 are provided for by the city; 7 by the State of New Jersey; 19 in whole or in part by their friends, and the remaining 6 are supported by the Institution. The receipts of the Institution, including the balance on hand at the close of 1845, have amounted to $61,039 23; the disbursements to $67,421 59. Important additions have been made to the buildings of the Institution, and to meet the expenses of this enlargement, resort has been had to a loan secured by a mortgage on the premises. It is expected that this debt will be discharged in a few years from the ordinary resources of the Institution, and from subscriptions and donations. Among the additions to the buildings is a beautiful chapel, adapted to the wants of the inmates. The health of the inmates has been good; only two deaths have occurred during the year. One of the Professors is Isaac H. Benedict, a deaf mute and distinguished graduate of the Institution. The married Professors reside in dwellings erected for them near the Institution. The mechanical branches (book-binding, cabinet-making, tailoring and shoemaking) nearly defray their own expenses, and the book-bindery returns a small cash profit. The cultivation of the garden and grounds affords opportunity of improvement in the theory and practice of cultivation to several lads who prefer the business of farming. The system of instruction is the fruit of nearly 30 years experience and study. It produces results which not many years since would have been deemed incredible.

ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.—The Twenty-Sixth Annual Report of the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane, is before us. This Asylum was originally founded by the contributions of benevolent individuals, with the single object of doing good. Subsequently, the liberality of the State Government has greatly increased its means of effecting the object in view. During the year, 250 patients have enjoyed the benefits of the institution, and the daily average number of the patients has been a fraction over 124. There have been discharged within the year 106 patients, of whom fifty-four were cured, fifteen much improved, twenty-one improved, and sixteen unimproved, in their mental condition. The expenses of the establishment have been $23,666 26.

LONGEVITY.—Rev. Dr. Nott, of Franklin, Ct., is now ninety-three years of age, yet he enjoys good health, and a vigor and versatility of mind which only a few exhibit at seventy. He has outlived two generations of his fellow men, and is faithfully serving the third. In speaking of his case, a careful observer says: "Three things have probably contributed to his longevity, and permanence in the ministry. First, he is a man of unwonted good nature. He has not worn out his life by fretting against the dispensations of Providence. Second, he is a man of ceaseless activity. He keeps a-going. And, the third, he preaches short sermons, and makes short prayers."

CHINESE PREACHERS OF THE GOSPEL.—It is stated that there are already thirty Chinese Christians who have become preachers of the gospel. They recently addressed an appeal to European Christians residing in China, earnestly praying them to aid them with the means for carrying Christ's salvation to all parts of their native land. They have already penetrated into the heart of China, with the gospel in their hands; and in some places established little flocks of believers, from one of which they lately brought a handsome subscription to Hong Kong, in aid of the missionary work. This unprecedented fact shows that their labors are not in vain.

THOLOGICAL SEMINARY AND MISSIONS.—A correspondent of the Christian Observer, giving an account of things at the Union Theological Seminary in the city of New York, says that the religious and missionary spirit now apparent among the students, is perhaps more elevated than ever before known. Eighteen or twenty have determined to go as foreign missionaries —of these, eight have already been appointed to stations assigned them, and more are soon expected to devote themselves to this noble work.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—The receipts of the American Tract Society for the month ending March 1, were $13,554 36, making the total receipts since April 15, $121,565 02. The grants of publications, mainly for the destitute, since April 15, amounted to $12,695 24. There was due, March 1, on bills sanctioned, and on notes for printing paper, payable within a few months, the sum of $21,405 35, besides other large obligations devolving on the Society for colportage, foreign distribution, and current expenses. Applications are now before the Committee for pecuniary grants for foreign stations on the continent of Europe, and in the heathen lands, amounting to upward of $10,000, which the Society will be expected to remit before the expiration of its current year, which closes April 1, instead of April 15, as heretofore.

SUNDAY DESECRATION IN SCOTLAND.—In a letter from Bro. James A. Begg, dated at Glasgow, Feb. 2, 1847, he says:—"We have been much occupied here with the controversy relative to Sunday Railway Traveling since the last notice of the subject in the Sabbath Recorder. A change of Directors upon the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway gave opportunity for those coming into office to discontinue the Sunday trains. This has occasioned fierce controversy, wich will probably issue within a short time in increased traveling, when the railway is reöpened, as I doubt not it will be, by the intervention of the authority of stockholders, in the course of the present month. On the 18th of January a requisition to this effect was presented to the Directors, by 568 proprietors, holding 11,061 full shares, 7,130 half-shares, and 11,672 quarter-shares; while it is stated that the highest vote on any former question was only about 10,000 shares. We shall notice the result, and also some of the arguments used, in our next."

Bro. Begg also informs us, that he has given four of a course of lectures on the true Sabbath, with some encouragement.

MR. BROWN'S SABBATH LECTURES.—It will be remembered that the Sabbath Lectures which we have noticed from time to time during the last three months, were undertaken at the request of the New York City Sabbath Tract Society. At a meeting of that Society on the evening of the 7th inst., the following resolution was passed:—

Resolved, That the members of the New York City Sabbath Tract Society tender to Rev. Thomas B. Brown their thanks for the very able manner in which he has fulfilled their request to deliver before them a series of lectures on the subject of the Sabbath; and that they farther request him to prepare the same for publication at his earliest convenience.

CLERICAL INTEMPERANCE.—Rev. Mr. Pomeroy, of Bangor, Me., who has recently been traveling in Europe, tells some facts in regard to the habits of English and Scotch clergymen, which do not reflect much credit upon the state of religion in the old world. At a late meeting in Bangor, Mr. Pomeroy was asked by one of the audience, what the habits of European clergymen were in regard to intoxicating drinks, and he replied as follows:—

"They use them almost universally, like the rest of the people. In England and Scotland there are few exceptions. In the churches in England there is a little vestry room near the pulpit, where the minister deposits his hat and cloak. When he goes in, the deacon, whose duty it is, asks him if he will take some refreshment—that is, intoxicating drink—the same after service. This is the case also on the continent. The Protestant clergymen use less distilled liquor than wine."

TETOTALISM AND FAMINE IN IRELAND.—The following are the words of Father Mathew, in a speech recently delivered at Linsgood. What could better illustrate the effects of total abstinence from all that can intoxicate?

"Thousands upon thousands now pine in want and woe, because they did not take my advice; to them the horrors of famine and the evils of blight are aggravated, while tens of thousands of those who listened to me, and adopted my advice, are now safe from hunger and privation, because they had the virtue to surrender a filthy, sensual gratification, and the wisdom to store up for the coming of the evil day." He adds: "By a calculation recently made, it is clearly proved that if all the grain now converted into poison were devoted to its natural and legitimate use, it would afford a meal to every man, woman and child in the land. The man or woman who drinks, drinks the food of the starving."

BAPTISTS IN MARYLAND.—The following paragraph is taken from a Report on Maryland as a missionary field, read before an Association in Madison University. The facts need no comment. They show with sufficient distinctness the awful yet natural consequences of refusing to carry out the great commission which Jesus Christ gave to his disciples on leaving them:—

"If it is asked, Where are the Baptists? we can only answer 'where?' Many years ago Maryland was a Baptist State. But, when the Foreign Mission cause began to enlist the sympathies of our denomination, the most prominent of our preachers in the State opposed the enterprise; leaving God, as they say, to do his own work; which has been to frown upon them. For from that time, the Baptist cause declined, and would have perished, had it not been for a few whose hearts still sympathized with the benevolence of the gospel. There are, even to this day, of anti-mission Baptists, two Associations, twenty-three churches, nine ministers, and four hundred and twenty-four members. Mark, twenty-three churches, and four hundred and twenty-four members, i. e., an average of eighteen members to each church. We need not say, these churches are palsied and dying. How could they, after taking so unchristian a stand on missions, be otherwise? They have long stood as withering monuments of God's displeasure upon a selfish, sordid spirit. And may heaven hasten their utter extinction, or cause them to speedily embrace the truth; for their present existence is only a reproach to the Baptist name."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The Twenty-ninth Congress expired by limitation on the night of March 3d. As usual in such cases, a great amount of business was crowded into the last three days. A joint resolution of thanks to General Taylor and the Army was passed. The Army Appropriation Bill and the Post Route Bill were passed. The Irish Relief Bill was lost. A joint resolution was passed, however, to place the United States frigate Macedonian at the disposal of Capt. De Kay, and the sloop Jamestown at the disposal of Capt. Forbes, of Boston, to convey provisions to Ireland. A bill was passed providing for additional war steamers, which appropriates one million of dollars for four of the first class for the Navy, and provides for the construction, by individual enterprise, of 12 other steamers for the transportation of the U. S. Mail between New York and Liverpool, and New York and New Orleans, Havana and Chagres, Panama and Oregon. All the private bills on the calendar, except one, were passed. The Military Bill was passed, under which Thomas H. Benton was appointed and confirmed by the Senate as Major General, which post he expressed some doubt about accepting. The Three Million Bill was the engrossing subject of consideration. It was passed by the House, without the Wilmot Proviso against slavery in new territory. The following is the bill as signed by the President:—

AN ACT appropriating three millions of dollars, to enable the President to conclude a treaty of peace and limits with Mexico.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whereas, a state of war now exists between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, which it is desirable should be speedily terminated upon terms just and honorable to both nations; and whereas, assurances have heretofore been given to the Government of Mexico that it was the desire of the President to settle all questions between the two countries on the most liberal and satisfactory terms, according to the rights of each and the mutual interests and security of the two countries; and whereas, the President may be able to conclude a Treaty of Peace with the Republic of Mexico, prior to the next session of Congress, if means for that object are at his disposal; and whereas, in the adjustment of so many complicated questions as now exist between the two countries, it may possibly happen that an expenditure of money will be called for by the stipulations of any treaty which may be entered into; therefore, the sum of Three Millions of Dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President to conclude a Treaty of Peace, limits and boundaries with the Republic of Mexico, to be used by him in the event that said Treaty, when signed by the authorized agents of the two Governments, and duly ratified by Mexico, shall call for the expenditure of the same, or any part thereof; full and accurate accounts for which expenditure shall be by him transmitted to Congress at as early a day as practicable.

Providential Escapes.—The Hon. Daniel Webster has, in three different instances, escaped danger, and perhaps death, by the merest accident. In his recent exordium in the Lexington case, before the Supreme Court of the United States, he spoke feelingly and impressively in reference to those providential interpositions. A correspondent of the Boston Journal thus refers to it:—Mr. Webster said it was his intention to take passage in the Lexington the trip she was burnt, but some trifling circumstance which arose as he was about to start, prevented. He then paused for a few moments, and remarked, that he was at Albany on a certain occasion, and but a very short time before the boats were to leave, he concluded he would go to New York; he started hastily, and when near the wharf, inquired of a friend which boat he had better take, there being two before him—the Swallow and the Rochester—upon which he advised him to take the latter, which he did; the "Swallow" left the landing first, and was soon out of sight, and he thought no more of her, till his attention was called towards her by some noise and excitement, when he saw her light go down, and heard the dying shrieks of her ill-fated passengers. Mr. W. paused again—and then referred to his intention of taking passage on the steamer "Atlantic," the trip she was lost, but in consequence of the inclemency of the weather, he deferred his departure till the next day."

Melancholy Suicide.—A gentlemanly looking man of some 60 years, having a bald head, with some gray locks, came to Stewart's Hotel from New York, and took a room. About 12 o'clock the report of a pistol in his room was heard, but excited no suspicion. About an hour and a half afterward a servant went in, to attend to the chamber, and found him sitting in a chair in one corner with his head hanging, dead, and a discharged pistol lying on the floor, he having shot himself in the right side of the head. A coroner's inquest was immediately held, and is now in session. A letter was found on a bureau, addressed—"S. P. Britain, Esq., Elizabethtown—to be sent." He entered his name on the register as Millard or Miller of New York.

The above is from the Newark Daily of Friday. The name of this gentleman alluded to was Ezra L. Miller, a resident of Brooklyn. He was for many years a resident of South Carolina, where he amassed a considerable fortune; but having returned to his native State he entered largely into the speculations of 1835—6, in South Brooklyn, and was unfortunate. Since that period he has evinced more or less melancholy and despondency. He was a gentleman of considerable science, and his improvements in the construction of locomotive steam-boilers were adopted both in this country and in England as far back as 1830. He was correct in his deportment, strictly temperate, and of irreproachable character. [Tribune.

News from China.—The ship Rainbow, from Canton, Dec. 4, has arrived at New York, bringing Hong Kong papers to Nov. 28. It appears that the British Consul has imposed a fine of $200 on C. S. Compton, for kicking over the stall of a fruiterer, on the fourth of July last. This was the first cause of the mob of July 8, of which we have given an account. The Hong Kong Register also states, that it was reported that the Canton men had formed a league for breaking into the houses of the foreigners at Shanghai, and plundering them. It is said that several had already been attacked. It was supposed that the foreign residents would be more secure at Shanghai than at any of the other ports; but this movement of the Canton men may produce disturbances, such as to retard very seriously the operations of missionaries there.

SUMMARY.

The Tampico Sentinel contains extracts from papers of the city of Mexico, of 2d Feb., giving more full details of the capture of the 70 Americans by Gen. Minon. A letter in a Mexican paper, dated San Luis, Jan. 27, announces the arrival of the prisoners, and rebukes rejoicings over this bloody victory. It states that Minon's force was 2,000. The same letter declares that the Americans were surprised early in the morning at a watering place. The names of the lost 70 Americans were published. C. M. Clay is among them, with 2 Majors, 3 Captains, 1 Lieutenant, 3 Sergeants, and 61 privates.

We learn from the Boston Post that on Monday Bishop Fitzpatrick, with the contributions received, bought a bill on London for £24,117 11s. 8d. and sent it on by the Cambria. Patrick Mooney, of Franklin-st., sent bills for $12,000; Mr. Masters, the Boston agent for Roche, Brothers & Co., sent $4,000, and Harnden & Co. $145,000—each amount being made up of private remittances of Irishmen to their friends at home. The whole amount of private remittances sent from Boston during the month of February, is certainly $216,000, a sum distinct from that sent by Bishop Fitzpatrick, stated above.

The Brooklyn Advertiser says that a servant girl in the family of Gen. H. B. Duryea, of this city, last week sent all her earnings, $30, to her friends in Ireland, and only yesterday received information that her father, mother, brothers and sisters, eight in number, had died of starvation. The poor girl, as may be expected, is frantic. Another girl in the family of N. B. Morse received information that two of her sisters had died of starvation.

The Sun professes to have received private advices from the city of Mexico to the effect that the Mexican Government are manifesting a disposition to change their policy of war for one of peace. The general belief and hope in that country was that a speedy and honorable adjustment of difficulties would be effected. The Church authorities, who, at the beginning of the war, were our worst enemies, would now give half their property for a speedy peace.

Mrs. Sarah Foote, of New Berlin, Chenango Co., lately died under circumstances calculated to excite suspicion, that she had been virtually murdered by her husband, Dr Daniel Foote. A post-mortem examination confirmed these suspicions, and a coroner's jury found "that the deceased came to her death by blows and injuries inflicted upon her person by her husband, Daniel Foote." The accused has absconded, but vigorous efforts are making to arrest him.

The Chinese apparatus for boring wells is thus described. It consists of a heavy bar of cast iron six to ten feet long, and from four to six inches in diameter; the lower end furnished with a boring tool combined with a motion pipe, and which is suspended by a rope passing over a large pulley fixed above the bore holes. This weight is wound round a windlass, and the whole is so contrived that the weight may fall from any required height. The tension given to the rope produces a circular motion sufficient to change the place of the cutting tool at each descent.

During a speech on the Wilmot Proviso, Mr. Brinkerhoff, of Ohio, paused and drew a half dollar from his pocket, and holding it up so that every member of the House could see what it was, said: Sir! look at this, sir! look at it, and see its inscripton. "Liberty" is stamped upon it. Shall we strike it out and insert slavery, or shall we hereafter, in the face of the world, continue to use it as a circulating lie? Yes, for a circulating lie—or shall we make it tell the truth?

A company with a large capital, in England, is engaged in the erection of 1,200 houses for the use of the laboring classes, who are to be conveyed back and forth from home to their daily toil by the railway. It is also in contemplation to erect villages at convenient distances from all large cities and towns, to which the working classes can travel every morning and return home at night without costing more than is now expended for badly-ventilated and unhealthily-located dwellings for the poor under the present system.

An extensive fraud has recently been practiced upon the Boston Custom-House. Some enterprising adventurers, pretending to be servants of Lord Elgin, came over in the last steamer, and claimed to have their baggage passed free through the Custom-House. The baggage, it is said, consisted of valuable laces, and the scheme succeeded so far as to pass through, all but one case, which was seized upon by the suspicious gentlemen connected with the revenue.

A patent has been obtained in England for an improvement in the preparation of silk, by submitting the silk in tightly distended skeins or hanks when damp to the action of currents of heated air, or air of ordinary temperature, whilst the fibres of the silk are held in tension in which it must remain until dry, for the purpose of producing lustre or gloss upon its surface.

The prisoner, Carl Gonin, whose curious machine for taking the Yeas and Nays, has attracted so much notice, has, within the last few days, invented two instruments to be attached to the Magnetic Telegraph, one for transmitting communications rapidly, and the other for printing them at the other end of the wire, in the usual Roman letters, with equal rapidity.

The Providence Transcript of Wednesday states in a postscript that a riot has taken place on the Providence and Worcester Railroad. The hands on the first five sections have discontinued work. Those from the first section leaving first, and proceeding to the adjoining sections, their numbers have increased considerably. We understand that the cause of the outbreak is in relation to wages, the operatives demanding an increase. They threaten violence to any who may go to work. They have also threatened to shoot one of the contractors.

The St. Louis Republican says that the celebrated Winnebago Chief, Whirling Thunder, recently died, at an advanced age, among his people. He was the oldest Chief in the nation. In our last war with Great Britain he held a Major General's commission in the British service, the fragments of which he preserved with great care till the day of his death. His Indian name was Waw-can-cho-ca-uinf-caw.

The Boston Traveler says that the last letters from our missionaries in Persia gives most painful accounts of the ravages of the cholera in that country. In the city of Tabreez alone, 6,000 persons had died in the course of six weeks; 500 sometimes had perished in a single day.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says that it has repeatedly published accounts of the ravages of the cholera in Persia which commenced last fall. At the latest dates the disease was subsiding; none of the American missionaries had died. The cold weather had commenced, and snow had fallen to the depth of two feet, and under this change of temperature the disease would probably soon disappear entirely.

A few days ago Mr. Sedgwick received in an envolope two $20 notes of the same bank, but without any explanation. He presumes that they were sent by the person who found his wallet in 1837.

He is a well-formed, intelligent little fellow, and is as fond of tobacco as a monkey is of nuts. He belongs to Mr. Wells, of Point Coupee; his name is Manuel; he is from Mason County Ky.; is twenty-three year old; fifty pounds weight, and three feet nine inches high in his stockings.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of The Illustrated Flora, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. THE KEY OF THE COFFIN.

FROM THE GERMAN OF JEAN PAUL.

A mother knelt o'er her loved one's tomb,
And her eyes were red with weeping,
For her cherished flower in its morning bloom,
Was now in the cold earth sleeping.

The coffin's key was in her hand,
In her heart was deepest sadness;
And her spirit yearned for the better land,
Where grief would be turned to gladness.

"I will keep the key," she calmly said,
"Of thy dwelling dark and lonely,
So that none shall ever thy rest invade,
But the mother who loves thee only."

She turned her eyes to heaven's bright dome,
Where the silent stars were beaming,
And her spirit caught, in child-like tone,
These words of holiest meaning—

"Throw away the key! O mother dear,
For the coffin holds not thy child,
He has risen from earth, and dwelleth here;
For the Saviour upon him smiled."

LECTURE ON CHINA.

The following report of a lecture on China by S. W. Williams, is copied from the Journal of Commerce:—

Mr. W. proceeded to speak of the immense size of the Empire, which, he said, including the three divisions, China Proper, Manchouria, and Soongaria, was one-third larger than all Europe, and three times the size of the Roman Empire in the days of its glory.

Of these divisions, China Proper is the smallest. It contains eighteen provinces, which on an average are about as large as Missouri or Pennsylvania. These are about one hundred thousand square miles larger than our twenty-eight States. The capital of the whole Empire is Peking, which stands in the midst of a wide plain, and is some twenty-three miles in circuit.

In the northern portion lies the greatest inhabited plain in the world. It is five times the size of Pennsylvania, and contains one hundred and seventy-seven millions of inhabitants. Through this portion flows the Yellow River, in an extremely crooked channel, and with a stream so rapid that it is little navigated. It receives its name from its turbid waters, which bear down such immense quantities of clay as to tinge the sea over one hundred miles from its mouth. It is about two thousand two hundred miles in length.

The Yang-tse-Kiang drains the second or central valley. It is three thousand miles long, and has Nankin one hundred and fifty miles from its mouth.

Besides these natural features, there are two great works of art for which China is distinguished—its Wall, and the Great Canal. The Wall has been standing two thousand one hundred years. It is composed of two walls, each about four feet thick and twenty feet high, inclining inwards, and filled up with earth and rubbish. Towers are raised every three hundred yards. These are, in some parts, of considerable strength; in others, mere piles of earth. Through three or four large gates the whole commerce of central Asia pours into China.

The Canal was constructed in the twelfth century. It is nearly seven hundred miles long, passes through ten degrees of latitude, and subserves the purpose of irrigation as well as of commerce. It does not indeed compare advantageously with similar works in modern times; but when we remember that it was planned and completed long before such a thing was thought of in Europe, it is a remarkable monument of the energy, industry, and civilization of the Chinese, in the times when the western world was shadowed with the dark ages.

The climate of China is about ten degrees colder than that of places in the same latitude on the American shore. This is owing, Mr. W. supposes, to the lofty mountains west, north, and on the islands of Japan, which are always crowned with snow.

Respecting the population of the Chinese Empire, Mr. W. said, we had no data but those furnished by the Chinese, though this was more than we possessed of any other Asiatic nation. The Chinese census makes the number three hundred and sixty-two millions. Dr. Morrison believed this nearly correct; and others best able to judge coincide in this opinion. In confirmation of it, it was stated that this great number gives two hundred and seventy-seven to the square mile, or only seventeen more than are found on an average on a square mile in England. But the Chinese have no beasts of burden, or cattle, to be supported from the soil; they do not use woolen garments, and therefore have no need of flocks; their animal food is of the very cheapest kind, poultry and bacon; their soil is fertile, and all of it cultivated, and in the south yields two crops annually, while it is estimated that one-fourth of the soil of England lies waste; and yet the greatest fear of the Government is famine, and in case of the failure of crops, the inhabitants are sometimes driven to the horrible necessity of feeding on each other.

The mineral wealth of the country is abundant. Besides coal, which in the cities is the most common fuel, and which is found in great quantities, there are veins of gold and silver, lead, copper, and iron.

Cotton is cultivated in all the central provinces—from one of the towns, Koton, we derive the name. The plant has the nankeen color, and is not white, as in this country.

The peculiar staple, however, is Tea. It is grown all over the country; the variety is occasioned by the differences of soil, climate, cultivation, age of leaf, &c. It flourishes on the sandy hills, and is not raised in the more fertile plains. The plant attains its maturity in three years, and flourishes about twenty. It belongs to the Japonica family, the leaf being not so thick and leathern as that of the common Japonica, nor so thin as that of the apple or cherry. And after describing the mode of curling the leaf, the process of pickling, rolling, firing, by scattering upon hot plates, drying in baskets over a slow fire, and coloring by means of powder of gypsum and indigo, or Prussian blue, Mr. W. mentioned the mode of its use among the natives. The decoction is never adulterated with milk and sugar in China, but made by pouring hot water upon the dried leaves in the cup, and drank immediately. In Thibet, the leaves are fried with butter; in Burmah, pickled. The Mongols mix them with oil, and press them into a solid mass. The tea thus prepared they carry in their journeys, breaking pieces from the mass, when they wish to use it. The annual exportation of tea from China amounts to a million pounds, and the labor of preparing, packing and shipping this article, in Canton alone, employs one hundred thousand persons.

TWO NOBLE-HEARTED CHILDREN.

It is a beautiful sight when children treat each other with kindness and love, as is related in the following little story. "Last evening, (says the narrator,) I took supper with Lydia's father and mother. Before supper, Lydia, her parents, and myself, were sitting in the room together, and her little brother Oliver was out in the yard drawing his cart about. The mother went out and brought in some peaches; a few of which were large, red-cheeked rare-ripes—the rest, small, ordinary peaches. The father handed me one of the rare-ripes, gave one to the mother, and then one of the best to his little daughter, who was eight years old. He then took one of the smaller ones, and gave it to Lydia, and told her to go and give it to her brother. He was four years old. Lydia went out, and was gone about ten minutes, and then came in.

"Did you give your brother the peach I sent him?" asked the father.

Lydia blushed, turned away, and did not answer.

"Did you give your brother the peach I sent him?" asked the father again, a little more sharply.

"No, father," said she, "I did not give him that."

"What did you do with it?" he asked.

"I ate it," said Lydia.

"What! Did you not give your brother any?" asked the father.

"Yes, I did, father," said she, "I gave him mine."

"Why did you not give him the one I told you to give?" asked the father, rather sternly.

"Because, father," said Lydia, "I thought he would like mine better."

"I did not mean to be disobedient, father," said she; and her bosom began to heave, and her chin to quiver.

"But you were, my daughter," said he.

"I thought you would not be displeased with me, father," said Lydia, "if I did give brother the biggest peach;" and the tears began to roll down her cheeks.

"But I want you to have the biggest," said the father; "you are older and large than he is."

"I want you to give the best things to brother," said the noble girl.

"Why?" asked the father, scarcely able to contain himself.

"Because," answered the dear generous sister, "I love him so—I always feel best when he gets the best things."

"You are right, my precious daughter," said the father, as he fondly and proudly folded her in his arms. "You are right, and you may be certain your happy father can never be displeased with you for wishing to give up the best of every thing to your affectionate little brother. He is a dear noble little boy, and I am glad you love him so. Do you think he loves you as well as you do him?"

"Yes, father," said the little girl. "I think he does, for when I offered him the largest peach he would not take it, and wanted me to keep it; and it was a good while before I could get him to take it."

A DRUNKARD ON FIRE.

Dr. Nott, in his lectures, gives the following account of a young man, about 25 years of age:—

"He had been a habitual drunkard for many years. I saw him about 9 o'clock in the evening on which it happened; he was then, as usual, not drunk, but full of liquor; about 11 o'clock the same evening I was called to see him. I found him literally roasted, from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. He was found in a blacksmith's shop, just across from where he had been. The owner, all of a sudden, discovered an extensive light in his shop, as though the whole building was in one general flame. He ran with the greatest precipitancy, and on throwing open the door, discovered a man standing erect in the midst of a widely-extended silver-colored flame, bearing, as he described it, exactly the appearance of the wick of a burning candle in its own flame. He seized him (the drunkard) by the shoulders and jerked him to the door, upon which the blaze was instantly extinguished. There was no fire in the shop, neither was there any possibility of any fire having been communicated to him from any external source. It was purely a case of spontaneous ignition. A general sloughing soon came on, and his flesh was consumed or removed in the dressing, leaving the bones, and a few of the larger blood-vessels; the blood, nevertheless, rallied round the heart, and maintained the vital spark until the thirteenth day, when he died, not only the most loathsome, ill-featured, and dreadful picture that ever was presented to human view, but his shrieks, his groans, and his lamentations, also, were enough to rend a heart of adamant. He complained of no pain of body; his flesh was gone. He said he was suffering the torments of hell; that he was just upon the threshold, and should soon enter its dismal caverns; and in this frame of mind he gave up the ghost."

Indian Ingenuity.—The Indians at the Milbank Sound, called Belbellahs, are very ingenious and imitative. They watched sharply all our proceedings, and gave us striking examples of their native talent. They promised to construct a steamship on the model of ours. We listened and shook our heads incredulously; but in a short time we found that they had felled a large tree, and were making the hull out of its scooped trunk. Some time after, this rude steamer appeared. She was from twenty to thirty feet long, all in one piece—a tree hollowed out—resembling the model of our steamer. She was black, with painted ports, decked over; and had paddles painted red, and Indians, under cover, to turn them round. The steersman was not seen. She was floated triumphantly, and went at the rate of four miles an hour. They thought they had nearly come up to the point of external structure; but then the enginery baffled them; and this they thought they would imitate in time, by perseverance, and the helping illumination of the Great Spirit.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

The following most excellent resolutions were found in the pocket-book of the late Rev. John H. Rice, D. D., after his death. They are worthy not only of being extensively circulated through the medium of the press, but also of being engraven on the heart of every one who desires to live a consistent Christian life:—

"What I resolve, that I will endeavor to do.

"1. To keep under my body, and change my physical constitution. Take food for nourishment, and not for pleasure. Take no more than is necessary, and be indifferent as to the quality. Sleep for refreshment, and not for indulgence. Harden and subdue my flesh by labor, directed to useful purposes. Endeavor to do as much useful work every day as I can. Dress as cheaply as comports with decency.

"2. To use all my property for benevolent purposes. Pay every thing I owe as soon as possible. Save all that I can by simplicity of living, and by practicing self-denial—and give all I can, in the exercise of sound discretion, to objects of benevolence. Never spare person, property, or reputation, if I can do good. It is necessary that I should die poor.

"3. As to my disposition and conduct towards others: 1. Endeavor to feel kindly towards every one. Never indulge anger, malice, envy, or jealousy towards any human being. 2. Endeavor to speak as I ought about every one—aiming, in all that I say, to promote the comfort, improvement, and happiness of every one who lives. 3. Endeavor to act so as to advance, first, the present comfort—second, the intellectual improvement—third, the purity and moral good of all my fellow-men.

"As to my Creator—to endeavor to fix more deeply in my mind, all the truth that I can possibly discover respecting him; and to feel, think, and act, in every respect, in correspondence with that truth.

"Finally: When I have done all, to acknowledge that I am nothing, that I deserve nothing, and that my Creator has a right to do with me as seems good to him."

First Newspaper Printed in America.—This appeared in Boston, in 1704. It was printed on a half sheet of pot paper. It bore the following title:—

"N. E. Numb. 1. The Boston News Letter. Published by authority. From Monday, April 17, to Monday, April 24, 1704."

It was printed in Boston, by B. Greene, and "sold by Nicholas Boone, at his shop near the old Meeting House."

"This News-Letter is to be continued weekly; and all persons who have any Houses, Lands, Tenements, Farmes, Shops, Vessels, Goods, Wares, or Merchandizes, &c., to be Sold or Lett; or Servants Runaway; or Goods Stole or Lost, may have the same Inserted at a Reasonable Rate; from Twelve Pence, to Five Shillings, and not to exceed; Who may agree with Nicholas Boone for the same at his shop, next door to Major Davis's, Apothecary, in Boston, near the Old Meeting House.

"All persons in Town and Country may have said News-Letter Weekly upon reasonable terms, agreeing with John Campbell, Postmaster, for the same."

Campbell was the proprietor, and Boone acted as publisher.

A Prediction Verified.—Tradition has preserved a singular anecdote of John Thatcher, a son of one of the first settlers of Massachusetts. He was married in 1661, to Rebecca Wisnow, and, being on his way to Yarmouth with his bride, they stopped for the night at the house of one Col. Gorham, at Barnstable. In the merry conversation with the newly-married couple, an infant was introduced, about three weeks old, and the night of her birth was mentioned to Mr. Thatcher; he observed that it was the very night on which he was married, and taking the child in his arms, presented it to his bride, saying, "Here, my dear, is a little lady, born on the same night we were married; I wish you would kiss her, for I intend to have her for my second wife." "I will, my dear," she replied, "to please you, but I hope it will be long before your intention is fulfilled." Then, taking the babe, she kissed it heartily, and so gave it into the nurse's hands. This jesting prediction was eventually verified. Mr. Thatcher's wife died, and the child, Lydia Gorham, arriving at mature age, actually became his second wife, in 1684.

Strange Discovery.—A short time ago the Chief Justice of Gibraltar had some workmen employed at his house; and while one of them was digging near the dining-room window, he perceived an opening, which he found was very deep. He with some others and the Chief Justice himself, ventured down the aperture, and after descending about forty feet almost perpendicular, came to a very narrow passage, which led to a most beautiful cavern, with stalactites hanging about as white as snow, and of various forms—some like cauliflowers. In the midst of all this was a human skeleton, sticking fast to the rock, and the bones of a dog beside it, having become petrified. The bones of the right hand were fastened to the right side of the head, so that the poor creature has the appearance of having laid down and died, very probably of starvation, with his hand under his head, which is half turned round, as if he had been looking up. The bones of the dog lay beside the human bones.

Interesting to the Blind.—A very beautiful and ingenious machine has just been invented, by the help of which, persons who are blind, or who can not use their eyes, are enabled to write easily, legibly and rapidly. It is the invention of Mr. Thurber, of Norwich, Conn., and is now for gratuitous exhibition at the sale room of the institution for the blind, 152 Washington-st. The writer sits down before the machine, which is exactly like a piano forte in appearance, though much smaller. Each key represents a letter, or a mark, of punctuation, or figure. If he wants to write Boston, for instance, he strikes the key B, then O, then S, and so on; as fast as he touches them, the other ends strike upon a sheet of paper, producing two copies, written as distinctly as if executed by the most careful penman. With a little practice one can write as fast as with a pen, and have the advantage of a copy of his letter. This machine promises to be of great use.

Franklin's Mode of Lending Money.—"I send you, herewith, a bill of ten louis d'ors. I do not pretend to give much; I only lend it to you. When you return to your country, you cannot fail of getting into some business that will, in time, enable you to pay all your debts. In that case, when you meet another honest man in similar distress, you will pay me by lending this money to him, to discharge the debt by a like operation when he shall be able, and shall meet with such another opportunity. I hope it may thus pass through my hands before it meets with a knave to stop its progress. This is a trick of mine to do a great deal of good with a little money. I am not rich enough to afford much in good works, and I am obliged to be cunning, and make the most of a little."

To Remove Motes from the Eye.—Farmers, as well as many other persons, are often so exposed in their labors as to get dust or motes in their eyes, and frequently suffer considerably before they can find any means of relief. The following simple remedy is almost always near at hand, and in most cases will prove effectual: Fill a cup or goblet with clear cold water, quite to the brim, and place the eye in distress in such a position as to be completely within the water in the cup; then rapidly open and shut the eye a few times, and the dust or mote will be immediately washed away. If a cup or other vessel be not at hand, the eye may be placed in a spring or bucket of water.

VARIETY.

A curious place is the market in some towns of South America. Every morning a long train of jacks comes into the town, driven by women—the merchandize, or vegetables, or whatever they may wish to sell, (a full cart-load,) being packed on the backs of the jacks, and the drivers sitting very coolly on their shoulders! In purchasing at Market you are obliged to take a little of every thing they have, whether it be turtle, plantain, yuca, cassava, or anything else. Meat is always sold by the yard, and none by the pound, but when bought, you cannot take it away without being weighed at the other end of the market. Each person carries his own provisions away with him—the ladies may be seen every morning with their yards of meat trailing from their shoulders.

A celebrated liquor importer in Boston, recently had his pocket-book, contaning a large sum of money cut from his pocket, while entering church. A few days subsequent he received the pocket-book through the post office (postage unpaid,) accompanied by a note, in which the writer stated that after spending the money, he discovered to his utter horror that he had been making use of funds obtained in the infamous liquor traffic. He, therefore, returned the pocket-book, and would do the same by the money should he be able again to lay his hands on it.

A frequent visitor at the Tuilleries of late, where he has a seat by the Queen's side, is Father Moussa, a jet black African priest, who excites great interest by accounts of his missionary labors in Senegal. Many of the nobility have invited him to their tables, and large sums have been subscribed to build him a new church. Through his exertions over six hundred Roman Catholic priests have signed a petition for the abolition of slavery in the French colonies, to be presented to the next Chambers—over eight thousand other signatures follow.

"Although I suffer," said Augustine, when sick, "yet I am well, because I am as God would have me to be, for when we will not what He wills, it is we that are in the fault, and not He, who can neither do nor permit any thing but what is just."

In Mexico, the prevailing feeling is, that the infant, when baptized, cannot die too soon. The death of young children is celebrated as an occasion of joyfulness, because the souls of the deceased innocents are supposed to be transported at once to heaven, without passing through purgatory.

The believer's death may be compared, not so much to the setting sun that sinks behind the darkened West, obscured among the tempests of the sky, as to the morning star that melts away into the light of heaven.

How many of both sexes, think that to dress finely is to dress well—when the two are as different as possible; for the one excites attention, and the other avoids it.

Napoleon, in a perilous circumstance, gave an order difficult to execute, and it was represented to him that the thing was impossible. 'Impossible,' said he with vivacity, 'that word is not French!'

In Carthagena, a divorce of a man and wife is not allowed; but when they wish to separate, half of the furniture and half of the children are given to each, by law! And if they cannot agree to such a division, then all the property is put up at auction and sold.

At a recent meeting to establish a Juvenile Refuge in Manchester, the Archbishop of Dublin said they could educate fifty children at the same cost that they could keep one soldier.

A lawyer once said to a bore, who had sat about two hours in his office, "I wish you would do as my fire is doing." "How is that?" said the other. "Why, sir, it is going out," replied the lawyer.

It is easier to supply genius requisite for writing a book, than the perseverance which conquers time and place for the achievement.

"I never complained of my condition," says the Persian poet Sadi, "but once, when my feet were bare, and I had no money to buy shoes; but I met a man without feet, and became contented with my lot."

Washington, visiting a lady in his neighborhood, on leaving the house, a little girl was directed to open the door. He turned to the child and said, "I am sorry, my little dear, to give you so much trouble." "I wish, sir," she replied, "it was to let you in."

"Many," says Newton, "have puzzled themselves about the origin of evil. I observe there is evil, and that there is a way to escape it; and with this I begin and end.

Lord Bacon says that Solon compared the people unto the sea; and orators and councillors to the winds; for that the sea would be calm and quiet, if the winds did not trouble it.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

Mr. Editor:—Your correspondent "Indagator," does not seem to be fully able to appreciate my interpretation of the Sabbath law. The cause of his inability is quite apparent. His mind is entangled in the web of traditional interpretation. What is merely incidental, and entirely separated from the law, he persists in regarding as an essential part of it. The terms of the law are plain. The difficulties of its interpretation arise purely from human additions.

I wish he had been explicit in the statement of his opinions. He seems to doubt the validity of the Sabbath law; and is inclined to have me consider this as the primary question. He evidently wishes me to lead the way, allowing him the precious privilege of suggesting doubts and difficulties. "Indagator" has forced me to tarry a little longer on "this subordinate point." I do not "hold, that although the law specified the seventh day, the Jew might observe any other as well." I stated distinctly that he could keep no other day than the seventh, without sinning. The question is whether Saturday or Sunday is the "seventh day." His "wonder" is altogether gratuitous. He is desired to point out "the limitations and applications," which he seems to suppose determine the order of days, and I hereby, on that condition, promise to yield the point at once. "If our Saviour, standing triumphant over the rifled sepulchre, had said, 'Ye shall keep the first day holy, and labor the remaining six,' we should none of us think it indifferent what day of the week Christians observed." Certainly not. We think they should do just as the Lord said. Nor do I think that the sabbatic law tolerates indifference as to which day is to be observed. It says explicitly the "seventh day." It is the law that makes the week; and not the week that makes the law. Traditional interpretation has reversed the order of things. I "admit the division of time into weeks before the time of Moses." That an unbroken succession of weeks descended from the creation, is very doubtful. That this unbroken succession was any part of the law, I deny. If the division of time into weeks existed when the law was given, the law does not unalterably fix it. The law, and the division of time then existing, and incidentally settled, are independent of each other. "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." If, in the course of time, a change in the order became incidentally settled, so long as the terms of the law are complied with, no sin is incurred. The order in neither case is settled by law. They rest on the same authority, and one is as valid as the other.

What can be said of the validity of the law? This, according to "Indagator," is, after all, the question to be settled. "Are we bound to keep the weekly rest prescribed in the fourth commandment?" Why not place it in the same category with "circumcision; the festivals, sacrifices, and many other things?" With your permission, Mr. Editor, I will state "my deliberate view" of the matter. I "set up no new standard of morality." Bishop Butler's statement differs from mine only in words. In idea they are identical. I believe the fourth commandment to be essentially moral and permanent. In what lies the morality of a law? Why is the law which prohibits covetousness moral? Is it not that, "in itself, prior to any essential command," it is beneficial to mankind—possesses "essential utility?" The Lord himself says, "the Sabbath was made for man." The intelligence of the world reiterates the statement. It is a "duty, arising out of the nature of the case itself, prior to the external command." For anything I can see, it is "as clearly moral, as any law of the decalogue." This, according to "Bishop Butler's standard of morality."

Again, the difference between the law of the Sabbath, and the laws "Indagator" names, is wide and obvious. The Sabbath is not exclusively a Jewish institution. It was "made for man." Not simply the Jewish man. It existed before the Jew; and for a reason which had no exclusive connection with him. It was inserted in the Jewish code, just as all the other great moral principles contained in the decalogue were, because they were fundamental and useful. The recognitions and sanctions of the Sabbath in the New Testament, are a virtual adoption of it into Christianity. Circumcision and the institutions named are clearly, if not expressly, rejected. There are three or four words of great significance contained in the sabbatic law, which "Indagator" would do well to weigh. "The Sabbath of the Lord thy God." The rest of God. "The works were finished from the creation of the world." What has the "rest of God," or the creation of the world, to do with the Jew, more than with the Gentile? "Is He not the God of the Gentiles?"

But, Mr. Editor, put the weekly Sabbath along with circumcision and Jewish festivals, and where is your Sabbath? On what authority do you enjoin the weekly observance of the Lord's Day? Where is the law? Where is even the example? "Where there is no law, there is no transgression." What if Christ did "stand, on the morning of the first day, over the rifled sepulchre?" Does it follow that we must observe the first day as a day of worship and of rest? May we not just as fairly conclude, that we must observe the day of his birth? This reason for keeping the first day is nowhere urged in the New Testament. We must go to the law, and its New Testament sanctions, or we have no day of worship and rest enforced by law. The whole matter lies at our discretion. "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; and the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." In concluding, permit me to ask "Indagator" his reason for placing the sabbatic law among the "laws of circumcision, Jewish festivals, sacrifices, and many other things."
E. W. D.

From the Christian Chronicle of Feb. 24.

Mr. Editor:—As I am sincerely anxious to reach the fundamental points of the sabbatic law, I shall willingly dismiss the question as to its interpretation, and proceed to that of its validity, as treated in the three closing paragraphs of "E. W. D.'s" last article. Our readers can now judge for themselves, whether that law fixes any particular day of the week as the Sabbath, where there is any; and bye and bye, perhaps, they will have made up their minds who is "entangled in the web of traditional interpretation."

My object in inviting him to consider this subject, was to enlist the ability with which he had discussed one or two important topics in your paper, in removing, if possible, the difficulties under which many earnest minds among us, as well as my own, labor in regard to the grounds on which the duty of the Sabbath is inculcated. And when he proposed to enter into a thorough investigation of the question, and intimated that he thought Scriptural justice had not been done the subject by others, I rejoiced, and hoped, as I still do, for light. If the fourth commandment is as obligatory on us as on the Jew, it is highly important that this should be clearly seen and deeply felt. If, on the other hand, the Scriptures teach no such thing, Baptists are the last people in the world who should uphold a professedly religious institution on the ground of mere usage and the tradition of the elders. The only hope of gaining a fair examination of this matter by Christians at the present day, depends on our cherished principle, that while we embrace whatever the Bible enjoins on us, we are at once to renounce whatever in religion the Bible does not countenance. In throwing in my mite to the elucidation of this subject, you, Mr. Editor, will give me credit, I hope, for more than a captious disposition to propose "doubts and difficulties." I wish to get at the clear, solid truth of the Gospel, and strongly do I believe that whoever shall develope this, will have done an indispensable and most important service to the cause of Christianity, and so of mankind.

Our obligations to keep the Sabbath must arise, I have thought, if at all, either from the nature of the case, independently of any precept, or from a command of God, addressed to us. In the former case, the duty would be a moral, in the latter a positive duty. It is, in fact, I believe, generally held to be both at once. "E. W. D." regards it as strictly a moral duty. But does he mean that it is one which men are equally bound to perform whether they have ever heard of such an appointment or not? Does he mean that the heathen are just as blameworthy for their neglect of the Sabbath, the existence of which was never whispered to them, as for the numerous moral delinquencies with which they are reproached in Rom. 1st, and elsewhere in God's Word? I can hardly believe it, and yet this is true of the remaining precepts of the decalogue and other parts of the Mosaic law, and is the very circumstance which renders them moral. Your correspondent, with a multitude, seems to me to draw from the indisputable fact that a certain portion of time for rest and the purposes of devotion, is essential to the well being of man, the illogical conclusion, that therefore we must keep holy just one day in seven. What would a man learn on this subject from the instructions of his own reason and conscience—the only source of moral obligation? Nothing more than that he ought to take time for bodily rest, and for strictly religious services; just as he ought to practice moderation in the indulgence of his lawful appetites, and the exertion of any of his powers. Perhaps he could no more tell exactly how much time should be set apart for those objects, than how much food would be conducive to his highest good. Suppose two men of equal moral culture, entirely ignorant of a Sabbath, reflecting on the necessity of rest and devotion for men; but one of them living a life of leisure among a light working people, and the other laboring hard himself, with much opportunity to observe the destructive tendency of long-continued toil, and it is quite conceivable that one of these men could think people morally bound to rest more or less than would meet the views of the other. Indeed, we have little idea, perhaps, how scanty the information which we could derive on such questions from the purely moral source. That man ought to take sufficient vacation from wordly labor, for rest and worship, is plainly obvious; but that any special day should be set apart for this purpose rather than a part of every day, much more that just one day in the week should be so consecrated, depends as plainly, to my mind, on the positive appointment of God. The "essential utility" of the Sabbath, therefore, as distinguished from a more or less frequent rest, is a thing by no means to be taken for granted. There is abundance of proof, no doubt, that it is better for men to rest one day in the week than to work the whole seven; but is there any that one day in six might not, for the majority, be better still? It will hardly be denied that six days of unintermitted labor with us, is enough to overtask the body and secularize even the spiritual mind. But is it not the moral duty of every man, Providence permitting, to sequester from the world so much time as may suffice to keep him in bodily and spiritual health, Sabbath or no Sabbath? And if it were self-evident that one day in the seven is exactly the proportion which is essential for the purposes of rest, (which seems to have been the direct end of the Sabbath,) is it self-evident that the very same proportion is demanded for devotion?

These considerations are designed simply to show how little of purely moral authority there is for the observance of a hebdomadal holy rest, or, in other words, how little we should dream of duty in the matter, without a special revelation from God, and how free we are from any positive obligation, except in so far as it may have pleased God to determine what part of our time shall be set apart for rest and worship.

And if the institution of the Sabbath be not strictly moral, it will hardly be contended that the fact of its incorporation in the Jewish system imposes it forever on all other people. That Jehovah, in giving minute laws to this nation, towards whom he sustained a unique relation, determined that they, an agricultural and pastoral people, whose labors were comparatively light, should observe a weekly rest, does not imply that others, say in our manufacturing towns and bustling cities, require no larger a relaxation. Does it not rather imply that if He were prescribing laws to such, he would, on the very principle which then guided him, enjoin a more frequent rest? Certainly I do not see that "E. W. D." has attempted the slightest proof that the law of the Sabbath is generally binding from its forming a part of the Jewish code. It was a fit and beautiful element of that wonderful constitution, designed for a quiet, stationary, rural, and not maratime people, and distinguishing them from all the nations of the earth.

But our Saviour has declared that "the Sabbath was made for man." The reliance placed on this single sentence to prove the intrinsic morality and indefectible obligation of the Sabbath, proves rather, me judice, the absence of truly valid Scriptural grounds, and the readiness with which men seize on any apparent support of a "foregone conclusion." For, according to this interpretation of the text, what ought to be the antithesis—the opposite error, which our Saviour would deny? Why, manifestly this—that the Sabbath was designed particularly for the Jews. Had this been the doctrine advanced by his accusers on this occasion, and if in reply to this he had said, "No; the Sabbath was made for man, not for the Jews alone," it might, perhaps, fairly have implied that the Sabbath was to be perpetual. But what is his meaning? Simply that the law concerning this day should not be so rigidly interpreted as to render it an occasion of distress and oppression to those who were bound by it—as if to meet the requirements of the Sabbath were the chief end of their being; because its very design was to promote their happiness. The same might have been said of the sabbatic year and other similar institutions while they remained in force. And here it is worthy of observation, that while our Lord was repeatedly charged with violating the Sabbath, he nowhere speaks of it as an ordinance of his kingdom, nor does he, in running over at different times the prominent points of the fundamental law of God, ever expressly mention or remotely hint at the duty of keeping the Sabbath. Where your correspondent finds the "recognitions and sanctions of the Sabbath" in the New Testament, unless it be in the (often apologetical) allusions of our Saviour to it, as a part and parcel of the existing Jewish economy, I am at a loss to conceive. And where, I would ask him, is circumcision or any other Jewish ceremony more "clearly rejected" in the New Testament, than the Sabbath in Colossians ii. 16, and Galatians iv. 10.

As to the alledged existence of the Sabbath before Moses, I am not prepared to allow the fact, nor if this were admitted, to receive the inferences which are deduced from it.

In conclusion, I would say, that my reason for placing the sabbatic law with the other Jewish laws, (if I were so to do,) might probably be the fact that God has placed it there, that it is not excepted in the general abrogation of the ancient economy by the new, but rather seems to be especially included among things which have become obsolete and vanished away.

INDAGATOR.

MINISTERIAL ACCOUNTS AT THE GREAT DAY.

A divine in the former part of the last age, preaching before an association of ministers, and in order to quicken their regard to the principle, end, and motive, from which they acted, pointed them to the last and awful day of judgment; and having brought in Christ the Judge as taking his place on the throne, he then by an elegant prosopopeia represented him as calling his ministers to an account, examining how they had preached, and with what views they had undertaken and discharged the work of the ministry. "What did you preach for?" "I preached, Lord, that I might keep a good living, that was left me by my father, of one hundred and fifty or two hundred pounds per annum, which, if I had not entered into orders, had been wholly lost as to me and my numerous family." Christ says to him, "Stand by, thou hast had thy reward." The question is put to another, "And what did you preach for?" He answered, "Lord, I was applauded as a learned man, and I preached to keep up the reputation of an excellent orator, and an ingenious preacher." Christ's answer to him likewise, was, "Stand by, thou also hast had thy reward." The Judge puts the question to a third, "And what did you preach for?" "Lord," said he, "I neither aimed at the great things of this world, though I was thankful for the conveniences of life which thou gavest me; nor did I preach that I might gain the character of a wit, or of a man of parts, or of a fine scholar; but I preached in compassion to souls, and to please and honor thee; my design in preaching was, Lord, that I might win souls to thy blessed majesty." Upon this, the Judge called out, "Room, men; room, angels! Let this man come and sit with me on my throne, as I am set down with my Father on his throne; he has owned and honored me on earth, and I will own and honor him through all the ages of eternity."

The result of all then was, that the ministers went home much affected, resolving that, through the help of God, they would mind the work of the ministry more, and look better to their aims and ends than ever. [Gospel Treas.

THE LORD'S PRAYER ILLUSTRATED.

"Our Father,"
By right of creation,
By bountiful provision,
By gracious adoption,

"Who art in Heaven,"
The throne of thy glory,
The portion of thy children,
The temple of thy angels,

"Hallowed be thy name,"
By the thoughts of our hearts,
By the words of our lips,
By the work of our hands,

"Thy kingdom come,"
Of providence to defend us,
Of grace to refine us,
Of glory to crown us,

"Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven,"
Towards us, without resistance,
By us, without compulsion,
Universally, without exception,
Eternally, without declension,

"Give us this day our daily bread,"
Of necessity for our bodies,
Of eternal life for our souls,

"And forgive us our trespasses,"
Against the commands of thy law,
Against the grace of thy Gospel,

"As we forgive them that trespass against us,"
By defaming our characters,
By embezzling our property,
By abusing our persons,

"And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil,"
Of overwhelming affliction,
Of worldly enticements,
Of Satan's devices,
Of error's seduction,
Of sinful affections,

"For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, forever,"
Thy kingdom governs all,
Thy power subdues all,
Thy glory is above all,

"AMEN,"
As it is in thy purposes,
So it is in thy promises,
So be it in our prayers,
So shall it be to thy praise.

OBLIGATION TO THE HEATHEN.

Such is the heading of an article in the February number of the Baptist Missionary Magazine. The writer takes for his text the words of Paul, "I am a debtor both to the Greeks and the barbarians, both to the wise and the unwise; so, as much as in me lies, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." His object is to show that all Christians sustain the same relation to the heathen world as did the apostle, and that the only way to prove the sincerity of a Christian profession is by showing a readiness to labor for their salvation. The article concludes as follows:—

1. What we do for the salvation of the heathen, is not to be regarded as charity.—We are their debtors. We cannot evade the obligation. Why, then, should we not conform our language and behavior to the fact? Is it charity to pay a debt? We owe it. Why treat it as if payment or non-payment were optional? Why regard this obligation as less binding than any other?

2. Let us be honest men, and pay our debt.—We cannot plead want of ability, for it is required of a man only according to what he hath. What right have we to contract other obligations that will interfere with our duty to the heathen? What right have we to live in a style that shall disable us from paying a debt long since contracted?

3. A day of settlement is approaching.—We must all appear before our original Creditor, and answer to the inquiry whether we have been honest debtors, and, according to our ability, discharged our obligations. The heathen will be there to testify to the measure of our fidelity, and we shall be held responsible for every deficiency in our duty. How will stand the account of the present generation of Christians? Reader, are not you in arrears to the heathen?

CHRIST THE LIGHT OF LIFE.

"I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."
[John 8: 12.

God is light, and Christ is the "image of the invisible God;" God of God, Light of Light. . . . . . The visible light of the world is the sun, and Christ is the "Sun of Righteousness." One sun enlightens the whole world; so does one Christ, and there needs no more. . . . . . It is the happiness of those who follow Christ, that they "shall not walk in darkness." Follow Christ, and we shall follow him to heaven.
[M. Henry.

Lord, be it mine, like thine elect, to choose
The better part; like them to use
The means thy love hath given;
Be holiness my aim on earth,
That death be welcomed as a birth
To life and bliss in heaven! [Bp. Mant.

Christ and the gospel are light, and there is no darkness at all in them; if you say, that you "know Christ" and his gospel, and yet keep not "Christ's commandments," but dearly hug your private darling corruptions, "you are liars, and the truth is not in you;" you have no acquaintance with the God of light, and the Gospel of light. [Cudworth.

Christ "is the Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." "In His light shall we see light." Light to see and eschew the ways of sin; light to see and walk in the paths of truth. [Wagan.

Let us be an example of godliness. Let us be a light to them that yet abide in darkness. Let not the name of God be evil spoken of through us. His name is holy. "Wo be unto the world," saith Christ, "because of offences; for it must needs be that offences come; but wo be unto that man by whom the offence cometh." . . . . . The light of God shines in the darkness of this world. It is the sweet incense and savor of God. Wheresoever the breath thereof is received it bringeth life. [Bp. Jewel.

Lord Jesus, thou Light of Truth and Sun of Righteousness, shed thy bright beams upon my heart, that I may know, and knowing, love thee. Help me, my strength, by whom I am sustained; shine upon me, my light, by whom alone I see; and quicken me, my life, by whom alone I live. For thou only art my help and my light, my life and my joy, my Lord and my God!
[St. Augustine.

SOWING AND REAPING AND SOWING AGAIN.

Nearly thirty years ago, a young woman called on the pastor of a church in Buckinghamshire, to talk with him respecting her spiritual interests, and expressed a wish to be baptized. In the course of conversation, she stated that she had derived much benefit from an article she had read in the Baptist Magazine, which her parents were accustomed to take. On inquiry, the minister found, to her surprise as well as his own, that it was a piece which he had himself written, when he was a very young man and resided in another county. The young woman has been for many years a respectable member of a Baptist church in the metropolis. The young minister was encouraged, and determined to write again.

Some time afterwards he went with a chapel case to a part of the country in which he had never been before, and visited a city where he had reason to suppose he was quite unknown. Arriving on Monday evening, he inquired for the principal Baptist chapel, intending to see if there were any service. In the vestry there was a prayer meeting, and as he entered, some sentences with which he was acquainted met his ear. At the close of the service he introduced himself to the pastor. When he had mentioned the name of the town from which he came, the minister, repeating it, asked, "Is there not a piece of yours in the Baptist Magazine this month? And have I not just been reading it?" "You have, sir," was the answer. A cordial welcome was immediately given; the stranger was hospitably entertained, and generously assisted in his undertaking.

The same minister, though not now a young man, has written more for the Baptist Magazine the last eight or nine years than any other individual. [Lon. Bap. Mag.

The Cloud on the Saint's Death-Bed.—The last hours of some men, eminent in piety and usefulness, as they were in talents and labors through life, have been overcast with gloom that prevented by-standers from recognizing the glories of their departure. But the orb setting behind a bank of dense black clouds, is himself beyond their reach. They effect not its brightness, but merely our view of it. While to us he seems to sink in darkness that extinguishes his beams, he is really rising in other skies, gladdening the sight of other observers, and clothed in splendors, as if the Almighty had afresh, or for the first time, robed him in the reflection of his own divine effulgence. "We walk by faith, not by sight;" and when a man's life has testified that his heart is right with Christ, we know that his safety for glorification is in Christ's hands, though his enemies be, in malice, loading him with anathemas, or he, by morbid influence from what is animal or what is mental, be writing volumes of bitter things against himself, at the crisis of his leaving the body. [Dr. Urwick.

The Emperor Alexander of Russia.—When on the eve of his journey to Taganrog, where he died, the Emperor Alexander said to a benevolent English gentleman, whom he had for years honored with his confidence, "Do you think that any man, however exalted in station or distinguished for philanthropy, can be safe in resting on any other ground for salvation but a humble reliance on the perfect, all-sufficient atonement of his crucified Redeemer?" "Certainly not, sire," was the unhesitating reply. "That is my opinion," said the Emperor; "and I try daily to realize it. I have no other hope; it is my only confort." [Puritan.

Peace in View of Death.—When I am dead and forgotten, the world will be as it is; the same succession and varieties of seasons, the same revolutions of heaven, the same changes of earth and sea, the like occurrence of natural events and human affairs. It is not in my power to alter the course of things, or to prevent what must be. What should I do, but quietly take my part of the present, and humbly leave the care of the future to that all-wise Providence, which ordereth all things, even the most cross events, according to his most holy and just purposes? [Bishop Hall.

There is no trait in the human character so potential for weal or woe as firmness of purpose. It is wonderful to see what miracles a resolute and undying spirit will achieve. Before its irresistible energy the most formidable obstacles become as cobweb barriers in its path. Difficulties, the terror of which causes the pampered sons of luxury to shrink back with dismay, provokes from the man of lofty determination only a smile. The whole history of our race—all nature indeed—teems with examples to show what wonders may be accomplished by resolute perseverance and patient toil.

It has been beautifully said, that the veil which covers the face of futurity is woven by the hand of Mercy; yet how often do we desire to tear aside the veil and to gaze upon the countenance, even though we know not whether it shall be in gladness or grief. What a blessing it is that such efforts are unavailing! For misfortunes themselves are more easily endured than the thick shadows they cast before them; and happiness is never so complete as when it comes at the moment we are least expecting it.

SUPPORT OF THE MINISTRY.

Many good people are exceedingly afraid of what they are pleased to call a "hireling clergy." The practice, which has become almost universal, of paying ministers a stipulated salary, they regard as a crying sin of the age. Of course they look with suspicion upon the man who will consent to receive such a salary, and stand ready to disfellowship him entirely the moment he claims it as his right. Now there can be no doubt that the ministry has often been degraded by men of mercenary views, who have sought only "the loaves and fishes," and have cared little for the welfare of the flock of Christ. For this reason we are disposed to look very charitably upon those who are afraid of paying ministers. Indeed, if they were consistent with themselves, we should be quite inclined to exculpate them from blame altogether. But in many cases they are not consistent with themselves; for while they cry out against supporting the ministry, they are most prompt in finding fault if the work of the ministry is not faithfully done. Until they mend in this respect, they ought to be slow to condemn their brethren who practically acknowledge that the laborer is worthy of his hire, in the ministry as well as in any other department of service.

It is difficult to see how any man, who understands the nature and responsibility of the minister's work, can question his claim to a support. The true minister is commissioned by Christ himself to preach the Gospel to men. In order that he may do this so as to accomplish the object of his appointment, and be prepared to give a good account of himself at last, it is necessary that his best powers be expended in the most free and judicious way. He is not merely to entertain Christian congregations with an occasional hour of religious declamation. That were comparatively an easy task. But he is to make himself familiar with "things hard to be understood," and study to present them in the most acceptable and effective manner. The Bible, that treasury of things new and old, must be made his own before he can bring forth from it in due season a portion for each. The various helps which study affords must be obtained. In short, whatever will aid him to present and enforce the truths of religion, he is as much bound to seek as he is to speak of the first elements of Christian doctrine when opportunities offer. Nor is his duty limited to preaching the truth. He is bound to make himself familiar with the condition and wants of those to whom he preaches, in order that he may adapt his instruction to them. Their private habits, as well as their public acts—their Christian experience, as well as their social arrangements—their various afflictions, as well as their joys—must be familiar to him, in order that he may successfully labor and watch for their souls. The Sabbath school, the prayer meeting, the protracted season of worship, and the general interests of religion beyond the circuit of his own congregation, must be thought upon and attended to, each in its appropriate time, and all with reference to the great end of saving souls. It was in view of such labors, that an apostle once exclaimed, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Every minister of the gospel, who feels the importance of his calling, will often adopt the same language. And while such a weight of responsibility rests upon him, is it reasonable or just to add to his load by imposing the necessity of attending to some other business for the temporal support of himself and those connected with him?

Those who rightly estimate the intrinsic value of the minister's work, will be slow to deny his claims to a competent support. It is an old axiom in morals, that virtue is the basis of all human happiness. And who needs to be told, that the influence of the Christian ministry has always been on the side of virtue, and a most powerful means of promoting it? Wicked men may declaim as much as they please about the intrigues and quarrels of ministers; but they are compelled in the end to acknowledge, that a great portion of the civilization and intellectual refinement which have purified the morals of mankind, have been inseparably connected with the faithful ministry of the gospel—that gospel whose revelations affect the heart, whose precepts arouse the conscience, and whose principles are the best safe-guards of human society. But the influence of the ministry is not confined to this world; it has reference also to the world which is to come. Its value in view of that world cannot be portrayed. It is sufficient to say, in the language of inspiration, that it hath "pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." God has thus placed honor upon the ministry. Let not those who profess to fear Him dishonor it, by low and unworthy estimates of its intrinsic value, or by refusing to bear a part in its support.

The testimony of the Scriptures in relation to the minister's claim to a support, is sufficiently explicit to settle this question. They lay down the broad principle, that "the laborer is worthy of his hire." Of course, if he is called to labor in the ministry, he has a right to expect a supply of his temporal wants from those for whom he labors. The Apostle Paul—who in some instances boasted that his own hands had ministered to his necessities, and whose testimony is the more valuable on that account—says explicitly in regard to the right of the ministry, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing that we should reap your carnal things? Do ye not know, that they which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Such is the testimony of Scripture. If no evidence could be derived from the circumstances of the case, this ought to end the controversy in the mind of every consistent Christian.

From the foregoing it will be seen, that we have no sympathy with the notion that the work of the minister need not employ much of his time, and that the money given him is a sort of charity. No minister can magnify his office without giving to it his chief energies. If he does give his energies to this work, by request of his brethren, he is as truly entitled to a competent remuneration as if he served them in any other capacity. It may be expedient, and doubtless is in some cases duty, to wave this claim out of regard to peculiar circumstances, even as the apostle Paul did at Corinth. But we believe that in most cases the interests of both minister and people would be promoted by a faithful exposition of the claims and duties of each in respect to support.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The sacred volume authorizes us to expect that the kingdom of Christ will become universal. The leaven hid in the measure of meal impregnating the whole mass; the grain of mustard seed producing a tree to be inhabited by the fowls of heaven; the handful of corn, scattered on the mountain top, producing a crop as vast and majestic as the forests of Lebanon; are figures employed to illustrate the small beginning and prolific results of the gospel of Christ. Prophecy, with inspired tongue, speaks too in strains of heavenly eloquence, assuring us that the gathering of the nations shall be to the great Shiloh—that the earth shall as certainly be filled with the knowledge of the blessed God and his Christ, as the waters cover the sea—that all the potentates of the earth shall bow before the King of Zion, and that all the kingdoms and nations among men shall merge in the kingdom of the Redeemer. All Christians are looking with intense desire for an event so glorious, and fraught with the happiest results to the human family. There is a voice issuing from the sanctuary of the Lord; it is the voice of prayer, "thy kingdom come." It finds its way to the eternal throne; the ear of the Almighty hears it; it is the most grateful portion in the "golden vials full of odors" which perfume the temple above. Nothing but the full realization of this object will be a compensation to the Saviour, or satisfy his benevolent heart. Oh! what intense agonies he bore!—what groans he uttered, which made the earth's pillars tremble, and the heavens gather blackness! How kind must that heart be, which voluntarily offered its richest blood, and endured the keenest sorrows of the cross! For what purpose was all this endured, but that he might lay a foundation for a kingdom—a kingdom peculiar in its nature and extent, consisting of redeemed souls, and subjects equivalent in number to the incalculable cost? Perhaps, if we look around us, we may discover indications that the time is at hand for the age of wonders to commence, which is to run on for a thousand years, and in which the mighty march of knowledge, purity, and love, shall astonish all worlds, and the consummation of which will occasion one universal burst of triumph and praise, "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." It is true the present state of the church wears in some respects a painful aspect, as there is much disunion, want of confidence, and impurity, both in doctrine and practice. But may we not suppose that this falling away is among the harbingers of a better day? May we not imagine, that this will eventually bring on a time of trial and purification? The Lord is still the purifier of his people. He will bring them through the fire, and purify them as gold and silver are purified in the furnace; it may be the fire of persecution, or a national calamity. The present state of things may wake up the truly godly to a strict inward and personal scrutiny. It may lead them to more earnest prayer for themselves and others, and compel them to cut off, with holy indignation, those unseemly excrescences which give the ungodly an unfavorable impression of the Christian religion. When the church is purified—when she is dressed in her own beautiful attire—she will go forth "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." It may be well to inquire, whether the present state of the world does not indicate an important and glorious era approaching? The thirst for knowledge, especially among the young—the real acquisition of it through the numerous facilities afforded—the new openings for missionary enterprise, calling upon the church to send forth laborers into the "field white for the harvest"—the unparalleled disposition of men to encourage missionary operations—the progress of temperance, and of temperance societies—all these induce the hope that the Lord is on his way, and preparing materials for the completion of his temple, the head stone of which is to be brought forth and laid "with shoutings of grace, grace unto it."

It appears that the great adversary is apprehensive of the overthrow of his empire. Is he not fighting hard to prevent it? Popery, infidelity in all its shapes, superstition, error, discord, and corruption in the church, the pride and show of the world—all these he is summoning to his service. He is mustering all his agencies to execute his projects. By all the knowledge he has acquired during thousands of ages, he is laboring to effect the ruin of Christ's kingdom. He is continually reconnoitering, arranging, disciplining his army, and attacking the city of our God. How restless is this infernal foe—how determined not to give up his object, but confident that he will conquer, or die in the conflict! So let it be. We have nothing to fear. The angel has received his commission from the celestial court, ages ago, to bind him with a chain which demons cannot break, and shut him up in his prison for a thousand years. The time for his confinement is at hand, manifested by his extra struggles for the mastery. The disciples of the Redeemer must not be passsive, for 'he that is not with him is against him; he that gathereth not with him scattereth abroad.' Let every man do his duty; let the soldier of the cross gird himself to the fight; let all the army of the living God form one well-disciplined and mighty phalanx, and go forth in the strength of the Lord, from conquering to conquer, until the blessed Redeemer shall reign from pole to pole. EQUAL RIGHTS IN NEW JERSEY.

Bro. David Dunn, of New Market, has sent us an account of the action upon our Bill in the Legislature of New Jersey. But as we have already published the facts, we shall now only give the closing paragaaph of his letter:—

'In view of the decision of the Legislature, an honorable Senator said to me: "I regret this result exceedingly; but you must persevere, and hope on. I could not have believed, that in this enlightened age, and in the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, so many as twenty-two persons could have been found to vote against so just a measure." From this it appears that there are some who see the justice of our cause, and feel the reproach which must necessarily fall upon the State while she refuses to grant equal rights to all. I have inquired the reason why our claim was not regarded, and justice awarded to us, but no one has given me a reason. I have heard indirectly, however, of several reasons assigned, which are about like this: "Your people are forever lecturing upon the subject of the Sabbath, and presenting its claims wherever they can find an opportunity. You are also sowing your tracts upon the subject throughout the length and breadth of the land. You are too officious in this business. If our minds get at ease in reference to the matter, it is again urged upon us, either directly or indirectly, whenever we come in contact with you, so that we are continually disturbed. It would be much better for you to drop your Jewish notions, and unite with the Christian world in the observance of Sunday." Such is the logic used by our opponents. It may suit them; but for myself, I say, "to the law and to the testimony," and to the Constitution of the State, I will steadily adhere, any civil statute to the contrary notwithstanding. I will continue to urge upon my fellow citizens their obligation to render strict and impartial justice to all.'

REPLY TO "W—R" ON TEMPERANCE.

The proof of the position assumed by "W—R," that the principles of total abstinence are not inculcated in the Bible, consists of two quotations from Scripture. The first relates to the circumstance at the marriage feast; the second, to the direction of Paul to Timothy in case of infirmity, which, as it prescribes wine as a medicine only, cannot be considered in point in this discussion. The sum of proof, then, is in the fact that Christ did, on a certain occasion, make wine of the richest kind at a marriage feast. To my brother, this may seem sufficient to sustain his position. Were he to assume also, that the Scriptures would warrant him in taking corn from his neighbor's field without permission, he would have equally as good a warrant; but would he feel justified in the act? No; nor would he feel justified in drinking wine, for he says that no man, understanding the nature of alcohol, would defend the use of it, unless he was bent on his own destruction. The fact that Christ, in order to display his divinity, turned water into wine, affords no warrant for its improper use. If it does, then Christ willingly inflicted an injury on mankind, or else he was ignorant of the effects of the use of wine as a beverage. I have no inclination to undertake a full explanation of this text, so long as my brother uses it to justify what he acknowledges to be wrong. But there are serious objections to such a use of Scripture by Christians, for it is in fact charging them with error; and whenever the drunkard is allowed to appeal to the Bible for defense of his practice, it adds to the amount he has already acquired of disrespect for God and his Word, for every drinker of alcohol feels an inward consciousness that he does wrong.

The dilemma in which "W—R" finds himself when asked to show chapter and verse against the use of alcohol as a beverage, is truly unpleasant, and probably appreciated by but a few, as but a few probably have ever been thus situated. My brother objects to the use made of texts quoted in reply to his first article, because he thinks they forbid eating as well as drinking. I believe but one of them alludes to eating, Romans 14: 21—"It is not good to eat flesh, or drink wine, or any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or made weak." In this passage the use of meat and wine are forbidden with a qualification, that is, when such use offends a brother. In no other sense is the use of meats forbidden. But in the other passages quoted, the use of wine is unqualifiedly forbidden; a proper use of which passages, it is hoped, will relieve my friend from the unhappy dilemma in which he has heretofore found himself placed.

The other inducements held out to the drunkard by "W—R" are praiseworthy, and all must feel their force, when shown to be in accordance with the Word of God, and never fully till then; hence the importance of searching the Scriptures for a sanction of total abstinence.

When my brother shall make himself the fortunate discoverer of the line of demarkation between moderate drinking and drunkenness, point out the exact quantity that must be drank, the number of steps a man must deviate from a line in walking from the grog shop, and the amount of misery he must suffer, before he can be called a drunkard, then may the point be yielded, that, when God denounces drunkenness, he does as really denounce its incipient stages as its fuller development. Till that discovery is made, it doth appear that the denunciation reaches the man who is a little drunk, as well as him who is very drunk. It is well to be "temperate in the temperance cause," and also consistent in a consistent cause, lest it suffer reproach. D. E. M.

MYSTIC BRIDGE, Ct., Feb. 23d, 1847.

DEATH OF MRS. DEVAN.—The New York Recorder publishes a long letter from Dr. Devan, dated at Canton in October last, and giving an account of the death of his wife. On Sunday, October 11th, Messrs. Dean, Pearcy, and Clopton, having recently arrived, the Lord's Supper was administered to all the Baptists, native and foreign, in Canton. Mrs. Devan, who had been indisposed for a few days previously, left her sick-room to be present. On the following day symptoms of abdominal inflammation made their appearance, which resisted all the means that medical counsel could devise. She died on the following Sunday, Oct. 18th. She was the first female missionary that ever carried the word of salvation to those of her own sex at Canton, on which account she endured many an hour of bodily peril and inconvenience. During her sickness she was asked if she regretted having come to the missionary field. Her reply was, "Oh dear, no; nor that I came to Canton city." When told that her recovery was very doubtful, she replied, "It does not excite me; I am very willing either to live or to die, as the Lord may please." Her only message to her friends was, "Tell them that my trust was in Jesus." Mr. Devan says she "made but two stipulations: first, that I would have no biography of her published; and second, that I would not have her remains conveyed to America. Her humility of soul recoiled from the fulsome vanity of appearing before the public, and her devotion to the cause of the heathen would not allow that even her remains should be taken away from the mission field."

FRUIT OF MISSIONARY LABOR.—Rev. E. L. Abbott, a Baptist Missionary, after laboring several years in Arracan, returned to this country, bereaved of his companion, and with health impaired by a debilitating climate. Some might suppose this circumstance an indication that he had better have remained in his native country. But God has testified to the usefulness of his labors by permitting him to baptize some seventeen hundred converts from paganism, of whom about three hundred have already passed into eternity with a good hope of heaven through Jesus Christ. Let those who shrink from the missionary work because of its sacrifices and dangers, consider this fact. In what way could a life be spent so as to give greater satisfaction in a dying day?

CLOSING SHOP ON SUNDAY.—A meeting of apothecaries was recently held in Boston to discuss the propriety of closing their shops on Sunday, at least during the hours of public worship. The proposition seems not to be favorably received by the Boston press. One paper opposes it, because accidents and sudden attacks of disease are often occurring, in which immediate access to an apothecary is necessary for the preservation of life. Another thinks that if this system is carried out, the next proposition will be to dispense with the labor of attending upon the sick on Sunday.

CHRISTMAS.—The following paragraph is taken from a long article in the Christian Watchman upon the subject of Christmas. If the same kind of reasoning were applied to the day commonly set apart to celebrate the resurrection of Christ, it would lead to a like result. Several writers have labored—and with success, as some think—to prove that the custom of celebrating the day of Christ's nativity is of equal age and equal authority with the custom of observing the "Lord's day." We should like to see this position refuted by some one of those who reject the former while they celebrate the latter.

"If the keeping of Christmas were a religious duty, or a duty in any sense, the day would not have been left to uncertainty. But in the absence of any information in the Scriptures on that point, or of any command, or even hint, respecting the observance of such an anniversary, we may safely conclude that while it is our duty to believe in Christ, and love, honor, and serve him, and to be baptized into the likeness of his death, it is not our duty to celebrate any fancied anniversary of his birth, even though such has been the custom from remote antiquity. Especially we are justified in setting aside a custom which is of heathen origin, which fixes on a day of mere arbitrary appointment, to accommodate the customs of nominally Christian Rome to those of Pagan Rome, and which comes down from the dark and corrupt days of Christianity, in connection with customs entirely incongruous with the spirit which ought to characterize the observance of such an occasion."

REVIVAL IN PRESTON.

PRESTON, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1847.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Presuming that a few words relative to our present religious condition would be interesting to you and the readers of the Recorder generally, I hasten to inform you, that we have been enjoying an interesting season of revival for some three weeks past, the interest of which is still progressing. Eld. Joshua Clark has been laboring with us, preaching nearly every evening, and we have held prayer meetings daily, and under the blessing of God, we have realized precious results. Many backsliders have been reclaimed, the church generally revived, and sinners converted. Brother Clark has administered the ordinance of baptism to five penitent believers, and in all fifteen have been added to the church. Last sixth-day and Sabbath came covenant-meeting and communion, when we enjoyed a precious season. May God carry on his work of grace to perfection in all our hearts. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours affectionately,

CLARK ROGERS.

THE RUMSELLERS DEFEATED.—The New York Tribune says that the U. S. Supreme Court adjourned on Friday, having previously decided, in the famous License Case, that the States have a right to regulate the trade in and sale of ardent spirits. Thus the law of New Hampshire, which controls the power over licenses generally, and the law of Massachusetts, which forbids the sale of any smaller quantity of liquor than twenty-eight gallons, and the law of Rhode Island, limiting the sale to ten gallons, are all affirmed by the Court. This decision is important in view of the recent action of some of the States whereby the traffic is greatly restricted. It cuts off the last hope of the rumsellers.

BIBLES FOR SLAVES.—Rev. E. N. Kirk, of Boston, has made a donation in aid of a fund for distributing Bibles among the Slaves of the South. He says that no man or body of men has a right to prevent any human being from reading the Word of God. The fact that there are laws enacted against it, whether in Rome, Mecca, or Charleston, in no way affects the duty of every human being to do all in his power to communicate the Bible to every other human being. He would therefore encourage the American Bible Society in the work of distribution among the Slaves.

BIBLES FOR SLAVES.—Among the communications presented to the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society at their last meeting, were two circulars urging the distribution of the Scriptures among the slaves at the South, and also three letters from pastors who had received like circulars, inquiring as to the practicability of such distribution. These documents were assigned to a judicious committee, to report as to what can be and what cannot be done in this matter.

BAPTISTS IN THE U. S.—There are in the United States 7,883 regular Baptist churches, with 5,751 ordained ministers, 1,065 licensed preachers, and 655,536 communicants. Including the Anti-Mission, Seventh-Day, Free-Will Baptists, &c., there are 13,624 churches, 8,287 ordained preachers, and 1,000,719 communicants. The regular Baptists have 14 colleges, 8 theological schools, 20 weekly newspapers, 11 monthly and quarterly periodicals.

THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW for February has been republished by Leonard Scott & Co. at No. 112 Fulton-st. The following are the titles of the principal articles: 'Morell's Modern Philosophy,' 'Kitto's Lost Senses,' 'Cowley,' 'Modern Painters,' 'The Anglo-Normans,' 'Watt and Cavendish,' 'State of Ireland.' All the articles are of a high order; the last is peculiarly adapted to the present time, and will be eagerly read.

THE LIEUTENANT GENERAL.—Soon after the adjournment of Congress, Thomas H. Benton wrote to the President, offering to accept the post of Lieutenant General, to which he had been appointed, on condition that he could have conferred upon him the powers which he deemed necessary to success; and these would be both military and diplomatic—the command of army, and authority to sign preliminaries of peace based upon terms previously approved by the Executive. The President has declined this condition, on the ground that he has no authority to designate a junior Major General to the chief command of the army in the field. Thus ends the controversy about a Lieutenant General.

NEWS FROM MEXICO.—Various conflicting reports from the seat of war have reached New York during the past week. One day it was rumored that Gen. Taylor had fought and conquered Santa Anna; and on the strength of the rumor thousands of extra newspapers were sold. On the following day this rumor was denied, and extras circulated almost as extensively as before. Under such circumstances we deem it not advisable to publish the accounts of the pretended battles at present. General Scott is making all preparations to attack the castle at Vera Cruz, and General Taylor is occupied in watching the movements of the enemy in the vicinity of Monterey and Saltillo.

General Intelligence.

FIGHT IN NEW MEXICO.—A company of traders forom Santa Fe reached Independence, Mo., on the 15th of Feb., bringing intelligence of a battle between Col. Doniphan's regiment and the Mexicans, about fifty miles above El Paso del Norte. The particulars are as follows:—

Col. Doniphan was on his march down the country, either intending or expecting to join Gen. Wool at Chihuahua. When within about fifty miles of El Paso del Norte, they observed a body of Mexicans approaching them with a black flag. Doniphan halted, and sent out an interpreter to know what was meant by it. The answer was a demand for an unconditional surrender. Col. Doniphan asked fifteen minutes to think of the matter, and in less than the time asked, formed his men in battle array, and at the time ordered his men, as soon as they were formed, to squat close to the ground, which they did. The Mexicans fired. Col. Doniphan did not return the fire, hoping to avoid a battle. The Mexicans fired again, which wounded several Americans. Col. Doniphan thinking it a little more serious than at first, ordered his men to fire, which they did with considerable effect. The Mexicans stood but the one fire from our unerring marksmen. They broke ranks, and scattered in confusion, leaving 30 killed on the field. Doniphan had about six hundred men with him at the time, and they report that there were twelve hundred Mexicans. None of the Americans were killed—seven were wounded.

There has been a great deal of sickness in the American army, which was very fatal—fever of a typhoid character, sweeping them off daily. Out of Price's whole regiment, there was not 300 men able to perform duty. However, a portion of his regiment was in the mountains, but this has reference to those in Santa Fe. Doniphan's regiment has been much more healthy.

Nothing has been seen or heard of the one hundred and twenty men, teamsters, that had left Santa Fe for the States last November, and encamped on the Arkansas with only ten days supply of provisions. They were seen by the last company that came in a few days ago—probably nearly the whole of them have perished. Nine men were frozen to death at Cow Creek, who were in advance of all the companies that started in the winter.

LATER.—A Mr. Coons, from Santa Fe, reached St. Louis on the 25th of Feb. He says that Col. Doniphan entered El Paso on the 28th of December, and took possession without resistance. The military force which he met on the 25th, and defeated, had scattered to the mountains. He also says that the Mexicans had formed a conspiracy to attack the Americans in Santa Fe on Christmas night. The arrangement among them was to attack the American soldiers while they were in attendance at the fandangos, but the Santa Fe women, whose hearts our caballeros have won, informed them of the plot. The men absented themselves from the dance, the guards were doubled, and the scheme consequently frustrated.

THE WILL OF A CLERGYMAN.—Rev. Mr. Cooper, of the Philadelphia Conference, of the M. E. Church, who died in Philadelphia recently, left a will in his own hand-writing, covering nine closely-written pages, in which he states that he was born in Caroline County, Md. in 1763, and at the age of 21 entered the min, istry. He left particular directions as to the manner he should be buried, the inscription upon his tomb, &c. He requests that he shall be interred in front of St. George's M. E. Church, Philadelphia, in consideration of which, he leaves the Corporation $1,000, to be used in the purchase of wood for the poor of that Church during the winter. To the Methodist Book Concern, in New York, he leaves $1,000, to be used in printing the Bible. Ten annual ground rents of $30, the principal sum being $5,000, he devises for the benefit of worn-out preachers and their families, and $1,000 to various Methodist Churches in Philadelphia.

He gives to each of his nephews and nieces, whose name is Ezekiel Cooper, (with or without a middle name,) named for and after him, the sum of $100. To each and every child or person, the children of friends and acquaintances, who are named Ezekiel Cooper, after him, with or without middle or additional names, a neat octavo Bible. Particular directions are given as to the quality and description of the Bibles, and the inscription to be put upon them by his executors. He directs them to be as nearly like those given by Bishop Ashbury, in his will, to persons named after him, as may be. After specific devises of personal property to various persons, the residue of his property is directed to be divided between his nephews and nieces, and their children. Rev. James Smith, Peter L. Cooper and Ignatius T. Cooper of Kent Co., Delaware, are nominated Executors. It is supposed that the value of his estate is from $150,000 to $200,000.

BAPTIST MISSIONARIES.—The Christian Chronicle says that recent accounts from Baptist missionaries in Asia bring cheering tidings, and yet the joy is mingled with grief, for the little band, while blessed in their efforts, have been diminished by death.

The Rev. Mr. Haswell, Maulmain, Oct. 23d, says, that he had recently baptized twenty-three natives, and that six more were then asking for the administration of the ordinance.

Mrs. Mason, of the Tavoy mission, had been removed by death. Her last hours were brightened by the assured hope of a speedy entrance into the presence of the Lord.

Mrs. Vinton had been compelled by ill health to take a trip to Calcutta. She was accompanied by her husband. Her health had been, in a measure, restored, and they were expected soon to return to their labors at Maulmain.

Mr. Bennett, in a letter to his brother in Utica, N. Y., in the N. Y. Baptist Register, says that Mrs. Bennett has been quite unwell, though then improving in health. He says, "Mrs. Wade is confined to her house by erysipelas—her face much swollen, and one side nearly raw. It may terminate fatally."

SUMMARY.

A large and respectable meeting of delegates from the four counties of Monroe, Livingston, Ontario and Steuben, was held at West Bloomfield on the 4th instant, to take into consideration the subject of constructing a Railroad from Rochester to Corning, in Steuben county, to intersect at that point the New York and Erie and Blossburg Railroads. The distance from Rochester to New York via the proposed road is 62 miles less than by way of Albany. The length of the road from Rochester to Corning will be in the neighborhood of 80 miles—more than half of the distance is through the valleys of the Genesee, Honeoye and other streams, which water a country of surpassing fertility.

A negro woman at Williamsburgh, having recently declared herself to be the Messiah, induced the wife and sister of her master to believe her. They persuaded him also to become her disciple; when she announced, as a new revelation, that it was "Heaven's will that he should salute her with a holy kiss every morning!" This opened his eyes wider than ever, and he turned her out of doors; but the wife and sister were so bound by her spell that they followed her. On a hearing of the case before a Magistrate, the false prophetess was ordered to the Lunatic Asylum, and the wife and sister to the County Retreat for the Insane at Flushing.

About 65 of the sovereign people of Green Bay, recently arrested a chap, and after administering a coat of tar rode him on a rail out of the town for marrying a second wife when his first had only been dead five days. Thus, says the Republican, it is given to understand that the morals of the place must not be violated with impunity. This beautiful instance of what is called "the controling force of public opinion," offers likewise a happy illustration of the difference between "individual freedom" and "general liberty."

By Galveston papers, received through an arrival at New Orleans, we learn that the weather in the vicinity of Houston, during the early part and middle of last month, was said to be the coldest ever experienced in that section of country. The extreme cold had been productive of much sickness in the interior counties—pleurisy, quinsy, and dangerous diseases prevailing to a great extent—and several of the oldest citizens have fallen victims.

Mr. G. H. Colton, editor of the American Review, was a few days ago assaulted in Barclay-st., on his way to dinner, by C. W. Webber, with a loaded cane. The cane was broken, when Mr. C. closed with Mr. W. and threw him to the ground, receiving however in the struggle several severe blows with the loaded fragment, which yet remained in the assailant's hand. The affair will doubtless be brought before a legal tribunal, when the motive of the assault and the facts connected with it will be divulged.

It is surprising to contemplate the vast cargoes which some of the steamboats on the Mississippi can carry. The Charles Carrol, on her recent trip from Cincinnati to New Orleans, carried 4,475 barrels pork, 1,273 barrels, 150 half-barrels, and 4,017 kegs lard, 713 barrels flour, 155 barrels beef, 400 barrels and 31 hhds. hams, 449 barrels whiskey, besides beeswax ginseng, corn, oats, hemp, rope, tobacco, 100 kegs pig's feet, butter, ale, &c.

The New Post Office Bill provides, among other things, for the payment of Postmasters as follows:—Pamphlets, magazines and newspapers, 50 per cent. Letters and packages, delivered, 7 do. On sums not exceeding $100, 40 do. On sums not less than $100 nor more than $400, 33 1-2 do. On sums not less than $400 nor more than $2,400, 30 do. The franking privilege is extended to the Vice President and Members of Congress.

Among the acts of the New Jersey Legislature was one respecting landlords and tenants. It provides that a Justice of the Peace may, on affidavit of the landlord that the tenant holds over his term, or fails to pay his rent, inquire into the truth by trial, &c., of the charge, and issue a warrant to put the claimant in possession. It obviates the necessity of ejectment suits in small matters.

A child in Webster, Me., accidentally got a beech-nut fixed in his windpipe; an incision was made below the obstacle, which relieved the little fellow considerably. A thread was passed down the windpipe with a piece of spunge attached; and the beech-nut was thus pulled down and out through the wound. The boy is doing well.

In an action for malicious arrest, tried at Philadelphia a day or two since, Charles Hulse recovered of Joseph Pegg ten thousand dollars, being the whole amount of damage claimed. The arrest was made in Boston in 1843, in a claim of $55,900. When the cause came on for trial in January, 1844, Pegg did not appear to prove his claim, and was non-suited.

It is stated as a singular, yet indisputable fact, that if we decide by numbers, Paganism must be pronounced to be the principal religion of the British empire. The numerical order of the four great religious distinctions in the empire is—first, Paganism; second, Mohamedanism; third, Protestantism; fourth, Romanism.

The New York Emigrant Society are making great preparations for the reception of emigrants in the coming spring. A gentleman, who is conversant with those matters, states that a whole colony, numbering fifteen thousand souls, will come from Switzerland in the month of May next, and settle down in the West.

A discovery is stated to have been made at Charlottensburg, by which marble may be cast in moulds of any size, the marble being equal in quality to the purest Carrara marble. Several figures have already been cast of the size of life. The cost is stated to be one dollar a foot.

The U. S. Mails traveled last year: In the free States, 21,393,564 miles. In the slave States, 16,004,850 miles. The cost of transportation per mile in the free States was 53 cents; in the slave States, 95 cents, or nearly twice as much.

In Quebec, on the 9th ult., three brothers, named Boineaux, French Canadians, died within two hours of each other. It is supposed they all took poison. Truth, sometimes, is stranger than fiction.

A bill has been reported in the Legislature of this State for appropriations for the public works under the amended Constitution, from funds on hand, and the anticipated surpluses for the current year, as follows:—

Erie Enlargement	$558,000 00
Genesee Valley	128,720 37
Black River	100,000 00
Oswego Canal	100,000 00
Oneida River	20,000 00

Whether a man is 21 years of age, on his 22d birthday or the day previous, may seem to be a very simple question, but it has agitated some great minds. Chanceller Kent, and the late Chief Justice Swift have decided that a man becomes of age on the day previous to the anniversary of his birthday; so that a person born on the 28th of February, attains his majority on the 27th.

Rev. S. K. Lathrop, pastor of the Brattle-st. Church in Boston, lately remarked in the course of a very plain sermon, that when a minister engaged with a society, he promised to perform his duties to the best of his ability, and engaged to preach to the people, and not to the pews.

The Atrevida at New Orleans from Campeachy, 19th February, brings news that the British Royal Mail steamer Tweed, was lost on the 12th February northeast of Cardenas. Sixty persons were drowned. An expedition was sent from Campeachy to her assistance.

We saw recently, a recommendation written by an Irish friend of ours, in favor of a young gentleman who is an applicant for a commission in the army. Among other things he says:—"My friend, Mr. — is closely connected with the President, his father having fought a duel with one of the Polks!"

The Legislature of Wisconsin has ordered 300 copies of the Governor's Message to be printed in the Norwegian language. There are some thousands of the natives of Norway in that State, and excellent citizens they make.

Dr. Ryan, professor of chemistry, says that if Westminster Bridge, which is built of magnesia lime stone, were covered with water and sulphuric acid, it would be converted into epsom salts.

In some parts of the Grand Duchy of Hesse, the clergyman demands a quantity of oats from the bridegroom and bride, as a fee for the performance of the wedding ceremony.

A society has been established, having Lord Ashley at its head, for "the purpose of providing free reading-rooms for the laboring classes in the city of London."

The Susquehanna and Tide Water Canal Companies have passed a resolution permitting all provisions intended for the relief of the people of Ireland and Scotland, to pass their works free of toll.

The New Orleans Times says: We find a fine instance of gallantry recorded of one of our officers, in the late disaster. Capt. Henrie of Texas, who was acting as interpreter and guide for Major Gaines' detachment, made his escape the next day after the capture, on the latter's horse, and arrived at Saltillo with the intelligence. He dashed off in face of the whole Mexican guard, killed two who pursued him, and rode his horse, a noble animal, until he fell dead beneath him, completing the remainder of the distance on foot. This unlucky occurrence has, we are informed, created a great sensation in the army, and it is regretted the more on account of the influence it will have upon the Mexicans, whom it will incite to acts which they have not heretofore dared.

Mr. Sewall Short, of Lower Mystic, Ct., has a new plan of applying steam power to vessels. He places two cylinders, one on each side of the keelson, running entirely through the vessel from stem to stern, and opening into the water at both ends. Then he arranges floats or short pistons upon an endless chain passing through the cylinders, and returning along the side of the vessel, or over her deck, and running upon wheels fore and aft. The force of the steam is exerted upon the floats, which find ample resistance upon the water in the tubes. The power is on this plan applied at the bottom of the vessel, and in the direct line of her motion.

DIED,

In Petersburg, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., Feb. 23d, Mrs. SARAH POTTER, widow of the late Stephen Potter, Esq., (whose obituary was inserted in the Recorder of April 30th, 1846,) in the 85th year of her age. Mrs. P. was a native of the State of Rhode Island. In her youth, she remembered her Creator, became a disciple of the Lord Jesus, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton. She was one of the pioneer matrons in the early settlement of the land in which she is entombed. Her life has given satisfactory proof that hers was not a dead faith, but one that was productive of the fruits, graces, and hopes of the Gospel. She has now gone to meet the husband of her youth and companion of her toils, who recently left her shrouded in the gloom of widowhood. To those who knew her, eulogy would be useless; her worth and pious example are too well known to need a registry here. Suffice it to say, that the religion of Jesus, which was the object of her early attachment, was the solace of her advanced life, and shed its sweetest comforts upon her in death.

In Genesee, on the 28th ult., Mrs. SUSAN W. STILLMAN, wife of Orra Stillman, of Alfred, in the 31st year of her age. Sister Stillman was a member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church of Alfred. She was one of those Christians of whom it can be said in truth, "She was an ornament to her profession." Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

N. V. H.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 26th of February, ISAAC CLARKE, aged 44 years. He was a worthy and influential member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield. His hopes of immortality and eternal life seemed to grow stronger as death approached.

In Adams, N. Y., on the 28th ult., ORSON C., son of Alva G. and Laura Green, aged seven months and five days.

By death's relentless hand;"
But their pure spirits soar on high,
To join th' angelic band.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH.

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY!

Prospectus of THE ILLUSTRATED FLORA, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in the progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty eight pages of letter-press. The first [illegible] each separate flower; the fourth a free in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, to whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, LEWIS & BROWN, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work, as published.

ADVERTISEMENT OF A LOST DAY.

BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

Lost! lost! lost!
  A gem of countless price,
Cut from the living rock,
  And graved in Paradise.
Set round with three times eight
  Large diamonds, clear and bright,
And each with sixty smaller ones,
  All changeful as the light.

Lost—where the thoughtless throng
  In fashion's mazes wind,
Where trilleth folly's song,
  Leaving a sting behind;
Yet to my hand 'twas given
  A golden harp to buy,
Such as the white-robed choir attune
  To deathless minstrelsy.

Lost! lost! lost!
  I feel all search is vain;]
That gem of countless cost
  Can ne'er be mine again;
I offer no reward,
  For till these heart-strings sever,
I know that heaven-intrusted gift
  Is reft away forever.

But when the sea and land,
  Like burning scroll have fled,
I'll see it in His hand
  Who judgeth quick and dead;
And when of scathe and loss
  That man can ne'er repair,
The dread inquiry meets my soul,
  What shall I answer there?

AWFUL DISCOVERY.

One serene evening, in the middle of August, 1775, Capt. Warrens, the master of the Greenland whale-ship, found himself becalmed among an immense number of icebergs, in about 77 degrees north latitude. On one side, and within a mile of his vessel, these were closely wedged together, and a succession of snow-colored peaks appeared behind each other as far as the eye could reach, showing that the ocean was completely blocked up in that quarter, and it had probably been so for a long period of time. Capt. Warrens did not feel altogether satisfied with his situation; but there being no wind, he could not move one way or the other, and he therefore kept a strict watch, knowing that he would be safe as long as the icebergs continued in their respective places.

About midnight, the wind rose to a gale, accompanied by thick showers of snow, while a succession of tremendous thundering, grinding, and crashing noises, gave fearful evidence that the ice was in motion. The vessel received violent shocks every moment; for the haziness of the atmosphere prevented those on board from discovering in what direction the open water lay, or if there actually was any at all on either side of them. The night was spent in tacking as often as any cause of danger happened to present itself, and in the morning the storm abated, and Capt. Warrens found, to his great joy, that his ship had not sustained any serious injury. He remarked with surprise that the accumulated icebergs, which had on the preceding evening formed an impenetrable barrier, had been separated and disarranged by the wind, and in one place a canal of open sea wound its course among them as far as the eye could discern.

It was two miles beyond the entrance of this canal that a ship made its appearance about noon. The sun shone brightly at the time, and a gentle breeze blew from the north. At first some intervening icebergs prevented Capt. Warrens from distinctly seeing anything but her masts; but he was struck with the strange manner in which her sails were disposed, and with the dismantled aspect of her yards and rigging. She continued to go before the wind for a few furlongs, and then grounding upon the low icebergs, remained motionless.

Capt. Warrens was so much excited that he immediately leaped into his boat, with several seamen, and rowed towards her. On approaching he observed that her hull was miserably weather-beaten, and not a soul appeared on the deck, which was covered with snow to a considerable depth. He hailed her crew several times, but no answer was returned. Previous to stepping on board, an open porthole near the main chains caught his eye, and on looking into it he perceived a man reclining back on a chair, with writing materials on a table before him, but the feebleness of the light made everything indistinct. The party went upon deck, and having removed the hatchway, which they found closed, they descended to the cabin. They first came to the apartment which Capt. Warrens viewed through the porthole. A tremor seized him as he entered it. Its inmate retained his former position, and seemed to be insensible to strangers. He was found to be a corpse, and a green damp mould had covered his cheeks and forehead and veiled his open eye-balls. He had a pen in his hand, and a log-book lay before him, and the last sentence in whose unfinished page ran thus:—"Nov. 15, 1762. We have now been enclosed in the ice seventeen days. The fire went out yesterday, and our master has been trying ever since to kindle it again, without success. His wife died this morning. There is no relief—"

Capt. Warrens and his seamen hurried from the spot without uttering a word. On entering the principal cabin the first object that met their attention was the dead body of a female reclining on a bed in an attitude of deep interest and attention. Her countenance retained the freshness of life, and a contraction of her limbs showed that her form was inanimate. Seated on the floor was the corpse of an apparently young man, holding a steel in one hand and a flint in the other, as if in the act of striking fire upon some tinder which lay beside him. In the fore part of the vessel several sailors were found lying dead in their berths, and the body of a boy was found crouched at the bottom of the gangway stairs. Neither provisions or fuel could be discovered anywhere, but Capt. Warrens was prevented, by the superstitious prejudices of his seamen, from examining the vessel as minutely as he wished to have done. He therefore carried away the log-book already mentioned, and returned to his own sihp, and mmediately steered to the southward, deeply impressed with the awful example which he had witnessed of the danger of navigating the Polar seas in high northern latitudes.

On returning to England he made various inquiries respecting vessels that had disappeared in an unknown way, and by comparing the results of those with information which was afforded by the written documents in his possession, he ascertained the name and history of the imprisoned ship and of her unfortunate master, and found that she had been frozen thirteen years previous to the discovery of her among the ice. A QUACK DOCTOR.

In an excellent article in the last number of the ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, entitled, "England sixty years ago," the following tale is told of one of these itinerant worthies:—

"On one occasion, a great, gawky, lumbering clodhopper thought he had devised a mode of turning the laugh against the doctor. He mounted the stage, and, on being questioned as to his disorder, said very gravely, "Why, I'm a liar." "Sad disorder, sir, but perfectly curable," said the doctor. "Well, but, (said the man,) I've a worser nor that, I've lost my memory." "Quite curable, also," added the doctor; "but I must make my preparations. Come again after dinner, but pay down five shillings." The man, who intended to have his fun free gratis, resisted, but the doctor declared that he never let anybody down from the stage till he had paid something. "Besides," said the doctor, "how can I trust you? You say you are a liar, and have no memory; so you will either break your promise or forget all about it." A loud laugh from the crowd, expressed their acquiescence in the justice of the claim, and the poor fellow, nolens volens, was compelled to lay down the cash. No one supposed that he would come again, but he still hoped that he might turn the tables, and presented himself at the appointed hour. The doctor received him with great gravity, and addressing the audience, said, "Gentlemen may think it a joke, but I assure them on the honor of a gentleman, that it is a very serious affair; and I hereby engage to return the money if the bystanders do not acknowledge the cure, and that I am fairly entitled to the reward." The man sat down, was furnished with a glass of water; the doctor produced a box of flattened black pills, and to show that they were perfectly innocent, affected to swallow three or four himself. He then gave one to the man, who after many wry faces, bit into it, started up, spitting, sputtering, and exclaimed, "Why, hang me if it isn't cobbler's wax!" Yes, it is true, that the doctor had procured his pills at a neighboring cobbler's stall. "There," said the doctor, lifting up both hands, "did anybody ever witness so sudden, so miraculous a recovery? He's evidently cured of lying, for he has told the truth instantly; and as to memory! my good fellow, (said he, patting him on the back,) if you ever forget this, call on me, and I'll return you the money."

THE PROMPT GIRL.

From "A Gift for my Daughter," an unpublished work by the Author of the "Young Lady's Guide."

The prompt girl rises with the lark in the morning. When the gray dawn steals in at her window, she springs from her bed, and in a very few minutes she is dressed, and prepared to make her appearance in the family, to assist her mother, if necessary; or, if not needed there, to go to her devotions and her study. She has done, perhaps, in fifteen or twenty minutes, what the dilatory girl would be an hour an a half doing, and done it equally well. She is always in time. Her promptness enables her to be punctual. She never keeps the table waiting for her, and never comes after the blessing. She is never late at prayers; never late at school; and neves late at church. And yet, she is never in a hurry. She redeems so much time by her promptness, that she has as much as she needs, to do everything well and in time. She saves all the time that the dilatory girl spends in sauntering, in considering what to do next, in reading frivolous matters out of the proper time for reading, and gazing idly at vacancy.

This good habit, our readers will perceive, must be of great advantage to the one who possesses it, as long as she lives. It is, however, within the reach of all. Only carry out the idea we have given of promptness one day, and then repeat it every day, and, in a little time, the habit is established.

A SISTER'S INFLUENCE.

He who has never known a sister's kind ministrations, nor felt his heart warm beneath her endearing smile and love-beaming eye, has been unfortunate indeed. It is not to be wondered if the fountain of pure feeling flow in his bosom but sluggishly, or if the gentler emotions of his nature be lost in the sterner attributes of manhood.

"That man has grown up among kind and affectionate sisters," I once heard a lady of much observation and experience remark.

"And why do you think so?" said I.

"Because of the rich development of all the tender and refined feelings of the heart, which is so apparent in every action, in every look."

A sister's influence is felt even in manhood's later years, and in the heart of him who has grown cold in its chilling contact with the world, will warm and thrill with a pure enjoyment, as some incident awakens within, the soft tones and glad melodies of his sister's voice. And he will turn from purposes which a warped and false philosophy has reasoned into expediency, and even weep for the gentle influences which moved him in his earlier years.

ENJOYMENT OF LIFE.—Two wealthy citizens of Boston, now considerably advanced in life, were lately conversing in regard to the period when they had best enjoyed themselves. 'I will tell you,' says one, 'when I most enjoyed life; soon after I was twenty-one, I worked for Mr. ——, laying stone wall, at twenty-five cents per day!' 'Well,' replied the other, 'that does not differ much from my experience; when I was twenty, I hired out at seven dollars per month; I have never enjoyed myself better since.' The experience of these two individuals teaches, 1st, that one's happiness does not depend on the amount of his gains or the station he occupies; 2d, that very small beginnings, with industry and prudence, may secure wealth.

AN ADROIT ROBBER.—A French robber named Dore, once had the audacity, alone and unassisted, save by his own ingenuity, to stop a diligence full of passengers. He constructed several excellent men of straw, the size of life, and quite as natural—at least in the dark. These he invested with the needful toggery, neither fresh nor fashionable, we presume, but serving the purpose. Finally, he fastened sticks, intended to represent muskets, to the shoulders of the figures, which he posted in a row against trees bordering the high road. Up came the diligence. "Halt!" shouted Dore, in the voice of a stentor; "Halt! or my men fire!" The frightened driver pulled up short; conductor and passengers, seeing a row of figures with leveled fire-arms, thought they had fallen into the power of a whole army of banditti, and begged for mercy. Dore came forward in the character of a generous protector, sternly ordered his men to abstain from violence and remain where they were, and collected from the trembling and intimidated passengers their purses, watches, and jewels. "I forbid you to fire," he shouted to his quaker gang, while pocketing the rich tribute; "they make no resistance; I will have no useless bloodshed." The conductor, delighted to save a large sum of money secreted in a chest, quietly submitted; the passengers were too happy to get off with whole skins, and the women thanked their spoiler, called him a humane man, and almost kissed him out of gratitude for sparing their lives. The plunder collected, the driver received permission to continue his journey, which he did at full speed, lest the robbers should change their minds and repent of their forbearance. Dore made his escape unmolested, leaving his straw regiment on picket by the road-side, a scarecrow, till day-break, to the passing traveler.

A PLEASANT PARLOR INMATE.—Miss Fuller, in her last letter communicated from Europe to the columns of the New York Tribune, mentions having become acquainted with Dr. Southwood Smith, the well-known philanthropist.

'On visiting him,' says the lady, 'we saw an object which I had often heard celebrated, and had thought would be revolting, but found, on the contrary, an agreeable sight; this is the skeleton of Jeremy Bentham. It was at Bentham's request that the skeleton, dressed in the same dress that he habitually wore, stuffed out to an exact resemblace of life, and with a portrait mask in wax, the best I ever saw, sat there as an assistant to Dr. Smith in the entertainment of his guests, and the companion of his studies. The figure leans a little forward, resting the hands on a stout stick which Bentham always carried, and had named 'Dapple.' The attitude is quite easy; the expression of the whole mild, winning, yet highly individual.

'It is well known that Bentham, in order to oppose in the most convincing manner the prejudice against dissection of the human subject, willed his body to the surgeons, and in a codicil, subsequently written, made a final bequest of his skeleton to his friend Dr. Smith.'

CONSUMPTION.—Hastings, in his work on consumption, furnishes some curious statistics. He says that among persons engaged in the different professions at Geneva, 114 fall victims to consumption out of 1,000. The average varies; in some professions it is higher than others; in the varnish painters it is as high as 37 in 1000, in the gardeners it is as low as 4. Among polishers, plasterers, sculptors, stone cutters, watch-hand makers, it reaches to 117 in the 1,000, and among tailors, engravers, printers, clerks, &c., even to 141 in the 1,000. The average falls in carpenters, blacksmiths, slaters, and agriculturists, to 89 in the 1,000; in butchers, tanners, and candle makers, to 73 in the 1,000; in weavers, dyers, bleachers, and watermen, to 53 in the 1,000; and in persons in easy circumstances it falls as low as 50 in the 1,000. M. Lombard found that the age of the stone cutter averaged 34 years, the sculptor 36, the miller 42, the painter 44, the joiner 46, the butcher 53, the lawyer 51, the surgeon, 54, the mason 55, the gardener 60, the merchant 62, the Protestant clergyman 63, the magistrate 69.

PRECOCITY.—Probably the most extraordinary instance of Premature Genius, is found in the life of John Luis de Candiac, who was born 1719, at Candiac, in the diocese of Nismes, in France. It is recorded of this remarkable child, that from the cradle he began to learn his letters, and at the age of two years and a half knew them all. At three years, he read Latin and French perfectly, whether printed or manuscript. At four years he was taught the Latin language; at five, made translations from it; at six, read Greek and Hebrew. From that period, he was master of the principles of arithmetic, history, geography, heraldry, and the science of medals. In four weeks he was able to write with correctness and fluency; and before he died, had read the best authors in every branch of literature. This little prodigy appeared in the world, like a meteor, but to vanish. He died in Paris, of a complication of disorders, on the 8th of October, 1726.

NEVER GIVE A KICK FOR A HIT.—I learned a good lesson when I was a little girl, rejoined Mrs. Fairweather. One frosty morning I was looking out of the window into my father's barn-yard, where stood many cows, oxen, and horses, waiting to drink. It was one of those cold snapping mornings when a slight thing irritates both man and beast. The cattle all stood very still and meek, till one of the cows attempted to turn round. In making the attempt she happened to hit her next neighbor; whereupon the neighbor kicked and hit another. In five minutes the whole herd were kicking and hooking each other with all fury. My mother laughed and said, 'See what comes of kicking when your're hit. Just so I've seen one cross word set a whole family by the ears some frosty morning.' Afterward, if my brothers or myself were a little irritable, she would say, 'Take care my children. Remember how the fight in the barn-yard began. Never give back a kick for a hit, and you will save yourself and others a deal of trouble.' [Columbian Mag.

The obedience of that man is much too delicate, who insists upon hearing the reasons of all laws before he will obey them. The legislator must be supposed to have given his sanction from the reason of the thing; but where we cannot discover the reason of it, the sanction is to be the only reason of our obedience. [Bp. Taylor.

VARIETY.

Caoutchouc (india rubber,) becoming very smooth and viscous by the action of fire, has been proposed by an eminent English dentist as an excellent remedy, for filling hollow teeth, and alleviating the toothache proceeding from that defect. A piece of caoutchouc is to be put on a wire, then melted at the flame of a candle, and pressed, while warm, into the hollow tooth, and the pain will be removed instantly. The cavity of the tooth should be first cleaned out with a piece of cotton. In consequonce of the viscosity and adhesiveness of the caoutchouc, the air is completely prevented from coming into contact with the denuded nerve, and thus the cause of the toothache is destroyed. So says the Scientific American.

The New York Medical Examiner says:—A young lady with whom we are acquainted gave birth lately to her first child. The little one was about a fortnight old, when we asked a lady how it and the young mother were. 'The mother is doing well,' she answered, 'but the child is very cross; and indeed it is not to be wondered at, for they are all so pleased, they seem hardly to know what they are about. The mother feeds it, and then the sister feeds it, and then the grandmother feeds it, and then the nurse feeds it, and thus they make the child ill.' Our friend was right. We should like to have shown the young lady the stomach of a new born infant now in our museum. It would not hold more than three table spoonfuls, and yet they were trying to cram food down the little innocent's throat by teacupfulls.

Mrs. Romer, in her agreeable work called "A Pilgrimage to Egypt, Nubia and Palestine," having dined with an Egyptian potentate, remarks: I never tasted a better turkey than he gave us; and upon complimenting him upon its great delicacy, I learned from him the Egyptian secret of rendering the flesh particularly tender. Half an hour before the bird is killed, a glass of brandy is poured down its throat, which produces complete intoxication, and the flesh of the tipsy turkey acquires a tenderness superior to that which is produced even by long keeping; a system that would be impracticable in this climate.

A musical instrument, called a baryton, is exciting a great deal of interest in France. It is between a viola and a violoncello, and is played like the latter instrument. Its four strings are tuned octaves to the corresponding strings of the violin; and its compass is thus lower by a fourth than the viola, and higher by a fifth than the violoncello. The tone has a special timbre, which strikes the ear, and is perfectly distinct from the viola and violoncello, and thus instrumental music has acquired a new organ, which in the quintet and the quartet will vary the effects and add a new speaker to the dialogue of instruments.

John Foster says, "I have observed the most ladies who have had what is considered as an education, have no idea of an education progressive through life. Having attained a certain measure of accomplishments, knowledge, manners, &c., they consider themselves as made up, and so take their station; they are pictures which, being quite finished, are now put in a frame— a gilded one if possible—and hung up in permanence of beauty!—permanence, that is to say, till Old Time, with his rude and dirty fingers, soil the charming colors."

It is stated that during Victoria's visit to Arundale Castle, (21 days,) the Dutchess of Sutherland, one of the maids of honor, put on no less than seventy new dresses! that she regularly changed her costume four times a day, and that she paid one of her female attendants five hundred dollars a year, who was called her combination maid, and who is solely occupied in harmonizing or combining her various articles of dress, so as to produce a new and happy effect.

How admirable, says Racine, is the simplicity of the Evangelists! They never speak injuriously of the enemies of Jesus Christ, of his executioners, nor his judges. They report the facts, without adding a single reflection. They remark neither their Master's mildness when he was smitten, nor his constancy in his suffering, which they thus describe—"And they crucified Jesus."

When, upon mature deliberation, you are persuaded a thing is fit to be done, do it boldly; and do not affect privacy in it, or concern yourself at all with what impertinent censures or reflections the world will pass upon it. For, if the thing be not just and innocent, it ought not to be attempted at all, although ever so secretly. And if it be, you do very foolish to stand in fear of those who will themselves do ill in censuring and condemning what you do well.

A white glove often conceals a dirty hand. Go into the country to hear the news of the town. Call me cousin but cozen me not. Zeal without knowledge is like fire without light. Youth and white paper soon take an impression. Vows made in storms are forgotten in calms. The church is out of temper when charity is cold and zeal is hot. Envy shoots at others, and wounds herself.

They get volunteers rather oddly in South America. They send out a party in the night, who go to different houses on the roads, take the men from their beds, tie their hands, march them to town, put them into the calaboose and keep them seven years, during that time not being allowed to visit their families. This is the manner in which the Standing Army is kept up.

Poetry is the flour of literature—prose the corn, potatoes and meat; satire the aqufortis; wit the spice and pepper; love letters are the honey and sugar; dunning letters are the emetics; and letters containing remittances are apple dumplings.

Some persons toil all their lives, and refuse the enjoyment which can only be relished when life is in its prime, that they may be rich when the power of enjoyment is over.

It is the custom with the New Zealand females to pet pigs, the same as European ladies fondle dogs and kittens.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The eutire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

'Our readers can now judge for themselves whether the law fixes any particular day of the week as the Sabbath.' Perhaps they can. This, however, does not present the true phase of the question. The law says just nothing about a week. It fixes the seventh day as the Sabbath. It does no more. The week results from the establishment of the Sabbath. Traditional interpretation makes the Sabbath dependant on the week. God's law is plain and practicable; man's additions introduce darkness and controversy.

The last communication of 'Indagator,' dwells almost entirely on the moral character of the sabbatic institution. He will not allow it to be moral. He and I differ materially, as to what constitutes the morality of a law. Of course, I think him fundamentally in error. He has identified natural and moral law. They are separated in meaning by a wide space. Natural law is learned 'from the nature of the case;' moral law involves the idea of utility. According to him, the Jew was under no 'moral obligation' to keep the Sabbath, because he could not learn it from 'reason and conscience.' This would reduce our moral obligations within very narrow limits. We should find, upon close examination, that the other precepts of the decalogue are hardly better off than the law of the Sabbath. Human reason, with all the lights that nature furnishes, is, in all cases, an imperfect and uncertain guide; leaving the most obvious duties vague and unfounded. The most intelligent men of the age are unable to determine the limits of parental authority and filial obligation. The institution of marriage is undeniably moral; yet its particular regulations, so generally recognized and approved, could not have been learned from 'the nature of the case.' The permanent and inviolable union of one man and woman is an idea alien from the untaught heathen mind. Nature teaches much less on all these moral subjects, than is commonly supposed. The true distinction between moral and positive law is not what 'Indagator' states. The former has its reason in the nature and relations of man; the latter in the will of God, irrespective of these. The one is commanded because it is right; the other is right, because it is commanded. The law of baptism is positive, resting only on the will of God; the law of love is moral, resting on essential utility. The phrase 'the moral law' is applied by way of eminence to the ten commandments, not because they describe duties which could be ascertained by the light of nature, but because they embody great fundamental principles, which underlie society and the glory of God. We say the morality of a law is a reason for its permanence; but it is not so, if morality is understood in the sense of 'Indagator.' The vital and universal importance of an institution is the ground on which we urge its universal adoption and perpetuity through all time. It is vital to the interests of mankind and the claims of God—that is, it is moral.

That this is the character of the sabbatic institution, I think, there can be no doubt. 'The Sabbath was made for man.' Its perpetuity is essential to his interests. His physical, intellectual and moral constitution—the entire man, in all his relations and concerns, requires a Sabbath. Is there any probability that the worship of God could be maintained without it? What would follow its extinction? Is not an institution, so necessary to all that is dear to God and man, moral? Is it not as clearly so as any command of the decalogue? Is there a single precept in that divine code, the extinction of which would be followed by more disastrous consequences? Why are they moral and permanent? Because they are the great pillars, on which the happiness of man and the moral government of God rest. 'Baptists are the last people in the world' that should, with rash hand, tear down what God, in the progress of ages, has been building up.

The entire communication of 'Indagator,' being conformed to the erroneous idea, that moral and natural law are identical, the whole has been already fully answered. There are, however, a few remarks in addition which I desire to make. 'Our Lord,' said he, 'nowhere speaks of the Sabbath as an ordinance of his kingdom, nor does he, in running over, at different times, the prominent points of the fundamental law of God, ever expressly mention, or remotely hint at the duty of keeping the Sabbath.' It is certainly, Mr. Editor, my turn now 'to wonder.' When, I may ask, does the Saviour 'at different times run over the prominent points of the fundamental law of God?' What is the fundamental law of God? Where is it found? How do we ascertain it? He nowhere dwells, in detail, on the law.

On one occasion, the seventh commandment was brought to his notice, and, although it might have been expected, he did not 'speak of it as an ordinance of his kingdom.' It is, however, 'an ordinance of his kingdom.' He does distinctly and expressly recognize the validity and perpetuity of the moral code; in both its tables; and without exception. He recognizes the whole, without specification, as moral, and comprehensive of all human duties. The law enjoins the observance of the Sabbath. Why shall we, without divine warrant, strike out the fourth commandment? Where are we taught to do so? Is it of less moral importance than the other commandments with which it is so intimately associated? The reason for its expulsion from the place God has assigned it, I certainly am at a loss to see. Christ was sometimes called upon to rebuke the superstitions with which the Jews had embarrassed the sabbatic institution; but always speaks respectfully of the institution itself. He affirms that it 'was made for man.' It was not exclusively a Jewish institution. It existed before the Jew. God made it a part of a code, not exclusively Jewish. The sabbatic year did not exist before the Jew. It was made for the Jew; not for man. I certainly regard it as a remarkable circumstance that the Sabbath is incorporated in what is fitly called the moral law. And how incorporated? By the finger of God, on tables of stone, under circumstances peculiar and awful. Why is the law so distinguished from the civil and ceremonial law of the Jewish nation? The difference is most striking. Is there no reason for it? Why should the Sabbath have a place in it; while the peculiarly Jewish institutions are excluded from it? I cannot believe that this indicates no difference in the nature of these institutes. How any one can read the fourth commandment, and see in it only 'a part and parcel of the Jewish economy,' is not a little mysterious. That precept contains not one word about 'a quiet, stationary, rural' people. It turns our thoughts in entirely a different direction. It looks away from the Jew, and his peculiar concerns. 'Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.' Can that be remembered, which has no existence? 'Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day (not the seventh day of the week) is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; for in six days the Lord made the world; wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day and hallowed it.' 'The Sabbath of the Lord thy God.' Not simply a rest to meet the wants of 'a quiet, rural people.' A memorial of the rest of God, when a finished world swung from his creative hand. Is the God of creation the God of the Jew only? Is He not of the Gentiles also?

The passages in Galatians and Colossians, to which we are referred, clearly and undeniably 'reject Jewish ceremonies;' that they reject 'the Sabbath of the Lord our God,' I am not prepared to admit. There were other 'Sabbaths' known to the old economy. These were ceremonial and peculiar; and are intended by the apostle. 'The Sabbath of the Lord our God' is not placed among these in Jewish writings; it is a part of a code of laws, written by God himself, on tables of stone; separated from the other Jewish institutes; recognized by the Saviour without exception, and also by Paul, the author of the passages in question, I may add, by the Christian world, as moral, universal and permanent. 'What God has joined together,' we should not make haste to 'put asunder.' 'The Sabbath of the Lord our God' must be shown to be different in moral character from the other precepts of the decalogue, at least before any reason can appear for its ejection from the place of dignity and authority, which Jehovah himself has assigned it.

The concluding paragraph of 'Indagator' is very remarkable. It asserts everything against the Sabbath law; and yet it asserts nothing. It is so strangely interlaid with indicatives, subjunctives and potentials, that everything is insinuated, while nothing is formally affirmed. I will only say in reply, that 'the fact,' whether it be asserted or supposed, is no 'fact' at all. Let us see it made out. God has never placed the sabbatic law, with other abrogated Jewish laws. He has kept it very distinct from them. But he has placed it among 'the things that remain.' It is like them, moral; why should it not be like them? Has He excepted it?

I cannot but think that the astute and candid mind of 'Indagator,' will perceive at once, upon the review, the fundamental error into which he has fallen on the subject of moral law. Natural law is one thing; moral law is quite another. As they relate to the question under discussion, the distinction is of importance. It has led him to say: 'The instructions of reason and conscience are the only source of moral obligation.' With kind regards, Mr. Editor, to your correspondent, E. W. D.

THE JEWS IN POLAND.

Warsaw, Nov. 6.—Since October 1st, the memorable day on which the Jews in this kingdom, by laying aside their national costume, made the first step towards civilization. Warsaw has afforded us many comical scenes through the uncomfortable position in which the Jews have been placed by it. From all the great cities of the kingdom respectable looking Jews arrived in all the splendor of their most costly silk pelisses, trimmed with sable, with their beards and ringlets in the best order to obtain a delay at least for some years; but they had come to meet their ill fate, for they were here deprived of their silk pelisses, their beards, and their locks by some barbers, who had received orders of the police, and the poor disgraced Jews stole clandestinely out of the city. A few days ago a similar event took place, which excited no little sensation, in the remotest part of the country, where "Chapictism" exercises its powerful influence on the demoralization of the Jews. A company, consisting of eighty men, with their Rabbi at their head, arrived at the gates of our city, in order to obtain from the Prince Governor permission to retain their old costume. That so strange a company, which might be distinguished at a distance by their strange gesticulations, was not permitted to enter the city, without inquiry, may be conceived. General A——, the chief of the police, being informed of the strange party before the city, ordered that they should be immediately put under a good escort to the police office; and that there, without speaking a word to them, their beards and locks should be cut off, and their pelisses slit up behind. In half an hour the poor people felt the cold air on their bald unprotected faces, and when they recovered from their consternation, they found themselves again at the gates of Warsaw, whither they had been conveyed. They had now no further desire than to be allowed to take the clipping of their beards home, that they might bury them in their cemetery. These, however, were disposed to all points of the compass, and the travelers had now nothing more to do than to satisfy the barber's apprentices who came for their pay.

THE HOLY LAND.

(In imitation of the well-known German "Father-Land.")

BY GOODWIN BARMBY.

Where is the True, the Holy Land?
Is it on mountains of Palestine?
Is it where Mecca's minarets shine?
Is it where Ganges flows divine?
Not there. not there, that sacred strand;
Not there the True, the Holy Land!

Where, then, the True, the Holy Land?
Is it where Delphian laurels glow?
Is it where Rome's fair myrtles blow?
Is it where Erin's shamrocks grow?
Not there alone on any strand—
Not there alone the Holy Land!

Where, then, the True, the Holy Land?
Where love is law—and freedom right;
Where truth is day—and error night;
Where man is brave—and woman bright;
'Tis there, 'tis there, that sacred strand—
'Tis there the True, the Holy Land!

That is the True, the Holy Land,
Where Mary doth the better part—
Where Mary resteth in Christ's heart—
Where, Mary, thou with Jesus art;
O there! O there! on any strand—
O there the True, the Holy Land!

O there the True, the Holy Land,
Where men and women, hand in hand—
As God the work divine hath planned—
Walk forth a free, a glorious band!
O there, O there, the sacred strand!
O there the True, the Holy Land!

Yes! there the True, the Holy Land!
Where sovereign reigns fraternity—
Where good is God and love is free—
Where sisters, brothers, all shall be:
There is the land, where'er the strand,
Which is the True, Holy Land!

BOLD PREACHING.

The Rev. Mr. Bennett, of Woburn, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination preached a special sermon from the text, "I dwell among my own people;" in which he took occasion to talk pretty plainly to his people. The following, extracted from the discourse, is a fair specimen of the whole:—

"I am aware that this instability of which I am here complaining, manifested by many societies, in a disposition to get rid of middle-aged ministers, is generally laid to the young people of the parish. It is often gravely said, by men who ought to know better, that in order to interest children of a congregation, it is necessary to have a young man. A greater untruth was never told. Children always love those best who love them best. And now then, for the test of character. Who love children, best, old men or young? I appeal to the experience of every man of observation. Do not those men who have sustained the relation of fathers themselves, always feel and manifest a greater interest in all children, than those who have never had children of their own? I know this to be the fact. It is a gross falsehood, then, to say, that in order to interest the children of a society, it is necessary to have a young man. It is generally a fact, that those children who complain of ministers, and use their influence to get rid of them, are quite as old in years as the minister himself. And I am sorry to say it the first open complaint that is made against the pastor, is made, in three cases out of four, by a deacon of his church. Deacons, the world over, are like Jeremiah's grapes—that is, very sweet or very sour. They either aid their pastor, like Aaron and Hur, stay his hands, or decidedly the reverse. It is a sober fact, and it ought to make the ears of such deacons tingle, that at least three out of four of all the ministers of New England, who have been driven away from their people, have been driven away by deacons; by men who, in one respect, have with a vengeance, 'magnified their office.'

"I might point you to numerous examples all over the land, but forbear. I thank God, however, that I have never been plagued by such deacons. I have never had the slightest difficulty with any of my deacons, except in a single instance; and that lasted but five minutes. It was with good Dea. Wyman, at the commencement of the temperance reformation, in 1826. Some one told him that I said at church-meeting, that I would never drink another drop of ardent spirits, (unless ordered by a physician,) or give it to a workman or visitor, while I lived.

"The deacon called on me the next day, and asked if I said so. I told him I did, and would stick to it, at all hazards. 'Well,' said he, 'then you will not be minister of this parish three months!' 'Very well,' said I, 'I have taken my stand, and if I knew I should be drawn in quarters within three months, if I did not recant, I would not do it.' Said the deacon, 'You are a crazy man, and I will not talk with you;' and arose to go out of my house, when I thus accosted him: 'Dea. Wyman, the next time you enter your closet, will you ask God to teach you by his Spirit, who is right on this subject, you or I?' 'I tell you,' said he, 'I will not talk with you,' and marched out of doors. The next morning, long before sunrise, some one knocked—I went to the door, and behold, there stood Dea. Wyman. He instantly grasped my hand, and with tears rolling down his cheeks, exclaimed, 'My dear pastor, I went home from your house yesterday, and, in accordance with your advice, retired to my closet, and asked God to teach me by his Spirit, who was right in regard to the use of ardent spirits, you or I. In five minutes a flood of light broke in upon my mind, and I was fully convinced that you was right and I was wrong. And now,' said he, 'go ahead with your temperance reformation—to the day of my death, I will do all in my power to sustain you.' He was as good as his word. He did sustain me as long as he lived. He was a stable man; and so were deacons Wright, Lawrence, and Gardner—and so are all the deacons of this church who are now in office. They are descendants of stable men. Three or four of them have come down in a direct line from those ever stable men, of whom the world was not worthy, who were organized into this church more than two hundred years ago—and one of them is a descendant of Sir Matthew Hale, of England, a more stable man than whom, our mother country never produced. No wonder, then, since I have been blessed with such a stable band of deacons, that I still dwell among my own people."

"MY SPIRIT SHALL NOT ALWAYS STRIVE."

Mrs. S——r might at one time have become a Christian. But as she was very young, she thought, I presume, as many other young persons do, that there was "time enough" for her yet. She could not, or rather would not give up the sinful pleasures of the world, and take up her cross and follow the meek and lowly Jesus. She resisted the strivings of God's Holy Spirit, which would have saved her precious soul, had she yielded to His influence. That influence was at length withdrawn. At the age of but 19 or 20 years, she was suddenly brought to a dying bed unprepared. I was invited to visit her—and O! ye thoughtless young persons, who may read these lines, and have at times, and are now, some of you, probably "resisting the Holy Ghost," by trifling with your serious impressions—could you now behold that look of horror and despair which met me as I then entered her room, (she had become speechless,) and witness the agony of her soul as she rolled from one side of her bed to the other, you would, I think, resolve to cherish your seriousness, and no longer fight against God, as you now are doing, by trying to get rid of it. This circumstance occurred nine years since, but the expression of that countenance is almost as vivid before me now as it was then. I can never forget it. There was every reason to fear that the Spirit had taken its everlasting flight. A few hours after I left, her soul was summoned into the presence of her final Judge. May God grant that I may never again be a witness of so awful a scene.

A few words by way of application. You, my dear friends, (especially the young,) who may be under religious convictions, let me beg of you, as upon my knees, to beware how you trifle with the Spirit of the great and holy God. "He will not always strive" with you—and woe be unto those who provoke Him to depart from them forever. O! take warning, take warning from the case of poor Mrs. S., and earnestly pray and seek, by all proper means, to get your serious impressions deepened. Your everlasting destiny very probably may be suspended upon the decision you come to under your present convictions, and heaven or hell must be your eternel home.

Surrender then your hearts to God now, and escape the awful doom which awaits the finally impenitent. "Seek the Lord while he may be found, call upon Him while he is near."

FUNERAL CEREMONIES IN EGYPT.

The Moslem ceremonies that have reference to the dead are, generally very interesting; and their wailings would always be deeply affecting, were they always sincere, and not confined to stated periods; for they seem to express the most intense, heart-breaking, despairing grief. The art of wailing in the most approved style appears to be an accomplishment that can only be acquired by long practice; and regular professors of it are usually hired on the occasion of the death of a person of the middle or higher classes. These accompany their lamentations with a tambourine, and occasionally interrupt their screams by plaintive songs. Their performances, and those of the female mourners in general, are such as were practised in the most remote ages; such as we see portrayed upon the walls of the ancient Egyptian tombs, and such as are mentioned in many parts of the Holy Scriptures; as in 2 Chron. xxxv. 23; Jerem. ix. 18; Amos v. 16; and St. Matt. ix. 23; vividly bringing to mind "the minstrels and the people making a noise" for the death of the daughter of Jarius. As illustrative of the Bible, these and other Eastern customs are to me most especially interesting. "Consider ye," says Jeremiah, exhorting his countrymen to bewail their disobedience, "and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for the cunning women, that they may come; and let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with waters;" and by the same means the feelings of a mourning Eastern family seem to be most powerfully excited at the present day, for, in general, the most piercing cries and screams that I hear, on account of a death, are those which interrupt the lamentations of the hired mounrner, who is "cunning" in her art. The cemeteries in the neighborhood of Cairo are among the most picturesque of the various scenes which surround us; and in these are many private burial grounds, each belonging to one family, who, if of sufficient wealth, have within its walls a house of mourning. To this house the females of the family regularly repair at the period of each of the two great annual festivals, as well as on extraordinary ones, to bewail their dead; having previously sent thither such furniture as is necessary for their comfort; and there they remain, on the occasions of the two festivals above mentioned, and immediately after a death, three or more days and nights. Some of the houses of mourning are pretty and cheerful looking buildings, and enlivened by a few trees and flowers; and I believe that the women often find no small pleasure in visiting them; their life being in general so monotonous. Some women, who have no houses in the burial ground for their reception, have tents pitched for them when requisite.

GIVE ME BACK MY HUSBAND.

Not many years since, a young married couple from the far 'fast-anchored isles,' sought our shores, with the most sanguine anticipations of prosperity and success. They had begun to realize more than they had seen in the visions of hope, when, in an evil hour, the husband was tempted to 'look upon the wine when it was red,' and 'when it gave its color in the cup.' The charmer fastened around its victim all the serpent-spells of its sorcery, and he fell! and at the very step of his rapid degradation, from the man to a brute, and downward, a heart-string broke in the bosom of his companion.

Finally, with the last spark of hope flickering on the altar of her heart, she threaded her way into one of those shambles where man is such a thing as the beasts of the field would bellow at. She pressed her way through the bacchanalian crowd, who were revelling in their own ruin. With her bosom full 'of that perilous stuff that preys upon the heart,' she stood before the pander of her husband's destiny, she exclaimed in tones of startling anguish: 'Give me back my husband!' 'There's your husband,' said the man, as he pointed towards the prostrated wretch. 'That my husband! What have you done to him? That my husband! What have you done to that noble form, that once, like a giant oak, held its protecting shade over the fragile vine that clung to it for protection and shelter? That my husband! With what torpedo chill have you touched the sinews of that manly arm? That my husband! What have you done with that noble brow, which he once wore high among his fellows, as it bore the superscription of Godhead? What Egyptian drug have you poured into his veins, and turned the ambling fountain of heart into black, bitter, and burning pitch? Give me back my husband! Undo your basilisk spells, and give me back the man who stood with me at the altar.'

The ears of the rumsellers, ever since the first demijohn was opened upon our shores, have been saluted at every stage of his traffic with just such appeals as this. Such wives, such widows, and such mothers, such fathers and fatherless, as never mourned in Israel at the massacre of Bethelem, or at the burning of the Temple, have cried in his ears, morning, noon and evening: 'Give me back my husband! Give me back my father! Give me back my boy! Give me back my brother!'

DOING GOOD.

Daughters cannot be too early shown, by mothers, what the great business of human life is—to do good and to get good—and that they are to get good for the most part in doing good. One of the strongest and yet most common mistakes in the world, especially in the world of the young, is the belief that doing good is a dead loss to the doers; and that the loss is to be measured by the amount of charity.

Another fundamental mistake of modern education consists in a neglect, both by parents and teachers, to show to the young, of both sexes, what they ought to aim at. Half of our young people, even in the families of Christian parents, have no aim at all; and a much larger proportion still have no aim which is at all worthy of a rational and immortal being. And how very few indeed can be found who feel themselves to be under daily and hourly obligation to perfect the highest possible degree their whole nature, physical, intellectual, and moral.

How easy would it be for a mother, provided she were but a mother indeed, to tell her daughters, from time to time, that they are under the most solemn obligations to God and to the world, to obey all those laws which relate to the body, not only because it is an implied command that they should do so, because by so doing, they can constantly improve their health, add to their present means of usefulness, and prolong their lives. That it is not enough to escape sickness merely, but that they ought, in all the circumstances of life, to aspire after the highest possible amount of bodily health and vigor—provided always, that their efforts, for this purpose, do not interfere with known and obvious duties of their friends and neighbors.

MESSAGE TO THE CHRISTIAN.

Christian, "I have a message from God unto thee." The eighth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans is addressed to you. Read it as the charter of your rights—the epitome of your hopes—the record of your glorious privileges. Your life is the vestibule of glory—your death is the dawn of immortality. Fight the good fight—finish your course—keep the faith—there is laid up for you a crown of glory. Nothing can tear you from your Lord, or separate you from your destiny. The serpent's head is beneath the Saviour's feet; he writhes, but he cannot rise—all our enemies are vanquished. The path you walk on is beaten smooth by the feet, and made soft by the tears of martyrs.

The clouds that obscure the sky above you will soon pass away, and the light of the heavenly land will break forth with augmented splendors. That dark, deep flood before you that fills your hearts with occasional misgivings, shall open your bosom for your transit; and, standing on the other side, you will sound a nobler harp than Miriam's, and sing the song, not of Moses only, but of the Lamb. The gates of glory that shut you in will shut out all tears and death, and you that heard the holy message upon earth, shall hear the heavenly welcome at the threshold of eternity, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, March 25, 1847.

THE ANCIENT SYNAGOGUES OF ISRAEL.

The descendants of the "holy nation," the covenant people of Jehovah, have become a byword and a reproach. The holy things of that ancient and honorable people are despised. Men professing themselves the servants of Jehovah think they do God service by pouring raillery and contempt upon their sacred places. Even the frequent visits of Jesus, the Messiah, and his apostles, to the synagogues of the Jews, are compared to the visits of modern Christian missionaries to heathen temples, and the idolatrous festivals of Juggernaut and Gaudama! I do not doubt but what this may often be done without any ill design, by worthy persons, who have not attempted to look beneath the covering which time and prejudice have spread over these things. Having recently compared the researches of renowned biblical scholars with the testimony of the sacred and ancient books of Israel, I am confirmed in my conviction that the common sentiment which attributes the Sabbath-day visits of the Messiah and his apostles to the ancient synagogues of Israel, to a mere incidental expedient for an opportunity to preach the gospel to the Jews, is uncandid, ungenerous, and anti-evangelical. It overlooks a grand characteristic of their piety; attributes to a truckling expediency, that which was really the fruit of godly principle; and perverts the testimony which their manner of life furnished of the perpetuity of God's law, to support the traditions of men.

The social and public worship of Jehovah, and receiving instruction in his law, are duties which have been enjoined upon men from the foundation of human society. Noah was a preacher of righteousness. 2 Peter 2: 5. Abraham taught his children and his household to keep the way of the Lord. Gen. 18: 19. The exhortation of Eliphaz to Job is, "Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart." Job 22: 22. When Moses had delivered "the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments which the Lord their God commanded him to teach them," he said, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." Deut. 6: 1, 7. The tribe of Levi was set apart from the other tribes, that they might "put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean, and that they might teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the Lord hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses." Lev. 10: 11. When Israel was settled in the holy land, all their males were required to appear at the tabernacle of the ark of the Lord, three times a year; and those who dwelt near, resorted thither at each successive new moon, and on the Sabbath days. 2 Kings 4: 23. But for those who dwelt at a distance, "teaching priests" were sent "to teach in all the cities of Judah." "And they taught in Judah, and had the book of the law with them, and went throughout all the cities of Judah and taught the people." 2 Chron. 17: 7—9. Of course each city must have had its place for assembling. Such a place doubtless was Beth-el, (i. e., God's house,) and such was the high place where Saul met "a company of the prophets." 1 Samuel 10: 5. It was for the service of God in these places that it was said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, "The priests' lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts." Mal. 2: 7. These were the synagogues of which the Psalmist complained, that the enemy had burned them up. Ps. 74: 8. These places of worship Josephus calls proseuchae, i. e., houses of prayer; and mentions it to the honor of the Senate and people of Rome, the city of Halicarnassus, and the city of the Sardians, that they decreed "that as many men and women of the Jews as are willing to do so, may celebrate their Sabbaths, and perform their holy offices, according to the Jewish law, and may make their prosecuchae at the sea side, according to the custom of their fathers;" and further ordered, "that a place may be given them where they may have their congregations, with their wives and children, and may offer, as did their forefathers, their prayers and their sacrifices to God." Ant. b. 14, c. 10. sect. 24. They were sometimes very large edifices, capable of receiving a great number of people, and were resorted to by the Jews every Sabbath day. See Life of Josephus, b. 4, sect. 54. The Greek term for synagogue, like the Hebrew term, primarily signifies an assembly; but like the Saxon word church, it came at length to be applied to edifices in which assemblies, especially those for the worship of God, met. The synagogues of the Jews, therefore, were edifices especially appropriated to the worship of Jehovah. In the same way the places of Christian worship were sometimes called synagogues, as in James 2: 2—"If there come into your assembly." In the Greek Testament it is, "If there come into your synagogue."

The service of the Jewish synagogues on Sabbath days was, first, public prayer and praise; next, the reading of the law and the prophets; and the whole closed by some one or more, appointed by the ruler of the synagogue, expounding the Scriptures, and enforcing the holy duties enjoined therein. The professed object of the synagogue service was the worship and honor of Jehovah, and the instruction of the people in the holy truths of his word. Where, therefore, there was a devout and orderly congregation, it was surely such a place as any Christian might attend on the Sabbath day for the purpose of giving unto the Lord the glory due unto his name. In the prayer and praise offered devoutly to Jehovah, they might truly join; and most truly might they venerate the reading of God's holy law, and the doctrine of the prophets and holy men of God. In the exposition of the Scriptures, they were sometimes invited to take the lead, as in the case of Christ at Nazareth, (Luke 4: 16,) and Paul at Antioch in Pisidia, (Acts 13: 14.) Indeed, it is evident from what the New Testament writers have said of the worship of the primitive Christians, that, with the exception of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, it differed but little, if any, in the ordinary routine of services, from the usual worship of the Jewish synagogues. It is the opinion of good church historians, that some whole synagogues became Christian by a reception of the doctrines and ordinances of Christ, without any material change in their organization. See Neander, p. 105, and Campbell's Lectures. Prayer and praise were offered by Christ and his apostles, and enjoined upon all the disciples. They rehearsed the law and the prophets, and enjoined the same upon all that should teach in the name of Christ. Matt. 5: 19. They expounded the Scriptures, enforced their doctrine thereby, and taught succeeding Christian ministers to do the same. 2 Tim. 3: 16. When, therefore, a devout worshiper of Jehovah, even an apostle of Christ, went into a heathen city where no Christian church was gathered, where would he be so likely to resort on the Sabbath day, as to a Jewish synagogue? If there were many pious devout persons in that city, he might expect to find them there. I suppose it was in reference to this that it was said to Paul at Corinth, "I have much people in this city." Acts 18: 10. There at least the name of the Lord was extolled, and his law was enforced; the prophets were read and commented upon, and his holy Sabbath observed. Could the early Christians, in such circnmstances, better show themselves the friends of Jehovah, than by resorting on his holy day to the place appointed for his worship? It was every way congenial with their early associations and principles, and must at least have been some relief to their minds whilst witnessing the reigning idolatry of the pagans. Accordingly we find that it was not a single visit in a place, that the apostles paid to the synagogues; but they did it Sabbath after Sabbath; and it was not till the unbelieving part of the Jews became violent and abusive, that the apostle and the believing part of the congregation separated from them for their Sabbath day worship. Acts 18: 4—8. I do not remember a single apostolic caution against mingling in the ordinary worship of the Jews, the rites and ceremonies of the temple service of course excepted. On the contrary, it was the fixed custom of the apostles to attend at the daily hours of prayer, (Acts 3: 1;) and on the Sabbath day, (Acts 17: 2;) and James assigned as a reason for the brevity of the apostolic decrees respecting moral purity, that the law of Moses was preached and read in the synagogues every Sabbath day, in every city of the Gentiles. Acts 15: 19—21. No importance was attached by the apostles to having the worship of God conducted by such only as had obtained apostolic consecration. They said to all that believed, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." 1 Peter 2: 9. Wherever, therefore, Jehovah is worshiped in spirit and in truth, there may a Christian unite.

To represent the apostles and evangelists as frequenting the Jewish synagogues only for an opportunity to preach to them, is uncandid, because it overlooks an obvious regard which they paid to the institutes of piety and the divine law. To class all Jewish synagogues with the temples of Juggernaut and Gaudama, is ungenerous, because it tends to degrade the worshipers of Jehovah to a level with besotted pagan idolaters. It is anti-evangelical, because it treats conformity to the law of God as a mere human expedient.

We do not assign these things as our reasons for keeping holy the Sabbath day, but the perpetuity of God's holy law. They show, however, the unsoundness of that pretence which represents the apostles as frequenting the Jewish synagogues to preach to the Jews, as modern missionaries frequent the festivals of the heathen in Hindostan and Burmah. They show also the invalidity of that argument which represents the apostles as worshiping with the Jews on the Sabbath day, only because they would not shock their prejudices too suddenly. If the Sabbath day was either abrogated or changed to another day, it was as much their duty to affirm it, as to say that there was now no distinction of meats and drinks, no more conscience to be made of new moons and other festival Sabbaths, and that there was no more sacrifice to be offered for sins, since God had made a change of the priesthood. And I believe that the apostles, who preached these things to the Jews, would not have shunned to say the Sabbath day was changed, if it had been so appointed of the Lord Jesus. S. D.

Solemn Consideration.—The report of Rev. Mr. Lyons, a missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, contains a statement calculated to suggest solemn, though not necessarily unpleasant, thoughts to every minister of the Gospel. He says that during the year, one hundred and seven members of his church had rested from their labors, and that this makes just one thousand of his spiritual children who have been removed by death from his pastoral instruction and supervision within the space of ten years. His church is composed of two thousand one hundred and thirty-six members.

POST OFFICE REGULATIONS.

The Postmaster General has published the regulations of the Post Office Department for the enforcement of the acts of Congress of the 1st, 2d, and 3d of March, 1847. The following are the principal changes introduced:—1st. The franking privilege is extended, with certain restrictions, to Postmasters, Members of Congress, and the various Departments of the General Government, making their privileges about the same as before cheap postage was adopted. 2d. Letters, papers, and packages, not exceeding one ounce in weight, are to go free to officers, musicians, and privates of the army of the United States in Mexico, provided it is written on the address, after the name of the person, "Belonging to the Army." 3d. Letters addressed to different persons can not be enclosed in the same envelope or package, under a penalty of ten dollars, unless addressed to foreign countries. 4th. All newspapers, except exchange papers of editors, are to be rated with postage—thus putting an end to the free thirty-mile-circuit arrangement. 5th. Transient newspapers, or those not sent from the office of publication to subscribers, handbills or circular letters, printed or lithographed, must be paid for in advance, at the rate of three cents a sheet. 6th. Newspapers may be sent to subscribers out of the mails, without incurring a penalty. All of these changes, except the extension of the franking privilege, are evidentally just, and will be generally approved. If the free list could be abolished, and a few other improvements made, the Post Office Department would support itself, and confer a much gearter blessing upon the people.

GIVING SYSTEMATICALLY AND FROM PRINCIPLE.

The American Messenger says that for about seventeen years an anonymous letter has been received every month, directed to the Secretary of the American Tract Society, Boston, signed "A friend to the American Tract Society." For the first two years it contained $1 each month; for the next two years the sum was $2; the next two it was $3 per month; and when the systematic distribution of tracts in that city commenced, $2 more was added, making $5 per month, at which sum it has continued to this time. It is worthy of notice, that on every month, during this period, the letter has been received, without a failure; and also about the same day of the month—not varying in any instance more than two or three days from the 15th of each month—thus showing that the generous donor is as systematic and conscientious in giving to the Lord, as in paying his bank notes.

In February, 1846, this friend sent $75; and in August following, $75 more, to aid in sustaining a German colporteur among the Germans. At the same time he has continued his donation of $5 each month to the present. He began his contribution with $1 a month, or $12 per year, and regularly increased the sum till it amounts for the last two years to $210 annually.

It has been ascertained that this friend is a mechanic of moderate property, and that his donations are by no means confined to this Society. The following letter shows the principles and motives upon which he has cultivated this liberal spirit, even before he professed hope in Christ, or had united with a church. His case affords a happy illustration of God's faithfulness in blessing those who act on such principles in the use of their property to promote his kingdom on earth.

Boston, Nov. 26, 1846.

Rev. Seth Bliss—Dear Sir: The Lord continues to prosper me in my worldly possessions, and, I trust, to bless me with the renewing influences of the Holy Spirit. As a thank-offering both for the temporal and spiritual blessings which I enjoy, I inclose $75, for the American Tract Society, at Boston, for the support of a colporteur, whose labors I wish may be principally among the boatmen and others employed in the vicinity of and upon the canals, rivers and lakes, in the western parts of our country. And thus, while my heavenly Father continues to supply me with the means, I intend to appropriate $75 for your Society, semi-annually, for his continued support, and may the blessing of God attend his labors.

I know not but I am as able now to increase my contributions to $500 per annum for the support of the cause of Christ among my fellow men, and to pay it as promptly, as I was seventeen years ago to give $12 per annum, when I first commenced my contributions to your and other societies.

I have, on another occasion, told you that I believed giving to the Lord did not impoverish any man, so I still believe, provided it be done with a right spirit. We read that Jacob gave to the Lord one-tenth of all that God gave him, and afterwards that he increased exceedingly. I do therefore recommend to young men in particular, on commencing business, to live within their income, and to appropriate a portion of it to the service of the Lord, and see that it is promptly paid, at stated times.

Finally, I recommend to every one to read often the third chapter of Proverbs, and the sixth chapter of Matthew, and to make these the man of their counsel through life.

A Friend.

Robbing Peter to pay Paul.—No doubt there are many good men among the advocates of laws to prevent trading on Sunday. When these men are pressed with the question whether they expect to make conscientious observers of Sunday by means of statutes, with pains and penalties, they will not pretend such a thing, but say they only wish to place those who are conscientious on a level with their neighbors, by requiring all to rest. It strikes us, however, that if the persons who make this plea would look at the other side, they might see the fallacy of such reasoning. Take the state of things in the city of New York as an illustration of the country at large. There are now in this city some twelve thousand Jews, all of whom profess to be conscientious observers of the Sabbath, and of course have no scruples about working on Sunday. But the law forbids their attending to business on Sunday, and hence makes it necessary for them either to shut up shop two days out of the seven, or to attend to business on the day which they in heart believe to be the Sabbath. It is our deliberate opinion, that if statistics upon this subject could be collected, they would show that the Sunday laws make two persons violate their consciences by Sabbath labor, for every conscientious man that they save from labor on Sunday. To enact and enforce such laws is robbing Peter to pay Paul.

The South doing its own Work.—From an editorial in the New York Observer, on the "Annexation of Slave Territory," we cut the following gratifying paragraph: "It appears that some of the Southern Synods, and a large number of Presbyteries, have during their autumnal ecclesiastical meetings taken action 'on the actual state of the Southern churches in relation to the system of slavery,' and they are carefully maturing a report which shall embody the facts on that subject in an honest and impartial manner. Time will probably be required to perfect this statement of facts, but the whole discussion growing out of it, which is ably conducted, in a Christian spirit, is of the most important and valuable character, and the ultimate result will prove of great value to the cause of civil and religious freedom. The facts thus embodied will probably be laid before the Assembly at its meeting in Cincinnati in May next. Thus the South is doing its own work."

American Board of Missions.—The Boston Journal says that within a short period, very earnest applications for Christian teachers have been made to the Missionaries of the Madura station, in India, from thirty-four different cities or villages. And it is known, that for some years past, solicitations at the various Missionary stations in the Eastern countries, for the supply of instructors to surrounding districts, have been constantly multiplying. The Board have recently appointed twenty new Missionaries, in addition to the companies sent out within a few months past. There is at present a great increase of the Missionary spirit in various theological schools. Of those connected with the Union Seminary at New York, twenty-six have signified their willingness to enter the foreign field of ministerial labor, on the completion of their preparatory studies.

C. C. Burleigh in Prison.—We learn from the Pennsylvania Freeman, that C. C. Burleigh has been imprisoned in the West Chester jail, for selling books on Sunday, contrary to the statue. The complaint against him was made by James McKissick, an elder of the Presbyterian Church, in Oxford, whose zeal in behalf of the proper observance of the Sabbath was aroused by his being unfortunately worsted in a debate with Mr. Burleigh, at an Anti-Slavery meeting. The delinquent was fined four dollars, and on refusal to pay it, he was sentenced to six days' imprisonment. The fine, however, was paid by his friends, and he was released in the course of an hour or two. A great crowd was collected at the Justice's office, to hear the trial, and while waiting for a conveyance to take him to prison, the audacious criminal availed himself of so good an audience to deliver a most eloquent and effective Anti-Slavery lecture, but without alluding to the circumstances which brought them together. The incident is said to have caused a good deal of excitement in Chester County.

"Spicy" Papers.—The editor of the National Era says he is apt to distrust what are called "spicy" papers. They are not often strong, just, or truthful. Paragraphs, whose point depends on misrepresentation, strong assertion, broad caricature, coarse abuse, are all deemed "spicy" by a certain class of people. Careful statement, sober argument, measured censure or denunciation, they cannot appreciate. Obtuse in perception and sensibility, they can relish nothing but the loud tones and desperate flourishes of the bully. Reason may be cogent, powerful, vehement—it is never violent or abusive. It relies upon demonstration, not cursing and bitterness. Real intellectual power borrows no aid from extravagant phraseology. It is not verbose; it utters its conceptions strongly, but calmly; it strikes without blustering; its weapons are at once keen and polished. A weak but violent speaker relies upon tremendous efforts of head, hands, and heels, to produce an effect. The fewer his ideas, the more noise he makes. So, a weak but violent writer always agonizes. His rhetoric is hysterical. The English language is tortured into extravagant hyperbole, as if any language could supply the want of ideas. And yet this violent weakness, which reminds one of the desperate struggles of the motionless sleeper to overcome the nightmare, passes with some as evidence of strong thought and deep feeling!

QUESTIONS FOR SOLUTION.

1st. What are the means mostly to be used to produce a revival of pure religion in the churches?

2d. What is the best plan for churches to adopt in raising money for sustaining missionary and other benevolent operations?

3d. What qualifications should be considered necessary, to entitle a candidate to ordination for the gospel ministry?

The above questions, Mr. Editor, I consider to be of deep interest to us as a denomination, especially at the present time, when we are beginning to take a stand in the religious world, that our importance as a separate and peculiar denomination seems imperiously to demand. I do not design to discuss these questions myself, but offer them to the consideration of those who are interested equally with myself in their proper solution, and who are better able to do them justice. Yours in Christ,

G. M. Langworthy.

Missionary Success.—The "Evangelical Christendom" gives an interesting account of a movement which has recently taken place at Barisal, in connection with the labors of the Rev. S. Bariero, of the Baptist Mission. The utmost eagerness to hear the Word of God has been manifested by a large number of the natives. Congregations consisting of one hundred and fifty and two hundred persons, have assembled from great distances, to meet the missionary at various points during his journey, and to listen to the preaching of the gospel. In many cases great labor has been cheerfully undertaken, in order to secure such an opportunity. Speaking of an assemblage of inquirers and candidates for baptism, Mr. Bariero says: "Although most of them had not eaten for nine or ten hours, after being tired with shoving their canoes over paddy fields (now covered with water) for miles and miles together, yet they were more and more anxious to hear." The Spirit of God has accompanied his Word. Deep convictions of sin extensively prevailed. On one occasion, the place of meeting was a very Bochim. Numbers were brought to a simple and hearty reception of the Saviour; and on the morning of the first Sunday in October, one hundred and fifteen persons, after giving satisfactory evidence of their faith, were admitted by baptism into the Christian church. In the afternoon about one hundred and thirty persons partook of the emblems of the love of the dying Saviour. "What a sight," he adds, "it was, I cannot describe—so many brought from the power of satan unto God!"

Preachers for China.—Rev. Mr. Dean, whose long residence in China has made him perfectly familiar with the habits and wants of the Chinese, says in a letter to the N. Y. Recorder:—

"We ask you not to send them books and Bibles, paper and printing-presses; but we ask for ministers of the cross—preachers of Christ. The Christian church is practicing an imposition upon her own credulity, wasting her treasures, and trifling with the souls of the Chinese, by laboring to furnish them with books and the Bible, without corresponding efforts to give them the living teacher. Should we put the best translation of the Scriptures which can be made into the hands of the first scholars in the empire, they would say, 'How can I understand unless some one interpret?' The commission is, 'As ye go, preach!' This is the way in which our Lord proposed to convert the world, and it is enough that the servant be as his Master."

The Sultan.—The Rev. Dr. Baird, who has just returned from Constantinople, in a letter to the Journal of Commerce, says:—

"While at Constantinople I made the acquaintance of Mr. Carr, and had opportunities for several conversations with him, and was greatly pleased to hear him say that he believed the Sultan to be a liberal-minded, benevolent man, devoted to his country and the welfare of his people, and his ministers capable and earnestly desirous to coöperate with him in all his enlightened schemes for the improvement of the country and the instruction of the people. On the subject of toleration, he said he had not the slightest doubt but that the Sultan himself was of a thoroughly tolerant spirit, and desired to be a father, protector and benefactor to his whole people, without regard to religious differences of opinion, and that to this spirit he would conform his government as rapidly as he could in view of long-existing prejudices."

A New Thing under the Sun.—Shekib Effendi has been deputed by the Turkish Sultan to visit Rome for the purpose of congratulating Pius the Ninth on his accession to the Papal See. This is believed to be the first event of the kind in the annals of Romanism and Mohammedanism, of which the Pope and the Sultan are the respective heads. Strange things happen in this day of "alliances." What may we look for next?

The Plymouth Memorial says: "We understand that a large chest, containing several jugs of the 'critter,' nicely ensconced under layers of 'corned' beef, was discovered in the O. C. Road dépôt, in Boston, not long since. This is the very last expedient for concealing the 'cloven foot' of King Alcohol, and whoever conceived it must have been a bit of a wag, for the state of the beef (corned) was truly emblematical of the condition of those unfortunately subjected to the dominion of that vile tyrant."

General Intelligence.

TWENTY-EIGHT DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Hibernia arrived at Boston on Saturday last, bringing Liverpool dates to the 4th, and London to the 3d inst. She brings nothing of special importance to the general reader. The following is a summary:—

The cotton market is inactive. Wheat and flour have advanced.

A meeting was holden in London some days since to protest against the annihilation of the Republic of Cracow. Another year, and the existence of Cracow will have been forgotten.

In the House of Commons, on the 2d instant, Lord John Russel announced that her Majesty had been pleased to call a Council, to consider the best day on which to appoint a general fast and humiliation, on account of the present awful condition of the sister kingdom. This announcement was received with evident satisfaction by both sides of the House.

We find no farther particulars of the famine in Ireland, and therefore hope that the sufferings of the people have in some measure abated.

Mr. O'Connell, it is said, is dying. The state of his health prevents his removal to Ireland. His Confesser, Dr. Miley, left Dublin, by express, to attend him in London, where he now remains. His complaint is stated to be water on the chest and dropsy in the legs—fatal symptoms ever at his time of life.

The great event in the French political world, during the past month, has been the debate, in the Chamber of Deputies, on the address in answer to the King's speech from the throne. The Spanish marriages, and the annihilation of Cracow, were the only two subjects that occupied the public mind; and of those two the former was considered of paramount importance.

France, like Germany, is threatened with extensive emigrations to America—the excessive dearness of food is the moving cause.

The French Government contemplates the immediate institution of a line of steamships—four in number—between Havre and New York.

Mr. Everett, American Commissioner at China, has been received with much pomp and ceremony by Ki-Ing, the Imperial Commissioner, Mr. Cushing's old friend, and has partaken of a grand banquet, specially prepared in his honor by that Chinese High Functionary. During the dinner Mr. Everett gave the health of the Emperor of China, "with all the honors," and Mr. Imperial Commissioner Ki-Ing gave that of the President of the United States. The best feelings are manifested by Ki-Ing and all other officials towards the Americans.

FROM MEXICO.

The reports from the seat of war are of such varied and contradictory nature, that it is impossible for us to give any thing that can be relied upon as a statement of facts. But among the latest dates we find the following items, which, if true, are important:—

A correspondent of the New Orleans Commercial Times, writing from Brazos Santiago, under date of March 4, says: "A battle commenced on the night of the 23d ult. near Saltillo. It continued for two days. The Mexicans had no artillery, their force being composed alone of cavalry and infantry, numbering twenty thousand men, with a division of six thousand men in their rear, Santa Anna commanding in person. Gen. Taylor's force numbered, when the battle commenced, near five thousand men, composed of infantry, dragoons, and eighteen pieces of light artillery, and he was making his retreat to Monterey. He has lost about two thousand men. The Mexican loss is about four thousand five hundred. General Taylor was in hopes that he would be able to retain his position, which is about three miles from Saltillo, at a Mill Pond, where he possesses some natural defenses. A train of one hundred and twenty wagons had been captured by the Mexicans. They murdered all the teamsters and the escort of twenty-five men. They have also captured a train of sixty wagons, though nothing definite is known as to the disposal of the teamsters and escort. They have likewise captured a hundred pack mules loaded with suttlers' goods."

The American Flag, of March 3, says:—Gen. Taylor, while at Nueva, 22 miles from Saltillo, with 5,000 men, was attacked on the 22d ult. by a Mexican force of 15,000. Finding that he could not maintain his position, he made good his retreat to Saltillo, covering his wagon train. Here a severe engagement took place in the streets, in which the Mexicans suffered a heavy loss. After destroying what of the public stores he could not transport, he continued his retrograde movement on Monterey, until he reached the Rinconada Pass, where he was again attacked, but successfully defended himself. Here all the rumors, reports and letters leave him. Once in Monterey, and he would be safe, but his ability to accomplish this much was altogether problematical, as the Mexicans were swarming in every direction. A merchant in Camargo, under date of 25th ult., writes to his friends in this place: "Three expresses to-day from Monterey; fighting in Saltillo; Marina in Mexican possession; large train of wagons, 136, and 180 private mules, taken; McCullough's company taken; 8,000 cavalry this side of the mountains; and things in general turned upside down." From another source we learn that Col. Morgan has abandoned Ceralvo, destroying all property he could not take with him; that a courier from Monterey reported, at Camargo, 1,500 Mexicans between the two places, and that 6,000 more were in the neighborhood of Victoria. This much we cull from the mass of reports before us, without vouching for its correctness.

Later dates tend to confirm the above, but give no details.

Steam Navigation Between New York and Bremen.—The Schnellpost says that according to information from the best sources, it can assure the public that the preparations for this undertaking, so important to German commerce, and to the numerous Germans of the interior, are carried forward with all possible activity. The fear that the steamer Washington might be appropriated to warlike purposes by the Government is removed. The first voyage of this pioneer in steam navigation between New York and Germany, will, it is hoped, not be postponed beyond the 1st of May next; after that the intercourse will be regularly kept up. The Washington is, next to the lost Great Britain, the largest of the transatlantic steamers, and the price of a portion of its places will be within the means of those in comparatively narrow circumstances. The next ship of this line will, it is hoped, take its place in August. The charge for postage in these steamers will be twenty-five cents a letter.

Mexican Prisoners.—The following is an extract of a letter in the Philadelphia Inquirer, dated Island of Lobos, Feb. 16:—

Yesterday afternoon, three fine looking, intelligent Mexicans, approached the camp in a small boat, with segars, oranges, raisins, &c., which they came upon shore to dispose of. By many they were viewed with distrust—pronounced spies, &c., but nothing farther was done. They sold most of their articles at a reasonable rate and were permitted to depart. The commander of the St. Mary's, hearing of the circumstance, instantly ordered two boats' crews to go in pursuit and take them prisoners. Their course was toward a small Mexican schooner near the coast, which upon nearing was found to be thronged with the enemy. In a few minutes the schooner was enveloped in flames, and burned to the waters edge, about 7 o'clock. The three men were taken prisoners, brought to the camp, placed in irons, and a strong guard stationed over them. They will be detained until the arrival of Gen. Scott, who is hourly expected. Of course, this affair gave rise to much speculation, and numerous stories were circulating from one end of the island to the other; all of which I pass over. One thing is certain—when trading with the volunteers they spoke very intelligible English, but from the moment of their arrest, nothing but Spanish escaped their lips. Last night one of our men, who possesses a slight knowledge of the Spanish language, placed himself near their prison, and listened for some time to their conversation. His opinion is that they are Mexican officers in disguise. Certain it is that they are no common men. Seldom have I seen a finer, healthier, or more intelligent set of fellows. They have, however, missed their object; and I presume will be dealt with as the nature of their office deserves.

The Supplies for Ireland and Scotland.—Congress, at its late session, as our readers know, authorized the Secretary of the Navy to place at the disposal of Captain George C. DeKay, of New Jersey, the United States ship Macedonian, and at the disposal of Captain R. B. Forbes, of Boston, the United States ship Jamestown, "for the purpose of transporting to the famishing poor of Ireland and Scotland such contributions as may be made for their relief;" but the alternative discretion was given by the same resolution that "if the Secretary shall be of the opinion that the public interest will be better subserved thereby, he is authorized to dispatch said vessels upon the service aforesaid as public ships." It was the opinion of the Secretary, we understand, that, in the present exigencies of the service, the public interest would not be subserved by dispatching these vessels on their beneficent errands as public ships. The means necessary for such a purpose—the men especially—are imperiously required for naval operations against the public enemy. Directions, therefore, have been given to place the ships at the disposal of Captains DeKay and Forbes, in pursuance of the manifest will of Congress, as expressed in the first clause of its joint resolution, which was regarded as mandatory. They will be assigned, without their batteries, but caulked, and with tanks, ballast, spars, cables, anchors, sails and rigging, adapted in all respects to secure their safety for the contemplated voyage. In no respect do they go out as public ships. Their public charter has been wholly taken from them for the period of their voyages, by their transfer, under the direction of Congress, to private persons, in order to subserve the purpose of private charity. Whether it would have been appropriate or not—in good or bad taste—to send them out as national vessels, is a question which does not now arise. The joint resolution of Congress authorized their employment in a public capacity only in a certain contingency, and this contingency, in the judgment of the Executive, does not, at the present time, exist. Nothing remained, therefore, but to execute the resolution in the manner which has been adopted by the department. [Washington Union.

Outrages in Canada.—The spring election for charter officers commenced in Montreal on the 1st instant, and riot ruled rampart in that city as usual. The Minerve newspaper of that day says:—

"As early as Friday and Saturday last, armed bodies overran the streets, yelling vociferously. At an early hour this morning, a mob of most forbidding mien, mostly in rags, among whom were several 'gentlemen' disguised, seized on the carts of the cartmen, and rushed through the streets, screeching and groaning, and proceeded to the different polls where our (the Liberal) candidates were in majority, took forcible possession of the registers, and tore them into pieces. Toward noon, the infuriated band arrived at one of the polls of the East Ward, where N. Dumas, Esq., presided. The votes were taken in the weigh house of Bonsecours market. The rioters laid hold of the fifty-two pound weights, with which they burst in the door. One of them then presented a pistol to Mr. Dumas's breast, and demanded the books. They were told that Mr. Orr, the 'Constitutional' candidate, was in majority. Thereupon they retired, but soon learning the contrary, and that the Liberals were ahead, they returned to the number of five hundred, laid hands on a book, and tore it in pieces. Fortunately, it was a list of those having a right to vote, and not the poll book. The appearance of these riotous ruffians prevented many peaceable citizens from voting. The troops were called out in various election districts, but the voters had not much confidence in such protection. Toward four o'clock, the 'Constitutional' allies made a final onset at the polls of the East Ward. They attacked numbers of citizens, and destroyed much property. The stores were obliged to be closed. The officer commanding the troops had previously dismissed his men 'because there was no riot.' A few minutes afterward, the marauders arrived, and riot ruled rampant!"

SUMMARY.

The planet Mercury, says our neighbor, the Courrier des Etats Unis, has for some days been visible at the horizon, at evening immediately after sunset; it begins to disappear at seven o'clock. The curious, who wish to examine this celestial body, may discover it by the aid of a telescope of middling power in the northwest, near the star π in Andromeda, which is now by 48′ right ascension, and 32° 50′ declention, and nearly half way between the stars α and β of Andromeda. It is necessary to be careful not to confound it with the nebulous portion of the constellation, which has somewhat the appearance of a planet. The appearance of Mercury is a very rare phenomenon.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 10th inst., says that the schooner John Rowlett, Captain Hanlon, arrived yesterday from Brazos Santiago, whence she sailed on the 27th of February—four days subsequent to our last advices. She brought no mail whatever—not a letter nor a paper that we can hear of. Gen. Worth had not embarked with his division. The steamship Alabama and several other vessels were off the bar taking in troops and stores for the Gulf. The John Rowlett brought over four or five sick and discharged soldiers.

The Boston Advertiser learns that the Northern Railroad will be completed to North Andover, a farther distance of 15 miles, by July next—making 33 miles from Concord. In the course of the year it is expected it will be completed to the Connecticut river, and on the other side of the river the Central Railroad in Vermont will be finished to Montpelier. The receipts on the eighteen miles already opened, have exceeded $8,000 in the last two months, equal to 8 1-2 per cent., after deducting expenses, per annum. The trains run three times daily each way.

The New Haven Herald says that Deputy Marshal Davis returned on Saturday evening from New London, having in charge three seamen, accused of resisting their officers on board the ship Meteor, from Mystic, while in the Pacific. The men were sent to the United States in irons, and were temporarily confined in the New London jail, whence they are transferred to the prison for New Haven county, where they will remain until the April session of the United States Court in this city, before which they will be tried upon a charge of mutinous conduct.

We understand, says the Dedham Democrat, that the weavers in the Norfolk Manufacturing Establishment, in this town, made a strike on Wednesday last—all the hands except one refusing to reënter and commence operations unless the agent would come to their terms. The cause of the outbreak was the reduction of their wages some fifty to seventy-five cents per week by the factory lords. The girls were determined not to resume their operations unless they could be reinstated in their former wages.

Thompson's Bank Note Reporter says that $10 notes on several Banks have been got up by a nest of counterfeiters with this plate:—Vignette, a female, and a bird with a twig in its beak; an eagle between the signatures. On the right hand margin is a black ground an inch wide, with TEN engraved in it. We have seen tens of this plate on the Merchants' Bank, Poughkeepsie, and Bank of Newburgh; and to how many others it will be altered, of course we cannot say. Refuse all notes of the above description.

A young lad belonging to Newark, about sixteen years of age, named Gunn, in jumping from the cars of the Philadelphia train on Friday evening last, in the vicinity of the dépôt at Jersey City, struck against a post attached to the switch track, and two of the cars passed over one of his legs, lacerating it in such a manner as to render amputation necessary.

Our readers will remember the sensation which was created about a year ago by the discovery that a Mr. Muir, of Virginia, had been murdered by a man named Eppes. We learn from the New Orleans Commercial Times, that this notorious person was arrested in that city on Monday, 8th inst., by Capt. Winter, of the Second Municipality Police. He arrived there in the steamship Galveston from Texas.

The Sandwich Island News of Nov. 4, publishes a communication to the government from Mr. Ten Eyck, our commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, announcing the existence of war between this country and Mexico and the consequent blockade of Mexican ports. The same paper publishes a treaty just made between Denmark and the Sandwich Islands, which it considers more favorable to the island government than those with France and England.

A few days ago it was necessary to remove some earth and ruins from a place in Broadway, opposite Morris street, included in the territory burnt over in the great fire. Although it is twenty months since the conflagration took place, on removing the surface the fire was found to be still alive! Our informant said that steak might easily have been broiled on the coals which were discovered.

The Rev. Dr. Baird is delivering a course of lectures on Europe, to the young ladies of a school in New York. The knowledge of Europe and European affairs which he possesses, will enable him to make a very interesting and profitable course.

The principal hotel at Brazos Santiago, is named the Astor House. It consists of the wreck of a good sized Mississippi steamer, lying half in the water, and the rest imbedded in the sand. General Scott and suit lodged there at the last accounts. The fare was $3 per day.

The Alexandria Gazette says: "It was rumored at Washington that Gen. Worth (now Major General by brevet) will receive the appointment of Major General vice Hon. Thomas H. Benton, declined. It is also said that the appointment was tendered to Senator Dix, and declined. These, however, are mere rumors, and must be taken for what they are worth."

At Taunton, Mass., on Wednesday, 17th inst., Judge Colby sentenced three men—named John Perry, James Hoyt and Henry H. Cory—to the State Prison for life, for burglary in the house of David Howland, in Dartmouth, on the night of the 17th of December last, they being armed at the time with bludgeons, and stealing a silver watch and about $60 in money.

The Boston Medical Journal gives the case of a man subjected to what the surgeons call "actual cautery." He took the letheon, and "Dr. Warren run an iron rod, heated to a white heat, to the length of about two feet up and down the back, each side of the spine—burning two lines, one on one side and one on the other, and then carried it zigzag across, between the spinons processes, the same distance." All this time the patient is represented as totally unconscious of pain!

Major Samuel D. Ried, says the Charleston Mercury, a respectable planter of Green county, residing about 7 miles from Greensboro, at Hoddy, where he kept the Post Office, was shot on the night of Wednesday, the 14th ult., while passing from the office to his room. He was dead before his son could reach him. One of his negroes has since confessed the crime, and implicated three others; they have all been arrested.

Samuel Lawrence, Esq., of Lowell, has made a proposition to the Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Hurd-st. Lowell, to give them two hundred dollars annually, provided they consent to open the galleries of that church for the free admission of persons who may desire to attend. The proposition has been accepted. The galleries will conveniently accommodate five hundred persons.

The Shakers of Watervilet, Ohio, believe they have received a new revelation, and are sending out delegates, who hold public meetings in the large towns out west. They say there is now a crisis in the world's affairs, and they are constrained to sound the alarm. Seven men and six women were at Dayton recently.

We learn that all the stock of the telegraph to New Orleans has been taken, and the line will be at once put into construction. By the first of September we shall probably be able to get news all the way from the southwest metropolis in a little less than no time at all.

The Bath (Maine) Times says that the ship owners of Bath are reaping a rich harvest. One man has within four or five weeks chartered enough of vessels to amount to $40,000, after paying all expenses.

Mr. Hamlin, Representative from Penobscot District, Me., on his return home, had his trunk stolen in Philadelphia, wherein was contained his Congressional hire—amounting to $800 in gold. The Railroad Company paid Mr. H. the value of his trunk, but did not indemnify him for the loss of his wages.

The Boston Whig says that many of the liquor-sellers in that city, since the decision of the license case, contemplate giving up their business! The sacrifice of respectability and conscience at the shrine of obstinacy must be a losing business.

Mr. Josiah Duke, a very worthy citizen of Nansemond, and a member of the county court, was shot at and dangerously wounded, one night last week, while standing in the porch of his dwelling, about nine miles from Suffolk. A man named Rawls has been apprehended on suspicion of having perpetrated the crime.

DIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I.. Oct. 27, 1846, Mrs. Anna Vincent, aged 94 years. Sister Vincent was, for about sixty years, a member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton. She became a member of the Third Church in Hopkinton at its organization in 1835, of which she was an ornament until the long-wished-for summons came that called her hence to be with Christ. There have been but few in whose lives the world has had a more vivid illustration of the power of faith, or by whose death the church has been deprived of a greater ornament. She had manifested, during her long and useful life, a most zealous regard for the truth and was ardently attached to the church and the ordinances of the Gospel. Her labor is done, and she has, without doubt, gone to receive the reward of the righteous. A. B. B.

In Hopninton, R. I., March 7, of consumption, Isaac S. Crandall, in the 29th year of his age. Bro. C. became a subject of converting grace about nine years since, and united with the Third Church in Hopkinton. He died in hope of a glorious immortality. His death is a great loss to the church, as well as to the bereaved widow and family. His funeral was attended at Rockville, March 9. A sermon was preached by Eld. A. B. Burdick, from Psalm 102: 23, 24.

In Independence, N. Y., on the 6th of February, Mary C. Clarke, wife of Decatur M. Clarke, aged 24 years. She early made a public profession of religion, and connected herself with the Sabbath-keeping Church in Independence. Her life corresponded with her profession. Although called unexpectedly to leave a youthful husband and smiling infant, she was willing to go. S. S. G.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 6th inst., of inflammation of the windpipe, Benjamin Courtland Utter, son of John and Prudence Utter, in the 21st year of his age. He was sick for about five weeks, during a part of which time he suffered greatly. His friends rejoice to believe that death not only relieved him from bodily pain, but introduced him to heavenly bliss.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH.

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of The Illustrated Flora, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, Lewis & Brown, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work as it is published.

Jan. 10th, 1847.

Miscellaneous.

THE HEART.

Oh! could we read the human heart,
Its strange mysterious depths explore,
What tongue could tell or pen impart
The riches of its hidden lore?

Safe from the world's distrustful eye,
What deep and burning feelings play,
Which e'en stern reason's power defy,
And wear the sands of life away!

Think not beneath a smiling brow,
To always find a joyful heart;
For wit's bright glow, and reason's flow,
Too often hide a cankering dart.

The bird with bruised and broken wing,
Oft tries to mount the air again,
Among its mates to gaily sing
Its last melodious, dying strain.

The fire that lights a flashing eye,
May by a burning heart be fed,
Which in its anguish yearns to die,
While yet it seems to pleasure wed.

Oh! do not rashly judge the heart,
Though cold and vain it seems to be,
Nor rudely seek the veil to part,
That hides its deep, deep mystery.

THE CHINESE MECHANIC ARTS AND SOCIAL LIFE.

The following brief outline of Mr. Williams' fifth lecture is copied from the Journal of Commerce:—

The implements of the Chinese, says Mr. Williams, though less beautiful than those preserved from the ruins of Rome, are more useful. They have made them sufficient to subserve the common purposes of life, and at so low a price as to be universally accessible. For a long time they have made no improvements. The descriptions of Marco Polo are still applicable, so that though they were before the English of 1600, they are very far behind the nations of the West now.

Agriculture is fostered by government as a means of its own security; for farmers are isolated and contented. The pursuit is honored by the emperor in an annual plowing ceremony at Pekin. The lands are held from him in small lots, not in fee-simple, but as security for the payment of taxes. They descend to the eldest son, but the brothers may also settle upon them, so that subdivision is carried to a great extent. The principal grain crop of the country is rice. It is sown so thick as to make a dense turf, which is transplanted to the field, which has been in the mean time irrigated and prepared for it. The first crop is harvested in July, the second in November. Wheat, millet and buckwheat are raised as in other countries. Their implements of husbandry are very simple. A man may often be seen carrying plow, harrow, and buffalo harness, together on his back. The farms are without fences, the dykes used for irrigation being the principal landmarks.

The other labors of agriculture are the cultivation of cotton, and of the mulberry for garments, and tea for exportation. The emperor honors the culture of silk by an annual offering of mulberry leaves to the patron goddess of the silk manufacture.

The fine porcelain comes mostly from the province of Kiang-tzi; the common chinaware from several other provinces. It is made into many ornaments of beautiful forms. In their gardens, the wealthy delight to display many of these vases of large size; some are sunken in the earth, and filled up with limestone and sand, which is soon covered with moss, and bears the appearance of a natural rock.

They have very little skill in working metals. Their chasing in gold and silver is however elegant and unsurpassed. In carving they take the lead in some respects; the granite posts before the temples are sculptured with historic scenes, two or three inches deep, and quite perfect. The lackered ware is made by coating wood with the varnish of the lacker tree, colored with lampblack and embellished by gilding. The manufacture of lanterns is an extensive business in a country where they are so much used; they are made with a great variety of designs and ornaments. Their lamp oil is obtained from the tea and peanut.

The Chinese are without inventive genius, but are good imitators. Already they have begun to appropriate English inventions. In the manufacture of glassware they have been so successful as to drive the foreign article from the market. In the late war they used thirty brass cannons which they had made after a cannon taken from a wrecked ship. They are now making pistols, fowling-pieces, and muskets, clocks and watches. A thirty-six gun frigate, constructed by a Chinese shipwright was considered by foreigners as quite creditable and seaworthy.

They have no knowledge of anatomy or physiology; and their medical theory is therefore wholly empirical, though their practice is improved by observation. They suppose that diseases are caused by evil spirits, and their practice is directed to their expulsion. They stop eating and working, and use vegetable medicines mostly. The patient bargains beforehand about the price and time of cure. They vaccinate in both arms since 1820, and used to innoculate in the nose. They practise no more important surgical operations than teeth-pulling and cupping.

Their music, like their medicine, is peculiar. Their singing is in a kind of falsetto, produced by closing the glottis and forcing air through the nose; and Mr. W. never heard man, woman or child sing in any other manner. They use a variety of wind and stringed instruments, and drums, with which they make execrable music, keeping good time, but without the least harmony, to a foreigner it is mere din and confusion. They have no knowledge of dancing, and when they saw it practised by the Portuguese, they inquired if it was for medical purposes!

After some remarks concerning the attainments of the Chinese in mathematics, astronomy, and geography—statements respecting their chronology, which Mr. Williams is inclined to credit, and which is not discordant with that of the Bible—and an account of their theatres and festivals—he concluded with a description of their social system, with its attendant evils—slavery, polygamy, and infanticide.

The difficulty of conveying a right idea of Chinese character, arises from the strange blending of intellectual attainments with debased morals. On the whole they are beyond other Asiatics, far beyond their neighbors, and yet not to be compared with the lowest Christian countries. They are educated, but their education is founded wholly on ambition. They are civilized, but their social system rests on selfishness alone. Yet, though lights and shadows are strangely mingled, society is, externally, courteous and pleasant.

But, with all their civilization, the Chinese are heathen still. The moral pollution of the nation is indiscribable. They are, moreover, dishonest, cruel and cowardly; and these traits, with their difficult language, are the great obstacles to their Christianization.

SOMNAMBULISM.

We have the following information from a gentleman who witnessed the transaction. He resides No. — Beekman street which is kept as a private boarding house, and occupied what is usually termed an attic room, from the roof of which project a number of gable windows. While comfortably enjoying a nap on Saturday night last, he was awakened by a queer noise, somewhat like the scratching of a cat, proceeding from the outside of one of the windows. On getting up to inquire into the cause, what was his his surprise to find creeping along on the gutter a man, without any clothing upon his person but a night shirt! His first thought was that the strange individual was crazy, but on second thought he concluded that he must be a sleep-walker. He refrained from making any noise for fear of frightening the dreamer, and causing him to fall from his dangerous position, and he consequently ascended to the scuttle of the house and there watched the movements of the stranger. He passed a number of windows, pausing a moment before each, as if he desired to enter, after which he placed himself in an upright position, and turned completely round as if musing upon the sleeping city, and then walked directly to the summit of the roof and there rested himself, shivering with cold and apparently much exhausted. The gentleman who was watching, improved his opportunity, and stepped forward to seize and to awaken the somnambulist, who was very much embarrassed at finding himself in such a predicament; and it was then ascertained that he resided in a neighboring house and had reached the roof by the scuttle of his own dwelling. He was taken home and thus the matter ended. [N. Y. Express.

A BOA CONSTRICTOR.

In the marshes of the valley the boa constrictor is often met with of considerable size. It is not uncommon throughout the province, particularly by the wooden margins of lakes, marshes and streams. Sometimes they attain the enormous length of forty feet—the largest I ever saw at this place, but it was not alive. Some weeks before our arrival at Sape, the favorite riding horse of Señor Lagoeira, which had been put out to pasture not far from the house, could not be found, although strict search was made for it all over the Fazenda. Shortly after this, one of his vaqueiros, in going through a wood by the side of a small river, saw an enormous boa, suspended in the fork of a tree which hung over the water. It was dead, but had evidently been floated down alive by a recent flood—and, being in an inert state, it had not been able to extricate itself from the fork before the water fell. It was dragged out to the open country by two horses, and was found to measure thirty-seven feet in length. On opening it the bones of a horse, in a somewhat broken condition, and the flesh in a half digested state, were found within it, the bones of the head being uninjured. From these circumstances we concluded that the boa had devoured the horse entire. [Gardner's Brazil.

ANCIENT MUSIC.

The Pandean pipe has generally been ranked as the first musical instrument ever invented, and this position is strongly corroborated by the silent, yet unerring, testimony of Sculpture and Painting, both which branches of art remain unquestionable evidence of the use of the pipe long before we have the portrait of any other instrument. Some, however, are disposed to concede the first place to the harp, and many stout authorities maintain its claim. This instrument, then only boasting three strings, answered to three seasons of the primeval year—the treble, typical of Spring—the tenor resembling Summer—and the bass resembling Winter.

Flutes are said to have been invented by a Phrygian named Hyagria, at Celent, a city of Phrygia. On this instrument were first played the harmony called Phrygian, and other tunes, of the Mother of the gods, a Dionysius, of Pan, of the divinities of the country, and the heroes, Trepander, the Lesbian, directed the flute players to reform the tunes of the ancients, and changed the old music about the year 645 before Christ, as appeared by the Parian chronicle—twelve years after, Tirpander added three more strings to the lyre.

HUMBLE LIFE.

There is a happiness in humble life—who can doubt it? The man who owns but a few acres of land, and raises an abundance to supply the necessary wants of his family—can ask for no more. If he is satisfied with his condition—and there are thousands so situated who are—ho man is more happy. No political movement disturbs his repose—no speculative mania chases the calm serenity from his mind—no schisms in the church throw shadows beneath his golden sky. His family is the world to him; his little lot is all his care. Who sighs not for such a life of calmness and serenity? Amid the cares and anxieties of business, who would not exchange his prospects and his honors for the repose of him who is contented and happy on his own spot of ground, far from the noise and bustle, princely luxury and squalid poverty, of city life? If there is a situation congenial to the true spirit of man and the growth of virtue, it is amid the rejoicings of nature—in the calm retirement of rural life.

Be Social.—How different would be the aspect of human society, if all persons would throw aside some of the reserve they have, and be more open, frank and sociable than they are now. In most instances now, when strangers meet there is a coldness and reserve that dampens the flow of good feeling and freezes up the affections of the heart. How we have been pained to see individuals thrown into each other's presence when the fountains of the heart were locked up, and no disposition manifested to let them loose by social conversation. A single word well timed and fitly spoken under such circumstances, would do more to relieve individuals of their embarrassment, than any thing else. But why should not every body so far forget conventional forms as to be sociable to strangers, when thrown into their presence? Americans are wanting in this respect.

PALINDROMES.

Time, the beautifier of the dead,
Adorner of the ruin, comforter,
And only healer when the heart has bled—
Time! the corrector when our judgments err,
The test of truth, love—sole philosopher,
For all the rest are sophists. [Byron.

If the above word, TIME, be artificially transposed, or metagramatised, it will form the following words:—meti, item and emit. Now if the beforenamed word and its anagrams be placed in the following quadratic position, then it will form what may be termed an anagramatic palindrome:—

T I M E
I T E M
M E T I
E M I T

The word, Time, is the only word in the English language which can be thus arranged, and the different transpositions thereof are all at the same time Latin words. These words in English as well as in Latin, may be read either backwards or forwards, either upwards or downwards.

The English words, TIME, ITEM, METI and EMIT, (to send forth,) are mentioned above, and of the Latin ones, (1) Time, signifies—fear thou; (2) Item—likewise; (3) Meti—to be measured; and (4) Emit—he buys.

The Husbandman and his Son.—Lying at the point of death, a husbandman, being desirous that his son should pursue the same occupation in which he himself had been engaged all his life, made use of this expedient to induce him to enter upon it with industry and perseverance. While the boy knelt at his father's bedside, with his other children, the latter addressed him thus: "All the patrimony, my son, which I have to leave you is my farm and vineyard, of which I make you sole heir. But I charge you not to let it go out of your hands, for if I have any treasure beside, it is buried somewhere in the ground, within a foot of the surface." This made the son conclude that he talked of money which he had hidden there; so after his father's death, with unwearied diligence and application, he carefully dug up every inch both of the farm and the vineyard. From which it came to pass, that, though he found not the treasure which he expected, the ground, by being so well stirred and loosened produced so plentiful a crop of all that was sown on it, as proved a real and no inconsiderable treasure. We see from this that industry is itself a treasure.

Patent Medicine Law in Maine.—A late law in the State of Maine requires that the composition, and the proportion of each article of the composition, of every patent medicine offered for sale, shall be printed on a label and pasted on the bottle, package, &c., containing it, under penalties that would make a common pedler wince. It is well known, however, that a law never was enacted which a Yankee could not evade. This was true in regard to the nine-pin law; a tenth pin was added, and thus the statute became inoperative. A daring fellow, who has a patent medicine much in demand by the down east people, called at the Chinese Museum, in Boston lately, and for two dollars had the composition, proportions, &c., of each article in the compound translated by Mr. Chaoong, into Chinese, and in that language the required labels are printed. He thus complies with the letter of the act, because the law does not define the language of the labels. By the time the Legislature is again in session, he will have supplied the market, and will, at his leisure, laugh at the combined wisdom of the representatives of the people.

Napoleon's Disguise Detected.—If the life of Savage Landor was written, it would be one of the most remarkable on record. He has lived much abroad in the most eventful times in the history of the world. He witnessed the progress of the French Revolution; saw Bonaparte made First Consul; saw him and his armies go out to victory; saw and conversed with the greatest of his generals, and the most remarkable men of those times and scenes. His conversation, therefore, abounds with facts and personages from his own actual knowledge, of which most other men have only read. On the fall of Napoleon he saw him ride, attended by one servant, into Tours, whose inhabitants hated him, and would have rejoiced to give him up to his enemies. He was disguised, but Landor recognized him in a moment. Hating and despising the man as he did, yet he never for a moment dreamed of betraying him. He, however, went close to the fallen Emperor, and touching his arm, said, "You are not safe, here. I have penetrated your disguise and others may." "Sir," replied Bonaparte, "you are, I perceive, an Englishman. My secret is in good keeping." He mounted and rode away, wholly undiscovered by the townsmen.

Plant Trees.—Plant trees every where, we say; let them shade our streets, and grow wherever there is room for them. Especially plant them in the country, where open fields will admit, and be sure that in the end they will surprise the planter by their growth whilst he and his children are sleeping! In evidence of this, let us quote an anecdote to the purpose. It is related of a farmer on Long Island, that he planted an ordinary field of fourteen acres, with suckers from the locuts (a native of this country) in the year of his marriage, as a portion for his children. His eldest son married at twenty-two. On this occasion the farmer cut about $1,500 worth of timber out of his locust wood, which he gave to his son to buy a settlement in Lancaster county. Three years after he did as much for his daughter. And thus he provided for his whole family; the wood in the mean time repairing by suckers all the losses it suffered. [Boston Transcript.

VARIETY.

What a mysterious thing is a blush! that a single word, a look, or a thought, should send that inimitable carnation over the cheek, like the soft tints of a summer sunset! Strange, too, that it is only the face, the human face that is capable of blushing! The hand or the foot does not turn red with modesty or shame, more than the glove or the sock which covers it. It is the face that is the heaven! There may be traced the intellectual phenomena, with a confidence amounting to moral certainty. A single blush should put the infidel to shame, and prove to him the absurdity of the doctrine of chance.

A cow exposed to the severity of the weather in cold winter days, from morning till night, without shelter will take little exercise, but stand shivering with cold, not being able to lie down comfortable on the cold, melting snow. It is a mistaken notion that cattle and sheep should be much exposed to render them hardy. Some farmers say that they leave their cattle out because their business calls them from home; this is a poor excuse. It would be better to turn their cattle out for water only once each day, and tie them up immediately after drinking, than to leave them all day exposed to the open air.

Those who are most experienced in the cultivation of the sun-flower are sanguine that with a proper soil and proper cultivation, it is more profitable than wheat or corn. The seeds are more oleaginous than those of the flax plant, and combine the qualities for table use of the best olive oil; for burning of the best sperm, without its smoke; and for painting, it is said by painters who have used it, to be superior to linseed, as it is more rapid in drying, equally easy in spreading, and without forming a much denser coat.

The turnip fly lays its eggs in Autumn, but the insect is not developed until the following Spring, when it is animated by the warmth of the soil and usually comes forth to commence its depredations cotemporaneously with the plant on which it is to feed. Stirring the soil for a fortnight or so previous to sowing and affording a good dressing of sulphur, house ashes and soot, equal parts, as soon as the plants appear, is often an effectual remedy. Indeed, we have never known it to fail.

The man who intends to regulate his life by set rules, will find before he has traveled far along its path that there are but few rules, which are not changed by circumstances or persons. We like to see a man, not hedged in by rules, but striving as he goes along, to give all his neighbors their share of the pathway. There is room enough for all, and the true way to pass through the world easy, is to remember the "Golden Rule," the only rule which will not admit of an exception.

Professor Jackson, in one of his highly able and scientific lectures in Boston, illustrating the manner in which the improvement of soil, immediate and permanent, may be effected, says that "a farm within his knowledge, with a blowing sand, a pine, barren, and almost hopeless soil, on which ten bushels of corn to the acre could scarcely be grown, by the judicious application of ashes, has been made to produce forty or fifty bushels to the acre."

As a noble lord and gentleman were standing together, a boy came along leading a calf with both hands. Says the lord to the gentleman, 'You shall see me make that boy let go his calf.' He then advanced towards the boy, expecting that he would take off his hat; but the boy took no notice of him. 'Sirrah,' said his lordship, 'do you know who I am.' 'Yes, my lord,' answered the boy. 'If your lordship will please to come and hold the calf, I will pull off my hat to you.'

Chief Justice Wells stated recently at the Municipal Court, that in sentencing for violations of the License Law, the Court would hereafter require the convicted to give bonds for his future good behavior during one year; and that in case of a violation of the License Law within that time, the laws would be rigidly enforced, both upon the guilty party and upon the bail.

If there are any doubts as to the age which a goose will attain, they appear to be settled by the fact that a goose in the family of Mr. Hibbs, near Newtown, Pa., has died at the age of fifty years. She remained that period in the family in which she was hatched, having, as it is supposed, been the matron of three hundred geese.

A Queen's Counsel in Montreal, inveighing against a horse dealer, said—"Is it not true that jockeys have had a bad character in all ages, all through the world?" But the Judge cut short his eloquence by replying—"Ah! Mr. Queen's Counsel, there are other professions in the world of which the same things are said!"

The Dover, (Eng.,) Telegraph states that another musical mouse has been recently caught at Dover, and being caged, sings daily in a manner similar to a canary bird. Its appearance is similar to the common mouse, except that the tail is longer and the head smaller, with full and very bright eyes.

The Philadelphia American says that two sisters, Hannah Gillapsy and Lucy Elkinton, who have for many years lived together in a house in Almond street, both expired about noon on Monday, almost at the same instant. The former was in her 90th and the latter in her 86th year. They were members of the Society of Friends.

There is a very common talent, passing for a great deal more than it is worth—the sole talent of many quite distinguished writers—which lies in the putting of words together so fitly and musically that they seem to sing a new truth, when it is "an old song," with no variations.

One fault wilfully committed, authorizes the imputation of many more. When the ear is opened to accusations, accusers will not be wanting; and every one will officiously come with stories against a disgraced person, where nothing can be said in their favor.

A country merchant who keeps a general assortment advertises among other things, 'Black men's gloves; Plain lady's slippers; Red children's stockings; and new children's books.'

The celebrated David Hume once declared he would rather possess a cheerful disposition, inclined always to look on the bright side, than with a gloomy mind, be master of an estate of ten thousand a year.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

Mr. Editor:—The importance of the question as to the morality of the sabbatic law, it being the point on which the whole matter practically hinges to many minds, will justify me, perhaps, in dwelling on it a little longer. The question may be considered in two branches, namely: What is a moral, as distinguished from positive, law? and, Is the fourth commandment such a law?

I. What is a moral law? On this point I am sorry that "E. W. D." and myself cannot seem to coincide, though I think we differ more in words than in sense, more in the application of principles than in principles themselves. If he chooses to call what I designate as moral, natural laws regulating moral conduct, I would not contend for terms, though I think every mind must fail to perceive any distinction between these and what he too calls moral. What natural law of duty towards God and man does not involve "essential utility?" Though to make this the ground or measure of obligation, or, so far as our mind can perceive, the essential and distinguishing characteristic of any law of duty natural or moral, savors of a school of ethics for which I have little fondness. I have not, for my own part, designed to set up any standard of the morality of laws or duties, but only follow that of Bishop Butler, before mentioned, and to which I understood your correspondent to subscribe. I will quote it again and more fully. "Moral precepts are precepts, the reason of which we see; positive precepts are precepts, the reason of which we do not see. Moral duties arise out of the nature of the case itself, prior to external command; positive duties do not arise out of the nature of the case, but from external command" (Analogy, &c., part II. ch. 1.) Is it not plain from the latter branch of his statement, as well as from the whole drift of his argument, that in the former, Butler means the "reasons which we see," or "do not see," irrespective of the precept being or having been verbally commanded? A moral precept or law, is, according to him, a precept or law the propriety of which is so manifest from the very nature of things, that it is in effect imposed on men through the conscience, without any word, and which no formal statement can render more binding, however desirable this may be in order to clear our conceptions, and so stimulate our obedience. A moral duty is one which we are bound to perform before any injunction from without is laid upon us. This is the view which I intended to present in my last communication, and when I said, writing in haste, that "reason and conscience are the only source of moral obligation," "the purely moral source," I meant that whenever our minds perceive any of those relations, toward God or men, which are the basis of obligation, it is the practical reason, the conscience or moral sense, which decides as to our duty in the case. It matters not whether our knowledge of these relations be obtained through the unaided understanding, or only from the mirror of the written Word; and while a revelation is indispensable to discover to us relations, such as those which we sustain to the Son of God and the Holy Ghost, otherwise entirely hidden from our views—and highly important in correcting our impressions of those relations which are already known, as well as in adding the divine sanction to our moral judgments; still, when these relations are once clearly seen, no command is necessary to oblige us to the corresponding moral duties; and if a command is essential to awaken the sense of any obligation, it is not a moral, but a positive command, and a positive obligation. Does "E. W. D." then hold that an external revelation is very desirable to illustrate our relations, particularly toward God? I agree with him. But if he supposes that, after that, a precept is still required to establish the appropriate moral duty, and to make it moral, I think he disagrees with Butler, and every other writer on such subjects that I remember to have consulted. With Butler, I believe, "moral" as opposed to positive, is equivalent to "natural" when applied to matters of duty.

At all events, leaving learned names and questions of terms, here are facts. Some duties grow so plainly out of our moral relations, whether perceived by revelation or without, that we feel, before inquiring into their "essential utility," that we ought to perform them; that God will (and he does) hold us, as we hold ourselves, responsible for their performance. Of this description are love to God and acts of worship; equity and kindness towards men. These things may be externally commanded, if it so pleased God, but if not, men are bound to render them nevertheless, and He condemns those who, without such command, neglect them. These are what I call moral duties. The law which commands them is the law of conscience, the prescription which his Maker whispers secretly to the soul of man. This is the law of which the Apostle says, (Romans ii. 14, 15,) "these (the Gentiles) not having the (written) law are a law unto themselves," &c., where the train of his reasoning goes to show that they are just as really guilty and as justly condemned for breaking the law written on their hearts, as the Jew for the breach of the written law. And this is the moral law; while the several intimations of duty given by conscience are moral precepts. This law, with all its precepts, is obviously, and must ever be, binding on all mankind.

Again, there are other duties, which are felt to be such, simply because they are commanded. Examples of this kind are the Passover, Circumcision, Baptism, and Fellowship with the church of Christ. These particular duties never could be learned merely from any; the clearest preception of the relations on which they rest; though we might see that something to the same ends respectively was called for. When once those things are commanded, obedience becomes a moral duty to those on whom they are enjoined, but others are still left, as may be seen from the examples just mentioned, as if no command had been given. These, then, are positive duties, and the precepts which inculcate them are positive precepts.

To one or the other of these classes all laws which involve moral obligation must be referred.

II. Our second question is, To which of them does the fourth commandment belong? or, rather, does it belong to the first? This precept enjoins a weekly rest during a certain entire day of every week—an absolute, compulsory rest. This the law enjoins, and nothing else. To keep that day holy by setting it apart strictly for rest, was to fulfil the law. Now is this a moral precept? That is to say, is it one, the reasons of which, as a universal rule, we perceive so as to make it our duty to observe just this rest, prior to external command? Who will maintain it? That it is man's duty to rest from toil, has undoubtedly "essential utility" in its favor and something more; but without special command from God, he must discharge his duty as best he could in the use of his own judgment, and the proper proportion of rest would vary greatly in different cases. That he should rest just so much, and just in that way, as is prescribed in the law to which "E. W. D." confidently refers as explicit and all-sufficient, "plain and practicable," is no more a moral duty than that of baptism or offering sacrifices. That man should subsist on proper food involves "essential utility," and there were doubtless good and important reasons why God regulated this matter to some extent among his ancient people; yet we, even subsequent (not "prior") to the external command, eat pork where we judge best, with some other Jewish abominations

But it will be said (though I see not how "E. W. D.," who adheres so tenaciously to the plain and practicable commandment, can urge this,) that the Sabbath was intended as a religious rest. And that it came to be so regarded in a certain sense by the Jews, is certain. Though the law required nothing more than was common to all their festivals, a few special ceremonies at the seat of worship, to which, of course, the people generally after reaching Canaan could not resort (see Lev. xxiv. 8; Num. xxviii. 9, 10;) the prophets seem to have seized upon this frequent rest as giving them opportunity for spiritual benefit to the people; and towards the close of their national existence the synagogue worship was introduced into their towns. These were uses of which the day was susceptible under that system, but not even contemplated by Moses, so far as appears in its institution, and certainly not matters of command. Yet the common view, I suppose, places its religious design first, and makes the rest in a great measure subordinate to this.

But even in this complex and non-legal character, as a day of devotional rest, who will affirm that the law written in men's hearts ever could of itself require them to observe it? It is the less necessary to urge this question, since I do not find that any theologians suppose the fourth commandment, even in this mistaken view of it, to be strictly moral. It is, they say, partly moral and partly positive; "moral, as requiring the consecration of a part of our time to the immediate service of God; positive, as it appropriates the seventh part of it."* Now it so happens that the law requires nothing but what is here pronounced a positive duty, by one of the most strenuous defenders of the perpetuity of the Sabbath. And how could it fail to occur to the man who penned that sentence, that the duty of keeping the Sabbath, if moral, certainly could not be evangelical. To "consecrate a part of our time to the immediate service of God"—what a text would this have been for a Paul! But this transfer of ideas proper to the Jewish Sabbath to the Lord's Day, suggests some thoughts with reference to the "essential utility" of the Sabbath under the Gospel, which must at least be reserved till another opportunity.

On the whole, I conclude that the Sabbath, whether viewed in its true idea of a hebdomadal rest, simply and strictly, or as a rest for purposes of devotion, is not, nor is claimed to be, by its advocates generally, a moral institution of binding authority, except so far as it is specially commanded of God. And I have not yet seen clearly whether "E. W. D." is of a different opinion; but since this is a point where, if wrong, I specially desire to be corrected, I have entered fully, and I fear tediously, into its examination.

As a positive ordinance for the Jews, it would be easy, did space permit, to specify a number of important ends subserved by it, which show that it was "a fit and beautiful element of that wonderful constitution."

But it remains for us still to inquire whether the fourth commandment is not proved to be moral, from its place in the Decalogue. Here I must caution my fraternal opponent against "the web of traditional interpretation." I fear he is already "entangled." He says "the phrase moral law is applied by preëminence to the ten commandments"—by what authority? Has it not struck him as strange, in this view of the subject, that our Saviour, the new Legislator, in giving the substance of the moral law, on two different occasions, concentrates the whole into a pair of fruitful precepts, neither of which is found in the Decalogue, but both in other parts of the Mosaic code. (See Matthew xxiii. 37—40. Luke x. 27, 28, with the references.) Yet this has been taken as a summing up of the two tables, so exactly dividing (?) the two classes (?) of precepts of the Decalogue! Beware, I say, of the traditional interpretation. In other instances Christ and the Apostles bring from the Decalogue and the rest of the code indifferently, those parts of the law which were of perpetual force, and in such a way, one might think, as indicated a desire to turn off Jewish minds from all particular, formal precepts, and make them feel that Love, in its enlightened exercise, without ceremonial observances, and unconstrained by external injunctions, is the fulfillment of all previously existing law. Is not the opinion that Christ or his Apostles meant to distinguish the Decalogue particularly from the remainder of the system as containing the moral law, by preëminence, the merest assumption imaginable?

I suppose that in giving to the Hebrews a politico-religious constitution, the Decalogue was intended to present at once those fundamental principles which were most immediately essential to them. From this circumstance, as well as from its being the part first delivered, it was given with special solemnity, and justly merited from them peculiar regard. This by no means implies that it was looked upon by them as exclusively moral; indeed this distinction does not seem to have been thought of in Scripture; and it was afterwards expounded and added to from time to time, moral and ceremonial precepts being mingled together through the whole, until the result was "the Law."

This Law is done away in Christ; and if any man claims that the Decalogue, as such, forms an exception, let him bring the authority of Christ for his opinion. That the moral principles of the Law, whether in the Decalogue, or elsewhere, are not annulled, is true enough, for two reasons; one, that from the nature of the case, they cannot be annulled, God and man remaining as they are, not even if "essential utility" to our view required it; the other, that Christ has, specifically, perhaps in every instance, and if not so, yet at least summarily, sanctioned and reënacted them in the New Testament as "fundamental laws of his kingdom." Is it not of necessity that when a new code or covenant comes upon the ground of an old one, the old, so far certainly as dependent on formal precepts, is de facto abrogated, except what may be incorporated in its substitute?

That the Sabbath, so far from being thus excepted, is expressly made void, I showed before, by references to the New Testament, which, as to their spirit, might be multiplied, and the force of whfch, it seems to me impossible by any candid and intelligent interpretation to resist.

In regard to the assertion of your correspondent, that the Sabbath existed before the Jew, I shall only say, till some form of proof is adduced, that the institution of a weekly rest for men, plainly, to my mind, dates from the time mentioned in Exodus xvi. 22, 23. There Moses received from the Lord a direction to consecrate the next day as a (not the according to our version) "resting of a holy rest," of which the people appear never to have heard. And I may observe in passing, that it was fixed to a particular day of an already existing week. I am aware that it will be urged that God sanctified the seventh day in Paradise; and will just add, at the evident risk of tiring all human patience, a word or two on this point. When the Sabbath had been given to the Israelites, in part at least, as one of the many safeguards against idolatry with which it was necessary to protect them, it being a frequent memento of their allegiance to the Supreme Creator of all things; Moses, writing many years after, the account of the creation, relates particularly the consecration of the seventh day, in the intention of God, to that use to which it had been subsequently appointed at Sinai. This fact was adapted to confirm their fidelity to Him whose rest they weekly copied, without implying in the least, that God at once revealed the view of the seventh day to man as the reason why he too should set apart that day.

INDAGATOR.

---

* See Dick's Theology, II., 516; compare also especially his remarkable concession that the consecration of one day in seven is purely a positive appointment (II., 535, 536.) In this, if I remember, as in most respects, he expresses the views of Turretin.

SUNDAY IN PARIS.

The manner in which the Sunday is desecrated at Paris, does not give an American Protestant a highly favorable opinion of the state of religion in France. If, on some of the great fete-days in summer, (which almost invariably occur on Sundays,) he goes with the multitude to see the water-works at St. Cloud or at Versailles, or strolls among the motley groups surrounding the tents and booths on the Champs-Elysees, he witnesses scenes that remind him forcibly of old John Bunyan's description of Vanity Fair. He would scarcely be surprised to come at any moment upon a jeering crowd, around the cage of Faithful and Christian. To encounter there any other Christian than the immortal tinker's pilgrim, might still more astonish him. He is only too apt, after a short residence in this gay and wicked city, to forget his own claim to the name of Christian, as well as the duties which bearing the name imposes. Yielding gradually to the influences of habit, he becomes accustomed to the sound of labor and noisy pleasure, on a day which in his own land is called a "Sabbath, a day of rest," and even, it may be, assimilates his life to that of unthinking thousands around him. He makes purchases as readily as on any other day at the shops, the great majority of which are open as usual, and allure him by their brilliant displays. In the evening, if he is not seen playing billiards, or cards, or dominos at a cafe, he is sure to be found at some public ball, or at one of the numerous theatres, which are always most fully crowded on Sunday.

If, during the day, he entered a church, he has been impelled by mere curiosity, and not by religious motives. As a tourist, he must "do" so much sight-seeing, and a temple dedicated to the worship of God, inspires in him as little pious emotion as a visit to a palace, a park, a library, a gallery of paintings and sculpture, a scientific museum, a botanical garden, or the royal stables. He is attracted to the churches of Paris and its vicinity, by the historical associations connected with them, by the splendor of their internal decorations, by the pomp of their ceremonies, by their fine music, or by the eloquence of some of their preachers.

A Hymn composed by Rishnu, the first Hindoo who was baptized in Bengal, and who subsequently became a preacher of the Gospel:

O thou, my soul, forget no more
The Friend who all thy mis'ry bore;
Let every idol be forgot,
But O, my soul, forget Him not.

Brumhee* for thee a body takes,
Thy guilt assumes—thy fetters breaks;
Discharging all thy dreadful debt,
And canst thou e'er such love forget?

Renounce thy works and ways with grief,
And fly to this most sure relief—
Nor Him forget who left his throne,
And for thy life gave up his own.

Infinite truth and mercy shine
In Him, and He himself is thine;
And canst thou, then, with sin beset,
Such charms—such matchless charms, forget?

Ah! no; till life itself departs
His name shall cheer and warm my heart;
And, lisping this, from earth I'll rise,
And join the chorus of the skies.

Ah! no; when all things else expire
And perish in the melting fire,
This name all others shall survive,
And through eternity shall live.

ANCIENT AND MODERN TYRE.

Here I am, seated in this ancient city of Tyre. How are the mighty fallen! How changed is this Turko-Egyptian-Arabic town, dirty and disgusting as it is, and filled with all manner of abominations, from the mighty Tyre of antiquity, the queen of nations! Surely has the malediction of the Almighty fallen upon her, and the prophecy of Ezekiel been fulfilled, that the world should lament over her, "saying, what city is like Tyrus—like the destroyed in the midst of the sea?"

It is, at present, a small place situated on the shores of the Mediterranean, and upon an extensive plain, now sterile and uncultivated, but once rich and productive. The Ridges of Lebanon diminish here much in height, and recede from the sea, so as to leave an extent of country, beautiful to the eye, but desolate and dreary. The town contains about twenty-five hundred inhabitants, and it is the very picture of misery. The buildings are old, mean and dilapidated; the streets narrow, dirty, and crooked, and with all the usual disgusting appendages of a Turkish town. The inhabitants are in the last state of destitution. The Governor or Mutselim, is a negro, who came out with his Egyptian troops to do us honor, and who gave us a slavo from a rusty piece of ordnance, calculated to terrify his friends rather than his enemies. Never did the uncertainty of human pomp and power strike me with more force than when we passed under the rude portal of that city, and contrasted our entree, preceded by a few miserable Turkish troops, led by a negro, and surrounded by a crowd as wretched as even Syria could furnish—with the splendid processions, which had many times traversed the same route, with all the "pomp and circumstance" of Eastern pageantry. We went to the house of a person calling himself the American Consul, an Armenian Arab. The Consulates in this region are desirable situations, not for their emoluments, but because they confer valuable privileges and immunities upon the possessor. They are preceded in public by two persons, carrying long staves, with silver heads, and they enjoy an entire exemption from all impositions, and from the jurisdiction of the local authorities. After some refreshment and repose, for the day was a burning one, we proposed to return the visit of our Ethiopian friend; but we were told quite frankly, and without hesitation, by the Consul, that he was too much intoxicated to see us, and we sat still, waiting the happy moment of his Excellency's return to sobriety. So much for Eastern rulers. [U. S. Dem. Rev.

LABORS OF ROYALTY.

The life of Louis Philippe is one of incessant toil and anxiety; his leisure is less, his work harder, than that of his meanest subject. Late to bed, he rises early, rarely sleeping more than four hours; after a careful, but rapid toilet, his day's labor begins. He seldom breakfasts with his family; it would take too much time; but has his frugal repast brought on a tray to the room where he happens to be. When he was Duke of Orleans, he read all the letters and petitions addressed to him, writing upon each an opinion or an order for the guidance of his secretaries. This practice he was of course obliged to discontinue when he became king. At the commencement of his reign, the number of letters and applications of various kinds, sent to the different members of the royal family, amounted to the astonishing number of a thousand or twelve hundred a day. Although, upon an average, not above fifty of these possessed the least interest, or deserved an answer, the mere reading and classing of such a chaos of correspondence gave employment to several secretaries. After a while, the flood of petitions abated, but M. Appert estimates them, in ordinary times, at six to eight hundred daily. Of the letters, only the important ones are laid before the King, who answers many of them himself. He examines the reports, projects, and nominations brought him by his ministers, and, at least twice or thrice a week, presides at the council board. Private audiences occupy much of his time; his conferences with architects, with the intendants of the civil list and of his private estates, are of frequent occurrence. The galleries of Versailles, and the improvements at Fontainebleau—all made after his plans, and in a great measure under his personal superintendence—court-balls and dinners, diplomatic audiences, correspondence with foreign courts, journeys of various kinds, visits to the castle of Eu and to military camps—such are a portion of the innumerable claims upon the time of the King of the French. But, by a clear-headed, active, and earnest man, endowed with the faculty of order, which Louis Philippe possesses in a very high degree, much is to be got through in a day of twenty hours; and after doing all that has been enumerated, and many other things of less importance, the king still finds time to devote to his family, for necessary healthful exercise, and for the perusal of the principal newspapers and publications, both English and foreign. 'Each morning, either before or after breakfast, all the newspapers, political pamphlets, even caricatures, were laid upon the table, and the king and the princes were the first to read aloud the articles published against them. They examined the caricatures, and passed them to the bystanders, saying, 'What do you think of this?'

HYDE PARK CHRISTIANS.

We have seen an article in some of our exchanges, entitled "Scenes in Hyde Park," which represents an American clergyman and an English lady of rank as engaged in conversation respecting the religious character of the multitude who passed them in "dazzling luxury or regal magnificence," as they stood gazing upon the scene of gayety and fashion. The description given by the lady, in answer to the questions of the clergyman, of professors in London, belonging to the wealthy classes, and moving in the fashionable circles, is painful to the heart of the true Christian. He asked her ladyship, "How many of these gay and noble people do you suppose are prepared for another world?" She answered, promptly, "Not one of them, as far as I know, and I know them well. Not a lady here, who would not prefer to have her daughter distinguished at court, and well married, to having her fitted for heaven. I make no exception, sir, not even of myself. We are all alike, our clergy included. If I were to go to my clergyman, and tell him that I felt anxious in my mind, he would laugh at me, and prefer to talk about the next play."

Other statements of her ladyship gave a still darker shade to the picture. Alas, for the pleasure-loving Christians of London. The article closes with the following paragraph:—

"In a multitude of cases, doubtless, this witness is true, as our friend thinks, save that now and then truant and solemn thoughts disturb their minds with apprehensions of the dread future, which they seek the more to dispel from their bosoms amid the gaieties of earth's dazzling splendors."

BE CONTENTED WITH LITTLE.

"I once knew a man who had thousands and thousands, but the desire to get more hindered him from enjoying what he had; he was discontented and wretched, and if ever he put up a prayer to God, it was that his riches might increase.

"I knew a poor woman also, who had but half a dollar a week in the whole world to live upon, and yet she was cheerful and happy. She had always a little money by her to assist those in distress, and instead of praying that God would add to her store, she was ever praising him for what he had so graciously bestowed. She had many trials, but she rejoiced through them all, for

True piety is cheerful as the day;
Will weep indeed, and have a pitying groan
For others' woes, but smiles upon her own."

so that you see, my boys and girls, a little, with God's blessing, is better than a good deal without it. Think of this again, and make up your minds to be contented with little."

[Old Humphrey.

TASTE FOR HEAVENLY THINGS.

As men enjoy dainties at the dessert, so do wise souls gain a taste for heavenly things when they ascend from their college to the universe, and there look around them. He who has discovered the frailty of human affairs will aspire heavenward from earth.

Happy! to whom this first was given to see,
O happy souls! who did to heaven ascend!

He will begin to set less value on what once appeared to him the most excellent. He will esteem God's works above all things, and in the contemplation of them he will find a pure enjoyment. Great Artist of the world! I look with wonder on the works of thy hands, constructed after five regular forms, and in the midst the sun, the dispenser of light and life. I see the moon and stars, strewn over the infinite field of space. Father of the world! what moved thee thus to exalt a poor, weak, little creature of earth so high that he stands in light a far-ruling king, almost a god, for he thinks thy thoughts after thee! [Keppler.

The Brand plucked from the Burning.—Count Zinzendorf, that great servant of Jesus Christ, being stopped by a robber who demanded his purse, said to him with as much coolness as kindness: "There, take my purse; but since your odious trade must sooner or later lead you to the scaffold, listen to the advice I give you. When you shall hear the sentence of death pronounced, do not give up all hope, but remember the converted thief on the cross." Such was the effect of these words on the hardened sinner that, a few days after, he reflected seriously upon his conduct. He supplicated in his anguish the mercy of the Lord, and his prayers being heard, he joined the community of Moravian brethren, where Count Zinzendorf had the pleasure of recognizing him.

The valet of the Archbishop of Vienna went mad the other day, and rushing into his master's room with a razor, declared that Jesus Christ had ordered him to cut the archbishop's throat. The archbishop desired the man to pray before he executed the command. The servant complied, when the archbishop slipped from the room and the madman was secured.

ANCIENT AND MODERN PERVERSIONS OF THE SABBATIC LAW.

Two things, which the spirit of prophecy has foretold respecting the great apostacy of "the last times," are very apparent at present, viz.—"He shall seek to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand, until a time, and times, and the dividing of time." Dan. 7: 25. A very few facts of history are sufficient to show the fulfillment of this inspired prophecy, so far as the sabbatic law is concerned therein.

ANCIENT AUTHORITIES.

Eusebius, A. D. 321, in his Life of Constantine, b. 4, c. 18, Basle ed., says: "Constantine appointed as a suitable time for prayers the dominical day, which then was an especial day, and now is undoubtedly the very first."

About the same time, Sylvester, Bishop of Rome, changed the name of Sunday, giving it the more imposing title of Lord's day. See Lucius' Eccl. Hist., cent. 4, p. 470.

The Theological Review, conducted by B. B. Edwards and E. A. Park, professors in Andover Theological Seminary, says: "The reasons for keeping the first day in preference to the seventh, are more fully explained by Leo the Great, of the fifth century, as follows—'On this day the world had its origin. On the same day, through the resurrection of Christ, death came to an end, and life began. It was on this day also that the apostles were commissioned by the Lord to preach the gospel to every creature, and offer to the world the blessings of salvation. On the same day came Christ into the midst of his disciples, and breathed upon them, saying, Receive the Holy Ghost. And finally, on this day the Holy Ghost was shed upon the apostles.'"

AUTHORITIES AFTER THE REFORMATION.

The Theological Review just referred to says: "The individual who first promulgated the true doctrine of the Christian Sabbath, was the Rev. Nicholas Bound, D. D., of Norton, in the County of Suffolk, England. About the year 1595, he published a famous book, entitled 'Sabbathum Veritas et Novi Testamenti;' or the True Doctrine of the Sabbath."

Dr. Samuel Wilson, a Baptist minister who died in London, Oct. 6th, 1750, says, in his sermons on the subject: "The fourth commandment is so worded as to admit of the change of the day of rest, without at all violating the institution." Again, "The proportion of the days is the essential point. The day when we begin to compute is, abstractly speaking, of very little consequence."

Dr. Timothy Dwight, in his 106th sermon, says: "The day, I say, might be altered without altering at all the substance of the institution." Again, in his 107th sermon: "The Christian Sabbath was originally introduced into the church much more successfully and happily than it could have been done by an express injunction."

Dr. Heman Humphrey says, in his Essays: "The fourth commandment is so expressed as to admit of a change in the day, without at all effecting the sacred institution itself." "The Sabbath, then, the holy rest itself, is one thing; the day on which we are to rest, is quite another."

William Parkinson, D. D., a Baptist minister of New York city, in a letter written in March, 1835, says: "The Sabbath of the fourth commandment never has been, and (without a new revelation for the purpose) never can be, obligatory on any but Jews and those proselyted to Judaism." Again, in a letter written in September, he says: "The Sabbath, as specified by the manna, and recognized by the fourth commandment, was, as I have already shown, peculiar to national Israel. Its observance was never required of the Gentiles; and, like every other institution peculiar to the Jews, it expired with the Mosaic dispensation, which was virtually abolished in the death of Christ."

"E. W. D.," a Baptist minister who writes for the Christian Chronicle, says: "It [the law] contains two points only—'Six days shalt thou labor; the seventh is the Sabbath.'" "I hold that the day may be reckoned from any point. The law does not specify either Saturday or Sunday. It does specify the seventh day. It says just nothing about any settled order of succession." "The law indicates no preference. It says simply and only, 'Six days shalt thou labor; the seventh, i. e., the day after the sixth, is the Sabbath of Jehovah our God.'"

The American and Foreign Sabbath Union, and the American Tract Society, say in "The Sabbath Manual," pp. 85 and 86:—"The primary and essential idea in the numbers 'six' and 'seven,' as used in the command, is that of proportion." "Men who call their first working day the second day of the week, and who, on the seventh from that, keep the Christian Sabbath, do as really comply with the spirit and the letter of the fourth commandment as men did who of old kept the Jewish Sabbath."

Now how do these things stand in the divine Word?

1st. Moses tells us that "God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night." "And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heavens, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs of seasons, and of days, and of years."

2d. Moses tells us that God did settle the order of the succession of days in the week. "The evening and the morning, (on which God divided the light from the darkness,) were the first day." When he divided "the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament," he says, "The evening and the morning were the second day." When he had made the dry land to appear, and clothed it with grass, and herb, and tree, he says, "The evening and the morning were the third day." When he had set the sun, and the moon, and the stars in the firmament, he says, "The evening and the morning were the fourth day." When he had created the fowls, and filled the waters with living things, he says, "The evening and the morning were the fifth day." When he had made creeping things, and beasts, and cattle, and man, upon the earth, he says, "The evening and the morning were the sixth day." On the seventh day God ended all his work by blessing and sanctifying it; that is, by appointing its observance as a religious institution, by ceasing from manual labor, as God did from his. Could any order of succession be more marked or more certain?

The perpetuation of this divinely-appointed division and order of time to the end of the world, is secured by the covenant of Jehovah. See Gen. 8: 22; Jer. 33: 20, 25. That the law is based upon it, is certain, because it enjoins the remembrance of what was previously appointed and known; and also because it refers, for the reasons of it, to the original institution; and the original institution is based upon a specified division and succession of days, the numerical order of which was marked by Jehovah's successive works in creation, and the last particularly by the first institution of a religious ordinance.

Instead of the law's containing "two points only," it contains at least five, viz: 1st. An injunction to remember the well-known, specified day of Jehovah's rest; (not man's successive rest. 2d. An injunction to regard it holy. 3d. To honor it by our own rest from labor thereon. 4th. It specifies and limits the time for man's work. 5th. It urges the ancient example and appointment of the Creator as a reason for its own requirements. The human authorities before cited are therefore clearly a fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy. How much they are against the New Testament doctrine concerning the law, a comparison of their language with that of Christ will readily show. Christ says, "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than for one tittle of the law to fail." Luke 16: 17. Dr. Dwight says, "If this day (i. e., the first day of the week) be not divinely instituted, then God has suffered his church to disuse and annihilate his own institution, and substitute one of mere human device in its stead. Will this be believed?" Certainly, Doctor; it is believed! Daniel predicted it! Do any of our readers ask how this could be? We refer them to the prophet Micajah for an answer. See 1 Kings 22: 19—23. MISSIONS.

The departure of our first missionaries for a foreign field, is an epoch in the history of Sabbath-keepers not soon to be forgotten. Followed, as it has been and will be, by the prayers and the contributions of its friends, the mission will succeed, although the field was entered at the eleventh hour. My object in writing is to keep alive the present interest, and to elicit new interest among our churches, in the great and glorious enterprise in which we have embarked of evangelizing the world. There is always danger that a state of comparative apathy will succeed that of fervent zeal. That a great work is to be accomplished by the church, none can deny. The injunction of its Head, to "preach the gospel to every creature," cannot be neglected with impunity. This command is obligatory on the church; that is, the church is to see this requirement carried out. I am not ignorant, that she, to exculpate herself, often lays the responsibility upon the ministry. But what, I ask, is the ministry, but the organ of the church? Upon the church rests the responsibility of fulfilling the high behest of the ascending Redeemer. But as the whole church cannot go, delegates must be sent forth to fulfill the command of Heaven. Ambassadors from such a court, commissioned to deliver such a message, need the best qualifications. "Who is sufficient for these things," said one who well knew the duty enjoined, and deeply felt the wisdom necessary for its performance. Yet there are not wanting those who speak and act as if they believed that talent below mediocrity, and knowledge the most limited, are fully competent to accomplish this stupenduous undertaking. Surely, if Paul felt incompetent, who can feel that he is sufficient? Still, however vast the responsibility, it is to be incurred. He who imposed the duty knew full well its solemnity, and yet the duty was enjoined. And talents there are, which, if properly cultivated, will be fully competent to the task. The cultivation of this talent devolves an imperative duty upon the church. Within her bosom lie the germs of her future glory. Her sons and daughters must be consecrated to her service. That talent which now lies hidden, must be brought to light, and fitted to exert an influence. To accomplish this, to train the youth for the service of the temple, requires the energies of the church, moral and pecuniary. The moral energy of the church is all-powerful. This must be brought to bear upon the subject, through the medium of prayer for the descent of the Holy Ghost to inspire the youthful heart with an ardent desire to engage in the glorious calling of holding forth the word of life, and to anoint and qualify it for the work. Prayer is to be made without ceasing for this end. The church is to lay the case on the altar, while the incense of prayer is to fill the temple with its perfume. And not only is the moral energy of the church to be concentrated upon this subject, but hear pecuniary resources are to be laid at the feet of the Redeemer. To enable this youthful talent to cope with the powers of darkness, and to concentrate the truth of the gospel in a focal blaze upon the heart of adamant, much mental discipline is demanded. The future students of theology are now behind the counter, laboring in the mechanic shop, or toiling at the plow. From thence they are to be taken, and subjected to intellectual culture. To accomplish this all-important and never-to-be-neglected end, drafts in the shape of money, clothing, books, &c., must be made. The student for the ministry lives not by faith alone, while an inmate of the college. To confound the wisdom of the great, the poor of this world are often summoned by a call from Heaven to prepare themselves to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." When the inquiry is made, "Who will go, and who shall be sent?" and the pious youth respond, "Here am I, send me," shall there be none to answer? Shall the cry of those upon whom the mantle of a Judson and a Newel have fallen, be unheeded? Shall the entreaty of heathen wretchedness fail to unlock the hand of covetousness? Surely not. Come forth, then, ye pious youth—ye who must be the eleemosynaries of the church—and dedicate yourselves to this work. Enlist to fight the battles of the Lord, and doubt not that the necessary means will be abundantly supplied.

"SLAVEHOLDING MISSIONS JUSTLY REPROVED."

Such is the heading of a long article in the Christian Reflector relative to the sailing of the missionaries of the Southern Baptist Board. It seems that these missionaries remained in Boston for some time, and then started on their perilous voyage, without any meeting being called for the city chnrches and their pastors to give them a formal greeting, or to bid them an affectionate farewell. This circumstance has excited not a little surprise; and a correspondent of the Reflector endeavors to explain the matter so as to exonerate the brethren in Boston from blame. He says that most of the pastors had recently signed a protest against American slavery, declaring it to be an outrage upon the rights and happiness of men, for which, as ministers of the Son of God, they could have no sympathy. They had also declared, that they could sustain no relation, and perform no act, which would countenance the system, or imply indifference to its multiplied enormities. Now these missionaries came to Boston as the representatives of a slaveholding Christianity, having identified themselves with a system which is unsurpassed in its mischievous vileness by any form of heathenism on the face of the earth. The Board which sent them out, they regard as having been organized for the express and sole purpose of vindicating slavery. In view of this fact, the writer thinks that the churches and pastors of Boston could not extend to them the fraternal hand, and bid them God-speed, without compromising their fidelity to crushed humanity, to the Bible, and to the Gospel of Christ?

☞ The following letter comes from a neighborhood in which we have no church, and where only a handful of Sabbath-keepers reside. We publish it for the two-fold purpose of acknowledging its reecipt, and presenting an example worthy of imitation. It is only necessary to add, that Bro. A. D. Titsworth, of Metouchin, N. J., is the Treasurer of the Missionary Association, to whom we hope that many similar letters will be forwarded soon.

LIPPITT, R. I., March 15, 1847.

BRO. UTTER,—You must excuse me for troubling you with this communication; but not knowing the address of the Treasurer of the Missionary Association, and knowing your interest in the missionary enterprise, I thought you would be willing to send the enclosed to the Treasurer. We approve of the plan proposed by Eld. Brown, of the pastors of churches acting as agents, and thus saving for the cause of missions what must otherwise be expended in agencies. The few brethren in this place are willing to do their part, and we shall remit ANNUALLY the amouut we feel it our duty and privilege to give. I will mention the name and amount of each contributor, as it may be essential in making out a report:—

SUNDAY DESECRATION IN SCOTLAND.—We had expected to have been able by this post to furnish the result of the contest in respect to Sunday trains on the Glasgow and Edinburg Railway; but the meeting of the shareholders does not take place this year till the fifth of March. The half-yearly meeting of the North British Line was however held last week, where a motion to discontinue Sunday trains was withdrawn till the next meeting. Meanwhile returns of the different Railways in Great Britain which do not run Sunday passenger trains, have been ordered by the House of Commons. And as these returns are ordered on the motion of Mr. Hume, with the avowed purpose of the mover to found thereon a law making Sunday trains compulsory, it is not improbable that ere long the few lines which have hitherto refused to run them will be legislatively compelled to take part in Sunday desecration. FREE SEATS IN CHURCH.—Samuel Lawrence, Esq., of Lowell, Mass., has hit upon a method of securing free seats for the poor in a house of worship. He offered to give two hundred dollars per annum towards the support of a Methodist church in Lowell, on condition that the seats in the gallery should be free to all. The offer has been accepted, and accommodation is thus offered to some five hundred persons who might otherwise have been politely excluded.

PRISON DISCIPLINE.—It is gratifying to mark the improvement in prison discipline which has been made within a few years past. Formerly from 1,500 to 3,000 lashes were inflicted monthly upon the prisoners at Sing Sing. But latterly the use of the 'cat' has almost ceased. During the month of December, not a blow was struck upon a single convict, and only some twenty or thirty were inflicted during each of the months of January and February. Yet the prisoners never worked more faithfully than under the present system of using the rod sparingly. The day is rapidly approaching when even convicts will be governed by the law of kindness rather than by the infliction of corporal punishment.

A PATRIARCH GONE.—We learn from the N. Y. Baptist Register, that Eld. Benjamin Harvey, a soldier of the Revolution, and probably the oldest Baptist preacher in the world, died at Frankfort, on the 18th of March, in the 112th year of his age, and the 70th year of his ministry. It is supposed that his exertions last year, in visiting New York, and holding meetings, were too much for him, as his health began to decline soon after his return. He continued to go out, however, for some time, attended public worship, and often took a prominent part in the exercises. A sketch of his life has been prepared, and will no doubt soon be given to the public.

INFANT BAPTISM AMONG THE LUTHERANS.—The Baptist Memorial says that in a convention of Lutheran clergymen, lately held in Germany, a debate arose concerning the validity and grounds of the institution of infant baptism, so called. It was amusing to the spectators present, to notice the great variety of views which prevailed among the different members of the convention, scarcely any two agreeing in the same opinion; and one of the most eminent in that church is said to have taken ground with the Baptists, in direct opposition to the institution.

MISSIONARY SHIP SPOKEN.—The Boston Traveler says that the whale ship Corvo, of Stonington, spoke, about January 2d, lat. 2° S., lon. 27° 10′ W., ship Flavio, Crocker, forty-eight days from Boston, for Madras and Calcutta. The Flavio had experienced a hurricane, November 24th, by which she lost part of her bulwarks and 2,000 gallons of water. The ship leaked considerably—all well on board. This ship has on board, as passengers, Dr. Scudder and other missionaries, bound to Madras.

ARRIVAL OF DR. JUDSON IN BURMAH.—The last English steamer brought news of the arrival of Dr. Judson and his associates in Burmah on the 5th of December, after a pleasant voyage of one hundred and thirty-nine days. Mrs. Judson found the cold air of the sea somewhat uncongenial, but it was believed that the tropical climate of Burmah would be favorable to her health. A letter from Dr. J., dated December 15th, says that he is once more in his own domicil, preparing to re-commence missionary operations.

DARK PICTURE.—An agent of the Society of Friends, who is traveling through the southern and western parts of Ireland, gives the following brief but expressive picture of the country: "Thou wouldst hardly recognize the country in passing through it. Every living thing but man has disappeared. No dogs, no pigs, no poultry. I do not think I have heard a poor person laugh since I left home. How changed! It is not exaggeration to say, that there is no playing of children in the streets. The people have a sickly, livid hue. I heard the remark that they were hardly able to know their neighbors from their altered looks."

HIRED SINGER.—A startling statement in relation to the character of a hired singer in a Catholic church is going the rounds of the papers. It seems that Miss Mary Taylor is engaged as singer at St. Peter's Church, in New York. On Saturday, the 13th of February, she personated the character of the DEVIL in the Bowery Theatre, THE VERY VESTIBULE OF HELL, and on Sunday, the 14th, sung sacred music at St. Peter's, a house dedicated to the worship of God. Comment is unnecessary.

TESTIMONY AGAINST CASTE.—The New York Tribune says that Rev. Ebenezer Davies, an Independent or Congregational clergyman, and who for seven years past has been a Missionary of the London Missionary Society to the emancipated slaves of New Amsterdam, County of Berbice, British Guiana, recently visited this city. Before leaving Guiana, he had heard through the English press of the prejudice which in this country assigns to the people of color separate seats in houses of worship. The practice of Rev. Dr. Patton's Church in particular had been revealed in the letter originally published by Rev. Mr. Page, who occupied the Doctor's pulpit during his recent visit to England. The account seemed so incredible at Guiana, that Mr. Davies was urgently requested to investigate the matter on his arrival here; and he promised, if he could find the 'negro pew,' that he would visit it and give his friends a description. Accordingly, on Sunday morning, the 21st ult., Mr. D., accompanied by his wife, attended religious services in Dr. Patton's Church, and took his seat with the colored people, as a testimony against a practice which he regarded as at war with the principles of the Gospel. An occurrence so unusual, as might have been expected, attracted considerable attention.

IN PRISON AGAIN.—We mentioned last week that Charles C. Burleigh had been incarcerated in the Chester Co., Pa., jail, for the offence of selling anti-slavery publications at the close of his lectures on Sunday. He was, however, soon discharged, his friends paying the fine imposed by the Justice. By the following extract of a letter from Mr. B. it will be seen that he has again been imprisoned for the same offence:

"WESTCHESTER (Pa) JAIL, 3d mo., 18th, 1847.

* * * * * "My work for the last two weeks has been made harder by my being taken into the Commonwealth's keeping, and thereby losing the best part of three days from my regular course of labor, in being tried and sentenced, and then in taking a trip to prison, and, after my release, getting back to my field of operations. I am now again in the County's stronghouse on the same charge as before. My crime, as you may perhaps be aware, is 'doing good on the Sabbath days' by selling anti-slavery publications. I was committed on the 16th, and arrived here yesterday morning, sentenced to six days' imprisonment, and have now passed nearly two of them. For hours together I have been left here without watch or ward over me, and nothing but an unfastened door between me and the street, which leads me to think I am not regarded as a very dangerous prisoner, or one very likely to break jail. So far as any physical obstacles are concerned, I might have been in New York or Boston by this time, for aught I know, for if I were once to walk out, nobody need know which way I take or what has become of me."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.—We have received a Catalogue of the Officers and Students of Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary, for the year ending March 4, 1847. From it we judge that the institution is in a prosperous condition. The number of students in attendance during the past year was 392, of whom 175 were ladies, and 217 gentlemen. Ladies and gentlemen recite together so far as they pursue the same studies. The Faculty is composed of the following persons:—W. C. Kenyon, Ira Sayles, Daniel D. Picket, John R. Hartshorn, Orra Stillman, Miss Abigail A. Maxson, Mrs. Margarett Payne, and Mrs. Melissa B. Kenyon.

MEMOIRS OF MRS. ELIZABETH FRY; including a History of her Labors in promoting the Reformation of Female Prisoners, and the Improvement of British Seamen. By the Rev. THOMAS TIMPSON, Honorary Secretary of the British and Foreign Sailor's Society.

Such is the title of a handsome duodecimo volume, just reprinted from the English edition, by Stanford & Swords, of 139 Broadway. It does not profess to be a complete biography of that distinguished lady who earned so well the uame of the "female Howard." It is rather a tribute of respect and admiration by one who had the happiness of being associated with her in philanthropic labors. The many admirers of Mrs. Fry will rejoice in its appearance, and the perusal of it will increase their anxiety to know more of her.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.—The March number of this deservedly popular monthly has been republished by Leonard Scott & Co., of No. 112 Fulton-st. It contains articles on "Pauperism and its Treatment," "Jutland a hundred and thirty years since," "Java," "The Cave of the Regicides," "Latest from the Peninsula," "Letters on the Truths contained in Popular Superstitions," "Horæ Catullianæ," &c., &c.

MINISTERS' SALARIES.—The question of taxing the salaries of ministers of the gospel has been agitated in Pennsylvania. By a recent decision of the Supreme Court, they are decided to be not taxable under the law of April 30, 1841. A similar decision was obtained in Maryland some months ago. Very gratifying, no doubt, to those who have salaries, but of little interest any way to thousands of others.

RELIEF SHIP.—The United States ship Jamestown has cleared from Boston with goods for the relief of the starving Irish and Scotch. She has on board 1,377 barrels bread, 418 casks beans, 88 casks peas, 533 casks and 2,043 bags corn, 100 tierces hams, 400 barrels pork, 723 barrels and 4,888 bags corn meal; flour, oatmeal, potatoes, rice, beef, clothing, &c.—in all, equal to 8,000 barrels. Much better freight than the vessel has been accustomed to carry.

THE STORM.—The seaboard has been visited by a storm of almost unparalleled severity, which commenced on Friday night last, and continued until Sunday morning. Much damage was done to shipping, many houses were blown down, and the telegraph wires in every direction from New York were broken up. In the vicinity of Philadelphia there was very vivid lightning, by which two or three persons were killed.

SOUTHERN BAPTIST MISSIONARIES.—We learn from the Christian Watchman, that Mr. and Mrs. Yates were prevented from sailing for China by the illness of the latter, and that Mr. Yates is now quite indisposed also at his lodgings in Boston.

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY.—The last advices from the Sandwich Islands brought intelligence of the death of Mrs. Pamelly P. Andrews, wife of Dr. Andrews, of the American Mission at Kailua.

The Albany Argus says that the storm which commenced on Friday afternoon, and continued ed twenty-four hours, left abont one foot of snow in that vicinity. The Hudson River was not open to Albany on Monday, nor was it expected to be open for several days.

General Intelligence.

NEWS FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of March 26, says that he has spent much time in sifting the various reports from Mexico, with a view to furnish the latest authentic news. Here is the result :—

"The rationale of the latest reliable advices from the seat of war, I think, is this : A letter has been received quite recently by Col. Taylor—the brother of our most gallant general—dated Saltillo, Feb. 23, from the most unquestionable authority, giving an account of three several attacks by Santa Anna, with nearly 20,000 men, upon "Old Rough and Ready," who hadbut about five thousand men under his command at the time. The first attack was made at Agua Nueva, and, after some hard demonstrations of mutual hostility, repulsed with considerable loss to the Mexicans. The attack was renewed at Saltillo, to which place Taylor had effected a retreat in perfect order. It was again repulsed. Gen. Taylor lined the tops of the houses there with his sharp-shooters, and, as the Mexicans approached, dealt unerring volleys upon them. They again retreated, and not without severe loss. Gen. Taylor, having given sufficient breathing time to his hard-pressed soldiers, continued his march toward Monterey. At the Pass of Rinconada, he was again overtaken by the forces of Santa Anna, who seemed to have set his life upon a cast, and determined to stand the hazard of the die. A third time he was attacked by the Mexicans, and, it must be confessed, with much bravery ; a third time they were repulsed, and with no inconsiderable slaughter. It may, therefore, be safely presumed, that Gen. Taylor, after the three days of 21st, 22d, and 23d of February, became safely ensconced behind the protecting walls of Monterey, where he could hold out six months, unaided against all Mexico in arms."

The schooner Home, from Tampico, has arrived at New Orleans, bringing accounts of a Revolution in Mexico, the expulsion of Gomez Farias from power, and the installation of Gen. Salas. Gen. Taylor, by one report, is said to have fallen back on Saltillo and Monterey without a general action, and by another it is said that he had a battle at night with the Mexicans, killing about 400 of them. and losing none. The Mexican papers say that Santa Anna had cut off his retreat by interposing the forces of Miñon and Torrejon.

Latest.—From information received in New York up to Tuesday morning, it seems quite probable that the above reports are in the main correct. It is farther believed, that Gen. Taylor after giving his men time to rest at Monterey, sallied out against Santa Anna, when a severe conflict ensued, which terminated favorably to the Americans. Report says that the Mexicans lost 5,000 killed and wounded, while Gen. Taylor's loss was about 1,000. Exaggerated, no doubt.

The Judicial Election.—The bill making provision for the election of certain Judicial and other officers, and to fix their terms of office, has passed the Assembly of New York. The main features of the bill are these :—

The first election is to take place the last Monday in May (the 31st)—the time of holding subsequent elections being left to the decision of a future Legislature.

At this special election there are to be elected by the State at large, four Judges of the Court of Appeals, and the Clerk of that Court. Also, in each judicial district, four justices of the Supreme Court. These provisions apply to the City and County of New York.

In each County (except New York) there is to be elected one County Judge, and (in those having a population of over 40,000, and where a separate officer shall be determined on by Boards of Supervisors, to discharge the duties of Surrogate,) one Surrogate.

In each county, there is also to be a District Attorney—and in each city where such office exists, (except New York,) a Recorder.

All persons voted for, except officers in cities, to be on one ballot—endorsed "Judiciary."

The other provisions relate to the canvassing of the votes, the classification of judges of the Court of Appeals, and Supreme Court Judges, and the terms of County Judges and officers.

Mail Matters.—Some days ago a merchant in Philadelphia sent a boy to the Express office with a shot bag full of corn, directed to his correspondent in this city, as a sample by which a quantity of corn was to be sold. The boy, in the fear of Cave Johnson, or in the fear of nothing, took the shot bag of the Post Office, and it arrived in New York charged $3 65, being rated at 73 letters of an ounce each. Some discussion ensued between the gentleman to whom the corn was addressed and our Postmaster, in which, all the circumstances being explained, the merchant addressed to the Postmaster this solemn question, "Which do you think, sir, will most promote the interests of the United States, to give me the bag of corn for twenty-five cents, or allow it to go back to the Dead Letter office at Washington, and be appropriated to feed Mr. Cave Johnson's chickens?" The love of country triumphed on this occasion over the love for chickens, and the two shillings were accepted for the corn.

Elopement.—A person by the name of Christian F. Quackenbush, a singing-master, who has a wife and family, recently left Berlin, N. Y., in company with one of his pupils, a young and unsophisticated girl of seventeen, whom he deceived under a promise of marriage. The pair were traced to Boston, and the friends of the girl applied to the city Mashal for assistance. Officers Pierce, Monroe and Hopkins, were immediately sent in quest of the couple, and succeeded in finding them. The girl was restored to her friends, and the case laid before the Grand Jury, which was in session. A bill of indictment was found against Quackenbush for adultery. He was arraigned at the Municipal Court in the evening, and plead not guilty, but retracted his plea afterwards, and plead guilty.

SUMMARY.

The dying house of the Haubold Powder Mill at Hart's Corner on the Bronx River, blew up about four o'clock Wednesday afternoon. 900 lbs. of powder were exploded. We learn by a slip from the Westchester Spy, that one man was killed, and two others were severely injured ; and one woman who was within a few hundred yards of the place, received several bruises, but none that proved mortal. Timbers and brick-bats flew through the air a mile from the spot where the explosion occurred ; and the windows in the neighborhood were shivered by the concussion. Had the fire communicated to the store-house or magazine, in which are deposited five tons of powder, the consequences that would have ensued, no one of course can form the least idea of.

The bark Sarah E. Snow, John Classon, Jr., master, which sailed from New York for Galway, Ireland, on the 1st of January, while lying to in a gale on the 24th, was struck by a tremendous sea, which hove her on her beam ends, and the masts went overboard, when she righted. The captain was drowned in the cabin, and all hands were washed overboard, with the exception of the mate, who was saved on the 26th, by a boat that saw the vessel drifting on the Bellmallett. The bark struck the rocks, and immediately went to pieces—cargo and vessel a total loss. The Sarah E. Snow was a fine vessel, belonging to Bluehill, Me., and this was her first voyage.

The slander suit between David Taylor and wife, of Baltimore City, and Lewis Shipley, of Carrol County, which has occupied the attention of the Court and community generally for the space of some four years or more, has been finally determined in the Howard District Court by a verdict for very heavy damages, $5,000, against Shipley, the defendant. The suit originated in August, 1842, and was brought by Mrs. Taylor, then Miss Martha A. Jamison, to recover damages for slanderous words circulated by Shipley, tending to impute to the plaintiff crimes of a very aggravated nature.

The President of Hayti, Jean Baptiste Riche, died at Port-au-Prince on the morning of the 27th Feb. He arrived there on the morning of the 23d from his tour through the North. He suffered much from illness during his journey, but attended to affairs till the last. He walked round his room and transacted business the morning of his death. After signing some public documents, he swooned. Recovering from this, he again applied himself to business, and swooning a second time, he expired. In two days more he would have completed the second year of his Presidency.

The Rochester American says that there is reason to believe that the crop of wheat now on the ground has been considerably injured by an open, freezing and thawing winter, the last snows of which are fast disappearing. We have taken considerable pains to collect the earliest and most reliable information on the subject, in order that we might keep our readers duly advised in a matter of so much commercial as well as agricultural importance. The extent of the damage done to wheat cannot as yet be definitely known. It will be found, if we mistake not, far more serious than usually occurs in Western New York.

We learn from the Hudson Republican, that twelve cases of Ejectment brought by Landlords against Tenants, were tried in the Oyer and Terminer of Columbia County last week. The Government has purchased a large part of the furniture cars in Cincinnati for the use of the army! They are intended for hospital wagons, to carry the wounded and diseased soldiers. They will be covered with canvass, and the sick will be protected from the sun and rain.

Five other passengers were badly bruised, the stage itself was broken to pieces, and one of the horses was killed. The accident took place in a narrow part of the road, which was shelving and covered with ice.

The Boston Traveler discredits the reports recently published of an extensive massacre of Nestorians by the Koords under Bader Khan Bey. For this opinion it relies chiefly upon the fact thatt he American Missionaries at Ooromiah, among the Nestorians of Persia, have given no account of such a massacre in their letters to the Board. All these tales about the unheard of scenes in the Koordish mountains originated with the correspondents of the London papers at Constantinople.

DIED,

In Darien, N. Y., on the 15th of March, Joshua Clarke Burdick, son of Dea. Joshua Burdick, aged 25 years. He made a profession of religion in youth, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in DeRuyter. He afterwards removed, and united with the church in Clarence. Before his death he lived for a time in Allegany Co., where he had united with the First Church of Alfred. From thence he came to Darien, among his friends, where he was attacked with a bilious disorder, which terminated in death. The healing art was sought in vain. He lingered twenty-two days in severe pain, which he bore with meekness and patience that astonished every beholder. His attachments to the world, to his young companions, and to his relatives, he cheerfully gave up; and having committed himself to God, he longed for death to relieve him from pain and set him free.

In Hounsfield, N. Y., on the 20th ult., of bronchital consumption, Mr. S. Bradford Burdick, son of P. W. Burdick, aged about 25 years. He had been for about ten years a professor of religion and a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church. His illness was protracted, and circumstances at times were flattering as to his ultimate recovery, but to an experienced eye his countenance gave full proof that he was marked as one of death's victims. A few weeks since his symtoms became alarming, and he sunk rapidly to the grave. It is hoped that his spirit is at rest with his God. The family share the sympathies of their friends and acquaintances.

In DeRuyter, N. Y., on the 20th ult., of consumption, Mrs. Philura Stillman, wife of Robert Stillman, aged 38 years. She was a member of the church in Lincklaen, and maintained a good Christian character. She died in peace.

In Truxton, N. Y, on the same day, Mrs Martha Burdick, wife of Capt. James Burdick, aged 71 years. She was a member of the church, and truly a mother in Israel.

In Preston, Chenango Co., N. Y., March 23d, Mr. Stephen S. Brown, aged 25 years.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory ; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig ; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

N. B. The Postage on all these Periodicals is reduced by the late Post Office law, to about one-third the former rates, making a very important saving in the expense to mail subscribers.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of The Illustrated Flora, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference ; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses ; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars ; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, Lewis & Brown, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work as it is published.

Jan. 10th, 1847.

"GIVE ME THREE GRAINS OF CORN, MOTHER."

BY MRS. A. M. EDMOND—BROOKLINE.

[The above words were the last request of an Irish lad to his mother, as he was dying from starvation. She found three grains in a corner of his ragged jacket, and gave them to him It was all she had; the whole family were perishing from famine.

Give me three grains of corn, mother,
  Only three grains of corn,
It will keep the little life I have
  Till the coming of the morn.
I am dying of hunger and cold, mother,
  Dying of hunger and cold,
And half the agony of such a death,
  My lips have never told.

It has gnawed like a wolf at my heart, mother,
  A wolf that is fierce for blood,
All the livelong day, and night beside,
  Gnawing for lack of food
I dreamed of bread in my sleep, mother,
  And the sight was heaven to see;
I woke with an eager famishing lip,
  But you had no bread for me.

How could I look to you, mother,
  How could I look to you,
For bread to give your starving boy,
  When you were starving too?
For I read the famine in your cheek,
  And in your eye so wild,
And I felt it in your bony hand
  As you laid it on your child.

The Queen has lands and gold, mother,
  The Queen has lands and gold;
While you are forced to your empty breast
  A skeleton babe to hold—
A babe that is dying of want, mother,
  As I am dying now,
With a ghastly look in its sunken eye,
  And famine upon its brow.

What has poor Ireland done, mother,
  What has poor Ireland done,
That the world looks on and sees us starve,
  Perishing one by one.
Do the men of England care not, mother,
  The great men and the high,
For the suffering sons of Erin's Isle,
  Whether they live or die?

There is many a brave heart here, mother,
  Dying of want and cold,
While only across the channel, mother,
  Are many that roll in gold.
There are rich and proud men there, mother,
  With wondrous wealth to view,
And the bread they fling to their dogs to-night
  Would give me life and you!

Come nearer to my side, mother,
  Come nearer to my side,
And hold me fondly as you held
  My father, when he died.
Quick, for I cannot see you, mother,
  My breath is almost gone,
Mother! dear mother! ere I die,
  Give me three grains of corn!

THE CHINESE SYSTEM OF EDUCATION.

This was the theme of Mr. Williams' fourth lecture. The literary institutions of the Chinese, he remarked, are the prime cause of the elevated national character; in literature they are the first of all heathen nations. These institutions have descended from a venerable antiquity, and age after age, have moulded the intellectual features of the whole Empire after one model. To them almost all the national morality owes its origin and character, and by them has the stability of government been so long maintained. Yet it fails to improve the understanding; knowledge is seldom sought for its own sake; from the fact that literary eminence is the only road to official distinction, learning is desired mainly as a means of obtaining office.

Education in China is confined entirely to one sex. The children associate during the first seven or eight years, at the end of which time the girls are secluded in the female apartments, and the boys enter the school. The lads then receive a new name, and enter at once upon the study of the Chinese characters. The elements of instruction are contained in nine books. Their studies are natural history, the classics, and written composition. Of grammar and geography they know nothing. Arithmetic is sometimes taught in evening classes or private schools. The whole of these classical books are learned by heart, so that a Chinese scholar can usually carry out any quotation from any of these standard classical works. This overtasks the memory, without the exercise of invention or judgment, weakens the latter, and is the probable cause of the uniform character of Chinese writing and scholarship, through the whole Empire.

The literary attainments of these scholars are distinguished by four degrees, to which persons of every class of society are equally eligible. To attain these, it is necessary to submit to the test of public examination. The first examination is conducted in the towns by the Governor and Literary Chancellor of the districts. On three successive days the candidates are examined on as many different themes, and the names of the successful competitors are placed on the wall of the room where the examination is held. This, however, is only introductory to the examination for the first degree, which is held in the chief city of the department. This is open for all who have successfully passed the first ordeal. In Canton not less than 30,000 or 40,000 usually assemble.

The lists of competition for the second degree are open to all who have received the first. The examination is held in the capital of the province, and as Canton is the capital both of the province and the department, both examinations are held there. Two Examiners from Pekin, with the Literary Chancellors and others, making a board of ten, attend the examination. The candidates, some 8,000 or 9,000 in number, having registered their names, ages and lineage, are conducted to separate cells, furnished each with only a table, chair, and writing materials. Here they remain two days and one night, employed in writing essays allotted to them from the nine classical works, and on subjects of political economy and general history, which are submitted to the Board of Examiners. Of all the candidates, only seventy-two can be successful, and the labor of examining these documents is so great, so utterly beyond the power of the commissioners, that it is never done; the degrees being awarded in many instances according to the amount of the fee or bribe paid to the Literary Chancellor. Some years since one of the candidates wrote an essay, severely impugning the conduct of this functionary, knowing that if it passed through his hands some notice would be taken of it. As nothing was said of it, he published his rejected article. The officer was immediately dismissed, and held to answer for the charges made; but the result was, that an edict prohibited the publication of rejected essays for ever after. Mr. Williams remarked, however, that this fact does not destroy all public confidence in the examinations, and that as the unsuccessful candidates were at liberty to renew the trial, father, son, and grandson, might sometimes be seen submitting to the same examination together.

The names of those who receive this degree are announced in the streets of Canton at midnight, and on the following day are hawked about the city; the appointees are feasted by the high officers of the province, and having obtained their diplomas, are borne in sedan chairs to visit their relatives and receive their congratulations.

A third degree must be obtained before the individual is eligible to important office, and these "advanced scholars" (such is their title) next bend their steps to Pekin; for by shrewd policy the gift of the next degree is placed in the power of the Emperor, and the talent of the whole empire is thus brought to the capital, where it can be best managed and directed. The examination for this degree is very similar to that already detailed.

The fourth degree is rather itself an office, the membership of the Hanlin, or imperial academy. In all these honors and offices, it is observable that the Manchous are favored far beyond the Chinese.

The scholars thus collected in various parts of the Empire are a powerful and often formidable body. They mould public sentiment, and by their devotion to antiquity, the result of their education, they stand in the way of change and reform. But the system of education has many excellences; it provides an intellectual class in society, diffuses respect for learning, and opens a road well understood for the pursuits of ambition.

The founder of this system was Confucius, who lived a little earlier than Socrates. His object was to restore society to a pristine order and harmony. His precepts have been more extensively honored than those of any other man of the race. It is indeed wonderful to witness the respect which, after so many generations, is paid to him by so large a portion of the whole human family. He was far more practical than the Greek philosophers, and instead of idle theories contented himself with teaching the people what to do.

Another Chinese philosopher, Mencius, is almost equally respected; he lived one hundred and fifty years after Confucius, and was in some respects his superior. One of his sententious sayings to an Emperor is well worthy of notice: "I love life, and I love justice, but I would preserve justice rather than life. I love life, but there is that which I hate worse than death."

After speaking of the Chinese literature, proverbs, &c., Mr. W. concluded the lecture with some account of the language. The written language has about 30,000 characters; these are combined and modified by their position, but have no grammatical changes; each character has its peculiar sound and value, just as, with us, the numerals 1, 2, 3, &c., have an unvaring signification. The written language is the same throughout the Empire, but there are numberless dialects, of which the three principal are those of Pekin, Amoy, and Canton. In all these provinces the written language is understood, just as all Europeans understand the numerals; but the difference in the idiom and sound of words renders these dialects as completely unintelligible to the inhabitants of other provinces as the languages of Europe. The court dialect is the language to be acquired by travelers, and even this is known in the south only as a learned language, as Latin is to us; so that the difference in dialects is a great and important obstacle to the spread of European civilization, or the progress of the Christian religion. JAMES MADISON.

Mr. Madison was of small stature, and rather portly. He had a calm expression, penetrating blue eyes, and was slow and grave in his speech. At the close of his presidency, he seemed to be care-worn, with an appearance of more advanced age than was the fact. He was bald on the crown of his head, always wore his hair powdered, and generally dressed in black. His manner was modest and retiring, but in conversation he was pleasing and instructive, having a mind well stored with the treasures of learning, and being particularly familiar with the political world. On his accession to the presidency, he restored the custom of levees at the presidential mansion, which had been abolished by Mr. Jefferson. It was on the occasion of these levees, that his accomplished lady, by her polite and attractive attentions and manners, shone with peculiar lustre. Mr. Madison was fond of society, although he had traveled but little, never having visited foreign countries, or seen much of the people and country over which he presided.

When a member of deliberative bodies, Mr. Madison was an able debater, having acquired self-confidence by slow degrees. As a writer, he had few equals among American statesmen, and the style of his public documents and his correspondence has always been much admired. He was, at the time of his death, the last surviving signer of the Constitution, and the part he bore in framing that instrument, his subsequent advocacy of it, by writings, with his adherence to its provisions, obtained for him the titte of "Father of the Constitution."

The New Planet.—We understand that Professor Pierce, of Harvard University, in a paper read at a special meeting of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, held on Tuesday evening, announced as a result of his calculations upon observations made by Sears C. Walker, Esq., of the Washington Observatory, the remarkable fact that the planet known as Leverrier, the discovery of which at Berlin was a consequence of the computations of the mathematician whose name it bears, is not the planet which answers to those computations, nor one which according to Leverrier's theory will account for the perturbations of Uranus—that it is not the planet which was discovered by the calculations of Leverrier, but another which was accidentally discovered by the Berlin observer. The diameter of the orbit of the observed planet is said to differ from that of the computed planet by several times the diameter of the orbit of the Earth, and by forty years in the time of its revolution about the sun.

THE LIFE OF THE POPE.

An inhabitant of Italy, writing to the N. Y. Courier, among other things relating to Pope Pius IX. speaks thus of the precautions necessarily taken by him, to prevent the execution of the malicious schemes of his enemies against his life:—

In Italy the universal opinion is that, young as he is, he will not have long to live; that he may fall a victim to Jesuitical poison, suffering the fate of Pope Ganganetti. But, fearless, notwithstanding all the anonymous writings sent to him by the opposite party, and the menaces of ultra Catholics, he has organized a liberal constitution for his subjects. All the necessary precautions are taken to know if there is poison in his food; he keeps at a distance from him the old intolerant cardinals and the Jesuits; and lately he has formed his private council altogether of laymen. When he goes to visit a convent, or to say mass in church, he takes with him the wine, the water, and the host. Such is the life of our greatest Pope! I saw him, when in Rome, going to visit the Jesuit College; the people in the streets cried out to him, "Celebrate no mass there, take no food there; the poison of the Jesuits, they say, is terrible, and the Christian Jesuits are skilful chemists to prepare it." He answered the advice of his faithful people by blessing them; and he said that he would do always what his good people wished. A crowd of people were at the door of the college, many in fear for him, because he remained there too long; but when they were assured that he had not said mass, their fears were quited.

The Post Office Laws.—A Suit.—Some weeks since, a paper came to the Syracuse Post Office to a female relative of C. T. Hicks, late County Clerk, with the letter 'L.' marked on one corner of the wrapper. Mr. Teall, the Postmaster, demanded 15 cents (postage by weight.) Mr. Hicks offered newspaper postage, which was refused. Mr. Hicks then sued the Postmaster in trover, for detaining the paper, before Justice Woolworth. The trial, after being adjourned several times, came off on Monday last. The cause was tried by jury, who, after being absent a few minutes, returned a verdict of six cents for the plaintiff—which throws the cost on the Postmaster. It is understood that the case is to be carried to the Supreme Court, that the principle may be decided and settled. [Syracuse Journal.

How to be a Man.—When Carlyle was asked by a young person to point out what course of reading he thought best to make him a man, replied in his characteristic manner:—

"It is not books alone, or by books chiefly, that a man is in all points a man. Study to do faithfully whatsoever thing in your actual situation, then and now, you find either expressly or tacitly laid down to your charge—that is your post; stand in it like a true soldier. Silently devour the many chagrins of it; all situations have many, and see you aim not to quit it, without doing all that is at least required of you. A man perfects himself by work, much more than by reading. There are a growing kind of men that wisely combine the two things—wisely, valiantly, can do what is laid to their hand in the present sphere, and prepare themselves withal for doing other, wider things, if such be before them."

Over doing.—An old man named Simon has just died in one of the Lunatic Asylums of Paris whose story has been frequently narrated. When Napoleon had resolved to erect a palace for the King of Rome, near the barrier of Passy, the stall of this man, a cobbler by trade, interfered with the line of building. He was accordingly applied to to sell it. He asked 20,000f., which, being thought excessive, was at first refused. On a second application he asked 40,000f., which was also rejected. The ground upon which the stall stood being, however, absolutely indispensable, he was applied to a third time, when he asked 60,000f. The Emperor then determined never to consent to such an extortion, and the palace was ordered to be built on Quai d'Orsay. The old man then repented his folly, but too late. Two years after he sold the stall for 150f., and the failure of his hopes having affected his reason, he was placed in the hospital where he has just died.

A Curious Cause of War.—In the year 1005 some soldiers of the commonwealth of Modena ran away with a bucket from a public well, belonging to the State of Bologna. This implement might be worth a shilling; but it produced a bloody quarrel, which was worked up into a bloody war. Henry, the king of Sardinia, for the Emperor or Henry the second, assisted the Modenese to keep possession of the bucket, and in one of the battles he was made prisoner. His father, the Emperor, offered a chain of gold that would encircle Bologna, which is seven miles in compass, for his son's ransom, but in vain. After twenty-two years' imprisonment, and his father being dead, he pined away and died. His monument is still extant in the church of the Dominicans. This fatal bucket is still exhibited in the tower of the cathedral of Modena, enclosed in an iron cage.

To Prevent taking Cold.—Put a tub of water in your bed-room on going to bed; cover it over, and if it is frozen in the morning break the ice—plunge the head in first, then step in and sponge the body all over, having two crash towels ready to rub the body down well, and if your fingers are numb, thaw them over a candle or set a piece of paper on fire; then dress as quick as possible; then take a walk of a mile or two, to face the northwesters, and come home to breakfast!

N. B. By persevering in the above, in the coldest mornings in winter, I have never taken cold; and for headaches I have not had one for 40 years!

Views of Fighting.—Here is what the celebrated Major Jack Downing said several years ago on fighting: "In the matter of fighting, there is one thing I always keep my eyes on, and I found Gen. Jackson of the same way of thinking, and that is, to depend less on folks who say they are ready to shed the last drop of their blood, than on folks who are ready to shed the first drop. Give a man eight dollars a day to make speeches in Congress, with the right of free postage, and you hear enough of the 'last drop' matters; when it comes to camp duty, then the first drop folks have to stand to the rack at eight dollars a month!"

VARIETY.

An accomplished and somewhat romantic French lady, on visiting the chateau of a distinguished nobleman, says, "I have heard for the first time, an admirable and enchanting sound, which, if generally established, would add an inexpressible charm to the other beauties of a rural life. This was no less than an inconsiderable herd of shining cows, each with a musical bell attached to her neck, attuned with the greatest nicety of several octaves high and low—forming a delicious, yea a kind of celestial music, the sweetness of which has a powerful effect on the imagination, and cannot be listened to without experiencing a sensible emotion."

When the Emperor Vespasian commanded a Roman Senator to give his voice against the interests of his country, and threatened him with immediate death if he spoke on the other side, the Roman, conscious that the attempt to serve the people was in his power, though the event was ever so uncertain, answered with a smile, "Did I ever tell you that I was immortal? My virtue is at my own disposal; my life is at yours. Do what you will, I shall do what I ought; and if I fall in the service of my country, I shall have more triumph in death than you in all your laurels."

Mr. Williams, in his lectures on the Domestic Life of the Chinese, states that it is estimated that in the river opposite Canton, not less than 250,000 people live on the water. Their habitations are a kind of boats or floating houses, which are moored in rows like streets. The advantages of this plan are, that there is no expense for ground; and the boats are built cheaper than houses, and not so exposed to the depredation of thieves. Each of these boats usually contains three rooms. In the northern parts of the country, where the boats would be injured by ice, this practice is not very common.

Somebody advertises in Brooklyn for boarders, but stipulates that the gentlemen must not put their feet on the mantle in winter, nor out of the window in summer, nor use spittoons at meal time. If single, he must not play the trombone in his room, make love to the servants, nor comb his whiskers at the table. The ladies must not turn up their noses at everything on the table, unless they have a natural pug, and none of the party must drink or talk with a mouth full of victuals, nor must they fight for the top buckwheat cake.

Politicians are not likely to make much by speculating on Gen. Taylor for the Presidency. In conversing with a gentleman recently, who told him he had been named for that office, he replied, "I am sorry to see it, I have always thought, and still think, a civilian and none other ought to hold that office. I have no other ambition than to bring this war to an honorable close. I then go to my farm, and there in the bosom of my family live and die."

It has been ascertained that the shag-bark walnut may be successfully engrafted, and that the engrafted trees are much the surest bearers. If it should be done, the quantity raised might be greatly increased and the quality much improved. The Maderia nut, which is usually sold at the shops under the name of the English walnut, at twelve and a half to sixteen cents a pound, may be cultivated here, and be very productive.

The Hamilton Journal says that a meeting has been held in London, Upper Canada, to extend the telegraph line from Hamilton to Windsor, opposite Detroit—stations to be at Hamilton, Dundas, Brantford, Woodstock, London and Windsor. Three-quarters of the stock is already taken, and in July it will be finished.

The Tartar colonists in Russia are said to make great use of tea, which is made into cakes, composed of the coarser parts of the fragrant herb. Of this they make a kind of soup, adding to it salt, pepper, and milk. 40,000 chests of this brick tea, as it is called, are imported yearly into Russia, from China, besides immense quantities of the superior kinds of tea.

When the lapwing wants to procure food, it seeks for a worm's nest, and stamps the ground by the side of it with its feet, after the manner of boys, in order to procure worms for fishing. After doing this for a short time, the bird waits for the issue of the worm from the hole, who alarmed at the shaking of the ground, endeavors to make its escape, when he is immediately seized and becomes the prey of this ingenious bird.

"My son," said an old turbaned Turk one day, taking his child by the hand in the streets of Cairo, and pointing out to him on the opposite side a Frenchman just imported, in all the elegance of Parisian costume, "My son! look there! if ever you forget God and his Prophet, you may come to look like that!"

However poor, an Arab is never without a good horse; and he will often take pleasure in looking at it for an hour together. The horse is washed, but never curried. As soon as a colt is a year old his mane and tail are shaved, to make the hair grow again as thickly as possible.

A very excellent food for milch cows, or indeed any kind of cattle to which it is desirable to feed grain, is boiled or steamed wheat. The farmer sometimes has a quantity of this grain which from some cause, is not marketable. Fed raw, it is quite unfit for milch cows; but boiled, it is highly wholesome and nutritious food, and will cause cows to give milk better than almost any other grain.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH.

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

HYPEROXY SOPHISTICATED PARADOXOLOGY.

It was a quaint remark, and one full of truth and instruction, of the present aged and venerable Pastor of the Snowhill Society, dropped in a conversation on the subject of Ministerial Education, after being apprized of the efforts made by Pedobaptists to furnish to their candidates for the ministry, facilities for a thorough education, and the evidences they exact of proficient attainments, before they accept and license them: "It is right, said he, they need it; it takes a great deal of learning to belie the plain teachings of the Bible, while it requires but little, very little, to understand God, if we will take him at his word, and truly desire to walk according to his commandments."

I am often reminded of that remark, though made to me more than twenty years ago, in tracing the turns and shifts of quibblers to evade the explicit injunctions of Holy Writ, and the presumptuous attempts of man to substitute, in the place of the clearly-defined institutions of the Lord, others of his own manufacture; a forcible illustration of which your readers have had in the articles of "E. W. D." and "Indagator," on the "Sabbath," transferred to your columns from the "Christian Chronicle."

The want of strict fidelity to "the law and the testimony," in searching out His will, and pinning faith to the sleeve of an arm of flesh, being swerved from adhesion, rigid adhesion to the truth, for the truth's sake, by venerated dogmas and popular traditions, instead of cleaving to the statutes of the Lord, often places man in the most ludicrous and pitiable dilemmas. Such is the case with the writers just alluded to, and which exemplifies very strikingly the folly of not taking heed to the declarations of the Almighty rather than to those of man.

In reference to an allusion to the "Sabbath Discussion" before the Sunday-School Teachers at Providence, R. I., "E. W. D." makes the following remarks:—

"The form of the question, as presented before 'the meeting of Sabbath-School Teachers,' is a virtual surrender of it to the Sabbatarians. 'Is there sufficient in the New Testament to prove the first day of the week the Sabbath?' Now, sir, using the phrase according to the prevailing notion of Christians on the subject, 'the first day,' as opposed to 'the seventh,' I unhesitatingly answer, No. The law says unequivocally the 'seventh day;' and, allowing the law to have binding force still, as most believers in the Sabbath do, there is not, in the whole New Testament, one syllable whispered about a change. The Sabbath was enforced by a special statue; expressed in language definite and explicit; and carefully recorded, for preservation. This law, being moral and permanent, can be changed in none of its essential provisions, except by statue or its equivalent, emanating from the same source with the law. The New Testament no where records such statute or its equivalent. You search in vain for it. They who attempt it only prejudice their own cause. This ought to be conceded frankly and at once. The 'first day of the week,' as we currently designate it, was distinguished among Christians immediately after the resurrection. This our opponents ought to concede. That they observed it as a Sabbath, cannot be proved." * * *

"In vain then do we look for a divine sanction, either by precept or apostolic example, for the substitution of one day for another. He who insists that 'the first' and not 'the seventh day' is the only lawful Christian Sabbath, will find it hard to make good his position. Christianity recognizes a Sabbath. Christ and his apostles sanction it. That Sabbath is the one enforced in the law."

Where is there a Sabbath-keeper that can pen, or has penned, a stronger paragraph in favor of the perpetuity of the seventh-day Sabbath, still to be sanctified by all New Testament believers? Yet, will it be believed that the same writer could perpetrate so gross a folly, and advance so puerile a subterfuge to evade the legitimate deduction of his own argument, as the following:

"If any brother asks me my warrant for keeping Sunday, I point to the law, as requiring the seventh day to be kept holy. If he replies, the law does not specify Sunday; I rejoin, it does not specify Saturday. He may say, It requires the seventh day to be kept. I say, I keep the seventh day; and ask him to count his fingers. If I, being a servant, am commanded by my master to go to Philadelphia, I may ride or walk, go by railroad or steamboat, without being a transgressor. If a fellow servant insists that I must walk the distance, I ask him to show me that in the command. Saturday is no more the seventh day than Sunday is. If it is so, will you, my brother, show it to be so. Show us the law. Such an attempt, I am inclined to think, would be very much as if a blind Ethiopian, with an unlighted candle, in a dark cellar, at midnight, should search for a black cat, which, after all, was not on the premises. The law of the Sabbath, as interpreted by some of both parties, enjoins an impossibility. As it stands in the sacred code, written by the finger of God, it is perfectly feasible, and is a provision of the highest service to man. 'To the law and the testimony.' These additions, changes, substitutions, and modifications, are the cause of many divisions in the one church of Christ our Lord."

What scribe, ancient or modern, can rival this logic? It out-herods the vagary of a notorious "evangelist," whose name shall not stain my paper, and even eclipses the foolery of Mawworm, in the play of the Hypocrite.

Here we may learn a useful lesson by observing how the blind lead the blind, and how the blind strive to darken each other's perverted vision, and in the end both fall into the ditch, as another, ("Indagator,") steps forth, a volunteer champion, to the rescue; fearing that "E. W. D.'s" argument should prove "a direct surrender of the question to the Sabbatarians."

"He ['E. W. D.'] seems to think that we have no specific instructions in regard to the Sabbath in the New Testament; that the notices of the first day of the week do not justify us in supposing that it was then held as the Sabbath; and yet 'Christianity' (where, if not in the New Testament?) 'recognizes a Sabbath.' 'Christ and his disciples sanction it.' Must it not be some other day, then, than the first day of the week? is a question which naturally arises in the mind of the reader. How is it answered? By a reference to the law—i. e., the Jewish law as given by the hand of Moses—which says, 'six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.' The seventh from what? The obvious answer is, The seventh in some well-understood order then existing, which order, if it still exists, as is commonly allowed, will teach us at once what day is the seventh, and therefore the Sabbath. But this would lead to Sabbatarianism, and your correspondent takes a different course.

"If I understand him, he holds that the 'seventh' may be reckoned from any point; that it matters not which is the first, nor what the order according to which we reckon; but that, having fixed on some beginning, if we regularly keep the seventh day holy, this answers the demands of the law. I fail to see, as yet, why, if each seventh portion of the citizens of this city, had fixed on a different day of the week to observe as their Sabbath, each day that passes over our heads would not be the Sabbath of Jehovah our God. And this might well be, perhaps, if the law in question had been an independent statute, communicated without any history of the circumstances, or statement of its design. But when we consider the circumstances, that a day had already been set apart in the wilderness, the order of whose recurrence was fixed and well known, how can we suppose that the law meant any thing more than to give the solemn sanction of Sinai to this very order which had already been divinely enjoined? And when we add to this, that the day was set apart as the rest-day of the people, the ends of which could hardly be secured without uniformity in its observance, and farthermore, that one incidental object of its appointment was to commemorate God's rest-day, which was the seventh in an order, supposed, at least, to be identical with the one now recognized, is it possible that there can be any mistake as to what particular day is meant by that law?"

"Indagator" places himself in an unenviable position, in taking exceptions to "E. W. D.'s" honest concessions—too honest for his party—his denomination—when he exultingly boasts, that he has not "the slightest practical leaning towards Sabbatarian views, or a particle of difficulty in regarding the first day as the Christian Sabbath, if, indeed, it be proper, which I doubt, to apply this designation at all to the LORD'S DAY. But the above queries indicate something of my perplexity in endeavoring to base the religious observance of the Lord's day on the fourth commandment, or connect it in any way with the Mosaic law. And now let me propose one question more, and the question, after all, as I suppose, which needs to be more thoroughly settled, in order to the satisfaction of many minds. What right has your correspondent to say that 'the whole question about the day,' a question of such immense moment to us as Christians, 'is to be determined by the law' of Moses? What practical concern have we with the weekly Sabbath there enjoined, more than with the sabbatic year, or the year of Jubilee?"

"E. W. D.," in attempting to enlighten "Indagator," in his next communication, commits the almost unheard-of contradiction of himself, by assuming that the case is to be wholly determined by the law of Moses; then asserting that that law does not define the day and determine the time to be kept; that the people have the right to determine on any day they choose, only to keep the recurring seventh regularly; yet it would be "capricious" and even "sinful" for any not to keep the seventh day he might choose and set apart; and yet, it is to be determined by the law of Moses. Mirabile dictu! But hear him! A Daniel has come to judgment! a second Daniel!! hear him, hear!!!

"Where there is no law, there is no transgression. If I work six days and keep the seventh, I fulfill the law to the very letter. Tradition may have fixed another. God never did. [?] If he did, let it be shown, when and where. If citizens choose to keep different days, it would be very inconvenient, and foolish, and capricious, and hence sinful. Its sinfulness, however, would not lie in its opposition to the sabbatic law." [Where then?] * * * * *

"'The question about the day' is universally referred to the law of Moses. Why is it that the seventh day, rather than the fifth or the eighth, is observed? Is not this determined wholly by the law of Moses? Where in the whole Bible is there any other specification on the subject? Partizans of both sides of the Sabbath question refer to the law of Moses. The controversy must be settled by the law to which all direct us. The New Testament contains no law on the subject. If the law of Moses is not now in force, we are without law on the subject."

To which "Indagator" replies:—

"In quitting this subordinate point, I would barely add, that if he admits, with most writers, if not all, the division of time into weeks, as having been established before the age of Moses, and that some day of the seven (which were probably called the first day, second day, &c.,) was intended to be set apart as a day of public rest and worship; and yet holds that although the law specified the seventh day, the Jew might observe any other as well, why then indeed I must wonder at the elasticity of his hermeneutical principles; though I have no disposition to press the point. According to this, they are justified who, from the prohibition 'thou shalt not kill,' because absolutely expressed, infer, in the face of all the limitations and applications of this general principle in the law itself, the unlawfulness of capital punishment for murder. I suspect that if our Saviour, standing triumphant over the rifled sepulchre, had said, 'Ye shall keep the first day holy, and labor the remaining six,' we should none of us think it indifferent what day of the week Christians observed. As little ambiguity or want of definiteness was there in the law of the Sabbath to those for whom it was given; and the man seized while gathering sticks, would have been justly held guilty, I apprehend, even though he could have alledged sincerely, that his Sabbath only came on a different day from that of the Lord his God. Would not 'the sinfulness of his conduct have lain in its opposition to the Jewish law.'"

"E. W. D.," in retorting, betrays a palpable instance of seeing the mote in his brother's eye, and persisting almost to obstinacy in retaining the beam in his own.

"Your correspondent 'Indagator,' says he, does not seem to be fully able to appreciate my interpretation of the Sabbath law. The cause of his inability is quite apparent. His mind is entangled in the web of traditional interpretation. What is merely incidental, and entirely separated from the law, he persists in regarding as an essential part of it. The terms of the law are plain. The difficulties of its interpretation arise purely from human additions." * * *

"I do not 'hold, that although the law specified the seventh day, the Jew might observe any other as well.' I stated distinctly that he could keep no other day than the seventh, without sinning. The question is, whether Saturday or Sunday is the 'seventh day.' His 'wonder' is altogether gratuitous. He is desired to point out 'the limitations and applications,' which he seems to suppose determine the order of days, and I hereby, on that condition, promise to yield the point at once. 'If our Saviour, standing triumphant over the rifled sepulchre, had said, 'Ye shall keep the first day holy, and labor the remaining six,' we should none of us think it indifferent what day of the week Christians observed.' Certainly not. We think they should do just as the Lord said. Nor do I think that the sabbatic law tolerates indifference as to which day is to be observed. It says explicitly the 'seventh day.' It is the law that makes the week; and not the week that makes the law. Traditional interpretation has reversed the order of things. I 'admit the division of time into weeks before the time of Moses.'"

Here is paradoxology to perfection; and if the reader tire in this reduplication of matter which has already appeared in the Recorder—so much matter with so little meaning—I would urge, that its mazes and confusion may serve as a beacon to them, in temptations to wander from the Word into metaphysical speculations, and becoming intoxicated with man's learning, in matters where God has clearly and distinctly declared his will—of endeavoring to become "wise above what is written." In all my course of reading, I have never met with as much paradoxy and heterodoxy, in any discussion of a serious character. The simple-hearted, those not puffed up with man's learning and party prejudices—not tied, soul and body, to bigoted sectarianism—but who love the truth for the truth's sake, and embrace the truth to glorify its Author, would at once render unto God the things which belong unto God—would not stand and contend with his Maker, but yield implicitly to the requisitions of the Master, and proclaim "God to be true," though it "make every man a liar." There is too much political chicanery carried into theological discussions; and truth is too often sacrificed to party, by those who are able to make the weaker argument appear the better reason. This, however, is not the legitimate end of learning; it is the perversion and misapplication of it; and while this course is pursued, underrating and overturning the truth for party purposes, learning, which should be the handmaid of truth, becomes a curse; and in this sense, and this only, is it to be deprecated.

Had not the reader been already apprized that both "E. W. D.," and "Indagator" are observers of first day, would any one suspect, from the foregoing extracts, that either of them can conscientiously and consistently contend for the sanctification of that day?—which one of them admits has no requirement in the New Testament, and the other, that it ought not to be called the Sabbath! Some more of these wise lucubrations will aid very considerably the cause of the true Sabbath—"the Sabbath of the Lord"—as by their own showing, they have no express authority, no "so saith the Lord," for the observance of the day they insist upon enforcing, and which is now actually enforced by human laws and penalties; and at the same time exhibit the irreconcilable difficulties it subjects them to in claiming sanctity for a day upon which the Scriptures do not confer the least sacredness, and persisting, in adherence to "the commandments of men," against reason and revelation; for they cannot help confessing much that makes for the cause of the true Sabbath, while they stumble at every step, in advocating the claims, the preposterous claims, of Constantine's day, so as to make the darkness visible to all. If all that "E. W. D." has written on the "deep points" of the law, do not enable the "blind Ethiopian, with an unlighted candle, in a dark cellar at midnight," to see "a black cat not on the premises," it enables every one enlightened by the Word and the Spirit to behold the darkness, the impenetrable darkness, which envelopes his perverted faculties—faculties which the Lord has permitted to be so blinded as "to believe a lie." Both he and "Indagator" have "cornered" themselves completely in resisting the truth; as was acknowledged to me, a few days since, by some of their own ministering brethren, who expressed much apprehension of their injuring their own cause in the discussion; and one of them frankly admitted, that not any one of their own denomination (the first-day Baptists) with all their talent, can write on that subject, the Sabbath, without "cornering himself."

Here we find writers of much ability, and of learning enough "to wrest the Word to their own destruction," who see clearly and distinctly, that the popular notion of the Sabbath is surrounded by incalculable and insurmountable difficulties, but still are so warped by man-learning, their own party prejudices, that they will not see the truth, because they are determined not to see it! Dr. Barnes truly remarks, in reference to another subject, but which is equally applicable to this: "None are so blind as they who will not see." When men will not take the Lord at his own word, and receive, implicitly, his injunctions, "to do them," but "follow after their own inventions," they soon become engulphed in irreconcilable difficulties, and have to grope along in doubt and darkness. The Lord has appointed but one weekly Sabbath, and that twenty-five hundred years before there was a Jewish nation; which Sabbath He has never abrogated, nor superseded; but which Christ declared was made for man—for all mankind—not for the Jews, or any one nation, but for all mankind, in all ages. The "year of Jubilee," and the "sabbatic year," which "Indagator" confounds with the sabbatic law, belonged, exclusively, to the Israelites; and were wiped away with the "ceremonial law," which "was against us"—"blotted out with the hand writing of ordinances," which "were nailed to the cross." This "E. W. D." unequivocally admits:—

"The Sabbath is not exclusively a Jewish institution. It was 'made for man.' Not simply the Jewish man. It existed before the Jew; and for a reason which had no exclusive connection with him. It was inserted in the Jewish code, just as all the other great moral principles contained in the decalogue were, because they were fundamental and useful. The recognitions and sanctions of the Sabbath in the New Testament, are a virtual adoption of it into Christianity. * * * * *

"But, put the weekly Sabbath along with circumcision and Jewish festivals, and where is your Sabbath? On what authority do you enjoin the weekly observance of the Lord's Day? Where is the law? Where is even the example? 'Where there is no law, there is no transgression.' What if Christ did 'stand, on the morning of the first day, over the rifled sepulchre?' Does it follow that we must observe the first day as a day of worship and of rest? May we not just as fairly conclude, that we must observe the day of his birth? This reason for keeping the first day is nowhere urged in the New Testament."

But "Indagator," stumbling on the most antiquated subterfuges, contends, that it is a Jewish Sabbath, classing it with onerous rites, as "circumcision, Jewish festivals, sacrifices," &c., and adduces to this end Collossians 2: 16, and Gallatians 4: 10; proving himself thereby a redoutable Rip Van Winkle theologian. It is not necessary to go into an argument to show that Sabbath days, here, apply to Jewish festivals, exclusively belonging to the Jewish economy, which were wiped out by being nailed to the cross. The merest tyro in biblical criticism can demolish this pretension by a single word, "σαββατων." His own party declare it to be irrelevant to the point—as having nothing to do with it. If the seventh day Sabbath was thus "blotted out," then we have no Sabbath, for no other was ever appointed unto us. The Bible appoints no other. The Apostles, as "E. W. D." admits, call no other the Sabbath—they never celebrated any other as the Sabbath; neither is that term or Lord's day applied to the first day of the week by any New Testament writer. The well-informed advocates for Sunday see this untenable position, and have abandoned it. It throws them, necessarily, into no-Sabbath. So much so, indeed, that Dr. Barnes grounds its observance upon the creation, and repudiates the idea of its being a "Jewish Sabbath;" which it is constantly "nicknamed." The Rhode Island Address, to which, among other distinguished men, is the name of Dr. Wayland—a host within himself—advocates the same view; and the National Convention, which assembled at Baltimore, a few years since, resolved the same. So none but little minds—men behind their day—continue to nick-name it the "Jewish Sabbath." Before such persons deride and despise the seventh-day Sabbath, which the Scriptures declare "is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," they ought, certainly, to find explicit authority for another in the Word of Truth.

Divesting the "discussion" of its verbiage and hair-splitting jargon, the arguments of both writers, may be summed up in a few words. "E. W. D." denies that there is sufficient evidence in the New Testament to prove the first day of the week the Sabbath; asserts that the question is to be determined by the law; that we may commence at any point, count our fingers, and every recurring seventh day is the Sabbath;—yet it would be capricious and sinful for all not to keep the same day. In this there is something original and eccentric. In "Indagator" there is not any thing original or singular, but his ignorance of the state of the question at the present day. He regards the seventh-day Sabbath as a Jewish institution, classing it with the rites of the ceremonial law; has some perplexities in founding the religious observance of "Lord's day" on the fourth commandment, and yet cannot find any other upon which to rest the sanctity of any day. Leaving the explicit word of God, and following their own vain theories, to bolster up party, they both fall into a labyrinth of error and become, a riddle even unto themselves. Instead of proving themselves expounders, they have become confounders—"making confusion worse confounded;" their "collocation of words," as well as their self-contradictions "involve, in the language of the author of Night-mare Abbey, a juxta position of anti-peristatical ideas, which immediately suggests the notion of hyperoxy sophisticated paradoxology;" and is about as edifying as Basil Valentine's theosophico-cabalistic revelations in Alchemy, as poetically set forth in his De Prima Materia Lapidis Philosophici:—

> Ein Stein wird funden, ist nichttheuer,
> Aus dem zeucht man ein fluechtigs Feuer.
> Davon der Stein selbst ist gemacht,
> Von weiss und roth zusammen bracht.
> Es ist ein Stein, und doch kein Stein.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Ich sag nichts mehr, es ist genannt,
> Wohl dem, der solchs hat recht erkannt.
> Suchs darinn, werd nicht mued noch matt,
> Excitas acta probat.

These valiant champions for the sanctification of Sunday, are fighting the wind; and while the one renders himself as ridiculous as the chivalrous Spanish knight, Don Quixotte, in attacking the wind-mill, his quasi-coadjutor, like Sancho Panza, doubts and sleeps, and while he sleeps, blesses the man who first invented sleep. Their effort, and the result of their combined effort, as far as relates to their own cause, may be written in the titles of two of Shakespeare's plays:—

"Much Ado about Nothing."
"Love's Labor Lost."

"Indagator" calls for light; and if the Editor of the "Chronicle" would let light appear in his columns, it would be an easy task to throw light into the benighted ranks of Constantine's followers, enshrouded as they are by the clouds of human tradition; but, Mr. Editor, you give him too much credit for liberality, for he has not admitted an article on that subject from a Sabbatarian; the discussion being conducted exclusively by his own brethren; and it has been intimated to me, on good authority, that he is tired of the business, as they make their own cause worse and worse, and prejudice the claims of first day in the estimation of their own people; and, therefore, would like to bow them off. That light, were I permitted an opportunity, should be shed entirely by extracts from Dr. Barnes, Dr. Wayland, and the Address of the National Convention. I should like nothing better, than to condemn such cavillers out of their own mouths, and confound them before the world, "our enemies themselves being judges."

O that the professed disciples of the Lord would "receive the law from his mouth," and let alone tinkering the statutes of the Most High, to bring them down to their own contracted prejudices; it would save a world of confusion—an ocean of ink. When men draw from other wells than those ordained by the great Jehovah, they make cisterns, broken cisterns, unto themselves, which can hold no water; and so long as Protestants, who profess to regard the Bible as the only rule of faith and practice, still follow the traditions of men in respect to Sabbath, or any other innovations of the Mother of Harlots, they must endure the lash of "Papists," who tauntingly (and justly) throw it into their teeth, on every occasion of any controversy, that they stultify their profession, in following their church in the observance of the first day of the week for the Sabbath, which they boldly assert was not introduced by Christ or his Apostles, but by the Canons of the Catholic Church! O that the disciples, of whatever name, would return unto their first love, the Bible, and have nothing to do with the "traditions of men."

That, I am aware, is a hard task; but the truth is sufficient to induce men to cast their idols—any cherished opinion not consistent with the Scriptures—"to the moles and the bats." While it was the delight of David to meditate in the law of the Lord day and night, and of Paul to delight in the laws of God, it is our high privilege also. And as it is our privilege, so is it our duty to meditate in these precepts. So may it ever be with all who profess to love the Lord, and who receive the Word as the man of their counsel. May they never "set at naught its counsels;" "nor darken counsel by words without knowledge," and thereby strengthen the mystery of iniquity," in changing times and laws.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNION.

Rev. Thomas B. Brown delivered a lecture on Sunday evening last, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in this city, upon the subject of Christian Communion. He commenced by alluding to the circumstances under which Jesus Christ, just before he left the world, instituted an ordinance to commemorate his death. This ordinance consists of two parts—the breaking of bread, and the drinking of wine; which were designed to set forth in a lively manner the two prominent features of his death—the bruising of his flesh, and the shedding of his blood. It was designed to commemorate the fact of Christ's death, without any reference to the time when it occurred; as may easily be inferred from the circumstance that no direction is given about the time when the ordinance shall be celebrated, while all Christians agree in celebrating it upon a different day from that on which they suppose Christ died. That this custom was to continue until the second coming of Christ, is evident from the language of the Apostle, "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come."

The Seventh-day Baptists practice what is commonly called strict communion; that is, when they celebrate the Lord's Supper, they confine it to the members of their own denomination. Mixed communion, or the practice of inviting to the Lord's table all who claim for themselves the name of Christians, they repudiate. The argument by which they justify their practice is a very simple one. Before stating it, however, it is well to premise, that the ordinance of communion was given by Jesus Christ to his church. This term church is sometimes used to denote the whole company of those on earth who have a saving interest in the atonement of Christ; including those of all denominations who are truly pious, as well as those not attached to any particular denomination, but who nevertheless are supposed to be governed by the Spirit of God in their general conduct. At other times the term is used to denote a company of disciples, regularly organized upon some doctrinal basis, and governed by certain rules, so that they can exercise discipline over one another. Now when it is said that Christ committed the ordinance which commemorates his death to his church, in which sense is the word to be taken? If in the former, then he left it where no sort of discipline can be exercised respecting it; for it is evident that a company of people of many different denominations, and of no denomination at all, having no visible organization upon a common basis, cannot exercise discipline about any thing. Is it to be believed, that Christ left an institution of so much importance to drift at random where no discipline can be maintained respecting it? We can believe no such thing. Hence we are forced to the conclusion, that the ordinance was committed by the great Author of it to the care of a company of disciples duly organized, and bound by certain rules of discipline.

Mr. Brown did not think it necessary here to inquire which, of all the sects known, has the best claim to be considered par excellence THE church. It was not his aim to determine to which of them in particular Christ has committed the care of this institution; nor was it his aim superciliously to set up the claims of his own denomination, as if the institutions of the gospel were committed to them in preference to all others. From the nature of the case, however, each sect supposes itself to approach more nearly to the pattern of a gospel church than any other. He had studied what the New Testament teaches in regard to the nature and order of a gospel church, and was firmly of the opinion that a Seventh-day Baptist church, or a church composed of baptized Sabbath-keepers, conforms most nearly to this pattern. He therefore concluded, that the society to whose care Christ committed the ordinance of the Supper, was a Seventh-day Baptist church; not formally designated by that title, it is true, but in reality composed of baptized believers, who all counted the Sabbath a delight. Other sects have an unquestionable right to think the same in behalf of themselves; but we must be governed by our own judgment, rather than by theirs.

Believing, as the Seventh-day Baptists do, that Christ committed the institution of the Supper to his church, and that their own churches are such as he then recognized, without superciliously and disdainfully unchurching others, they can not help feeling that they are bound to exercise some kind of discipline regarding this institution. Their argument, therefore, in justification of strict communion, is simply this, that where they cannot exercise discipline, there they have no right to extend the ordinance.

From this point, Mr. Brown proceeded to consider some of the practical difficulties which necessarily result from extending the communion beyond the right to exercise discipline. In any denomination where this principle is adopted, it is easy for a person who is notoriously unworthy of the Christian name to press himself forward, and participate with real disciples in the emblems of Christ's death, while he can not be subjected to discipline; thus bringing reproach upon the church and its ordinances.

Take another case more directly connected with our denominational peculiarity. We believe the Sabbath to be a necessary and important part of that law given to Adam, the transgression of which makes men sinners before God. How can we view those who disregard the Sabbath in any other light than as sinners? The amount of their guilt or criminality may differ very greatly, according to the amount of light which they have had. But this we can not determine. Hence we are thrown back upon the necessity of regarding them, as their actions characterize them, as transgressors of the law; and we do so without pretending to say whether they are or are not God's people. Were such persons members with us, they would at once be subjected to discipline, and for their violation of the Sabbath would be excluded from our churches. And shall we admit to the communion those who, if they were our own members, we should at once excommunicate?

Take still another case. One of our own members, who has for a series of years lived in the light of all the truth concerning the Sabbath, suddenly becomes disaffected, conducts himself in a disorderly manner, and is finally excommunicated. The next thing we hear of him is, that he has joined a first-day church, and is at work on the Sabbath. But he happens to be at one of our meetings on a communion day; and if the door is thrown wide open, after the manner of some, this man, who a few weeks before was so disorderly that we could not retain him amongst us, and who, in spite of all the light he possesses, has gone to work on the Sabbath day, comes up and claims a seat. Shall we admit him, or shall we not?

Such cases are not uncommon; and it is easy to conceive that the operation of the principle would be the same in reference to other things besides the Sabbath. Indeed many of those who advocate the extension of the communion, find difficulties which compel them to restrict it in some degree. In view of all the facts of the case, the lecturer concluded, that the ordinance of the Lord's Supper belongs to the church only—that body in which alone discipline is lodged. And as it is a church ordinance, it should be administered coëxtensively with the power of exercising church discipline.

"STOP MY PAPER;"

OR, THE TALK OF AN AGENT WITH SUBSCRIBERS.

Among the supporters of the Sabbath Recorder, there are three distinct classes of persons. The first class is composed of a few benevolent and whole-souled brethren, who, feeling the importance of having a denominational paper established in the city of New York, banded themselves together to secure its support, and so provided an organ through which to speak forth our religious sentiments. The second class is composed of persons whose temporal circumstances will not admit of their making any very large contributions for benevolent purposes, but who cheerfully subscribe and pay for their papers, and regard this as one of the cheapest and best ways to benefit themselves and others. The third class is made up of persons in a great variety of outward circumstances—some rich, and some poor—but all of whom are heard to say, from time to time, "I must stop my paper." Some of the reasons or excuses which they give for this remark, are really note-worthy, and I will therefore mention three or four of them.

One says, "I am not able to take the paper any longer." Well, if this is really the case, I have nothing more to say, except to express my regret that the subscription list is not large enough to justify the publisher in sending it to you gratis. It is a fact, however, and one which I am sorry to be compelled to state, that this plea is often made by persons who every year spend for some luxury which is worse than useless, twice as much as a good religious paper would cost them. It is not for me to say how they will reconcile this fact with their plea of poverty. I hope they will be able to do it.

Another says, "It is of no use for me to pay out my money for the Recorder to convince me that the seventh day is the Sabbath; my Bible convinced me of that long ago." But, my dear brother, we ask your support for the paper that we may be enabled through it to send the truth where it would not otherwise go. In this way you may be instrumental in making the Bibles of others convince them. If this truth is worth entertaining in your heart, it is worth publishing, that it may find a place in the hearts of those around you. Christ came, not to seek the righteous, but to call sinners to repentance. It is your duty to imitate him by doing what you can to spread the truth, and bring men to acknowledge it. It is not simply for the purpose of retaining those who are now in the observance of the Sabbath, that we are anxious to publish this periodical, but it is that others may be made acquainted with our sentiments and the reasons for them.

A third expresses much dissatisfaction with the size of the paper. But he seems to forget that a small paper, full of new and readable matter, may be worth a great deal more than a large paper half filled with advertisements. No doubt the publisher would be as glad to enlarge as any of his subscribers would be to have him. But after full consultation with judicious brethren who understood the case, it was unanimously agreed, that it would be better to continue the present size, and expend any surplus funds (if ever they should exist) in gratuitous distribution, than to enlarge the paper, increase its expenses, and so endanger its continuance

A fourth seems to be fearful that if his subscription is continued and promptly paid, the editor, or somebody else, will get rich out of the paper. In reply, it is only necessary to say, that there is no danger on this point. The Committee who have charge of the publication of the paper, instead of enriching themselves by it, have had the privilege of advancing a considerable sum of money to get it started. And as for the editor, he is employed at barely a living salary, while he might at any time receive much more pay for less labor in another department. The publication of our paper, like that of most denominational papers, has always been a self-denying and sacrificing business. Nothing but a sense of duty, and a desire to see the cause promoted, has sustained those who have been engaged in it.

The above excuses are only a few out of the many which the agent of a religious newspaper is accustomed to hear. When I commenced writing, I thought to mention more of them, but I forbear for the simple reason that they look so unlike the language and spirit of true Christians. Rest assured, brethren, that the repetition of these excuses will never accomplish the great work which is committed to us. It is high time for us to awake, and go about our duty more earnestly than we have ever yet done, determined that the cause shall not be hindered by our backwardness in meeting responsibility. The Seventh-day Baptists are more favorably situated now for exerting an influence than they ever were before. Let us not lose the advantages of our position by our own neglect.

ENCOURAGING FROM WISCONSIN.

From a business letter of Eld. Stillman Coon, dated at Milton, March 10th, we gather the following cheering information:—

There has been a Seventh-day Baptist Church organized at Bigfoot Prairie. It numbers fourteen members, is in a prosperous condition, and has a prospect of increase. Nathan Lee Bassett, Clerk, Walworth P. O., Walworth Co., W. T.

The church in Dane County has enjoyed a revival of late. Four persons have been added to the church by baptism, and others are anxiously inquiring the way to be saved.

On the Sabbath, March 6th, the church in Milton had an uncommonly refreshing season, which is regarded as an omen of good. Many freely expressed their feelings, their determination to increase their diligence, and to press onward and upward. Two professed to have obtained hope in a Saviour's atoning merits, and some who do not profess religion wept freely.

The brethren in that vicinity are about to organize an Association, to be called the Seventh-day Baptist Association of Wisconsin. The fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in July next is designated as the time for the first meeting.

DONATION VISIT.

A Donation Visit, called by the 1st Brookfield Seventh-day Baptist Church and Society, for the benefit of Eld. O. P. Hull, was held at the meeting-house in Leonardsville, on the 16th of March, afternoon and evening. There were present about five hundred persons of different religious persuasions. The sum of $146 67 was received, exclusive of the expenses of the entertainment, which was ample, and was very tastefully arranged by a committee of ladies and gentlemen appointed for that purpose. The audience was addressed by Eld. John Chaney, Jr., of Unadilla Forks, upon the power of Voluntary Associations and the importance of a right direction of that power; for which a vote of thanks was unanimously passed. The following preamble and resolutions were then presented to the meeting, and unanimously adopted, viz:—

Whereas the Rev. O. P. Hull has been successfully laboring in this church and vicinity, in the dispensation of the gospel, for about a year and a half, therefore—

Resolved, That we, as a church and a community at large, who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance, and enjoyed the benefit of his ministerial labors, do hereby tender to him our most cordial thanks for his faithful services in the past, and our best wishes for his prosperity and success in the future.

Resolved, That a debt of gratitude is due from us to him, for his kind and faithful admonitions and labors in the gospel, and for his pleasing influence in the social circle.

Resolved, That we entertain the utmost confidence is his desire and ability to do good, and to promote the common cause of religion and philanthropy throughout the community and the world.

Resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolutions be forwarded to the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder for publication.

Eld. Hull replied to the resolutions, by making some brief but very appropriate remarks, expressing his thankfulness for the decided manifestations of kindness so recently shown him, and his desire that what he had received by way of temporal blessings might not be used in wasteful show, but be made an auxiliary in promoting the great cause in which he was engaged. He said he did not feel that it was in his power to make any thing like an adequate return for the kindness shown him; but he hoped that the great Giver of good and perfect gifts would repay the donors in spiritual blessings, as well as "in basket and in store."

Results of West India Emancipation.—The British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Reporter publishes some interesting extracts from official reports relative to the emancipated population of the British colonies in the West Indies. The condition of things is rapidly improving. Notwithstanding the diversion of labor into other channels, it is believed that the crops on the plantations will very soon attain the full average quantity. The people are introducing labor-saving implements of husbandry, with great advantage. The plough is now almost universally used in place of the hoe, and improvements have been made in the mode of manuring, weeding, etc. Complaints of the want of industry among the laborers, are much less frequent than formerly. Indeed it is now generally admitted, that fair wages and prompt payment will always insure good work. But one of the most important results of emancipation is the purchase of freeholds by the laboring people. This division of the soil cherishes a feeling of independence, increases enjoyment by furnishing a homestead to cultivate, and promotes a proper self-respect and regard for the property and rights of others. It should not surprise us to find the first stages of emancipation work less favorably than could be desired for the planter. That was a natural consequence of so great a change. But no one acquainted with the facts in the case can doubt that the experiment will in the long run prove advantageous to all parties concerned. These official reports, together with the admissions of the planters themselves, ought to settle that question, and put an end to the prejudice against emancipation which is so prevalent in this country.

Reading the Bible in Schools.—Professor Greenleaf, in an article respecting the importance of having the Bible read in common schools, makes the following just remark, which deserves to be universally read and practiced upon: "For instruction, I would have the Bible an indispensable daily reading book, to be read with that particular seriousness which is due to it as God's word and will. It is my firm belief, the result of more than forty years' observation, that to the daily and reverent use of the Bible in our common schools, as the inspired revelation of the will of God, we are more indebted for all that is valuable in New England character, than to any other source whatever."

A Good Work going on.—Passing through Spruce street the other day, we met a procession of eight or ten men, each with a basket on his arm filled with Bibles and Testaments. We have since learned that they are agents of the New York Bible Society, and are engaged in exploring the dark places of this city, and supplying the Word of God to those who are destitute. They have already gone through the 4th, 6th, 7th, 10th 11th, 13th, 14th, and 17th Wards, with the following results:—Visited 30,199 families; found destitute of the Scriptures 4,787 families; supplied 2,649 families; circulated 4,119 volumes.

Brown University.—A correspondent of Zion's Advocate says: "I rejoice to inform you that four of the senior class in Brown University—young men of much promise—have lately been brought to Christ. Others still are anxious, and a general attention to the subject of religion exists in the College. There is no excitement at all—no departure from ordinary studies and duties, but an uncommon seriousness among the students, from which, when taken in connection with the few who have been converted, and those anxious now, much is hoped. Over twenty of the senior class, numbering on the catalogue thirty-four, are hopefully pious."

The way to do it.—Notices have occasionally been published of the very liberal contributions for benevolent objects made nearly every month by the Bleeker-st. Presbyterian Church in this city, amounting in some instances to one thousand dollars at a collection. The Commercial Advertiser says that at the close of the service in that church on a recent Sunday, Dr. Mason announced the fact, that within a short time subscriptions had been made by the members of his congregation sufficient to pay the debt of the Church, fifteen thousand dollars. The effort commenced with subscriptions made on condition that the whole sum should be raised, and probably would have failed but for the unexpected subscription of two thousand dollars by the ladies of the congregation; so that nothing now remained to be done but to collect and pay over the amount subscribed. The Commercial adds, that the congregation do not intend in any degree to diminish their aid to the benevolent movements of the day in consequence of this very liberal donation.

Revival in Phœnix, R. I.—We learn from the Christian Reflector, that a precious revival is now enjoyed by the First Baptist Church, Phœnix, R. I., Rev. Jonathan Brayton, pastor, who has been assisted by Rev. B. Cook, from Jewett City, and Dea. Kenney. The meeting has been continued nine weeks, afternoons and evenings. During this time many have anxiously inquired what they should "do to be saved." About one hundred, it is thought, have been hopefully converted, forty-eight have been baptized, and have united with the church, and ten more are standing as candidates for admission. Many of the converts have united with the other churches in the village. This church was constituted five years since. During this period there have been five revivals in the church and society, and more than three hundred hopeful conversions.

☞ The advertisement below is copied from a recent number of the London Times. It reveals a state of things which will surprise many simple-hearted people in this country. Only think of an income of some three thousand dollars per annum for taking care of 180 "purely agricultural" souls, and that too in a healthy location, with such desirable "society and scenery!" Who would not give the last farthing of ready money to insure such a prize, even if he must wait for actual possession until the death of an "incumbent in his 75th year?" Alas for the "purely agricultural" inhabitants; who seem to be about as much consulted in the choice of their minister, as are the sheep that browse the parish in the choice of the shepherd who shall feed and fleece them.

"Valuable Church Preferment.—For sale, the advowson of a rectory in the county of Lincon, with a net income exceeding £600 per annum. The situation is most desirable in respect of health, and scenery. The church is a neat, small edifice, recently erected. The duty light. Population 180, and purely agricultural. A projected railway station will come within two miles of the parish. The present incumbent is in his 75th year, and there is a prospect of early possession. Interest meanwhile will be allowed on the purchase money. For further particulars, and to treat for the purchase, apply to ——."

Cheering from Madagascar.—The New York Evangelist says that the relentless persecutions of Christianity in this island, now almost the only spot on earth inaccessible to the gospel, appear to be giving way. Cheering intelligence has been recently received by the London Missionary Society, the more cheering, as, from the fierce persecution directed by the Queen against all who dared to profess Christianity, in addition to the difficulties which hindered the reception of the gospel, many had almost abandoned all hope of immediate good for that island. About a hundred of the natives have been converted; and, more striking still, Rakotondredama, the Queen's only son, and heir apparent to the throne, has embraced the truth, and, although only seventeen years of age, has already manifested admirable prudence, courage, and steadfastness in his adherence to Christianity. Through his influence, the lives of twenty-one believers, who were doomed to martyrdom, have been preserved; and his religious progress is represented by the latest accounts as most satisfactory.

The Bey of Tunis.—It is stated in a letter from a French gentleman, that Ahmed-Bey, the Bey of Tunis, now visiting Paris, had a Christian mother, a native of Genoa in Italy, and it is probable that her influence has contributed to that elevation of morals, and that education, intelligence and shrewdness, which so eminently distinguish him from Mohammedans generally. He has had the magnanimity to free the thirty thousand slaves belonging to his states, by formally declaring that man ought not to be the property of man. A Christian act, says the writer, that would do honor to any prince in Europe.

The New Hymn Book.—In reply to numerous inquiries about the new Hymn Book, we are happy to be able to say, that it is now nearly ready for the press. It has been prepared with great care by a sub-committee, and only waits the examination and approval of the general committee appointed by the Conference before it will be put in hand. From some examination of it, we are inclined to believe that it will equal any selection of hymns extant. Wait patiently a little longer, and you shall have a book worth having.

Child's Book of Flowers.—D. Austin Woodworth, of 135 Nassau-st., has sent us a neatly-printed book, of 108 pages, called "First Lessons in Botany, or the Child's Book of Flowers," by Theodore Thinker. It presents the subject in a plain and familiar manner, in a great measure free from those technical terms which generally so frighten children. They, if no body else, will thank the author, Rev. Francis C. Woodworth, for this little volume.

Meeting of the Baptist Missionary Union.—The Annual Meeting of the American Baptist Missionary Union is to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, on Thursday, the 20th of May next. The distance of the meeting from the head-quarters of the Society, and from a large portion of its supporters, will probably make the delegation much smaller than heretofore. It is believed, however, that there is sufficient interest felt in the missionary cause to take many persons from the Atlantic States to Cincinnati.

Missionaries for China.—Rev. J. D. Collins was recently ordained in New York as an elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has been appointed a missionary to China, and will sail in a few days for that country, in company with Rev. Mr. White.

"A Long Article" will be found on our first page to-day. We trust its length will not prevent its being read. It deserves attention for the manner in which it contrasts and shows up the points at issue between "E. W. D." and "Indagator." Unless the discussion which we have thus far published takes a different turn, our readers will not be troubled with any more specimens of it.

General Intelligence.

GREAT BATTLE IN MEXICO.

Authentic information has at length been received of a great battle between Santa Anna and General Taylor, which resulted in a victory to the latter, at the expense of many valuable lives. The following is the most complete account we have seen of the manner in which the battle was fought:—

"At 3 o'clock on the 22d of Feb. the battle commenced at Buena Vista, five miles from Saltillo. The fight opened with artillery, and a destructive cannonade was kept open until sunset. No decided advantage was obtained by either side—the loss on both sides being very great.

"On the 23d, at 10 o'clock, the battle was again renewed, and kept up without intermission until half past three in the afternoon. Both armies were closely engaged during the whole time. Gen. Wool advanced with a strong detachment against the Mexican army, but was driven back with immense loss. The Mexican cavalry charged upon him with drawn swords and did great execution. As Wool fell back, Gen. Taylor advanced with fresh troops and repelled the Mexicans with great slaughter! This charge decided the battle, which was not again renewed. The number of killed and wounded was very great on both sides. I can only estimate the number by the cart loads of wounded that have entered the city from both battle fields.

"On the 24th both armies hung off without coming to a general engagement—each occupied in carrying off the wounded, and burying the dead.

"After the 24th there was no more fighting—the Mexican troops famishing with hunger became convinced that they could not triumph or drive Gen. Taylor from his position, and retired."

Santa Anna's force in this battle amounted to about 15,000 men: that of Gen. Taylor to about 5,000, most of whom were volunteers. The Mexican loss was about 2,000 killed and wounded; the American loss was 700 killed and wounded, among whom were 65 commissioned officers. The list of officers killed includes Colonels Yell, McKee, Hardin, Henry Clay, Jr., and Assistant-Adjutant General G. Lincoln. Santa Anna's Adjutant-General was taken prisoner, but was afterward exchanged. General Taylor was everywhere in the thickest of the fight, and received a ball through his evercoat, but was not injured.

A Mexican physician residing in Camargo, has received a letter from the surgeon at Saltillo, dated two days after the battle, which states that Gen. Taylor permitted Santa Anna to have all his wounded conveyed into Saltillo, and tendered him surgical aid from his own army.

The New Orleans Delta has a letter dated Monterey, Feb. 26th, in which it is said: "Capt. C. M. Clay and the other men who were captured a short time since have all been exchanged."

A train of 100 loaded wagons of the United States, on their way to Monterey from Camargo, under an escort of 30 volunteers, was captured by a body of Mexican cavalry a few miles beyond Marino. Three of the men made good their escape—the rest were taken prisoners.

A young lady, the daughter of an American citizen, living in Mexico, and returning home from New Orleans, where she had been going to school, was taken with this train, her father having been killed by the Mexicans. She had escaped and arrived at Monterey in safety, where her misfortunes had excited the most lively sympathy. The lady's name is Miss Burns.

ATTACK ON VERA CRUZ.

News has also been received of the commencement of the long-contemplated attack on Vera Cruz. The following account is furnished to the New Orleans Picayune by Capt. Powers, of the schooner Portia:—

The United States Squadron and all the transports left Point Lizardo for Sacrificos on the 9th inst., with 12,000 troops.

On the morning of the 10th, a landing of all the troops and marines was effected within three miles of Vera Cruz, without much opposition from the enemy, as the landing was well covered by a constant discharge of bomb-shells and round-shot from the U. S. steamers and the gun-boats anchored near the beach and in front of the landing.

Immediately after the organization of the American forces on the beach, they took up the line of march over the sand hills, to the attack of the enemy's outposts and fortifications, situated from one to three miles from the Castle and forts of the city. They carried every one by storm, not, however, without losing seventeen men.

On the 11th and 12th the American forces were employed in throwing up breast-works and digging intrenchments. Occasional skirmishing took place with the enemy, who were throwing showers of bomb-shells and round-shot from the Castle and city, but without much effect. During this time the seamen were landing provisions and ammunition from the ships.

On the 12th a strong gale set in, which cut off all farther communication. We left during the norther, and as we were unable to make progress to the north, believe that it was impossible for our bombs and shells to have been landed until the 18th inst., so that the bombardment did not probably commence until the 20th.

There were some feats of bravery displayed on the 11th, in which Col. Dickerson, of the Palmetto Regiment, South Carolina, was wounded in the breast by a musket-ball from the enemy, and Capt. Alburtis, of the 2d Infantry, had his head shot off by a 52-pound ball. This same ball broke a drummer's arm and took off a private's leg!

But on the same day the American army had gained complete possession of all the fortifications of the enemy which were raised by them to stop our troops from approaching the City. All the water-pipes leading to the city were cut off, and all the communications effectually stopped. General Scott landed in person on the 11th ult.

So closely is Vera Cruz now besieged, and so entirely is every means of communication cut off, that in a very few days the news must reach us that both the City and Castle are occupied by our troops.

Insurrection in New Mexico.—The report of an insurrection in New Mexico is corroborated by recent arrivals. A letter dated Bent's Fort, Feb. 1, 1847, and published in a St. Louis paper, says:—

"As near as I can learn as to the time, on the 21st of January, a general insurrection broke out in New Mexico, and all the Americans that could be got hold of were massacred. The affair was so planned as to have the revolt simultaneous at their various points of concentration. So far as we have heard, there has been a general destruction of life and property. In Taos, Charles Bent, Stephen L. Lee, Elliott Lee, and many other Americans whose names have not as yet transpired, were massacred. Charles Town made his escape from Taos on a mule, and went to Turley's, eight miles above, which place he left after giving the alarm, and has not since been heard of, and is presumed to have been killed or to have perished in the mountains. A Mr. Albert, who lived with Turley, and made his escape from there, states that when he got off, all were killed (eight) except Turley and an old Frenchman—Charles Ortobus among the slain. The Pueblo Indians were concerned in the massacre. The Americans have indiscriminately been killed and plundered of their property. George Long is the only one I have heard of who has escaped. Him they robbed of everything he possessed. At first I heard that Elliott was saved by the priest, but yesterday I saw a letter in which it was stated that he was afterward killed, and I am fearful that the last account is too true."

Outrage in Columbia Co.—In the Columbia Republican of the 30th ult. is an affidavit made by Peter Shelden, stating that on the night of the 24th ult, twenty-five or thirty persons, in calico dresses and with masks on their faces, and dressed in the style usually called Indian dresses, and armed with guns, pistols, tomahawks and swords, broke into his house and ordered him and his family to get up immediately and dress; that while dressing these disguised persons removed every article of furniture from the house, and put them into the common highway. They then took him out of the house and filled his head and hair with tar and feathers and also applied tar and feathers to various portions of his person; he was then ordered to send his family away from the house, and was then told by the disguised persons that they had let him off easy this time, but that if he came back to occupy his house again, it would be sure death to him. The affidavit farther says, that prior to the removal of his family his wife had been confined by sickness to the house for about three weeks, and had by her side when he was compelled to remove her to a neighbor's, a young child only about three weeks of age. Mr. Shelden says he occupies a farm which he holds by agreement with his brother, and which his brother has leased from Charles Peabody, Esq. of the City of New-York.

A correspondent of the Evening Post, writing from Hudson, under date of 31st ult., says:—"This city is now in great excitement, on account of another Anti-Rent outrage, which occurred to-day. Mr. Edward P. Cowles, one of our citizens, has just been brought into town so horribly bruised and mangled that his friends could not have identified him. Several others were also badly beaten. These men went with the Deputy Sheriff to arrest one of the Finkles, so notorious in this county."

Trial for Sacrilege.—A slave was tried last week at Charleston, S. C., on a charge of sacrilege, for having robbed several churches of various articles, such as clergymen's gowns, Bibles, oil-cans and lamps. He was arraigned under a statute of King Henry the 8th of England, which made death the penalty of the offence; but South Carolina law, which might have seen no difficulties in enforcing the provisions of such a code upon a free black, shrank at applying it to a slave who was an article of property. The court consisted of free holders and two magistrates, and one of the latter believed that this relic of nonsense and barbarism was still in force in the State. His opinion was, however, overruled, and the slave was only sentenced to be imprisoned two months, and to be twice publicly whipped, receiving twenty lashes at each interval.

Humanity of Louis Philippe.—Lord George Bentnick mentioned in the House of Commons, on the 22d of February, a fact highly to the credit of the present King of France and his Ministers—that, while 25,000 persons had been allowed to perish of starvation in Ireland, notwithstanding the warnings received by Lord John Russel as to a defective harvest in Europe, Mons. Guizot and his colleagues had bought, in time, not less than two millions of quarters [eighteen millions of bushels] of grain, and it was so managed that not a man, woman or child had died in France of starvation. Several journals, quoted in the Nation, estimate the deaths in Ireland from absolute want at 50,000, and it is stated that such is the police report of the constabulary office in Dublin.

A meeting called by the Boston Total Abstinence Society, on the evening of March 30th, was interrupted by one of the most disgraceful rows that ever desecrated the Old Cradle of Liberty. The Anti Temperence party assembled in great numbers, and by shouts, groans and hisses, effectually put an end to the meeting. Hardly any one was suffered to speak a word, and the only person who managed to gain the attention of the audience was a man named McLure, a Scotch weaver, who heaped upon the devoted head of Deacon Grant a string of vituperations of the most outrageous character. As the only way to clear the Hall, the lights were lowered and the crowd ordered to disperse by the police.

By the Nauvoo Citizen we learn that Mrs. Emma Smith, widow of the late Mormon Prophet, Joe Smith, has returned to the city of Nauvoo, and has taken the hotel known as the Mansion House.

SUMMARY.

A Danish man-of-war, the 'Galathea,' is now on a voyage round the world. She is a corvette, carrying 26 guns. The object of her cruise is both scientific and dipplomatic. She is commanded by Captain Steenbille, Chamberlain to Her Royal Highness the Princess Caroline of Denmark; and she has on board a Scientific Corpse, including Zoölogists, Botanists, Mineralogists, Painters for the Department of Natural History, &c. with a crew of 250 men. She left Copenhagen in June, 1845, and touching at Maderia, Tranquebar, and Madras, reached Calcutta early in November.

A singular and fatal accident occurred on the Western Railroad, at Charlton, Friday night. The wires of the magnetic telegraph, which crossed the track, were blown down and fell on the track. The engine attached to the downward freight train, caught the wire, threw it over the engine, tearing up one of the telegraph posts. Three brakemen were swept off the train by the wire as it passed over. One of them was instantly killed, and another had his leg broken; the third was uninjured.

A German who has been employed in the house of the Rothschilds, at Vienna, arrived at New York from London and was immediately arrested on a charge of having embezzled about $20,000 of the funds of the house. A large sum in gold and in Austrian securities was found in his possession, and he was committed for further examination. He escaped to London in August last, but the police of New York has been upon the look-out for him.

While Americans, and Irishmen in America, are contributing with truly Christian liberality, to the relief of the distresses of Ireland and the Scottish Highlands, Mr. Roebuck has reminded the House of Commons of a fact confirmed by the Dublin Nation, and many other journals, "that very large numbers of Irish landed proprietors, both resident and non-resident, had never contributed a halfpenny to the relief of the poor starving people."

In Ithaca, the grand jury had under consideration, bills of indictment against sundry persons, members of the Dutch Reformed and Episcopal Churches, "for being engaged in getting up and carrying on lotteries connected with the fairs held by ladies of those churches." The bills were not acted on finally, but the parties concerned seem to have had a good fright.

The True Sun states that the sloop ———, Capt, Weaver, from Haverstraw, Rockland Co., to New-York, loaded with brick, when opposite Nyack, on Friday night, was struck by a heavy flaw of wind and immediately went down. Captain Weaver and his two sons, one about fourteen and the other sixteen years of age, and two hands, were drowned. Three of the bodies have been recovered.

The Dublin Nation thus describes the condition of the Poor-House of Cork, on the 3d week of last February: In Poor-House 5,296; admitted during the week 452; births 5—total 5,752. Discharged 292: DIED, ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIX; sick in Cork Hospital 627; out-door patients 1,329; on the Sunday 28 persons died.

Letters from Tepic near San Blas to the N. O. Picayune, give accounts from California to the 18th of January. Gen. Kearney had arrived with 200 men from New Mexico. Uniting other forces with his own, he immediately attacked the town of Los Angelos, and re-took it after a stout resistance. Upper California is now in our undisputed possession.

The Scientific American says that Hoe & Co. have invented and put into successful operation, at the office of the Philadelphia Ledger, a power press which achieves the wonderful result of working twelve thousand sheets an hour. Instead of arranging a form in the usual way, the types are "made up" in sections of a large cylinder, one revolution of which brings off four legibly printed sheets. The fastest press before known in this country can only work between three and four thousand sheets and hour.

The Illinois Legislature have appropriated $60,000 for an asylum for the insane in that state. It is stated that the subject was brought before that body through the instrumentality of that noble-minded Yankee girl, Miss Dix, whose efforts in behalf of the suffering and unfortunate, the philanthropy of a Howard never excelled.

Under the head, of "Civilization" the New Orleans La Patria publishes an account of one of those scenes which it says especially delight the English and their descendants, namely, a prize fight. The combatants were named Kelly and Cox, and the sum at stake was $300, Kelly was the winner; his antagonist was bruised so that he could not be recognized. The skill of the conqueror in striking the face of the victim was applauded. Cox died the next day on account of the blows he had recieved upon his head, and Kelly took passage on board a Liverpool vessel just on the point of leaving, so that when a warrant was issued for him he could not be taken.

New Orleans papers state that the steamboat Clinton, with a valuable cargo, was totally consumed by fire on the 21st inst. above Bounet Carré Point. The fire broke out in the wood-pile near the boilers, and spread with such rapidity that the cabin was soon in flames. She was run immediately on the bar, when all on board precipitated themselves into the river. All were saved, with the exception of one deck hand, two deck passengers, the bar-keeper, the second engineer, (Mr. Weaver,) and the cook and chambermaid, colored persons, who were drowned.

The Lawrence (Mass.) Messenger says that a rumseller in that town has constructed a partition in his store, behind which he places himself, and the person wishing to purchase, puts his money into a drawer, which is drawn back and a glass of liquor shoved out, the buyer does not see the seller, consequently does not know of whom he purchases, and no complaint can be made. The messenger thinks that the ingenuity of the temperance men will find some means of bringing the offender to justice before a great while.

The Courier and Enquirer states on the authority of a sermon by Dr. Vinton that from tables accurately and carefully compiled, it is ascertained that eleven-sixteenths of those who follow the sea, die by shipwreck. The average of deaths annually among this much neglected class is eighteen thousand, and in one winter alone twenty five hundred perished by shipwreck on the coast of New England.

A ship at New-Orleans broke from her moorings on the 19th, and floating down the river came in contact with a steamboat, on board of which a considerable number of persons were collected. The collision caused considerable damage to the steamboat; two negroes were killed, and some five or six persons were so injured as to cause serious apprehension for their recovery.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

Remittances and communications must be made in all cases without expense to the publishers. The former may always be done through a Post-master, by handing him the amount to be remitted, taking his receipt, and forwarding the receipt by mail, post paid; or the money may be enclosed in a letter, post paid, directed to the publishers.

N. B. The Postage on all these Periodicals is reduced by the late Post Office law, to about one-third the former rates, making a very important saving in the expense to mail subscribers.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of The Illustrated Flora, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly refunded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, to whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, Lewis & Brown, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

☞ Editors of newspapers and other periodicals giving this prospectus three insertions each year, will, by forwarding the papers containing them, receive the entire work as it is published.

A REPLY.

BY MRS. EMILY C. JUDSON.

"Does she deem that stern duty calls her to resign the home and friends of her heart—the fame which she has so gloriously won—nay, perhaps, even life itself, for the far-off heathen? Methinks the 'orphans of the heart' are gathered in crowds about our very doors." [National Press.

"Stern duty!" Why rest on the breast of thy mother?
Why follow in joy the proud step of thy brother?
Why flutters thy heart at the voice of that other,
Who steals thee from mother and brother away?
When the lip clings to thine, why so fondly dost press it?
When the loved arm encircles, why smile and caress it?
Each glance of that fond eye—why does thy heart bless it?
Why love, trust, or labor for loved ones, I pray?

"Stern duty!" Came death to thy door, a prey-seeker,
Didst thou mark the eye glazing, the pulse growing weaker,
And in thy hand clasped, were a life-brimming beaker,
In duty, "stern duty," the draught would'st thou bring?
Sawest thou a rich crown to thy brother's brow bending,
At his feet, a dark pit, its death-vapors upsending,
As thou sprangest to his side, thy voice, eye and hand lending,
Would only "stern duty" thy fleet footsteps wing?

There's a dearer than mother, whose breast is my pillow,
A truer than brother's foot guides o'er the billow;
There's a voice I shall hear at the grave-guarding willow,
When they leave me to sleep in my turf-covered bed.
There's a lip with soft love-words forever o'erflowing,
An eye in which love-thoughts forever are glowing,
A hand never weary of guarding, bestowing,
A heart, that for me has in agony bled.

"Stern duty!" No, Love is my ready foot winging
On duty's straight path, Love sweet roses is flinging;
In love to the "Friend of my heart" I'm still clinging;
My "home" is his smile, my "far-off" is his frown.
He shaped the frail goblet that Death waits to shiver,
He cast every sun-ray on life's gloomy river;
Both are safest when guarded by Maker and Giver;
My laurels and life at his feet I lay down.

Away to my brother, the orphaned of Heaven!
Away with the life-draught my Saviour has given!
Away, till the web Time is weaving be riven!
Then my wings, and my harp, and my crown evermore!
I go, but one prayer my full heart is back throwing,
By these warm gushing tears that I leave thee in going,
By all that thou lovest, by thy hopes ever glowing,
Cheer thou "the heart-orphans" that throng round thy door!

COMMERCIAL CHARACTER OF THE CHINESE.

The concluding lecture of Mr. Williams's series on China, was delivered on Friday evening, March 5. It embraced the commercial character of the Chinese, the history of the opium trade and the war, the religion of the people, and the efforts of the missionaries to instruct them in Christian doctrine and practice. We give the substance of his remarks:—

The Chinese are the greatest traders in Asia, and have greater commercial transactions than any other heathen nation. The effect of their commercial pursuits, in the elevation of their character, is very manifest at Canton. They have sustained, too, a very creditable character as merchants. The trade at Canton and upon the sea-board is but a very small part of the commerce of China. The internal trade is far greater. There is a greater amount of tonnage upon the Chinese waters than in all the world besides. All the important towns, without exception, are on the confluence of navigable streams. In one river, before a single city, there are craft amounting in tonnage to 100,000, and canal boats making 75,000 more. In the river before Pekin the boats extend more than three miles in length, having a tonnage of 140,000. Before the town of Canton are 80,000 of all sizes. There is no town as large as New-Haven—and that would not be thought at all a large town in China—which cannot be reached by water.

The principal traffic is of course in provisions. The grand canal was originally constructed for the transit of the Emperor's taxes, which are paid in kind. There are no taxes imposed upon imported articles, but in lieu of that excise, officers are placed at all the intersections of rivers, canals and roads, who collect a trifling tax on every thing which passes. The amount paid on a tea chest at once is about 3 cents, and the whole amount paid at these custom houses, in passing to market, is not more than 50 to 75 cts. The number of these officers is not known. Very little, if any, evasion of these moderate duties is attempted. Their domestic trade is very great, the principal articles being tea, oil, cotton goods, silks, books, paper, pencils, cloths and provisions.

About one hundred years ago all the ports of China were thrown open, but closed again at the death of the Emperor. The word hong simply means a row, as of houses or trees; and the hong merchants, who for a hundred years held the monopoly of foreign trade in Canton, abolished by the treaty with England in 1842, took the name from having their warehouses thus ranged together. They numbered from twelve to fifteen. In the beginning of this century other native traders wished to enter into competition, and only certain articles were continued exclusively to the hong merchants. They being secure in their trade, have little temptation to practice fraud; and have generally, in their transactions with foreigners, conducted themselves honorable. Their bargains are never reduced to writing—the payment of "bargain-money," from ten to fifteen per cent., is always regarded as binding the seller to the completion of the contract.

The Lecturer had heard of instances wherein hong merchants, having sold tea prior to its arrival from the interior, which before it reached Canton rose in value ten or twelve per cent, honorably fulfilled the original sale, without even intimating a desire to change the terms, though the advance in price would have much more than compensated them for the loss of the "bargain money." The legal rate of interest is three per cent. per month, but the actual from one to one and a third; it is rarely as high as eighteen per cent. per annum.

The foreign trade in Canton is conducted in the English language. In that city four thousand persons can speak it. They learn it by rote, and as the idiom of the Chinese language is preserved, the singularity is very remarkable. They suppose that all the English language, or vocabulary, is comprised in the words they have learned. They do not learn to read or write it. There are about 604 foreigners in Canton, 90 of whom are Americans.

Tea constitutes five-sixths of the export trade. The other articles are raw and manufactured silks, cassia, sugar, alum, carved and lackered ware, matting, camphor, drugs, vermillion, crockery, fans and sundries. The export of bullien is nearly equal to that of tea. It is supposed that ninety-five millions of dollars have been drained from the empire: twenty one millions for the treaty with England, six millions for the ransom of Canton, and the remainder for opium.

The imports are cotton, opium, woolen and cotton yarns, lead, iron, tin, cutlery, ginseng, watches, pearls, birds' nests, biche-de-mer, betel nut, rattans, furs, rice, dye-woods and sundries. Cotton and Opium are the principal. The demand for coarse cotton goods is fast increasing. They have a bounty upon the importation of rice. The total import and export trade of China is equal to one hundred and twenty millions of dollars, two-thirds of which is carried on by the English. The import of the pearls is estimated at about one-third of a million of dollars. The trade is principally in the hands of the parsees, descendants of the ancient Guebres of Parsia. Rattans are again exported in the form of baskets, &c. Glassware, mirrors, Prussian blue, red and white lead, clocks, brass ware, and bronze ware, they make. The extension of their commerce is very slow, as they have not much that we want.

A large portion of the lecture embraced the history of the opium trade and of the war. The latter it is scarcely necessary to repeat. A brief synopsis of statistical facts in reference to the opium trade will suffice. The recent increase in this trade is unparalleled. In 1800, 3000 chests (each weighing 133 lbs.) only were imported; in 1804 its introduction was prohibited; but the prohibitory edict was futile, and the trade so increased that in 1820, 11,000 chests were imported. In 1832 the number was 30,000, and at present it is not far from 40,000. Once the sense of the people, through the various officers, was taken as to the propriety of legalizing the trade. The feeling against it was all but unanimous. Since the treaty with England, the Chinese have made no attempts to suppress the trade. They fear to do it, lest it should result in another war with England.

The Chinese religion, if such it can be called, consists principally in the worship of ancestors, which annually costs four hundred millions of dollars, or each subject 1 1-10 cent per day. Every religious act costs the worshiper something. This religion is interwoven into some of the strongest principles of man's nature. It is easy for those who are ignorant of the Bible to believe that the spirits of parents they have loved and respected on earth are proper objects of worship. This form of the Chinese religion will present the greatest obstacle to the progress of the gospel among the peculiar people. They have a class of transcendentalists also, but their teachings do not find favor. The following is a specimen of their writings. Truly may the language of inspiration be here employed, "Canst thou, by searching, find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" "The venerable Prince Yara arose prior to the great original, standing at the commencement of the mighty wonderful, and floating in the ocean of deep obscurity. He is spontaneous and self-existing, produced before the beginning of emptiness, commencing prior to uncaused existence, pervading all heaven and earth, whose beginning and end no years can circumscribe."

One word of the teachings of Confucius is worth a volume of their transcendentalism, but Confucius was rather a teacher of morals than of religion. The Buddhists have never been countenanced by the government, but have maintained themselves in popular favor by imposing rites and ceremonies. The Roman Catholics have had missionaries in China for two centuries. At the present time they have 8 bishops, 57 foreign priests, 114 native priests, 250 schools, 2 colleges, 303,000 adherents. They have not given the Bible to the Chinese, or made any efforts to diffuse it.

The Protestants occupy the five ports. They have there 34 men, of three American and two English Societies. There is a hospital at each port, where the sick are cured and taught the Bible. The whole Bible has been translated into Chinese. Other religious books and some tracts have been printed in Chinese. Five or six thousand hear the gospel preached in their own language. The Chinese eagerly desire knowledge. [N. Y. Com. Advertiser.

A DANISH FABLE.

The following exquisite tradition connects itself with that brief season when, in the summer of the far north, the sun tarries night and day above the horizon.

All-fader had two faithful servants, of the race of those who enjoy eternal youth; and when the sun had done its first day's course, he called to him Demmarik, and said, "To thy watchful care, my daughter, I confide the setting sun that I have newly created; extinguish its light carefully, and guard the precious flame that no evil approach it." And the next morning, when the sun was again about to begin its course, he said to his servant Koite, "My son, to thy trusty hand I remit the charge of kindling the light of the sun I have created, and of leading it forth on its way."

Faithfully did the children discharge the duties assigned to them. In the winter they carefully guarded the precious light, and laid it early to rest, and then awakened it to life again only at a late hour; but as the spring and summer advanced, they suffered the glorious flame to linger in the vault of heaven, and to rejoice the hearts of men by the brightness its aspect.

At length the time arrived when, in our northern world, the sun enjoys but brief rest. It must be up betimes in the morning to awaken the flowers and fruit to life and light, and it must cast its glowing beams across the mantle of night, and lose no time in idle slumber. Then it was that Demmarik, for the first time, met Koite face to face as she stood upon the western edge of heaven, and recieved from the hands of her brother servant the orb of light. As the fading lamp passed from one to the other, their eyes met, and a gentle pressure of their hands sent a thrill of holy love through their hearts. No eye was there save that of the All-fader, who called his servants before him, and said, "Ye have done well; and as a recompense, I permit you to fulfill your respective charges conjointly as man and wife."

Then Demmarik and Koite, looking at each other, replied, "No, All-fader! disturb not our joy; let us remain everlastingly in our present bridal state; wedded joy can not equal what we now feel as betrothed!"

And the mighty All-fader granted their prayer, and from that time they have met but once in the year, when, during four weeks, they greet each other night after night; and then, as the lamp passes from one to the other, a pressure of the hand and a kiss calls forth a rosy blush on the fair cheek of Demmarik which sheds its mantling glow over all the heavens, Koite's heart the while thrilling with purest joy. And should they tarry too long, the gentle nightingales of the All-fader have but to warble, Laisk tudruck, laisk tudruck! opik!—"Giddy ones, giddy ones! take heed!" to chide them forward on their duty. HOME-MADE BREAD.

Rye Bread.—A quart of water, and as much milk; two tea-spoons full of salt, and a tea-cup full of Indian meal; a tea-cup full of home-brewed yeast, or half as much of distillery yeast; make it as stiff as wheat bread, with rye flour.

Potato Bread.—Rub a dozen peeled boiled potatoes through a very coarse sieve, and mix with them twice that quantity of flour, mixing very thoroughly. Put in a coffee-cup full of home-brewed or of potato yeast, or half as much distillery yeast; also a tea-spoon full of salt. Add whatever water may be needed to make a dough as stiff as for common flour bread. An ounce or two of butter rubbed into the flour, and an egg beat and put into the yeast, and you can have fine rolls or warm cakes for breakfast. This kind of bread is very moist, and keeps well.

French Rolls, or Twist.—One quart of lukewarm milk, one tea-spoon full of salt, a large tea-cup full of home-brewed yeast, or half as much distillery yeast, flour enough to make a stiff batter; set it to rise, and when very light, work in one egg and two spoons full of butter, and knead in flour till stiff enough to roll.

Eastern Brown Bread.—One quart of rye, two quarts of Indian meal—if fresh and sweet do not scald it—if not, scald it—half a tea-cup of molasses, two tea-spoons full of salt, one tea-spoon full of salæratus, a tea-cup full of home-brewed yeast, or half as much distillery yeast; make it as stiff as can be stirred with a spoon, with warm water. Let it rise from night till morning. Then put it in a large deep pan, and smooth the top with the hand dipped in cold water, and let it stand awhile. Bake five or six hours. If put in late in the day, let it remain all night in the oven.

Keeping Eggs.—A friend who has had no inconsiderable experience in the business, informs us that he has tried many methods for preserving eggs, but that the following has proved the most effectual. Take a cask or box, or any vessel that is proportioned in size to the number of eggs required to be kept, and cover the bottom with finely pulverized salt. The eggs are to be set on the small end, so near as to touch each other, and the interstices to be filled with salt, the whole to be covered with a stratum of the same article, and another laying of eggs deposited in the manner of the first. In this way the cask may be filled. If the eggs are deposited on their large ends, the yolk will adhere to the shell, and become putrid. We have tried the above, on a small scale, and find it to work admirably. A correspondent, to whom we some time since communicated the above method, and in whose statements we place the most implicit faith, in a letter to us, recently received, remarks as follows:—"I have adopted the plan recommended by you, in keeping eggs, and find it to answer admirably. I have now several dozens of eggs which were packed one year since, and which are now as sweet as when taken from the nest." [Maine Farmer.

Great Snow.—The following account of tremendous snow storms in the year 1777, is from the History of Linn, by Alonzo Lewis:—

"Two great storms, on the twentieth and twenty-fourth of February, covered the ground so deep with snow that people for some days could not pass from one house to another. Old Indians of a hundred years, said that their fathers had never told them of such a snow. It was from ten to twenty feet deep, and generally covered the lower stories of the houses. Cottages of one story were entirely buried, so that the people dug paths from one house to another under the snow. Soon after a light rain fell, and the frost crusted the snow; and then the people went out of their chamber windows and walked over it. Many of the farmers lost their sheep; and most of the sheep and swine which were saved, lived from one to two weeks without food. One man had some hens buried near his barn, which were dug out alive eleven days after. During this snow, a great number of deer came from the woods for food, and were followed by the wolves, which killed many of them. Others were killed by the people with guns. Some of the deer fled to Nahant, and being chased by the wolves, leaped into the sea and were drowned. Great damage was done to the orchards by the snow freezing to the branches, and splitting the trees as it fell."

Opening of Japan.—A periodical published in Holland, under the patronage of the Government, and specially devoted to Asiatic matters, praises, in the highest terms, the moderation and prudence of the American Commodore Biddle, on his recent visit to Japan. Both he and his mission were treated so disrespectfully, (the Japanese Government positively refusing to receive him, or the President's letter,) that he might have been excused had he tried the efficacy of cannon-ball and gunpowder. But had he done so, it is said that he would probably have retarded for years the opening of Japan to his country's commerce, whereas his moderation has given the Japanese the highest opinion of the nation he represented, and has favorably disposed them towards it. Similar praise is bestowed upon the French Admiral. The article is written by a gentleman who has long resided in Japan, as doctor of the Dutch factory. It appears that the King of Holland has strongly recommended the Emperor of Japan to throw open his country to Europeans, so as not to run the risk of being bombarded into civilization like the Chinese.

The following receipt for making old silk look as good as new, is from a recent publication: Unpick the dress, put it into a tub, and cover it with cold water; let it remain an hour; dip it up and down, but do not wring it; hang it up to drain, iron it very damp, and it will look beautiful.

VARIETY.

The most usual way among young men who have no resolution of their own, is, first to ask one friend's advice, and follow it for some time; then to ask advice of another, and turn to that; so of a third; still unsteady, always changing. However, be assured that every change of this nature is for the worse. People may tell you of your being unfit for some peculiar occupation in life; but heed them not, whatever employment you follow with perseverance and assiduity will be found fit for you; it will be your support in youth, and comfort in age.

It seems the nature of sons to love their mothers, with a mixture of tenderness to the sex; gratitude for the innumerable cares paid to them in their infancy; fondness to the spring from whom all their little infant and boyish indulgences has flowed; and a pious reverence to the gray hairs and wrinkles of a closing life, the best years of which have been expended in their service. The love of the mother is the most universal and the most beautiful feature in the character of man, as to possess it is the crowning glory and supreme felicity of woman.

Pulteney, the great leader of the opposition, afterwards Earl of Bath, having in one of his speeches made a Latin quotation, was corrected by Sir Robert Walpole, who offered to wager a guinea on the inaccuracy of the lines. The bet was accepted, the classic referred to, and Pulteney being found to be right, the Minister threw the guinea across the table, which Pulteney, as he took it up, called the House to witness, that it was the first guinea of the public money he had ever put into his pocket. The very coin thus lost and won is still preserved, as the "Pulteney Guinea," in the British Museum.

It was the remark of Martin Luther, "Gaiety and a light heart, of all virtues, and decorum, are the best medicine for young, or rather for all. Ride, hunt with your friends; amuse yourself in their company. Solitude and melancholy are poison. They are deadly to all. We never knew a person to sit down in despair, or harbor the thought of suicide, who had a cheerful heart. There is nothing equal to cheerfulness in preventing sickness and what is called ill luck. In fact there is nothing but success that attends the path of those who possesses light hearts and cheerful dispositions."

Bishop Horne says that so far is charity from impoverishing, that what is given away, like vapors emitted from the earth, returns in showers of blessings into the bosom of the person who gave it; and his offspring is not the worse, but infinitely the better for it. "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be also watered himself." Prov. xi: 25. The bread which endureth, as well as that which perisheth, is his; and the blessings of time are crowned with those of eternity.

Whatever your profession is, endeavour to acquire merit in it; for merit is esteemed by every body, and is so precious a thing that no person can purchase it. Of this be certain, that no trade can be so bad as none at all, nor any life so tiresome as that which is spent in continual visiting and dissipation. To give all one's time to other people, and never reserve any for one's self, is to be free in appearance only, and a slave in effect.

At the Battle of Waterloo, says Baron Larrey, a French dragoon was struck with a ball on the left side of the forehead. It incrusted itself, and became so strongly imbedded that it was impossible to remove it. The dragoon did not die till 1822, but he lost his memory of substantives and proper names entirely, and to such a degree that having been employed as a drill Sergeant, he was perfectly acquainted with every part of a musket, but he could never recollect their names, but was obliged to have recourse to a book to teach the men of his platoon.

Two Lyons gentlemen, returned a few days back from Paris by the dilligence, had alighted near Arnayle-Duc, to walk up a hill, when suddenly several wolves issued from a thicket by the road side, and for some distance followed the travellers, who were without any means of defence. At last, one of the gentlemen concieved the idea of smoking a cigar, the light of which had the effect of soon driving off their unpleasant attendants. The travelers reached the dilligence without further molestation.

The Gazette du Midi announces the arrival at Marseilles of M. l'Abbe Gabet, a Lazarist missionary, on his return from Mongolia. This intrepid ecclesiastic accomplished a journey of 4,000 leagues from Chinese Tartary, on the confines of Siberia, and arrived with his feet frozen in traversing those immense deserts where the road is marked solely by the bones of men and camels. In the same passage, and on the same day, forty men were frozen and abandoned.

"If you had always avoided rum," said a wealthy, though not intelligent grocer to his intemperate neighbor, "you early habits of industry, and intellectual abilities, would have placed you in any station, and you would now ride in your own carriage." "And if you had never sold rum for me to buy," replied the bacchanal, "you would have been my driver."

Fletcher, Bishop of Nesmes, was the son of a tallow chandler. A great duke once endeavored to mortify the prelate, by saying to him, at the king's levee, that he smelt of tallow—to which the bishop replied, "My lord, I am the son of a tallow chandler, it is true, and if your lordship had been the same, you would have remained a chandler all the days of your life."

An editor, having undertaken to announce the titles of sundry new books in preparation, meant to include among them the "Memoirs of Hannah More; Dacre, by the Countess of Morley; and Henri Quatre, or the Days of the League."—But his printer thought proper to make him say, "Memoirs of Haunch Moses Decree by the Countess of Morley, and Henu Quarter, or the Dogs of the Seine."

Spinning is now all the fashion among the Parisian ladies. It was introduced by the Dutchess of Orleans, whose wheel is ivory, ornamented with gold and ebony; and this year wheels have been offered as New Year's gifts to many elegant young ladies.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH.

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

VIOLATION OF SUNDAY LAWS AT CHARLESTON.

FOR THE COURT OF APPEALS.

City Council of Charleston, vs.
S. A. Benjamin.
} City Court. Term, 1846.

This was a summary process to recover the penalty imposed by the 2d section of an ordinance of the City Council of Charleston, S. C., ratified 2d of May, 1801, entitled "an ordinance for the better observance of the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, and for other purposes therein mentioned." See City Digest, p. 272. That section is in the following words, Sec. 11: "No person or persons whatsoever, shall publicly expose to sale, or sell in any shop, warehouse or otherwise, any goods, wares or merchandise whatsoever, upon the Lord's day, and every person so offending, shall, for every such offence, be liable to be fined, in any sum not exceeding twenty dollars."

The process alledged, "That S. A Benjamin, on the 21st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1845, within the limits of the City of Charleston, in the State aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of the said City Court of Charleston, in a shop on East Bay, in the City of Charleston, owned and possessed by the said S. A. Benjamin, did sell to W. C. Gatewood, of Charleston, certain goods, wares, and merchandise, to wit: one pair of gloves; and also that the said S. A. Benjamin, did then and there expose to sale, certain goods, wares, and merchandise, to wit: coats, pantaloons, gloves, and other articles of clothing, by reason whereof, the said S. A. Benjamin violated the second clause of an ordinance of the City Council of Charleston, ratified the 2d day of May, Anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and one, entitled 'an ordinance for the better observance of the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday,' and for other purposes therein mentioned, and forfeited under the same, for the said offence, to the use of the said City Council of Charleston, the sum of twenty dollars for each of the said offences, making in all for the said two offences the sum of forty dollars, which the said City Council of Charleston are entitled to recover."

The defendant, who appeared by his counsel, Mr. Phillips, admitted the fact of selling the pair of gloves, as alledged in the process, but denied the charge of any public exposure of his goods for sale as set forth. On the part of the plaintiffs, (represented by Wm. D. Porter, the City Attorney,) it was admitted that the defendant is an Israelite, and that he keeps, as such, the seventh day of the week, or Jewish Sabbath. Upon this statement of facts, the case was argued to the jury by the respective counsel, the defendant contending mainly, that the City ordinance in question was contrary to, and in violation of the 8th article of the Constitution of the State of South Carolina, and this ordinance was therefore inoperative and void. That section of the Constitution of the State of South Carolina, adopted in 1790, is in the following words: (Art. VIII, § 1.) "The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall, for ever hereafter, be allowed within this State, to all mankind; provided that the liberty of conscience thereby declared shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State."

It was insisted, on the part of the defendant, that the ordinance as to him was a direct interference with, and in violation of, that free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, which was guarantied by the Constitution of the State, without discrimination or preference, to all mankind; and that keeping the Jewish Sabbath, according to his religious faith, the civil power could not, consistently with this great fundamental law of religious liberty, compel him to observe or keep the Christian Sunday also. On the part of the plaintiff it was contended that, viewing the ordinance in question as a mere police regulation, it was clearly within the powers delegated to the City Council, under the City charter, "to secure peace and good order within the City," and that in this point of view it was entirely consistent with the liberty of conscience and religious profession and worship, guarantied by the Constitution of the State. The argument of the question involved in the case, and one of much ability on both sides, covered a wide range, various authorities were cited, and analogies suggested, which it is not necessary here to repeat in detail, as the case seemed to be regarded equally by the counsel employed, as one calling for the final and ultimate decision of the highest appellate tribunal of the State.

Being of opinion that the ground taken by the defendant was sustained by the correct interpretation of the Constitution of the State, and the carrying out into practical effect, of its wise and liberal provisions, in behalf of the entire freedom of religious faith and worship, I charged the jury, that in my opinion, the 2d sec. of the ordinance of the City Council of 1801, "for the better observance of Sunday, commonly called the Lord's day," was, in regard to the present defendant, in clear and palpable violation of the 8th art. of the Constitution of the State, and therefore invalid, inoperative, and void. The jury, under these instructions, found a verdict for the defendant, and I received notice of an appeal on the part of the plaintiffs, a copy of which is annexed. As the questions, raised by counsel were peculiarly, if not exclusively, for the consideration and judgment of the Court, it may be proper and due to the importance of the case, that I should give at some length, but at the same time, with all the brevity possible, the reasons upon which my opinion and judgment were founded. I may be allowed, I trust, without impropriety, and without wandering from the subject, to premise, that no one entertains a more thorough conviction than myself that the Christian Sunday, or Lord's day, should be kept in a becoming manner; and according to my religious faith, that it is a day peculiarly devoted and set apart to Christian worship, and upon which the ordinary secular employments of men, or in the language of the Church, all servile works, should be suspended. But I have great doubts how far, and to what extent, the civil power of the State, under a fundamental law guaranteeing to all mankind the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, can prescribe, by a general law, binding upon all its citizens, that under certain penalties, for the better observance, in a religious sense, of any particular day, they shall intermit or abstain from any worldly calling, pursuit, labor, or employment, innocent in itself, and not coming within the terms or spirit of the exception laid down in the Constitution, and not falling within the legitimate sphere of mere police regulations. Though it may not be necessary to the decision of the precise question involved in this case, I should perhaps be wanting in candor, if I hesitated to avow my opinion, that, with certain exceptions which will be hereafter noticed, not falling within the operation of the general principle, in a community where there is a complete severance between Church and State, and where entire freedom of religious faith and worship is guarantied to all its citizens alike, without discrimination or preference, the observance of any particular day, in a religious sense, is a matter of mere ecclesiastical or religious discipline and authority, and in no way pertaining to the civil power or legislative authority of the State.

By what authority, consistently with the entire freedom of religious faith and worship, guarantied to all alike, of whatever religious sect or community, whether Jew or Gentile, can the civil power ordain, that on the day kept by Christians, as a holy day or day of worship, peculiar to them, the Jew shall be made to keep in the same way, or to some extent at least, the Christian holy day; although, according to his religious faith, he is required to keep another and a different day, as sacred to religion, and in conscientious obedience to the command of the God he worships.

But it is said that the evident meaning and intention of this article of the Constitution, as applied to the Jew, is to be considered as carried into full effect, while he is permitted to practice his religion, and to worship God upon the Jewish Sabbath, according to his faith, undisturbed and unquestioned by any; and that it is no violation of its terms or spirit, if in addition to this immunity, he is required, in common with all the citizens of the State, to pay respect to the Christian Sunday, by abstaining from his worldly occupations. But the Constitution professes to give to all mankind an entire and perfect equality of freedom in religious faith and worship, without discrimination or preference. Is it no discrimination or preference, to select by the civil law of the State, the day considered sacred in a religious sense by the Christian, and to compel the Jew to unite externally, at least, in its observance; to protect from possible disturbance those who worship on that day, by requiring all others to abstain from every species of labor and employment, while the Jewish Sabbath is protected by no similar regulation?

In the view of the Constitution, are not the Jewish Sabbath and the Christian Sunday precisely equal, and those who worship God upon one or the other day, entitled to a perfect equality of immunities and privileges?

It is sometimes said, that it is a poor rule which will not work both ways, and applying the principle which seems to be contained in this popular adage, to the question before us, it may well be asked, whether in a corporation, having all the powers over the subject possessed by the Legislature of the State, if the Jews should happen to have the majority of the Municipal Council, they could, consistently with the article of the Constitution referred to, require by law on the part of the rest of the community, the same observance of the Jewish Sabbath, which is now required of them in regard to the Christian Sunday?

It is apparent, under this clause of the Constitution, that the right to enact such a law, may be as rightfully deduced in behalf of the Jew as the Christian, and that if the Jew has no right to complain of the existing law, as in violation of his religious liberty, the Christian, in the case supposed, would have no other or further ground of objection. In truth, this great and fundamental provision of the constitution appears to furnish ample security, and perhaps the only one, against undue encroachments upon religious liberty, by the action of the legislative power of the State, amidst all the fluctuations of party; and to place, at all times, and for ever, freedom of conscience beyond the reach of any dominant or preponderating influence, which numbers may at any time give to a particular religious sect, or to any prevailing creed of the day.

The ordinance in question seems to have been borrowed from a very early statute, enacted as far back as the year 1712, when South Carolina was a British Province, and when the good people of that day were required under penalty to attend their Parish Church on Sunday, and to remain there devoutly during divine service, and were forbid from all traveling by land or water, except to and from church, or to pay a visit of charity. The second section of the ordinance is a copy in so many words of the third section of the act referred to, with one exception. See Pub. Laws, p. 19. That section of the act, as will be perceived, only forbids the public exposure of goods for sale, whereas under the terms employed in the 2d section of the ordinance, a private sale of any article of merchandise would seem to be included in the inhibition. It will not be contended but that the greater portion, if not the whole of this antique statute, is obsolete; and if operative in any of its provisions down to the glorious Revolution which resulted in the independence of the State, and the establishment of civil and religious liberty upon a basis of imperishable and equal justice, the clause of the Constitution to which we have referred must be considered as having entirely superseded and repealed it.

Shall the ordinance of the City of Charleston, passed in 1801, so soon after the adoption of the Constitution of the State in 1790, be permitted to revive and keep alive in any of its features, the inequality and injustice, the violation of religious liberty, inflicted by the act of 1712? But it is said that the ordinance may be regarded as a mere police regulation, calculated to promote and preserve the peace and good order of the city, and that in this point of view, without regard to any religious faith, and as having no connection with religion, it is clearly within the competency of the City Council, and is binding without distinction upon all citizens equally and alike. Although, with regard to this defendant, it seems to me impossible to consider the question presented in any other light than as one affecting the freedom of religious faith and worship, and that the defendant cannot be deprived of the freedom which in this respect, the Constitution of the State intended to afford him; it does not follow that all the laws of the State or the ordinances of Charleston, passed in virtue of the powers delegated to it, which regard in some respect the observance of Sunday, must be necessarily considered as inoperative, or as affected by this constitutional provision. For while it may be held that, consistently with this provision of the Constitution, no law of the State or of any subordinate corporation, can rightfully require the conscientious Israelite to keep the Christian Sunday, by abstaining on that day from an occupation honest, and in itself innocent and wholesome to society, or even that it does not pertain to the civil power of the State, to compel the religious observance of any particular day, by abstaining from labor, or in any other way; there may be many regulations and enactments by the civil power, founded upon the observation in fact by a large majority of its citizens, of any particular day as a holy day.

So too, there is no doubt, that within certain limits the City Council, for the better preservation of order and peace, and the better security of the city, may prescribe certain regulations, having regard to Sunday, as an existing holy day in fact; but they cannot on the score of being mere police regulations transcend the fundamental and constitutional law of the land. Thus the ordinance of the city referred to in the argument, on the subject of retailing liquor on Sunday, falls within the exercise of a legitimate power, that of granting licenses to retail liquor, which is entirely and exclusively delegated to the City Council. In regard to this matter, they have a right to grant or refuse a license to retail liquor, to prescribe the terms upon which it may be exercised; and if they may refuse to grant a license to retail liquor for a longer or shorter time, they may clearly provide, that on Sundays, or any other particular days named, they shall not retail or sell liquor. There are many acts of the State having relation to Sunday, which fall within the exercise of legitimate authority. All the acts in relation to slaves, come within this principle. Slavery is exclusively of statutory creation and regulation; and the power of the master over the slave may be modified or extended, as the Legislature may deem expedient. Thus the act exempting the slave from labor on Sunday (necessary occasions of the family excepted) is an eminently wholesome and humane provision, and liable to no constitutional or well-founded objection. So too the acts forbidding the issuing or service of legal process on Sunday, are free of all exemption, both on the score of expediency and legality. The whole process of the law is of mere legal creation, and its machinery may be regulated, as to time and mode, by the law which creates it, without violating any natural right.

There is also an act of the Legislature, and an ordinance of the City Council, inflicting punishment upon those who disturb any religious assembly or congregation engaged in worship; and as the protection afforded is not confined to Sunday or the Lord's day, and has no reference to any particular time, in effect, they carry out the very provision of the Constitution, in giving equal security to all sects and forms of religious worship without discrimination or preference.

In the examination of this question, I have not thought it important or pertinent, to refer to the various English statutes, requiring the observance of Sunday, nor to the constructions put upon them by the many decisions made by their Courts upon them. Where, as in that country the Church and State are united, and not only a particular religious faith, but a particular form of worship, prescribed by law, it is in vain to look for illustrations of that freedom of religious faith and worship, which it was the glory of our ancestors to obtain after a long and sanguinary struggle, and the enjoyment of which it was evidently the design of the Constitution of South Carolina to secure and perpetuate. Nor do I think other countries, holding a different faith from that to which I have referred, where, to more or less extent, the same union or connection between Church and State exists, present models for our imitation, or for our instruction, unless it be to avoid the errors of such a union. "Render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and to God the things which are God's;" let the civil power concern itself and predominate in its legitimate sphere; but let the worship of God be the homage which He requires, and regulated only by the authority He himself has established.

It would seem, as far as forms of government or the fundamental laws of society, can accomplish this most desirable end, and raise an impenetrable barrier between the civil power on one hand and religious freedom on the other, that our own admirable Constitution furnishes all the security that is possible. While this remains inviolate, we have every thing to hope, and on this subject nothing to fear; but this great barrier broken down or defaced, we may retain the name of freedom, but it will be but a vain shadow, a delusion and a mockery, "stat nominis umbra."

I have not thought it necessary or proper to refer to any ecclesiastical or historical authorities, by which the consecration of Sunday, or the Lord's day, to religious purposes, may be traced from the earliest times to our own days. As far as the observance of it, and the manner of its observance has been prescribed by the civil power, in various countries, it is not important to notice, if, for the reasons already assigned, and under the provision of our Constitution, it does not pertain to that power in this State. If admitted to pertain to religion, and form a part of that freedom of religious worship which is guarantied by the Constitution to all the citizens of the State, it is equally unnecessary to trace the history of the day, in the decrees of councils, or in the many regulations established from time to time in the various parts of Christendom, by ecclesiastical authority.

In this point of view it presents a religious question, in which, as far as the civil power is concerned in this State, as we have seen, all men are free to adopt and act upon their own opinions. Amid the various and conflicting views which may be entertained upon this subject, it may be at least said, that the defendant holds himself bound to obey that solemn command, delivered by God to his ancestors, more than 3000 years ago, amidst the thunders of Sinai, "Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day; six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but on the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; thou shalt do no work on it, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy beast, nor the stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all things that are in them, and rested on the seventh day; therefore the Lord blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." This holy day thus set apart by God himself, kept with a fidelity which has outlived the downfall of their once glorious Temple, carried with their scattered people into every quarter of the globe, still claims the veneration, and is consecrated by the worship of the devout Israelite, in our own happy land. Persecuted for so many centuries, the sport of tyranny and oppression, in so many climes, shall he not here at least be at liberty to worship God in freedom, and find peace and security upon the soil and under the Constitution of South Carolina?

His Honor the Recorder will please take notice, that in pursuance of leave of the Court, a motion will be made at the next sitting of the Court of Appeals, upon the following ground:

Because his Honor the Recorder ruled that the section of the ordinance, upon which the suit was founded, was contrary to the provision of the first section of article eight of the Constitution of the State, and therefore void and no law.

THE POWER OF KINDNESS.

Years ago we were in habits of familiar intercourse with a family, consisting of the parents and their two sons. These parents were both professing Christians, and enjoyed in a high degree the confidence and esteem of all who knew them. Their piety was much above the common standard. There was a sincerity, a solidity, and a circumspection about it, which everywhere commanded respect. On this account, we remember often to have felt surprised that their two sons, who had been brought up almost to manhood under their immediate care, and had never been for any length of time absent from home, should yet be not only destitute of religion, but active leaders in all wickedness, bold ringleaders in iniquity in their neighborhood, and fearless scoffers at religious things. The father died soon after, but no visible effect was produced by this event upon their minds. Not long since we met the widowed mother, and from her learned, for the first time, and with unspeakable pleasure and surprise, that both of her sons had for many months given evidence of a change of heart, and from being ringleaders in all wickedness, had become meek, gentle, and gracious disciples of the Saviour.

We could not refrain from expressing surprise, and some curiosity to know what means had been owned of God to effect their conversion. The mother frankly replied, that by some means she had been led to think, that her sons in their unregenerate state had frequently imparted a warmth to her manner in reproving them, which she now believed savored more of soured fretfulness than of love, and she clearly saw that the effect upon them was wholly injurious and repulsive. She pondered this thought in her heart, and retiring to her closet, bowed in prayer for the assistance of divine grace to enable her wholly to change her spirit and manner towards her children. She rose, baptized with the spirit of tenderness and love. She approached her sons with a heart overflowing with pity and tenderness, and in due time observed a corresponding change in them, and ultimately their hearts yielded to the new spirit of the mother.

Such, very briefly, was the mother's account of the means that proved successful with her almost hopeless sons; and we suspect many a parent and many a minister might derive from it a useful lesson. We risk nothing in saying that harshness and bitterness of speech and manner have caused many a heart to recoil in disgust from the subject of religion, which might by wiser means have been drawn to reflection and repentance.

THE OLD MAN'S COMFORTS, AND HOW HE GAINED THEM.

[Supposed to be written by Mr. Southey.]

You are old, Father William, the young man cried,
The few locks which are left you are gray;
You are hale, Father William, a hearty old man,
Now tell me the reason, I pray.

In the days of my youth, Father William replied,
I remembered that youth would fly fast,
And abused not my health and my vigor at first,
That I never might need them at last.

You are old, Father William, the young man cried,
And pleasures with you pass away,
And yet you lament not the days that are gone,
Now tell me the reason, I pray.

In the days of my youth, Father William replied,
I remembered that youth could not last;
I thought of the future, whatever I did,
That I never might grieve for the past.

You are old, Father William, the young man cried,
And life must be hastening away;
You are cheerful, and love to converse upon death,
Now tell me the reason, I pray.

I am cheerful, young man, Father William replied,
Let the cause thy attention engage:
In the days of my youth I remembered my God,
And He hath not forgotten my age.

HAPPY ILLUSTRATION.

I remember that on my return to France in a vessel which had been on a voyage to India, as soon as the sailors had perfectly distinguished the land of their native country, they became in a great measure incapable of attending to the duties of the ship. Some looked at it wistfully, without the power of minding anything else; others dressed themselves in their best clothes, as if they were going to disembark; some talked to themselves, and others wept.

As we approached, the disorder of their minds increased. As they had been absent several years, there was no end to their admiration of the hills, the foliage of the trees, and even the rocks which skirted the shore, covered with weeds and mosses. The church spires of the villages where they were born, which they distinguished at a distance up the country, and which they named one after another, filled them with transports of delight.

But when the vessel entered the port, and when they saw on the quays their fathers, their mothers, their wives, their children, and their friends, stretching out their arms with tears of joy, and calling them by their names, it was no longer possible to retain a man on board; they all sprung on shore, and it became necessary, according to the custom of the port, to employ another set of mariners to bring the vessel to her mooring.

What, then, would be the case were we indulged with a sensible display of that heavenly country, inhabited by those who are dearest to us, and who are worthy of our most sublime affections? The laborious and vain cares of this life would from that moment come to an end. Its duties would be forsaken, and all our powers and feelings would be lost in perpetual rapture. It is wisdom, therefore, that a veil is spread over the glories of futurity. Let us enjoy the hope that the happy land awaits us, and in the mean time let us fulfill with cheerfulness and patience what belongs to our present condition. [St. Pierre.

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD.

Thou from primeval nothingness didst call
First chaos, then existence;—Lord! on Thee
Eternity had its foundation: of light, joy, harmony,
Sole origin; all life, all beauty Thine,
Thy word created all, and doth create;
Thy splendor fills all space with rays divine.
Thou art, and were, and shall be! Glorious! Great!
Light-giving, life-sustaining Potentate!

[Prussian Poetry.

It has been seriously doubted whether there ever was a real Atheist. The writer never saw but one to whom he thought that epithet could be justly applied. It requires far greater effort to reject the evidences of the Divine Existence than to receive them. In the one case, we shut our eyes on the beauty and order of the universe; and in the other, we open them to behold its loveliness and grandeur. The Atheist is the most singular being on the earth. He will deny a God, yet call upon him in the hour of affliction! He will deny all spiritual beings, and yet believe in ghosts! He will deny and deride a Supreme Being, yet hope there may be one! And, to cap the climax of all absurdities, he denies all miracles, and yet holds to the greatest miracle in creation, that the universe came into being without a creating power! Atheism, if it ever did exist, I apprehend, will only be found among the most depraved of our race. And it will generally be found that when a man comes to the conclusion that there is no God, and that he will perish like a brute, he will act like a brute! Such is the chilling and demoralizing effect of infidelity! Such being the case, the extravagant remark of Lord Bacon seems very appropriate: "I had rather believe all the fables in the legend, and the Talmud, and the Koran, than that this universal frame is without a mind."

Anecdote of Lord Chesterfield.—Lord Chesterfield being at supper with Voltaire and Madame C——, the conversation turned on the affairs of England. "I think, my lord," said the lady, "that the parliament of England consists of five or six hundred of the best informed and most sensible men in the kingdom!" "True, Madam, they are generally supposed so to be." "What then can be the reason they should tolerate so great an absurdity as the Christian religion?" "I suppose, Madam, it is because they have not been able to substitute any thing better instead; when they can, I don't doubt but in their wisdom they will readily accept it."

Mrs. Judson writes to one of her friends in Utica, "I would not retrace the step I have taken for all the money in the world. God has blessed it thus far, and I feel that he will bless it. At any rate, I can say, 'though he slay me, yet I will trust in him.'"

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, April 15, 1847.

MR. SHUCK AND THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

Rev. Mr. Shuck, the Southern Baptist Missionary, seems to be greatly troubled about the efforts of the Seventh-day Baptists to establish a mission in China. Just before he set sail for that country, he spent a week or two in New York, and delivered several addresses, in no less than three of which he went out of his way to give vent to his feelings upon this subject. We did not happen to be present on either of these occasions; and learning from those who were present, that his remarks were not likely to injure any body but himself, we thought it not worth while to mention them. In a recent number of the New York Baptist Register, however, we find them paraded before the public, by a regular correspondent, as if they were really deserving of some attention. And as we are unwilling that our readers should lose the benefit of any light which Mr. Shuck may have, we copy his remarks in full as reported for the Register:—

"Br. S. related what other denominations in China were doing; and among others he stated that the Seventh-day Baptists had a small mission there. He regretted that those brethren had thought it their duty to start the inquiry as to what time the Sabbath should be kept. There was so much need of teaching the Chinese about eternity, that he was sorry a question of time should be agitated among them; and after all he supposed the question as to when the Sabbath should be kept, was a mere question of time. He could have wished that our seventh-day brethren had gone to China by way of Cape Horn, instead of by the way of the Cape of Good Hope, for then they would have lost just one day in their voyage, and when they had arrived at China, their seventh day would have been the Sabbath of all other Christians there. He said the early Portuguese navigators had been in trouble on account of two different colonies entering Asia, the one by Cape Horn, and the other by the Cape of Good Hope. The two colonies had settled only about one day's sail from each other, and yet one observed the seventh, and the other the first day of the week as the Sabbath. This had caused a great deal of trouble, until within a few years since, when the Governor General had made one of the colonies lose a day, by issuing a decree that the month of December, to them, had but thirty days. This had settled the matter of time with them."

Such is the language of Mr. Shuck. It must be confessed, that it indicates a great degree of touchiness upon the subject of the Sabbath. Without knowing anything of the character or efforts of our missionaries, he seems to take it for granted that their appearance in China will raise the question what day ought to be kept, and so create trouble. Can it be that he doubts the correctness of his own practice, and fears to have it tried by the Word of God? One would naturally suppose so, from the manner in which he alludes to this subject. Indeed we cannot account for his feeling in relation to it upon any other supposition. And believing as we do that this is the real cause of his grief, we can say nothing for his consolation. Our missionaries are men who fear God, and tremble at his Word. We do not believe that any sickly fear of consequences will restrain them from speaking the truth boldly. They have not so learned Christ, or so read his last great commission.

It is worth while to notice the reason stated for regretting that our brethren have thought it their duty to engage in this work. "There was so much need of teaching the Chinese about eternity, that he was sorry a question of time should be agitated among them." The question at issue between the Seventh-day Baptists and others is, whether the fourth commandment shall be received in its simplicity, or modified to suit the theories and practices of men. It is therefore a question of obedience to the law of God. Now Mr. Shuck thinks this is a question of time, which ought to be waved because the Chinese have so much need of instruction about eternity. Does he suppose that men are to be prepared for eternity by neglecting the duties of time? His language certainly implies that. But we are old-fashioned enough to believe, that there is no better preparation for eternity than a life of obedience to God in time. Hence our anxiety to make known the whole truth of God, would be increased, rather than diminished, by considering that the Chinese need so much instruction about eternity.

Mr. Shuck's talk about going to China by the way of Cape Horn instead of the Cape of Good Hope, will surprise those simple-hearted people who are accustomed to look for sincerity and candor in every missionary of the cross. His manner of treating the subject is adapted to captivate and mislead, but not to convince or instruct. Either God has commanded the observance of a Sabbath, or else man is not bound to observe one. If God has commanded, then man is not at liberty to choose which day he will keep, or to introduce change and confusion by sailing around the world for that express object. Most advocates of the first day frankly confess this. Hence they insist upon the authority of the fourth commandment, and endeavor to justify a change from the seventh to the first day of the week. But Mr. Shuck has discovered that the whole question is one of time, and that we may secure uniformity in any way we please, "by issuing a decree" for the purpose, or by sailing around the world in a direction to suit the circumstances of our several cases. We have heard of "whipping the devil round a stump;" and surely the kind of transaction which that expression is intended to describe, may easily be justified by the species of casuistry which is here applied to the Sabbath. Who could have believed, that for such a discovery the world would be indebted to a Baptist, and he a missionary among the heathen? We wonder that in his zeal for harmony on missionary ground, he has never proposed to the Presbyterians and Methodists to give up their peculiarities in regard to the manner of applying water in baptism, so as to produce apparent union. This would require no sacrifice of conscience, and only a slight modification of practice, but might produce a great good. When he proposes that, we shall recommend to him, since he considers the question which day is kept for the Sabbath to be one of but little importance, just to keep the seventh day, and so come into harmony with those who feel bound in conscience to observe the seventh day.

In conclusion, we have only to express our deep and growing conviction of the importance of the missionary enterprise in which we have engaged. The Chinese stand in perishing need of instruction respecting the things of time, as well as of eternity. The fact that they have missionaries among them, does not alter their case, or affect our duty. Let the enterprise be abundantly sustained by our prayers and our contributions, not on account of what our enemies say of us, but on account of what the heathen need, and what the God of the heathen demands of us.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The Central Seventh-day Baptist Association, at its last semi-annual session, appointed Eld. Eli S. Bailey and myself to labor as missionaries in Jefferson, Lewis, and St. Lawrence Counties, leaving the amount of labor, as well as the particular stations, discretionary with us. They also made it our duty to report the result of our labors through the Recorder. The following is my report.

On the 12th of January, I left home and went to Oxford in expectation of finding a quantity of Sabbath Tracts; but in this I was disappointed. On the following day, I drove to Leonardsville, where, in consequence of the inclemency of the weather, I spent several days, including a Sabbath. I then started for Adams, which place I reached after three days. On my way, I spent a night at the Sand Banks, in the family of a sister who formerly kept the Sabbath. In the course of the evening, we engaged in religious conversation, and I found the man to be a non-professor, who was justifying himself in that position by the want of devotion on the part of professors of religion. His wife, I learned, had just left the Sabbath, and was keeping the first day. In reply to inquiries as to what had changed her views, she said they were not changed, but that she had adopted her present course because there was no Sabbath-keeping church which she could attend, there was good preaching on Sunday, and she had a child growing up who needed the influence of society. To both of these persons I endeavored to show that their duty was to be regulated, not by the practice of others, but by the law of that God in whose sight obedience is better than sacrifice.

At Adams I tarried until the 28th of January, spending my time principally in efforts to advance the cause of missions. I then started for Philadelphia. On my way, called upon Eld. Joel Green, who is now engaged in publishing a temperance paper, called the "Watertown Spectator." I need not say that it is an excellent paper. The ability of the editor will warrant that conclusion. The friends of temperance held a convention while I was there, and resolved to enforce the license law. It was an excellent meeting, and I was informed that the results have been cheering. Before this meeting, liquor was sold openly in all parts of the town, but now tavern-keepers have put it out of their bars, and say to sell none, which the friends of temperance mean shall be true. During the past year I have traveled in nearly every part of the State, and have kept an eye upon this matter. I am more than ever convinced of the utility of the present law, if the Legislature will allow it to remain as it is.

On the 29th of January, I reached Philadelphia, and called on Bro. Coon. He seemed glad to see me, but feared that the people, especially those connected with the churches, would not be much pleased. He thought they were afraid of our Sabbath influence, and would not come to meeting. Notice was given, however, through the schools, that I would preach in the evening. But on going to the meeting-house, I found none but brother Coon's family, which served to confirm his views of the feelings of the people. On the 30th, which was Sabbath, we visited a family about two miles from the village, the lady of which was a Sabbath-keeper. In the evening a congregation came together, comprising nearly all the neighborhood, who paid good attention, and seemed to feel a good degree of interest. On the 31st I went to the village, and listened to a funeral sermon by the Baptist minister, an excellent preacher, and a man of piety. I was invited to preach there in the evening, with which I complied, and had a good congregation. The following day I spent in visiting from house to house, and found the state of religion very low. During the day I called upon the Methodist minister, who seemed glad to see me, and conversed freely upon the Sabbath question. He admitted that the Sabbath was changed by Constantine, and wondered that any body should think otherwise. But when I came to inquire why he did not keep the Sabbath, he replied that he did not think it would be asked at the judgment what day we had kept. I began at Moses and the prophets, and expounded to him the way of God more perfectly. On my leaving he expressed much pleasure in the interview, and wished me to call again. I hope it was not a lost visit. In the evening I listened to Eld. Bailey. V. HULL.

EXPLANATION.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I notice two replies to the first of my questions published in the Recorder of Dec. 17, 1846. It appears that the writers of those replies have understood the question differently. This seems to call for some explanation, which I proceed to give. In the first reply, given by Prestonian in the Recorder of Jan. 14th, the question seems to have been understood and answered according to the true intent. But if I understand the second reply, given by Cryptic, Jan. 28th, the question has been by him misconceived, and a different issue made. Cryptic says, "The question is, I think, whether that covenant and rule of faith, written under the direction of the great author and finisher of our faith, will admit of any other not possessing like evidence of inspiration." This is not the question intended. I do not know of any of our denomination who do not fully agree, that it is right and proper to take the New Testament covenant as a church bond, and its plain language as a rule of faith. But as to the act, or practice, of writing covenants and articles of faith, "there is not an entire agreement," as will be observed is stated in the original question. There are some who disavow the practice of writing church covenants and doctrinal points of belief. Such writing, say they, is a paper yoke, binding burdens, adding to the Scriptures, &c., &c. The question intended is simply this: Is it proper for brethren entering into a church compact to write down their agreement with regard to church government and doctrinal sentiments? Now it may be supposed that the utility and propriety of such writing is so generally admitted and practiced, that a question of this kind is unnecessary. This perhaps may be the reason why brother Cryptic did not readily understand the question. These explanatory remarks will probably serve to place the question beyond misapprehension, and I hope it will be duly appreciated and answered by those who may have decided views in the matter. Brethren, by comparing the general practice with the existing circumstances noticed above, may readily judge that obstacles which ought to be removed are in the way of some.

Now while I am on the subject, brethren, permit me again to call your attention to the second question in the Recorder of Dec. 17. Although I am slow to believe that essentially conflicting sentiments and practices with regard to church authority and the mode of setting forward gospel ministers, prevail in our denomination to any great extent, yet hindrances evidently are in the way of some on occount thereof. INQUIRER.

NEW SALEM, Va., March, 1847.

THE DIFFERENCE.—The Pennsylvania Freeman publishes a letter from Charles C. Burleigh, in relation to his recent imprisonment for selling books on Sunday. It seems that the complaint against him was made by a deacon of the Presbyterian Church in Oxford, who was supported in his 'labor of love' by the minister of the same church. It has since been stated to Mr. Burleigh, upon authority which can hardly be questioned, that books have been sold at the close of a first-day religious meeting, in this same Presbyterian church, and by the minister himself. It was done in this way: The minister announced, after the usual 'services of the sanctuary,' that on the table before the pulpit were certain books, on or in which the price was marked, and those who wished might take them then, and pay the price on another day, at a place which he named, where the owner of the books, or some one for him, would receive it. In pursuance of this advertisement, some of the books were taken, and thus the people completed the contract begun by the preacher. Some of the simple may think there is not much difference between this transaction and that with which Burleigh himself was charged. Indeed, it cannot be denied, that there is a very striking resemblance between them, since in both cases the bargain was made and the goods delivered. But the two cases differ in one very important point, which must not be overlooked, viz: that the minister did his business on credit, while Mr. Burleigh required the cash down!

FIRE IN ALFRED.—A letter from Eld. N. V. Hull, says that on the 30th of March, the Wagon Shop of Philip Green, of Alfred, Allegany Co., took fire, and was mostly consumed. The citizens and members of Alfred Academy turned out en masse, and labored most faithfully in subduing the fire.

☞ A Post Office has been established in Albion, Dane Co., W. T., and Perez C. Burdick appointed postmaster.

☞ The Seventh-day Baptist Church in Dane Co., W. T., has changed its name to the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Albion.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Brooklyn Star contains the plan of the American Delegates for the formation of an American Alliance. It is signed by Rev. Dr. De Witt as Chairman, and Rev. Dr. Cox and Rev. Mr. Wheelock, Secretaries. Persons who wish to become members must be "personally known or suitably authenticated to the Committee," "members of some evangelical church in good and regular standing," and "must sign their names to the formula." The business of the Alliance is to be conducted by thirty Councilors. The Committee will meet to receive members every Tuesday, at the Foreign Missionary Room in the American Tract Society's House. The following settlement of the Slavery question must be very satisfactory to all who can bring their minds to it:—

"Inasmuch as the peculiar circumstances of this country seem to demand an expression of sentiment on the subject of slavery, this Alliance declares that a discrimination is to be made between those who hold slaves, not by their own fault, or for the sake of their own advantage, but from motives entirely benevolent, and those who hold their fellow creatures in bondage for the sake of gain; and that the former are to be regarded as entitled to fellowship, while the latter cannot be received as members of this Alliance."

IS IT SO?—It was asserted upon high authority, a few years ago, that there is no Episcopal Church in the State of New York, except the pew holders in the Episcopal houses of worship. They elect the lay delegates to ecclesiastical bodies, who may be irreligious men, and these delegates have power to decree forms and ceremonies, to make laws, to elect bishops, and in short to determine the character and policy of those bodies. We could hardly have believed such a state of things to exist among those who claim to be, par excellence, the Church. But if the following paragraph from that influential paper, the Episcopal Recorder, can be relied upon, it must be even so, notwithstanding our doubts:—

"There is scarcely a single circumstance which reflects such discredit upon the Episcopal Church in this country, as that, not only irreligious, but (the fact cannot and ought not to be concealed,) even profane and immoral men, have sometimes been seen to take their seat in her deliberative assemblies, aye, to sway her councils, and, in some dgree, to stamp the impress of their own characters upon her legislation. We are quite sure that this fact has been connected, in more instances than one, with the heaviest calamities by which our Zion has ever been made desolate."

RESPECT FOR MAMMON.—The Pittsburg Tribune says that the authorities of Boston are prosecuting rich liquor dealers with as little consideration for the feelings of men so decidedly respectable, as they have ever evinced for those who deal in three cent 'taps.' To what a pass is society coming, in these days of radicalism, when rich and poor are treated alike by the law, which has generally been so nice and discriminating in its choice of victims! Think how harsh it is to confound the rich and the poor—in other words, according to the creed and practice of the world, the virtuous and vicious! There must be an absolute end to every thing like respect for Mammon, if this is to continue.

TAVOY BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The twelfth annual report of this Society, made at a meeting in July, 1846, has been published, and contains much interesting intelligence. It appears from it that all the churches have acquired the habit of contributing something to the mission cause in money, besides assisting their teachers; and the annual sum thus recieved from the church at Mata, is more than the pay of the zealous teachers.

MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.—The ship Heber was to sail from Boston for China on the 12th. Among her passengers were Rev. Mr. Yates and wife, missionaries of the Southern Baptist Board, who were prevented by sickness from sailing in the Ashburton, three missionaries of the Methodist Board, and two of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

MR. DEAN IN CHINA.—The Baptist Missionary Magazine for April contains some account of Mr. Dean, from which we learn that he is again at his work in Hong Kong. On Sunday, Nov. 15th, he had a Chinese assembly of almost 100. Here is an extract from his letter:—

"The Church here appears as well, and, perhaps, better than could be expected, when we remember that it has been without the care and counsel of any missionary for nearly two years. One of the members is, just now, giving me solicitude, but the remainder appear like growing Christians. Several have renewed their applications for baptism, and some who made their request before I left China, have since died unbaptized, but, I hope, not unregenerated. I am now quietly settled in my old house."

"For a few months before I left China, my duties seemed a burden; but now I enjoy a measure of health and vigor which renders labor a delight. One must experience, in order to know the languor produced by a residence of a few years in a tropical climate; and one no sooner experiences than he knows the delight of a physical "regeneration." Instead of the sluggish flow of the current of life, health leaps in every vein; instead of the clouded brow and morbid irritability of the mind, the cheerful countenance speaks of the gladness of the heart within; and instead of a sickly piety, there may be expected a stronger faith and more effective works for Christ."

NEW AGENTS.—We want agents for the Recorder at Clarence and at Darien, N. Y. Will Bro. SAMUEL HUNT consent to act for us in the former place, and Bro. ETHAN SAUNDERS in the latter? If so, they will much oblige.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.—A Catalogue of the Officers and Students of De Ruyter Institute for 1846–7, has come to hand. It contains the names of 95 ladies, and 68 gentlemen, making a total of 163 persons, who have attended during the past year. We are glad to learn that the prospects of the school are highly encouraging. The Spring Term for the present year will commence on Wednesday, April 21st.

REVIVALS IN MASSACHUSETTS.—The Springfield Gazette says that there is a general revival of religion in Williams College; the number of conversions is already quite large. There is also a similar revival in Rev. Dr. Todd's society at Pittsfield, and in the schools of the Messrs. Tyler in the same village.

UNION OF NOMINAL JEWS AND CHRISTIANS.—The Jewish Chronicle says that a so-called Christian community, in Konigsberg, have dispensed with baptism in the case of the Jews, and have resolved that no further concession shall be required of Jewish converts than a declaration of their belief in the Christian faith.

TRIAL UNDER THE LICENSE LAW.—The New York Tribune says that the town of Yonkers, Westchester Co., last spring voted 'No License' by about two to one, in defiance of which four tavern-keepers have continued to sell the ardent ever since. One of them was brought to trial on Monday for violation of the law—a pioneer case, which was understood to be decisive. Mr. P. B. Manchester of this City appeared for the prosecutors (Sons of Temperance); Hon. James R. Whiting of do. for the defendant and company. The offence was fully made out, and the defence confined mainly to the denunciation of the Sons of Temperance and the Excise Law, which the jury were urged to nullify. No use: after a lucid and impartial charge, the Jury found a verdict against the defendant to the full extent of the jurisdiction of the court (four penalties of $25 each.) Thereupon judgment was confessed on the other prosecutions, while Mr. B. and his brothers in tribulation agreed not to sell any more of the vile stuff until the law shall be repealed or the People vote 'License'—which will be about the time Christmas comes in April.

From the Boston Investigator.

"THE SABBATH."

We like to have common terms used in their proper signification. When, therefore, we hear preachers of the Gospel and pious newspaper editors calling Sunday the Sabbath, we wish to correct them. It is acknowledged by most of the learned among Christian writers, that the Sabbath is the seventh day of the week, which is Saturday. Hence in Reese's Cyclopedia, a work of the very best authority, the word is thus defined:—"SABBATH, Sabbatum, the seventh day of the week, held as a feast among the Jews, in memory of God's resting on the seventh day of the Creation." The word is pure Hebrew, and signifies cessation, or rest. Philo calls it "the world's birth-day." So well convinced is the learned world that God's Holy Day is Saturday, or the seventh day of the week, that there exists a large sect, called Sabbatarians, or Seventh-Day Baptists—thus called, because they observe the seventh day, from a persuasion that this is the true Lord's day, and the day which we are required to observe if any.

What then can such a paragraph as the following be regarded, except as a piece of sheer cant and hypocrisy? How can the writer suppose that it can be pleasing to God for man to change his divine ordinances; and after he has, according to the Bible, given man a distinct command to rest on the seventh day, to be thus disobeyed? What a piece of presumption in mankind to refuse to observe the day of God's appointment, and impudently substitute another!

THE SABBATH SLIGHTED, THE NATION'S RUIN.—But even could we for a season prosper without the Sabbath, is it possible to shake off our allegiance to God, or to evade the retributions of his righteous providence? Who wields the orb of day? Who guides the seasons? Who sends adversity, and measures out prosperity? Have we so soon forgotten the weakness of our infancy, and our cries to God when men rose up against us? Have we reached an eminence from which God cannot thrust us down? Can we despise his protection, and set at naught his institutions, and run successfully the race of an irreligious prosperity? Be not deceived. What fleets and armies could not do, the hand of suicide may accomplish, emancipated from Divine restraint. Proud and fearless of Heaven as we may be, in one hour our destruction may come. The decree is universal, "The nation and kingdom that will not serve Thee shall perish." And God has not departed from the helm of universal government, or put beyond his power the instruments of punishment. In our country's bosom lie the materials of ruin which wait only the Divine permission to burst forth in terrific eruption, scattering far and wide the fragments of our greatness.

Give up the Sabbath—blot out that orb of day—suspend its blessed attractions—and the reign of chaos and old night would return. The waves of our unquiet sea, high as our mountains, would roll and wash, from west to east, and east to west, from south to north, and north to south, shipwrecking the hopes of patriots and the world.

Who, then, is the patriot that would thrust our ship from her peaceful moorings, in a starless night, upon such an ocean of storms, without rudder, or anchor, or compass, or chart? The elements around us may remain, and our giant rivers and mountains. Our miserable descendants also may multiply, and vegetate, and rot in moral darkness and putrefaction. But the American character, and our glorious institutions, will go down into the same grave that entombs the Sabbath; and our epitaph will stand forth a warning to the world—THUS ENDETH THE NATION THAT DESPISED THE LORD, AND GLORIED IN WISDOM, WEALTH AND POWER.

General Intelligence.

VERA CRUZ TAKEN.

The U. S. War Steamer Princeton arrived at Pensacola on the 4th inst., bringing news of the taking of the city of Vera Cruz, with the Castle of San Juan de Ulua, and the entire and unconditional surrender of the garrison to the American arms. The disembarkation commenced on the 9th of March; the city was was completely invested on the 13th; summoned to surrender on the 22d; proposed to surrender on the 26th; negotiations completed on the 29th. At noon of that day the American ensign was hoisted over both, the City and Castle and was saluted by our vessels; the garrison of about 4,000 men laying down their arms as prisoners of war, and being sent to their homes on parole, 5 Generals, 60 superior officers, and 270 company officers, being among the prisoners.

The total loss of the American army, from the day of landing, March 9th, is sixty-five persons killed and wounded. Of the Mexicans the slaughter is said to have been immense.

The Commanding General was stationed in the City, while his second in command held the Castle. Their regular force was about 3,000, and they had about the same number of irregulars. Outside the City was Gen. La Vega, with a force of from six to ten hundred cavalry. Col. Harney, with between two and three hundred U. S. dragoons, charged on and repulsed this force, with terrible carnage, scattering them in all directions. They had barricaded a bridge to protect themselves, but our artillery soon knocked away this obstacle, and gave Harney's command a chance at them.

In the attack on the town and Castle, only our smaller vessels, drawing not over nine feet, were available; but few shot and shells were thrown into the Castle, the attack being mainly upon the town.

With the loss of the City, the hopes of the enemy fell, as they had not provisions enough in the Castle to sustain a protracted siege.

FROM NEW MEXICO.

The Philadelphia North American publishes news from New Mexico to February 3d. The following paragraph is from that paper:—

The battle fought by Capt. Morin and his command, took place 25 miles from Santa Fé. At the first volley discharged by our troops, 36 of the Mexicans were killed; the rest were thrown into confusion, and precipitately fled to the mountains. Capt. Morin followed up his advantage with decision, pursued the enemy, and devastated the valley of Moro, burning every thing in his path. The people, terrified, fled to the mountains also, where death, in the shape of starvation, awaits them—a horrible retribution for the sanguinary massacres which they have effected, and the wide-spread insurrection which they contemplated.

The St. Louis Reveille of the 31st ult. contains farther particulars of the military operations in New Mexico. Several actions had taken place between our troops and the insurrectionists. Col. Price, with 300 men, had an action with the Mexicans at Comada, in which the Americans were victorious, and the enemy lost 36 killed, and several wounded.

Another action occurred a few days afterward at San Vada, with an equally triumphant result.

The Americans, after the battle in the valley of Moro, retired to Vegas. A reïnforcement of 200 men was sent from Santa Fé under Col. Morrison, on whose appearance the Mexicans abandoned Moro, after murdering eight Americans.

The insurrectionists are mostly composed of the veriest rabble.

In a skirmish between the volunteers under Capt. St. Vrain and the insurrectionists, a Mexican was killed wearing Gov. Bent's coat and shirt.

There was much sickness at Santa Fé—three to five deaths occurring daily, mostly teamsters.

Gen. Taylor's Movements, &c.—The Editor of the New Orleans Tropic has conversed with a gentleman who participated in the battle of Buena Vista, and obtained the following information:—

Lieut. Crittenden, who recently left for Washington, carried with him a requisition from Gen. Taylor, upon the Government, for ten thousand additional troops.

Gen. Taylor, it is thought, will advance on San Luis Potosi so soon as the reinforcement called for arrives.

The bodies of the Officers who fell in the battle of Buena Vista have been placed by their friends in coffins, in which pulverized charcoal was introduced, the coffins placed temporarily in vaults at Saltillo, until removed to their late homes, which will probably be done as soon as the communication between Saltillo and Camargo is opened.

Major Borland, Major Gaines, Capt. Cassius M. Clay, and their commands, numbering about eighty-two men, who have been prisoners in the Castle of Perote, were to be delivered up at Vera Cruz.

Capt. Heady, from Louisville, of the Kentucky regiment, and eighteen men, who were taken by the enemy some time since, were to be restored to Gen. Taylor's Encampment.

Death of a Distinguished Farmer.—Thomas S. Meacham, an enterprising farmer, died at his residence at Sandy Creek, Oswego Co., on the 20th ultimo. The Richland Courier pays the following tribute to the memory of the deceased:

Mr. Meacham was one of the first settlers of this County—was a farmer by profession, and has probably done more than any other man in the County for the promotion of the science of agriculture. His whole mind has always been absorbed in his occupation, and the Dairying interest of the County owes its first impetus to him. His Mammoth Cheese, presented to President Van Buren, will not soon be forgotten, and although his body has passed from the earth, we hope that his many traits of kindness, benevolence, perseverance and industry, will not soon pass from the minds of his cotemporaries.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

Several packet ships have arrived since our last. The following items of news are collected from papers brought by them:—

The corn trade is still dull, as is most other business, though the price of Indian corn has slightly advanced. The price of flour has fallen to the extent of a sixpence to a shilling per barrel.

The price of cotton receded fully an eighth during the week ending on the 13th March.

It is confidently stated that the present Parliament will be brought to a close—by means of a dissolution—about the end of June or the beginning of July.

The Ten Hours bill was still under consideration in Parliament.

The Queen has ordered a general fast to be observed on the 24th ult., on account of the distress in Ireland and Scotland.

There has been a destructive inundation in Hungary, the waters having risen higher than since 1809.

There have been serious riots in different parts of Switzerland, to prevent the exportation of corn. At Sexto Calendo, two persons were killed and several severely wounded by the military.

The Oriental and Peninsular Steam Company's vessel, Tiber, was run ashore in a fog, Feb. 20, off Lisbon. The accident took place soon after noon, and in an hour the ship broke up, and became a total wreck. All were saved by the people on shore, except an old Spanish General, who was washed off the deck.

Catastrophe at the Carlsruhe Theatre.—For three days persons were engaged in taking dead bodies from the ruins and burying them in one large grave. They were mostly so mutilated that they could not be recognized. Most of the victims were suffocated, being overpowered by the gas. A person saved, says that when the fire broke out all rushed to the doors, but the effects of the gas were so strong that they began to lose their sight, and were crowded together in a senseless state, unable to utter a cry. A sweep who saved a person in the third tier said, "All who are now there are seated without being able to move a limb."

O'Connell.—I am sorry to say that Mr. O'Connell is exhibiting physical decay to an extent not anticipated by his friends, or even medical advisers. In the House of Commons he speaks in so low and feeble a tone, that it is perfectly distressing to listen to him, and think what a fine, round, sonorous, jocund voice was his but a few years ago. He is said to be suffering from a disease of the heart, and no doubt the same has been accelerated lately by the unhappy divisions in the repeal camp. I know that the conduct of Mr. Smith O'Brien, and the Young Irelanders, has caused him much anguish. His mental powers have lost none of their vigor; his speeches reading as powerful and unctious as ever. [Cor. Jour. Com.

Seven Days Later.—The ship Washington Irving arrived at Boston on the 10th inst., bringing Liverpool dates to the 21st ult. Cotton had declined slightly. Indian corn could also be purchased at lower rates. The price of wheat remained firm. On the 17th and 18th of March, several parcels of American flour were purchased at Liverpool for shipment, to France and coastwise.

SUMMARY.

A temperance lecture was delivered at Columbus, Ohio, before the inmates of the prison house, and on a vote being taken, it appears that out of four hundred and eighty males then present, only eighty-four had been totally abstinent before their incarceration; sixty had in some manner been connected with the sale or the manufacture of ardent spirits; and one hundred and eighty had committed the crimes for which they were then paying the penalty either as a consequence of drinking ardent spirits, or when under its immediate influence.

The Bay State Farmer says: An invention has just been patented that is destined, we think, to supersede entirely the use of glass in the construction of not only hot-beds but houses. The substitute consists of a chemical transparent water-proof composition, for rendering muslin, calico or linen for the frames of green-houses, &c., impervious to rain or moisture, admitting light equal to glass, much warmer, and the plants never burn under it. It is proof against hail storms, so frequently destructive to glass.

The Danville (Pa.) Democrat says: We learn from various parts of this and adjoining counties, that winter grain generally looks well, and has not been injured to that extent which was anticipated some weeks ago. The grain on high and dry ground particularly is said to be in excellent condition, while that on the low lands has been injured by frost to some extent, there not having been sufficient snow this winter to protect the roots. On the whole, however, the prospects are considered favorable.

The ice trade of Boston is large, and rapidly increasing. The taxable property of New York city for 1846 was $244,000,000 00; the average rate of taxation, 104,37 cents on $100, a little over one per cent. A man named Davis was sent to the Essex house of correction for six months, for stealing a goose at Newbury. Christian M. Quackenbush, the singing-master who ran away to Boston from Berlin, Rensselaer Co., with a Miss Martha Weaver, one of his pupils, and was caught in two or three days by his amazing stupidity in taking his big fiddle along with him, so that he was easily traced and identified, having been readily convicted of Adultery, was sentenced by Judge Wells, to four months imprisonment.

A "Shade Tree Association" has been organized at Rahway, N. J., for the purpose of planting forest trees in the streets of the town—a capital plan. The constitution requires the payment of $3 annually in money or trees, and the officers are required to procure and set out trees, collect subscriptions from members, and receive donations from citizens, and publish an annual report.

The Small Pox, the same disease which exterminated the Meadow tribe of Indians, is raging among the Chippewas, west of Lake Michigan. The old gentleman has since recovered his 'right mind,' and now seeks to regain possession of his property.

DIED,

In Wirt, Allegany Co., N. Y., Feb. 25, of consumption, M. A. Johnson, in the 27th year of his age. Bro. Johnson was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Friendship, and until his death maintained his profession, evincing to all with whom he associated his love for the Saviour; and in his sickness, which was much protracted, he exhibited the inestimable virtues of religion. He spoke of his departure with apparent delight, exulting in the prospects of an inheritance above, and in the most affectionate manner gave his dying address to his weeping and heart-broken partner, parents, relatives, and all who visited him. He selected the minister and the text from which he should preach at his funeral, and expired exclaiming, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

In Scott, N. Y., on the 14th of March, Mrs. Olive Babcock, wife of Raymond P. Babcock, Esq., aged 43 years. Sister Babcock was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scott. We trust she has left the church militant only to join the church triumphant, and the assembly of the first-born whose names are written in heaven. She has left a kind, affectionate husband, and six children, to mourn their loss. Her funeral was attended on the 21st ult. by a large concourse of people. Discourse by Eld. R. G. Burdick from Isa. 25: 7, 8.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

WHO STOLE THE BIRD'S NEST?

BY MRS. L. M. CHILD.

To whit! to whit! to whee!
Will you listen to me?
Who stole five eggs I laid,
And the nice nest I made?

Not I, said the cow, Moo-oo!
Such a thing I'd never do,
I gave you a wisp of hay,
But I didn't take your nest away;
Not I, said the cow, Moo-oo!
Such a thing I'd never do.

To whit! to whit! to whee!
Will you listen to me?
Who stole five eggs I laid,
And the nice nest I made?

Bob-a-link! Bob-a-link!
Now what do you think?
Who stole a nest away
From the plum tree to-day?

Not I, said the dog, bow-wow!
I wouldn't be so mean, I vow,
I gave hairs the nest to make,
But the nest I did not take.
Not I, said the dog, bow-wow!
I wouldn't be so mean, I vow.

Coo-coo! coo-coo! coo-coo!
Let me speak a word too,
Who stole that pretty nest
From the little yellow breast?

Not I, said the sheep, O no,
I wouldn't treat a poor bird so,
I gave the wool to line,
But the nest was none of mine,
Baa-baa! said the sheep, O no,
I wouldn't treat a poor bird so.

Caw! caw! cried the crow,
I should like to know,
What thief stole away
A bird's nest to-day?

Cack, cack! said the hen,
Don't ask me again.
Why, I haven't a chick
Would do such a trick.

We all gave her a feather,
And she wove them together.
I'd scorn to intrude
On her and her brood.
Cack, cack! said the hen,
Don't ask me again.

Chir-a-whirr! chir-a-whirr!
We will make a great stir,
And find out his name,
And all cry, for shame!

I would not rob a bird,
Said little Mary Green;
I think I never heard
Of any thing so mean.

'Tis very cruel, too,
Said little Alice Neal;
I wonder if he knew
How sad the bird would feel?

A little boy hung down his head,
And went and hid behind the bed;
For he stole that pretty nest,
From the poor little yellow breast;
And he felt so full of shame,
He didn't like to tell his name.

PUNISHMENT OF CHILDREN.

A correspondent of Zion's Advocate furnishes a long article upon this subject, taking for his text the fact, that "a boy twelve years old, having been chastized by his parents, went and hung himself." The following is the concluding division of the article:—

While the doctrine is true, that "he who spares the rod, spoils the child," there is too much brute force, and too little persuasion, used in the correction of children. I do not mean by persuasion, a childish coaxing and hiring the old or young to do right. Nothing is more disastrous in discipline. I mean by it, an intelligent, grave, kind reasoning of the case in hand. If children are treated as brutes, they very soon become almost brutes, and in a measure need such treatment; while if they are treated as intelligent, responsible beings, they approach maturity with rapidity, and seldom need the discipline of the rod, being controlled by a better method. I have no doubt that children, who are least of all benefited by brute force, are most exposed to it. An active, strong intellect, is naturally averse to restraint, and of course needs it the more. But such a spirit was never made to be broken into the traces of order, but to be led in by a way he may understand.

There are two anecdotes of the boyhood of Napoleon, which are a good illustration of the idea I would here enforce:—

Napoleon returned to his mother quite out of breath.

'Mamma,' said he, 'my foster-father is going back to his home; will you allow me go with him—he will bring me home the day after to-morrow?'

'You forget, my child, that to-morrow is Easterday, and that we are to set off this evening for Ajaccio. Would not you like to be present at the blessing of our house, and to dine afterwards with your grand-uncle, Lucien?'

'But I will be home in two days.'

'You cannot leave us to-day; another time, perhaps, I will allow you to take this little excursion.'

This prohibition made the little Napoleon very angry; he turned pale with passion, and, stamping with the most determined air, he said, 'But I will go with my foster-father, and I will not go to Ajaccio!'

Madam Bonaparte gave him a look of the greatest astonishment; then resuming her work, said quietly, 'Go, then; I will not prevent you; but you are going contrary to my wish.'

These simple words at once calmed the little rebel. With downcast head and tearful eyes he threw himself into his mother's arms, crying in a voice broken with sobs, 'Pardon me, dear mother, I will never disobey you any more.'

Madam Letitia had the greatest power over Napoleon, who tenderly loved her. This superior woman devoted herself to the education of her children with a zeal as remarkable for its rare judiciousness as for its devotedness. Never did woman better discharge the duties of wife and mother. To great good sense, and an elevated mind, she united extraordinary energy of character.

When Napoleon was about ten years old, he was admitted to the Military School of Brienne. The following is related of him while there. "One day the Quarter-master, a man of a harsh disposition, condemned Napoleon, by way of punishment, to wear the serge coat, and to take his dinner on his knees at the door of the refectory. The mortification felt by the disgraced pupil on this account, was so great as to subject him to a violent retching, and a severe nervous attack; when the head master of the school, happening to pass, relieved him from the punishment, and reproved the Quarter-master for his want of discernment."

We probably little imagine the influence of unjust, degrading punishment, upon some youthful minds. Dark are the thoughts of discouragement, and sometimes of revenge, which are agitated by brutal treatment. A storm is created, which is not allayed until indelible traces are made upon the character. If absolute suicide is not often the result, such treatment is suicidal in many respects. Brute force, in punishment, should seldom be restored to in the case of any child; and in the case of many, never—and never should be the rule, in all cases where the person administering it is unmanned by passion. The divine law—the laws regulating society and families—all good laws—forbid the parent, the guardian, or the teacher, to rush upon a child with the look and spirit of an enemy, to deal him blows worthy a professed pugilist, or the leader of some banditti. While those who respect themselves, or desire the good of their children, will never be guilty of such conduct, they will be equally particular to pass no act of disobedience by without such notice as may be reasonable and necessary in the case.

CURE FOR A PASSIONATE TEMPER.

A merchant in London had a dispute with a Quaker, respecting the settlement of an account. The merchant was determined to bring the question into court; a proceeding which the Quaker earnestly deprecated, using every argument in his power to convince the merchant of his error; but the latter was inflexible. Desirous to make a last effort, the Quaker called at his house one morning, and inquired of the servant if his master was at home. The merchant, hearing the inquiry, and knowing the voice, called aloud from the top of the stairs, 'Tell that rascal that I am not at home.' The Quaker, looking up toward him, calmly said, 'Well, friend, God put thee in a better mind.' The merchant, struck afterward with the meekness of the reply, and having more deliberately investigated the matter, became convinced that the Quaker was right, and he in the wrong. He requested to see him, and after acknowledging his error, he said, 'I have one question to ask you—how were you able, with such patience, on various occasions, to bear my abuse?' 'Friend,' replied the Quaker, 'I will tell thee; I was naturally as hot and violent as thou art. I knew that to indulge this temper was sinful; and I found that it was imprudent. I observed that men in a passion always speak aloud; and I thought, if I could but control my voice, I should repress my passion. I have, therefore, made it a rule never to suffer my voice to rise above a certain key; and by a careful observance of this rule, I have, with the blessing of God, entirely mastered my natural temper.' The Quaker reasoned philosophically, and the merchant, as every one else may do, benefited by his example.

WHICH BOY WOULD YOU BE?

"Will you have this seat, sir, I prefer to stand," said a fine little boy, sitting in a pew, when the church was crowded, to an old gentleman standing in the aisle.

"Thank you, my little man," said the gentleman, smiling very gratefully upon the little fellow, "and you shall sit upon my knee, if you please."

When the service closed, the gentleman inquired of him his name, and asked him, "Why did you give up your good seat?"

"Mother teaches me," said he, "never to sit when an older person is standing near me."

Now look at another scene.

"Will you let the ladies have your seat, and sit upon the bench yonder," said a gentleman to four boys sitting together in a pew.

"I shan't," says one; "they may sit on the bench themselves, if they please," said another.

Not one of them moved. All the people near turned and looked with surprise and disgust upon them.

"They can't be Sabbath School Scholars," one remarked. "At any rate," another said, "they have no bringing up at home." Very soon the sexton came and ordered them all out of the pew. They were obliged to obey, and out they marched, with their heads hanging down, looking so sheepish and ashamed, that nobody pitied them.

Which example, children, is the most worthy of imitation, that of the lad, or the four boys? and which honored their parents most?

MAPLE SUGAR MAKING.

"In the first place, I make my buckets, tubs, and kettles all perfectly clean. I boil the sap in a potash kettle, set in an arch, in such a manner that the edge of the kettle is defended all around from the fire. I boil through the day, taking care not to leave anything in the kettle that will give color to the sap, and to keep it well skimmed; at night I leave fire enough under the kettle to boil the sap nearly or quite to syrup by the next morning. I then take it out of the kettle and strain it through a flannel cloth into a tub, if it is sweet enough; if not, I put it in a caldron, which I have hung on a pole in such a manner as to be taken off and on at pleasure, and boil it till it is sweet enough, and then strain it into the tub and let it stand till the next morning; I then take it and the syrup in the kettle and put it altogether in a caldron, and sugar it off. I use to clarify, say 100 lbs. of sugar, the whites of five or six eggs, well beaten, about one quart of new milk, and a spoonful of salerætus, all well mixed with the syrup before it is scalding hot. I then make and keep a moderate fire directly under the caldron until the scum is all raised; then skim it off clean, taking care not to let it boil so as to rise in the kettle before I have done skimming it. I then sugar it off, leaving it so damp that it will drain a little. I let it remain in the kettle until it is well granulated. I then put it into boxes, made smallest at the bottom, that will hold from 50 to 75 lbs., having a thin piece of board fitted in two or three inches above the bottom, which is bored full of small holes to let the molasses drain through, which I keep drawn off by a tap through the bottom. I put on the top of the sugar in the box two or three thicknesses of damp cloth, and over that a cover, well fitted in, so as to exclude the air from the sugar. After it has done or very nearly done draining, I dissolve it, and sugar it off again, going through the same process in clarifying and draining as before." [J. Woodworth.

INTERESTING ANTIQUARIAN DISCOVERY.—The workmen employed in making excavations on the Caledonian Railway, in the United Kingdom, discovered, a few miles beyond Bentock, some highly interesting relics of antiquity. The first object which attracted attention was the remains of what appeared to have been the foundations of a house. Some copper coins were next turned up about the size of our halfpennies; on one side there is a male head, probably one of the Emperors, and on the reverse, 'Cæsar Romæ.' A sword was next discovered, which appears to be formed of brass. By far the most interesting discovery, however, was that of a small stone trough, inverted and placed upon a flat block of the same material, which was found to contain a brazen or bronze case, round in its form, two feet in length, and six inches in diameter. Within this case was a manuscript, or rather book, written on vellum, in rolls, as was the Roman custom, and each roll connected with the other by a slip of the same material. It is altogether about thirty feet in length, and two in breadth. The writing is beautifully executed in the Latin language, and at the top, the words 'Historia Romæ,' in large characters, are quite distinct. A cursory examination has led some to suppose that it is a copy of part of Livy's celebrated History; and as it is expected that the whole of the manuscript can be deciphered, perchance some of the lost books of the Roman historian may be now restored to the literary world. A small manuscript was also found in the case, also written on parchment, and about a foot square in size; but the writing of this is very illegible; on the back are the words 'Ad Agricolum.'

SINGULAR DISCOVERY IN MISSISSIPPI.—The Louisville Journal, in a recent article, says:—"In the southwestern part of Franklin County, Miss., there is a platform or floor composed of hewn stone, neatly polished, some three feet under ground. It is about one hundred and eight feet long, and eighty feet wide. It extends due North and South, and its surface is perfectly level. The masonry is said to be equal, if not superior, to any work of modern times. The land above it is cultivated; but thirty years ago it was covered with oak and pine trees, measuring from two to three feet in diameter. It is evidently of very remote antiquity, as the Indians who reside in the neighborhood had no knowledge of its existence previous to its recent discovery. Nor is there any tradition among them from which we may form any idea of the object of the work, or of the people who were its builders. There is also a canal and well connected with it, but they have never been explored. A subterranean passage may be underneath. Farther explorations may throw some light upon its origin."

RAGGED SCHOOLS IN LONDON.—A class of philanthropists in London contribute to the support of schools for poor children called "Ragged Schools," which are not inappropriately named. As a specimen of the class of Ragged School pupils, we give the following: A lad was asked his name, which he gave. 'Where do you live?' inquired the teacher. There was no answer, but the boy turned his face away. A little fellow of the same class remarked, 'Please sir, he don't live nowhere.' 'Indeed, how is that?' 'His father and mother are both dead, and he has had no one to take care of him for two years. He sleeps under carts or sheds, or wherever he can.' He was nearly naked, the upper part of his body being covered with a small piece of brown Holland. 'He always comes down our street at night,' observed a boy, 'and I give him a bit of my supper, or he'd have none.' 'That's true,' said another, 'and though he's so poor, he keeps himself clean, for he goes down to the river early in the morning, and washes himself."

DEATH OF SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.—Whether a dying man can maintain any continued attention to things through his senses, we need not inquire. It is enough for him if, in the spirit, he possesses the peace and joy of believing. Testimony to this degree of triumph may be found wherever the doctrines of the Saviour have been received and practiced. The instance of Sir James Mackintosh is, perhaps, worthy of especial notice—because he lived like a philosopher, but died like a Christian. Not long before he ceased to speak, his daughter said to him, 'Jesus loves you.' He answered slowly, pausing between each word, 'Jesus Christ—love—the same thing.' She asked, 'In God?' he answered, 'In Jesus.' On her inquiring how he felt, his last word was, 'Happy!'

'And is this death? Dread thing!
If such thy visiting,
How beautiful thou art!'

DR. CHALMERS.—It is known that the genius and eloquence of this popular clergyman, during his stay at Glasgow, attracted immense crowds to his church, and the feeling of disappointment when a stranger entered his pulpit was too visible for any divine to mistake it.

On one occasion, the Rev. Dr. L——, of A——, having made an exchange with Dr. Chalmers, was so struck and irritated on entering the pulpit, with the reluctant advance of the assembling auditory, and the quiet retreat of many from the pews, that he stood up, and addressing the congregation, said,—

'We will not begin the public worship of God, till the chaff blows off.'

We need not say that these words had the desired effect, and the audience became stationary under this rebuke.

POISON IN WINES.—The following advertisement, which appears in the Washington papers, gives some idea of the number of poisonous ingredients contained in common wine. Lovers of the article would do well to note them:—

"Ten dollars per gallon will be given for any quantity of wine, now in the hands of the trade, proved by chemical test to be free from the following poisons: Sugar of lead, logwood, green vitriol, capsicum, opium, tobacco, aloes, alum, essential oils, bitter oranges, oil of bitter almonds, India berry, poke-berries, elderberries, Guinea pepper, Brazil wood, gum benzion, burnt sugar, brandy, laurel water, lamb's blood, dragon's blood, red sanders, salt of tartar, coculus indicus, poison hemlock, nux vomica, oil of vitriol, Prussic acid, henbane, &c., or any other foreign admixture. The attention of merchants and consumers is particularly requested to the above. GEORGE SAVAGE."

VARIETY.

A young man residing a few miles from Rochester was married to an interesting girl on Wednesday (two or three weeks since,) and on Thursday went with his bride on a wedding ride to Rochester, got drunk, and was carried to the Watch-house on Friday, (his bride returning broken hearted to her friends,) was put in jail on Saturday, and brought up for trial on Monday, on which occasion the foregoing facts were elicited.

The India Rubber tree which grows on the Island of Lobos, is quite a curiosity to our troops. A writer describing one says: "It here attains the height of 25 feet, and the branches strike down to the earth, take root, grow, and become bodies to the tree. We saw one which was cut down that had 31 trunks. The milky juice flows out in quantities upon the least wound being made through the bark.

The latest invention of fraudulent ingenuity is a counterfeit of St. Croix sugar. It has both the appearance and peculiar touch of brown sugar, but it is in fact little but common salt. The process by which it is made is as easy as lying. Take a quantity of common salt, mix with it molasses enough to give it the proper color. Mix it thoroughly, and a counterfeit of sugar will be produced which nothing but the sense of taste can detect.

In the military government of Prussia, education is furnished by the State, gratuitously, for all. Parents who neglect to send their children to school are fined, and, if poor and unable to pay a fine, imprisoned. The State declares itself the guardian of the youth of Prussia, and compels all under its control to take advantage of its educational institutions.

Over 50,000 persons are paupers, now inmates of the London Work Houses—60,000 are receiving out-door relief—and from 1,400 to 2,000 who are homeless and moneyless, are nightly sheltered from the cold (without beds) in "refuges" set apart for the purpose, to prevent death by cold, hunger, and deficient clothing.

Slavery prevails in China to a considerable extent. Poor people sometimes sell their daughters as slaves. In Canton there are more than 80,000 slaves. The laws do not allow the separation of man and wife, nor the sale of the children for slaves without the consent of their parents. If a slave runs away, violence is not to be used in getting him back to his master.

A man in Pittsburg, the other day, complained at the police office, that his wife had stolen forty dollars from his trunk. The fair delinquent acknowledged the taking, but urged that she was entitled to half her husband's money—there was $80 in the trunk, and she took $40. The affair was settled by the return of $30, the wife keeping $10 for pin money.

A novel project is on foot in the Common Council of New York to run a Telegraph line from the Fire-lookout on the City Hall, to each of the 18 Police stations, to give intelligence of the whereabouts of every fire, so that on hearing the great bell, a person in any part of the city can ascertain at the station house where it is.

The citizens of Brooklyn are determined to erect an Astronomical observatory, and have resolved to raise the sum of $40,000 for the accomplishment of this object. FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

NEWMAN'S ONLY PERIODICAL ON BOTANY! Prospectus of THE ILLUSTRATED FLORA, edited by John B. Newman, M. D., &c.

Profiting by the results of past experience, and confident of public support, we offer in the second year of our botanical enterprise, the Flora enlarged and remodeled, so as to differ from any thing ever before presented, combining four departments—Floral, Medical, Introductory, and Biographical. The first comprises the classification and description of each plant, its history, minute cultivation, and floral emblem, spiced with anecdote and original or selected poetry. The second, written of course in a popular style, gives the medicinal properties of the plants, and of each part of them, when there is any difference; the extracts and their mode of preparation, doses; and, in particular cases, sketches of diseases to which they are applicable; added to the whole is a history of this branch of the science from the earliest times, accounts of its discovery, and theory of the operation of medicines on the animal frame. The Introduction commences with the lowest of the Vegetable Kingdom, giving in its progress a brief account of every system before the Linnean, which last, with the natural method, will be fully entered into and thoroughly explained; making it as instructive and interesting as possible, by being eminently practical. For instance, the Fungus tribe, which is in our first number, enables us to give the history, description, and mode of preparing the eatable mushroom, tuber, morel, &c., thereby not only teaching the science in order, but affording besides much curious and valuable information. The Biographical department begins with Linnæus; it contains a short and interesting account of the lives and works of eminent living or deceased botanists, selected at pleasure from our own and other countries. Consulting the standards on Botany, Gardening, Chemistry, and Medicine, we intend to combine every useful item of information, and without lessening its value, present the whole in a concise and pleasing form. To allow ample opportunity for illustration, the work is of large octavo form, every number consisting of six plates and forty-eight pages of letter-press. The first three plates contain each separate flower; the fourth a tree in exact proportion, with a separated branch to show the leaves, flowers and fruit; the fifth, an explanation plate for the introductory department; the sixth and last, a finely engraved portrait. The flowers are drawn and colored similar to those in the previous numbers, which are universally acknowledged to be specimens of the highest style of the art.

TERMS.

The first series will be completed in sixty monthly numbers, every six of which will form a volume of 288 pages, and 36 plates, making ten volumes in all; each year's numbers, however, being complete within themselves. The publishers at first proposed to issue the work for Two Dollars, with thirty-two pages and four plates, but the present plan was adopted as by far the best. It is furnished to subscribers at Three Dollars per annum, in advance, or two copies to one address for Five Dollars; so that at a cost of Fifteen Dollars, a botanical library—unequaled for gorgeousness of illustration, and utility as a work of popular science—will be procurable, containg 2280 pages of letter-press, three hundred splendidly colored engravings, and botanical portrait gallery of sixty eminent individuals.

The first number is dated January, 1847. The publishers guaranty that the mailing of numbers to subscribers will, in every case, be completed by the 25th of the month preceding the date, and on failure in this respect, or in the mechanical execution, the subscription money will be promptly funded to subscribers whenever desired.

☞ Competent agents wanted to circulate the work, whom a very liberal discount will be made.

All communications must be addressed (post paid) to the publishers, LEWIS & BROWN, 272 Pearl-st., N. Y., where subscriptions will be received and agents supplied.

WRITTEN COVENANTS AND ARTICLES OF FAITH.

I notice in a recent number of the Recorder, an article entitled, "Correction and Explanation," by Bro. V. Hull, in reply to one written by myself, and published in the Recorder of Jan. 28, under the above caption. It is alledged by Bro. Hull, that my remarks have done him injustice. If such be the case, I sincerely regret it; and if I have thus taken any thing from him by misrepresentation, I restore him fourfold. Nay, I will not even restricted him at all—he may speak for himself. That I may have misapprehended him, is not impossible, for I can only tell what a man means by what he says. If I have actually done what he charges me with, it has been undesignedly; and I plead his ambiguity as my only excuse. I wrote under the impression that he espoused and vindicated the enforcement of "written articles of faith and covenant," as a test of church membership and fellowship, and a wall of sectarian demarkation. "Articles of Faith," is the name of several articles of belief of any church, as interpreted by one man, or a set of men, and then approved by that church as the true and evident meaning of what GOD'S WORD REVEALS. Of such there are in existence at least three hundred; and there have been as many thousands which are now numbered among the things that were, all of which profess very conscientiously to be true and "gospel-wise." It is evident that thus many an infidel has been made; for while groping about amid such a mass of egotistic and conflicting testimony as to the meaning of God when He speaks, he becomes lost in the dark mazes of doubt, and exclaims,

"Amid such clamor, who can tell
Which is the road to heaven or hell!"

If by "written articles" he means disjointed parts of God's whole truth, I can say, that in the substance I cordially agree with him, while from the mutilation I dissent. I cordially embrace those sentiments which Bro. Hull calls "Existence of God, Atonement," &c., but would use them only as they are used by the Word of God, in the same connection, and by the same language. I object to any other system, because I see no authority for selecting these or any other from among God's truths, and giving them a more prominent place than other truths. I think it presumptuous for us, with finite understandings, to attempt to graduate the importance of God's truths. In giving an official importance to one truth, we obscure others, and these neglected truths may give place to errors which may lead a soul to perdition.

I do not object to any church giving an exposition of its views; but to its making those views a test of Christianity, and forcing them upon others. I would rather restore Christianity to its original symmetry and consistency, by making character, instead of opinion, the test. Modern sectarianism proclaims that by the orthodoxy of your opinions it shall be known whether you are a child of God; whilst the Apostle makes love, and Jesus works or character, (the legitimate result of faith,) the test. "By this shall ye know that ye have passed from death unto life, if ye love the brethren." John 3: 14. And in accordance with this sentiment, Jesus has said, "By their fruits shall ye know them. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles," &c. Matt. 7: 14—23. By reading the above referances, together with that class of texts which proclaim the sin-rebuking fact, that God will judge all men according to the deeds done in the body—their works, &c.—it will be plainly seen that character, and not opinion, is to be the judgment test.

But here perhaps the objector may inquire, if a self-righteous morality is to be the standard? I answer, No. The Bible, and the righteousness it describes—holiness of heart, a willingness to search there for the path of duty, and when found to walk in it, leaving the consequences with God. The man who rejects God's Word, or any part of it, is unworthy of confidence as a Christian. I say the same of him who lives in open and repeated violation of a plain and unequivocal commandment.

Consonant with these views is the language of Paul. He says, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction in righteousness." 2 Tim. 3: 16. There is no distinction here between important and unimportant, essential and non-essential. His language is, "ALL SCRIPTURE," thus neglecting "articles of faith." I object to all human formularies. They preclude the right of private judgment, and increase our liability to imbibe error. And when in this form an error is once embraced, it becomes fixed upon the church and identified with it. If you attack this, you attack the church; and the result is that the church will contend more for her speculative notions and prejudices, against those who differ in judgment, than she will for real truth and the Word of God. It is error that divides the saints. All men can unite in the truth. For this union Jesus prayed, in the 17th chapter of John. This truth he asserted to be God's Word. See 17th verse. Has not my brother experienced a greater difficulty in removing from the mind errors derived from church creeds, than those received from most other sources? They stand between us and free inquiry. No error, however small, can be safely embraced. In the absence of truth, error must take its place; and as surely as like begets like, error begets error, till we are lost in the mazes of a superstitious infidelity—an infidelity which bends God's Word to human traditions and cunning priestcraft. To me, all truth is equally dear, wherever or whenever in God's Word I find it. The Bible is my God-made creed; and His truths, when set before the church in all their glorious array, divested of human trappings and inventions, will cause her to come forth in the "unity of faith," rejoicing in one Lord, one faith, one baptism. Pray for this glorious consummation.

I remain yours in love,
JAS. SUMMERBELL.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., March 14, 1847.

JOHN GASPARD LAVATER AND THE POOR WIDOW.

It was a practice with Lavater, to read every morning several chapters of the Bible, and select from them one particular passage for frequent and special meditation during the day. One morning, after reading the fifth and sixth chapters of the Gospel of St. Matthew, he exclaimed, "What a treasure of morality! how difficult to make choice of any particular portion of it!" After a few moments' consideration, he threw himself upon his knees, and prayed for divine guidance. When he joined his wife at dinner, she asked him what passage of Scripture he had chosen for the day.

"Give to him that asketh of thee; and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away," was the reply.

"And how is this to be understood?" said his wife.

"'Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away—are the words of him, to whom all and every thing belongs that I possess," rejoined Lavater. "I am the steward, not the proprietor. The proprietor desires me to give to him who asks of me, and not to refuse him that would borrow of me; or, in other words, if I had two coats, I must give one to him that has none, and if I had food, I must share with him who is an hungered and in want; this I must do without being asked; how much more, then, when asked?"

This, continued Lavater in his diary, appeared to be so evidently and incontrovertibly the meaning of the verses in question, that I spoke with more than usual warmth; my wife made no further reply than that she would take these things to heart. I had scarcely left the dining room a few minutes, when an aged widow desired to speak with me, and she was shown into my study.

"Forgive me, dear sir," she said, "excuse the liberty I am about to take, I am really ashamed, but my rent is due to-morrow, and I am short six dollars. I have been confined to my bed with sickness, and my poor child is nearly starving; every penny that I could save, I have laid aside to meet this demand, but six dollars are yet wanting, and to-morrow is term day." Here she opened a parcel, which she held in her hand, and said, "This is a book with a silver clasp, which my late husband gave me the day we were married; it is all I can spare of the few articles I possess, and sore it is to part with it. I am aware it is not enough, nor do I see how I could ever repay—but, dear sir, if you can, do assist me."

"I am very sorry, my good woman, that I cannot help you," I said, and putting my hand into my pocket, I accidentally felt my purse, which contained about two dollars; these, said I to myself, cannot extricate her from her difficulty, she requires six, besides, even if they could, I have need of this money for some other purpose—turning to the widow I said, "Have you no friend, no relative, who could give you this trifle?"

"No, not a soul!—I am ashamed to go from house to house, I would rather work day and night; my excuse for being here, is, that people speak so much of your goodness; if, however, you cannot assist me, you at least will forgive my intrusion, and God, who has never yet forsaken me, will not surely turn away from me in my sixty-sixth year!" At this moment the door of my apartment opened, and my wife entered. I was ashamed and vexed; gladly would I have sent her away, for conscience wispered, "Give to him that asketh of thee; and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away." She came up to me, and said, with much sweetness—

"This is a good old woman; she has certainly been ill of late; assist her if you can."

Shame and compassion struggled in my darkened soul—"I have but two dollars," I said in a whisper, "and she requires six; I'll give her a trifle in the hand and let her go."

Laying her hand on my arm, and smiling in my face, my wife said aloud what conscience had whispered before—"Give to him that asketh of thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away."

I blushed, and replied with some little vexation, "Would you give your ring for the purpose?"

"With pleasure," answered my wife, pulling off her ring.

The poor widow was either too simple or too modest to notice what was going on, and was preparing to retire, when my wife called her to wait in the lobby. When we were left alone, I asked my wife—

"Are you in earnest about the ring?"

"Certainly, how can you doubt it?" she said. "Do yo think I would trifle with charity? Remember what you said half an hour ago; oh, my dear friend, let us not make a show of the Gospel. You are in general so kind, so sympathoizng, how is it that you now find it so difficult to assist this poor woman? Why did you not, without hesitation, give her what you had in your pocket? And did you not know there were yet six dollars in your desk, and that the quarter will be paid to us in less than eight days?" She then added, with much feeling, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Behold the fowls of the air; they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly father feedeth them."

I kissed my wife, while tears ran down my cheeks. "Thanks, a thousand thanks for this humiliation." I turned to my desk, took from it six dollars, and opened the door to call in the poor widow; all darkened around me, at the thought that I had been so forgetful of the omniscience of God, as to say to her, "I cannot help you. Oh, thou false tongue, thou false heart! If the Lord should mark iniquities, oh Lord, who shall stand?"

"Here is what you need," I said, addressing the widow. At first, she seemed not to understand what I meant, and thought I was offering her a small contribution, for which she thanked me, and pressed my hand; but when she perceived I had given her the whole sum, she could not find words to express her feelings. She cried.

"Dear sir, I cannot repay it; all I possess is this little book, and it is old."

"Keep your book," I said, "and the money too, and thank God, and not me, for verily I deserve no thanks after having so long refused your entreaties. Go in peace, and forgive an erring brother."

I returned to my wife with downcast looks, but she smiled and said,

"Do not take it so much to heart, my friend, you yielded at my first suggestion; but promise me, so long as I wear a gold ring on my finger, and you know that I possess several besides, you will never allow yourself to say to any poor person, 'I cannot help you.'"

She kissed me and left the apartment. When I found myself alone, I sat down and wrote this account in my diary; in order to humble my deceitful heart—this heart which no longer than yesterday dictated these words, "Of all characters in the world, there is none I would more anxiously avoid being than a hypocrite; to preach the whole moral law, and fulfill only the easy part of it, is hypocrisy. Merciful Father, how must I wait and reflect and struggle, ere I shall be able to rely on the perfect sincerity of my profession? I read over once more the chapter I had read this morning with too little benefit, and felt more and more ashamed and convinced that there is no peace except where principle and practice are in perfect accordance. How peacefully and happily I might have ended this day, had I acted up conscientiously to the blessed docrine I professed. Dear Saviour, send the Holy Spirit into this benighted heart! cleanse it from secret sin, and teach me to employ that which thou hast committed to my charge, to thy glory, a brother's welfare, and my own salvation!"

CLOSE OF BAXTER'S LIFE.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and but for the resistance of the other judges, Jeffries would have added whipping through the city to the sentence of imprisonment. It was to continue until the prisoner should have paid five hundred marks. Baxter was at that time in his 70th year. A childless widower, groaning under the agonies of bodily pain, and reduced by former persecutions to sell all he possessed; he entered the King's Bench prison in utter poverty, and remained there for nearly two years, hopeless of any other abode on earth. But the hope of a mansion of eternal peace and love, raised him beyond the reach of human tyranny. He possessed his soul in patience. Wise and good men resorted to his prison, and brought back greetings to his distant friends, and maxims of piety and prudence. Happy in the review of a well-spent life, and still happier in the prospect of its early close, his spirit enjoyed a calm for which its enemies might have well exchanged their mitres and their thrones. His pen, the faithful companion of his troubles, as of his joys, still plied the Herculean tasks which habit had rendered not merely easy, but delightful to him; and what mattered the gloomy walls or the obscene riot of a jail, while he was free to wander from early dawn to nightfall over the sublime heights of devotion, or through the interminable, but to him not pathless, wilderness of psychology? There pain and mortal sickness were unheeded, and his long-lost wife forgotten, or remembered only that he might rejoice at their approaching reünion. The altered policy of the court restored him for a while to the questionable advantage of bodily freedom. "At this time," says the younger Calamy, "he talked about another world like one that had been there, and was come as an express from thence to make a report concerning it." But age, sickness, and persecution, had done their work. His material frame gave way to the pressure of disease, though, in the language of one of his last associates, "his soul abode rational, strong in faith and hope." That his dying hours were agitated by the doubts which had clouded his earlier days, has been often but erroneously asserted. With manly truth, he rejected as affectation, the wish for death to which some pretend. He assumed no stoical indifference to pain, and indulged in no unhallowed familiarity on those awful subjects which occupy the thoughts of him whose eye is closing on sublunary things, and is directed to an instant eternity. In profound lowliness, with a settled reliance on the Divine Mercy, repeating at frequent intervals the prayer of the Redeemer, on whom his hopes reposed, and breathing out benedictions on those who encircled his dying bed, he passed away from a life of almost unequalled toil and suffering, to a new condition of existence, where he doubted not to enjoy that perfect conformity of the human to the Divine will, to which, during his three score years and ten, it had been his ceaseless labor to attain.

THE WORDS OF STRENGTH.

There are three lessons I would write—
Three words—as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light,
Upon the hearts of men.

Have HOPE. Though clouds environ now,
And gladness hide her face in scorn,
Put then the shadow from thy brow—
No night but hath its morn;

Have FAITH. Where'er the bark is driven—
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth—
Know this—God rules the hosts of Heaven,
The habitants of earth;

Have LOVE. Not love alone for one;
But man as man, thy brother call,
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, Faith and Love—and thus shall find
Strength, when Life's surges rudest roll,
Light, when thou else wert blind.

SUCCESSFUL MINISTERS.

"The old ministers," said Mr. Williams, of Wern, "were not much better preachers than we are, and in many respects they were inferior to us; but there was an unction about their ministry, and success attended upon it, that can now be but seldom seen. And what is the cause of the difference? They prayed more than we do. If we would prevail and 'have power with men,' we must first prevail and 'have power with God.' It was on his knees that Jacob became a 'prince;' and if we would become princes, we must be oftener and more importunate on our knees." He was very fond of relating the following anecdote respecting the late Rev. J. Griffith, of Caernavron:—"Mr. Griffith was to preach one night in a farmhouse, and he desired permission to retire to a private room before the service began. He remained there a considerable time after the congregation had assembled. As there was no sign of the preacher making his appearance, the good man of the house sent the servant to request him to come, as the people had been for some time waiting. On approaching the door, she heard what she supposed to be a conversation carried on by two persons in rather a subdued tone of voice. She stood listening at the door, and heard one say to the other, 'I will not go unless you come with me.' The girl returned to her master, and said, 'There is some one with Mr. Griffith, and he tells him he will not come unless the other accompany him. I did not hear the other make any reply, so I conclude he will not come from there to-night.' 'Yes, yes, he will,' said the master; 'and I'll warrant the other will come with him, if matters are as you represent them. We shall begin the service by singing and reading till the two come.' At length Mr. Griffith came, and the 'other' with him, and they had an extraordinary meeting that night. It proved the commencement of a powerful revival in the neighborhood, and many were converted to God. 'Nothing, brethren,' Mr. Williams would say, by the way of applying the anecdote, 'is necessary to render our ministry as efficient and useful as that of our fathers, but that we should be brought to the same spirit and frame of mind."

HOW TO SERMONIZE.

1. Go to the bottom of your subject: And think of every thing that ought to be said upon it: And consider what points, or parts of it, your hearers would be glad to have cleared up, or most enlarged upon. To skim off only the surface, is to put off your audience with froth. The weightiest sentiments often lie at the bottom; be at the pains then of diving deep to bring them up from thence. On the other hand,

2. Take care you do not torture your subject, by aiming to exhaust it. Don't endeavor to say every thing that can be said, but every thing that ought to be said, upon it. A preacher's excellence is seen, not so much in saying a great deal upon a text, as saying the best things in the best manner.

3. Don't crowd your thoughts too thick. This will but fatigue and perplex the minds of your hearers, who should always have time to follow you. If you pour water too fast into the funnel, it will run over.

4. Protract not your discourse to an undue length. The best sentiments will not be attended to, whilst your hearers are impatiently waiting and wishing for the conclusion. It were better to offend by the other extreme, provided your matter be solid, well disposed, and well digested. Better leave your audience longing than loathing. Abstinence is less hurtful than repletion. I think Luther says, in his table-talk, that one necessary qualification of a preacher is to know when to leave off.

THRILLING INCIDENT.

At a temperance meeting in Philadelphia some years ago, a learned clergyman spoke in favor of wine as a drink; demonstrating it, quite to his own satisfaction, to be scriptural, gentlemanly, and healthful. When the clergyman sat down, a plain, elderly man rose, and asked the liberty of saying a few words. "A young friend of mine," said he, "who had long been intemperate, was at length prevailed on, to the great joy of his friends, to take the pledge of entire abstinence from all that could intoxicate. He kept the pledge faithfully for some time, though the struggle with his habit was fearful; till one evening, in a social party, glasses of wine were handed round. They came to a clergyman present, who took a glass, saying a few words in vindication of the practice. 'Well,' thought the young man, 'if a clergyman can take wine, and justify it so well, why not I?' So he also took a glass. It instantly rekindled his fiery and slumbering appetite; and after a rapid downward course, he died of delirium tremens—a raving madman."

The old man paused for utterance; and was just able to add—"That young man was my only son; and the clergyman was the Reverend Doctor who has just addressed the assembly."

RULES OF FAITH AND PRACTICE,

Not found in the Bible, but some think can be proved by the Bible; which I doubt.

BY ELDER N. SUMMERBELL.

Never manifest any peculiar interest in religion, except in times of revival, and then, not until there gets to be quite a good deal of excitement; lest the meetings should be uninteresting.

Never talk about the state of religion in your own heart, but if you talk of religion at all—especially before worldly persons—let it be in the way of finding fault with your minister. This will make you appear as though you knew what kind of a man a minister should be.

Strive to believe all the evil reports about your brethren, especially should there be one about the minister; this will prove that you have charity. For charity beliveth all things.

Be sure to lay up treasures for your own family, yea, if it be possible, to supply them down to the thousandth generation—and be careful to let all your charity begin at home—for he that provideth not for his own house, hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

If there are any members more active and liberal than you, strive, as opportunity offers—with great care, lest you should be esteemed a fault-finder—to make it appear that they are forward and officious; and pretend that you, yourself, would do more were they not so forward.

If the prayer meeting is two or three miles off, and you never attend, say that it is "too far," but be sure and attend every irreligious gathering at the same place, night or day; thus you will convince men, that let others do as they will, as for you, you are determined to know something more than Jesus Christ and him crucified. Also attend a party now and then, to make up for lost prayer meetings.

Do not take a religious paper; it is as much as you can afford to pay for two political ones.

If anything is said about supporting the gospel, tell them plainly who are able, and that you are poor. What if you are worth a few thousands?

And when you are taken ill, and death approaches, you may do as such persons have done before you. But lest you should want an example, you may take one from a young lady who took up her residence among her fashionable friends in the city, to whose ways she strove to be conformed. When on her death bed, they inquired of her whether she desired a minister to be sent for to pray with her, to which she replied—"if it is fashionable."

[Ch. Pallad.

A SIMPLE FACT.

Seven years ago, while engaged one Sunday afternoon in circulating the temperance pledge among our colored friends at Pittsburgh, I received some sad tales of sorrow from their lips. Among those who signed the pledge, I recollect one who was a married woman, aged thirty-four years, apparently a person of veracity. Her tale was in substance the following:—

"When I was nine years old, I was sold and taken away from my father and mother, and have never seen them since. They were both Christians. It almost killed my father when he saw me about to be separated from him. I recollect, as the horse stood by the door, and I was put on his back, being too young to walk, my father came up to the horse, and took hold of my little feet; and then he prayed to God to take care of me, and while he was praying for me he felt so bad to have me go away that he fainted and fell down on the ground alongside of the horse.

"My mother was a Christian too, and when she bid me farewell, she said, 'Sarah, when you hear I am dead, don't cry for me, I shall be in heaven. Be a good girl and prepare to meet me there!' Since that morning, which is now twenty years, I have never seen my dear father and mother; and I never expect to see them in this world. I have eight brothers and sisters scattered through the different slave States, and have not seen one of them these seventeen years."

DEATH IN THE THEATRE.—The Rev. John B. Bennett, M. D., recently delivered a lecture in London, before the Young Men's Christian Association, on theatrical amusements. In the course of his remarks, he mentioned several cases in which actors had died during the time of performance. A Mr. Peterson was once performing in "Measure for Measure," and while he was repeating the words:

——"Reason thus with life,
If I lose thee, I lose a thing
That none but fools would keep; a breath thou art,"

he fell and breathed his last. The names of Bond, Mrs. Jefferson, and Palmer, were also mentioned as having died in the same way. One Fullam was playing the farce "Brother and Sister," at Dublin, when having just finished singing a song and kissing an actress, he staggered to the side-scenes and fell a lifeless corpse.

[Trav.

TRIUMPHANT DEATH.—The American Messenger says that Mrs. Morton, of Brooklyn, L. I., who died in February, exclaimed, in her last moments: "And have I indeed entered upon the valley of the shadow of death? Where is its darkness? It is light—all light to me. Oh! how beautiful—beautiful—beauti—" and while the words yet lingered on her lips, she was at rest in the bosom of her Saviour.

"When," asks Governor Slade, "will the statesmen of this nation—the noble intellects that move senates, and give tone and direction to popular mind—learn that the surest guaranty of our safety and prosperity is to be found in the silent infusion into the minds and hearts of the people of all parties, and especially of the children, who belong to no party, of sound knowledge and true Christian principle?"

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, April 22, 1847.

THE SABBATARIANS OR SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

The terms SABBATARIAN and SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST are used to designate those Christians who observe the seventh or last day of the week as the Sabbath. The former term was adopted by them in England soon after the Reformation, when the word Sabbath was applied exclusively to the seventh day, and when those who observed that day were regarded as the only true Sabbath-keepers or Sabbatharians. In the year 1818, this term was rejected by the General Conference in America, on account of its supposed indefiniteness, and the term Seventh-day Baptist was adopted in its stead, as more descriptive of the opinions and practices of the people.

The Seventh-day Baptists are distinguished from Baptists generally by the views which they entertain of the Sabbath. In respect to this, they believe, that the seventh day of the week was sanctified and blessed for the Sabbath in Paradise, and was designed for all mankind; that it forms a necessary part of the ten commandments, which are immutable in their nature, and universally binding; that no change as to the day of the Sabbath was made by Divine Authority at the introduction of Christianity; that those passages in the New Testament which speak of the first day of the week do not imply, either the substitution of that day for the seventh as the Sabbath, or its appointment as a day of religious worship; that whatever respect the early Christians paid to the first day of the week, on the supposition of its being the day of Christ's resurrection, yet they never regarded it as the Sabbath, but continued to observe the seventh day in that character until, by the edicts of Emperors and the decrees of Councils, the first day was made gradually to supersede it.

At what precise time the observers of the seventh day took a denominational form, it is not easy to say. According to Ross's "Picture of all Religions," they appeared in Germany late in the fifteenth or early in the sixteenth century. According to Dr. Chambers, they arose in England in the sixteenth century. Assuming the beginning of the sixteenth century as the true period of their origin, would carry them back as far as any of the modern denominations of Christians date. But whatever difficulty there may be in fixing the precise time of their origin as a denomination, the Seventh-day Baptists think there is no difficulty in proving the antiquity of their sentiments. Indeed, they believe that there has been no period since the commencement of the Christian era, when there were not upon the earth more or less Christians observing the seventh day. That the apostles observed that day as the Sabbath, there can be but little doubt. In their writings they uniformly distinguish between the Sabbath and the first day of the week. In consistency with this distinction, it was their custom to rest from labor and engage in religious exercises upon the seventh day. The women who were present at the crucifixion, after preparing their spices, "rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment." When Paul was at Antioch, he preached in the synagogue on a certain Sabbath day, and so interested his Gentile hearers, that they requested him to preach the next Sabbath day, when nearly the whole city came together to hear him. At Corinth, he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath day for nearly a year and a half. On one occasion, in addressing the Jews, Paul asserted that he had committed nothing against the customs of their fathers, who are known to have been strict observers of the seventh day. And though the Jews were ever on the watch to discover any discrepancy between the practices of the early Christians and the customs of their own people, they are not known in a single instance to have charged them with a neglect or violation of the Sabbath. This circumstance, in connection with the facts which have been stated, sufficiently establishes the position that it was the practice of the apostles to observe the seventh day.

Passing from inspired history to that which is uninspired, we find frequent notices of Sabbath-keepers during the first six centuries of the church. Mosheim mentions persons of this class in the second century; and Robinson says that there were at Rome about that time more than forty churches observing the seventh day. Indeed, the notion that a change had been introduced as to the day on which the Sabbath should be observed, seems not then to have been entertained. In process of time, however, a custom arose of celebrating the resurrection of Christ by a religious meeting on the first day of the week. No historical record, sacred or profane, has informed us of the first celebration of this day; nor is there any certain evidence that it was at first observed weekly. It seems to have been introduced as a voluntary festival to commemorate the resurrection, just as the sixth day was observed to commemorate the crucifixion, and the fifth-day to commemorate the ascension. Though not regarded as the Sabbath, it gradually grew in the estimation of Christians during the first three centuries. In the fourth century, the Emperor Constantine embraced Christianity; and in his zeal to magnify those institutions which were regarded as peculiarly Christian, and to bring into disrepute those which were in any way connected with the Jews, he set himself at work to give importance to the first day of the week. He required his armies, and the people generally, to spend the day in devotional exercises. No courts of judicature were to be held on this day, and no suits or trials in law prosecuted. Certain works of necessity or mercy, however, were declared lawful; such, for instance, as the emancipation of slaves, and the labor of the husbandman in pleasant weather. His decrees were subsequently confirmed and extended by Christian Emperors, and similar decrees were passed and enforced by the various ecclesiastical councils.

While the civil and ecclesiastical powers were making such efforts to establish the first day, they were equally zealous to abolish the observance of the seventh day, which they endeavored to do by throwing odium upon those who persisted in it. Constantine, in his decree issued A. D. 321, speaks of the Sabbath as a Jewish institution, represents those who observe it as giving countenance to the Jews, and says, "Let us have nothing in common with that most odious brood, the Jews." The Council of Laodicea, about 350, passed a decree, saying, "It is not proper for Christians to Judaize, and to cease from labor on the Sabbath; but they ought to work upon that day, and put especial honor upon the Lord's day; if any be found Judaizing, let him be anathematized." Notwithstanding this opposition from the highest authorities, many Christians continued to observe the Sabbath. Athanasius, A. D. 340, says, "We assemble on Saturday, not that we are infected with Judaism, but only to worship Christ, the Lord of the Sabbath." Sozomen, A. D. 440, says, "There are various customs concerning assembling; for though nearly all the churches throughout the world do celebrate the holy mysteries on the Sabbath day, yet they of Alexandria and Rome refuse to do this; the Egyptians, however, in the neighborhood of Alexandria, and the inhabitants of Thebes, have assemblies upon the Sabbath, but do not participate in the mysteries." Gregory of Nyssa, about 390, speaking of the relation of the two institutions, says, "How can you look upon the Lord's Day, when you neglect the Sabbath? Do you not know that they are twin sisters, and that in slighting the one you affront the other?"

Rev. L. Coleman, Instructor in Ecclesiastical History in Auburn Theological Seminary, in a "Historical Sketch of the Christian Sabbath," published in the Theological Review, sums up the facts in regard to the early observance of the Sabbath and the Lord's Day, as follows:—

"1. Both were observed in the Christian church down to the fifth century, with this difference, that in the Eastern churches both days were regarded as joyful occasions, but in the Western the Jewish Sabbath was kept as a fast.

"2. Both were solemnized by public religious assemblies for the instruction and spiritual edification of the hearers, and for the celebration of the Lord's Supper.

"3. The Sabbath of the Jews was kept chiefly by converts from that people, and on their own account; who, though freed from the bondage of the law; adhered in this respect to the custom of their fathers. But in time, after the Lord's day was fully established, the observance of the Sabbath of the Jews was gradually discontinued, and finally was denounced as heretical."

It is somewhat difficult to trace the history of Sabbath-keepers—as it would be to trace the history of any unpopular sect or doctrine—through the darkness which intervened between the establishment of the Papal Dominion and the dawning of the Reformation. There are, however, fragments of history scattered over that period, which have an important bearing upon this point, and deserve attention. Early in the seventh century, in the time of Pope Gregory I., the subject of the Sabbath attracted considerable attention. According to Heylin, there arose a class of persons who declared "that it was not lawful to do any manner of work upon the Saturday, or the old Sabbath." Nearly five hundred years afterward, in the eleventh century, while Gregory VII. occupied the papal chair, the same doctrine was preached again. In both instances it was denounced as heretical, and opposed by severe papal censures. According to Mosheim, there was a sect of of Christians in Lombardy, in the twelfth century, called the Pasaginians, who kept the Jewish Sabbath. These facts are sufficient to prove the existence of Sabbath-keepers, not only in the early and purer ages of the church, but through the period of papal ascendancy. Indeed, they render it quite probable, that wherever, in the early ages of the church, the subject of the Sabbath was made a topic of popular discussion, there the seventh day found advocates and observers. OBITUARY NOTICES.—The editor of the Christian Mirror, who has had an extensive experience in such matters, says that "obituary notices are the most troublesome things to manage of any that are not on matters of controversy. It requires almost a hard heart to reprove their authors or prompters, acting, as they do, under a deep conviction of the worth of departed friends. To suppress them would seem to be trifling with wounded hearts; and thus many find their way into the papers, which but for these and similar considerations would never appear. * * * * Where there is nothing significant or peculiar or distinguishing, it is a waste of labor for writers, printers and readers, to concern themselves with protracted obituaries. The simple announcement of the age and death of the person, is, in such cases, the most impressive obituary that could be written. It is the scriptural form. Even of those who lived through six to almost ten centuries, it is merely said, 'they lived so many years and died.' It is fair to presume of any departed mistress of a family, that she 'left behind her a deeply afflicted husband, and affectionate mourning children,' and perhaps a bereaved church and loving neighbors, to lament her loss."

"HYPEROXYSOPHISTICATED PARADOXOLOGY."

Under the above title, the "Sabbath Recorder" of last week contains a long article, filling an entire page, which the writer doubtless would have his readers to receive as a candid and fair review of the Sabbath Discussion between "E. W. D." and "Indagator." We could not help thinking, while reading this long article, of the words of the wise man: "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him." Wisdom might have dictated the propriety of waiting till the disputants had made an end, before applying the test of his astute criticism.

As might be expected from a review so prepared, there is much flippancy, a spicing of spurious wit, a number of comparisons drawn from various sources, many epithets of different kinds, an attempted parade of learning, not a little of glaring assumption; and, after the subtraction of these, a very small residuum, indeed, of argument upon the question at issue. We do not think that a thousand articles of the same stamp as the one now before us, would leave the world any wiser on the Sabbath question than it is at present. If we may give an opinion upon this rambling lucubration with which the public has been favored, we would say it carries too much sail and too little ballast—it exhibits too much eagerness to mingle in the discussion, and too little knowledge of the languages of Scripture, of the principles of interpretation and the rules of logic, to warrant a hope that it will enable it to do much for the convincing of Anti-Sabbatarians, however much favor it may win from those of "the writer's own party." What good the article has accomplished, or can accomplish, we cannot see. It is not a fair review of the discussion; for that is not yet ended, and a fair review cannot yet be written. Nor does it prove any thing, except the possibility of spinning out a long article without pouring any light on the question at issue.

It is to be hoped that the Sabbatarians can prepare some better defense of their cause. If not, we think it will be difficult to prove the obligation of Christians to keep the seventh day holy. We are glad that the article referred to is not from the pen of the editor of the Recorder. From him we expect better things. We have looked, and still look, with interest for the strictures on the discussion, which he partly promised, when the disputants have ended. He has too much wisdom, we believe, to answer a matter before he has heard it.

HYPEROXYSOPHISTICATED PARADOXOLOGY, AGAIN!

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Though there is much wisdom embodied in the apothegm of one of the ancient philosophers, "If an ass kicks me, must I needs kick him again?" which has influenced my conduct very considerably under such circumstances, through all my walk of life, yet as higher authority admonishes us to "answer a fool according to his folly, lest he grow wise in his own conceit," I am constrained, much against my own inclinations, to add a remark or two in reply to the strictures of the Editor of the Christian Chronicle, on my article with the above caption, in the Recorder of the 8th inst.; not with any desire to bandy any words of spite, or to retaliate on his gratuitous and vindictive vituperation, but from considerations of higher moment. I take up my pen to remove a misrepresentation of my design in noticing the "Discussion;" which was not what the Editor supposes, an attempt at an exposition or a defense of the seventh-day Sabbath, nor from any "eagerness to mingle in the discussion," but simply to hold up, as was distinctly avowed, the miserable "turns and shifts of quibblers to evade the explicit injunctions of Holy Writ," and to exhibit the ludicrous position of those who depart from the Word and become "entangled in the web of traditional interpretation," as a beacon to others in temptation to wander from the Word into metaphysical speculations and vain philosophy. Its real design was "to shoot at folly as it flies," for

"Whether the charmer sinner it or saint it,
When folly grows romantic I must paint it."

And as the "discussion" abounds with so much absurdity and so little logic, it could not be treated in any other manner.

The Editor of the Chronicle, mistaking the sarcasm of a lampoon for a theological exposition of Scripture, actually commences an attack upon a ghost, the grim creature of his own fuddled brain, and makes a perfect harlequin of himself in parrying imaginary assaults and making deadly thrusts into the vitals of the "black cat not on the premises." It is not my design to return "railing for railing," yet it is fitting that the scales should be removed from his eyes, that he may see, that his zeal has run before knowledge, and that he himself has "judged before the time." In a word, the whole design of the writer was to exhibit the contradictions and absurdities of his correspondents "E. W. D." and "Indagator," as far as they had gone, and show in bold relief their weak points and fallacious arguments. If I have misrepresented them, he has not only failed to point it out, but has not even charged me with it. If I carried "more sail than ballast," which I cheerfully admit, I contend that that was essential to drag along the dead weight of the extracts from his own paper; for with all the sail I could unfurl, and all the spicing I could infuse into it, I doubted whether the readers of the Recorder could be induced to wade a second time through so much insipid jargon, and really felt it due to them to make an apology for reduplicating so much matter with so little meaning, as the whole "Discussion" does not contain enough meerschaum to make a pipe. Too much ballast in shoal waters jeopards a voyage—is often fatal. When we wish to run against the rapid currents of ignorance and popular prejudices, we must take a buoyant boat, with wide-spread canvas, and the fare must be spicy, or you cannot get the crew to dive for pearls into "the deep points not on the premises."

When the writer attempts a philological analysis of "the languages of Scripture," which he has not aspired to, it will be time enough to search out "the black cat not on the premises," and when he enters upon an exegetical exposition of any of "the deep points of the law," it will then do to determine whether his rules of interpretation are "according to Gunter," and quadrate with the requirements of Procrustes; but as he has not attempted either of these, the Editor of the Chronicle has "judged before the time," and has proven himself an itching, anticipating critic, while I only strove to prove myself an Athenodorus to his correspondents and your readers. But

"If fools have ulcers, and their pride conceal them,
They must have ulcers still, for none can heal them."

But as the main object of taking up my pen at this time is to disclaim having written the castigation as a defense of the Sabbath of the Lord, or as an analysis of their medley of tautology and contradiction, which would not admit of being brought under investigation by the rules of logic, or even of common-sense, I conclude by assuring the Editor of the Chronicle, that if he will agree to insert in his colnmns, a better defense of their (the Sabbatarians') cause, it shall be prepared forthwith by one who is familiar with "the languages of Scripture" and well versed in the rules of interpretation. What say you, Mr. Chronicle? W. M. F.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., April 18, 1847.

LOWELL PIETY.—Under this heading, the Boston Olive Branch says that in Lowell, Mass., they 'will prosecute a poor man, who sets out a cabbage plant or catches a fish on Sunday, while the rich saints, who own the factories, can employ fifty men at blasting rocks and other noisy hard work, yet no lawyer dare prosecute them, nor dare any minister preach against them.' The system of punishing the poor for doing what the rich are permitted freely to do, is no doubt carried out to perfection in the application of the Sunday laws. Who ever heard of a rich man being taken up for breaking the Sunday, except in those cases where the complaints were instigated by malice or covetousness? We are yet to learn of an instance in which the executors of the law have done it of their own free will.

RELIGION AND FAMINE IN IRELAND.—A correspondent of the London Christian Observer, who has recently been on a tour through Ireland, says that the feeling is very strong among the population, that the famine is the judgment of God for the sins of priests and people. Many with whom he conversed expressed their anxiety that the Word of God should be more generally read. A clergyman in the south of Ireland says that no such state of things has ever occurred before. The grand difficulty in times past has been to get at the people; but by this affliction they are thrown upon the Protestant clergy and gentry for preservation, and are willing to hear. Thus Ireland has been opened to the Gospel.

NEW WAY TO GIVE RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION.—The Dublin Warder tells of a Mr. Peto, a railway contractor, who, with a view to inculcate a better feeling among the laborers employed on his various contracts, has engaged a number of religious teachers, who visit the men daily, and during the time set apart for meals, they read the Bible to the laborers, and in the evening teach them to read and write. The plan has been found to answer admirably. There are two missionaries on the Norwich and Cambridge line, two on the Southampton and Dorchester line, and several others on Mr. Peto's other contracts.

LARGE BEQUESTS.—Mr. John Wilkinson, of High Wycombe, Eng., who died recently, has left between fifty and sixty thousand dollars to be paid to various benevolent societies on the decease of his widow. The reason he gave for doing so was, that he viewed the great cause of the Gospel as of paramount importance; and having in his own experience enjoyed its influence, without which life would have been a burden, although surrounded with outward comforts, he felt it to be his duty, and a just debt of gratitude to the great Giver, to extend that blessing to others.

ARRIVAL FROM CHINA.—We learn from the Commercial, that Rev. S. R. Brown, lady and two children, with three Chinese young men, arrived on Thursday last in the ship Huntress from China, after a very pleasant voyage of ninety-eight days. Mr. Brown was for several years a Professor in the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb in New York, and was appointed in 1838 to take charge of the school for Chinese youth, then established at Macao, but since removed to Hong-Kong, under the direction of the Morrison Education Society, which is composed mainly of foreign residents in China.

THE NEW YORK RECORDER comes to us in a new dress and an enlarged form. Rev. Sewell S. Cutting continues to be its Editor. The publishing interest has recently passed into the hands of Lewis Colby, of 122 Nassau-st.

☞ ELD. S. S. GRISWOLD having removed to the 2d Hopkinton Church, requests his correspondents to address him at Hopkinton, R. I.

RECEIPTS OF BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.—Rev. D. C. Haynes, of the American Tract Society, has prepared a card embracing a list of receipts of the principal Missionary, Tract, and Education Societies in the United States, during the year 1846. The total amount of contributions is stated to have been $1,562,449 75.

THE SUNDAY IN SCOTLAND.—An English paper says that the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland appointed Sunday, Feb. 16th, as a day on which "the divine authority and perpetual obligation of the Sabbath" should be specially brought before the congregations of that body. The same paper says that the contest respecting Sunday trains continues, but with less violence.

MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.—The Boston Transcript says that Rev. Messrs. E. Doty and J. O. N. Talmadge sailed from Boston on the 15th inst., for China, under the direction of the American Board of Missions, and Rev. Messrs. Judson, D. Collins, and M. C. White, under the direction of the Methodist Episcopal Board. Previous to sailing, appropriate religious services were held on board the ship Heber, conducted by Bishop Janes, and rendered the more interesting by the union of different Christian denominations.

REV. MR. ABBOTT.—The Baptist Register says that this devoted missionary has been compelled to give up attending public meetings, and to resign himself into the hands of a physician, on account of a severe ulceration of the throat, which threatens to become chronic. He is said to be exceedingly anxious to return to his field of labor in Arracan next fall, but it is feared that he will never be able to do so, unless he can be kept away from the excitement of public meetings.

REV. C. F. FREY.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Baptist Register says that Mr. Frey, the converted Jew, is about leaving New York city, where he has resided for nearly a quarter of a century, to settle at Pontiac, Mich. His "removal from this section will, in all probability, prove fatal to the existence of the American Baptist Society for Evangelizing the Jews; and if so, it must hereafter be added to the many unsuccessful efforts to convert the descendants of Abraham."

DISSOLUTION OF OLD PREJUDICES.—The moral aspect of the world is everywhere brightening with promise of a better era in the history of man. Turkey, China, and Cochin China are making most important movements towards civil and religious freedom. A recent letter from China, published in the Augsburgh Gazette, alluding to accounts from Canton, says:

"We are approaching towards a very interesting epoch. In ten years hence, the state of affairs in Eastern Asia will considerably change. There is a sentiment of liberty developing itself in China, which is bringing about with rapid strides the ruin of the existing form of government. Thousands of persons assemble to discuss on matters connected with the destiny of the human race. A spark is appearing among the people, which will not be long in breaking out into a flame. Keying, now governor-general of Canton, dare take no steps without the consent of the people."

Min-Meah, the ruler of Anam, Sovereign of all Cochin China, Tonquin and Combodia, a chief of thirty million men, who after the example of the Emperor of Japan and the former example of the Emperor of China, had constantly refused all relations with foreign powers, has recently deceased; and it is said that his successor is determined to open the ports of the empire of Anam to the vessels of all commercial nations.

PROVIDENCES.—Somebody has said, that "he who observes providences shall have providences enough to observe." We have never seen a more striking illustration of the truth of this, than is furnished by the following incident connected with the American Tract Society:—

"A few weeks ago, twenty men presented themselves in the course of a few days, to the American Tract Society as colporteurs. The Society had no funds appropriated to their support, but as they appeared to be good men, the committee supposed that a sufficient indication of their duty, and employed them all. Not long afterwards the Society received a letter from a Southern merchant, stating that a friend had given him, whilst at the North, one of the Society's books, which he put in his trunk, thinking little of it until he arrived at a Southern city, when having leasure he read it. The perusal of the book wrought a great revolution in his opinions and feelings, and he determined to devote a considerable amount of money for the distribution of the books. He did not however learn how his design could be accomplished until a colporteur came across his path, with these books for sale. The merchant stated his desire, and the colporteur explained to him the Society's plan of distributing books by colporteurs. This plan he said was just what he desired, and he had therefore determined to propose to support TWENTY colporteurs, if the Society could find the men. The Secretary of the Society wrote immediately to the merchant, announcing to him the remarkable coincidence between their wants and his liberality. In reply the merchant pledged himself for the support of these twenty men for four years. The amount of the pledge is twelve thousand dollars."

THE IRISH CLERGY.—The London Standard says that it has been calculated that the Romish clergy in Ireland receive annually for confessions $1,350,000; for christenings $150,000; for unctions and burials $270,000; for marriages $1,350,000; for prayers for deliverance from purgatory $450,000; for collections at chapels $2,410,000; for curate collections $101,000; for government grant to Maynooth College $45,000. Total, $6,135,000.

WAR NEWS.

The daily papers for a week past have been filled with details of the recent battles and victories. It is hardly possible to gather from them an exact account of subsequent movements. But the following will be found to contain the substance of what is known.

Santa Anna, immediately after his defeat, turned his face towards the city of Mexico. This retreat was disastrous in the extreme, in consequence of the insufficient supply of provisions for the army. But it was necessary in order to check a revolution which had been going on in the city for some time. He reached the capital on the 20th of March, and on the 23d he took the oath of office as President of the Republic—thus putting an end to the sanguinary civil commotions.

General Scott, at the last advices, was organizing his forces to proceed to the interior and the city of Mexico. He had already sent forward a force sufficient to capture Alvarado. He would have about 13,000 effectives, who expected a battle at Punte del Rey, but were confident of victory.

Gen. Taylor is also on his way to the interior of Mexico. It is reported that an advance party of his army overtook a body of Mexicans under Gens. Urrea and Canales, fought them seven hours, and finally gained the victory on the arrival of the main body of the army under Gen. Taylor. This is only a rumor.

There is much difference of opinion as to the prospects of peace, and nobody can calculate what turn things will take. A Guadalajara paper publishes the terms offered by our government for peace through Atocha. The principal one was in brief, fifteen millions to be paid Mexico for the line of 26° from the Gulf to the Pacific, and the United States to demand no expenses of the war. These expenses are estimated at thirteen millions, making a total of twenty-eight millions for the territory north of 26 degrees.

A circumstantial narrative of the late insurrection and atrocities in New Mexico, has been published. After several skirmishes with the insurrectionists, in which a good many of them were killed, peace seems to have been restored.

"Lo, THE POOR INDIAN!"—A family of Choctaw Indians, whose ancestors have lived immemorially in our vicinity, says the Baton Rouge (La.,) Conservator of the 3d inst., and who, from a once powerful body, are now dwindled down to some half dozen degraded beings, engaged themselves last week in the solemn office of a capital punishment. It has been long known that one of the family, in a drunken brawl, killed another, and that punishment must follow, but the murderer, and the friends of the murdered, have for months visited and camped together upon equal terms, apparently enjoying the most perfect social intercourse. On Saturday last, the poor wretches, covered with rags, and scarcely provided with food to keep their souls and bodies together, camped in a beautiful piece of woods near our town, and commenced the solemn ceremonies of funeral, the victim taking part with them. Toward nightfall, the preparations were finished, and the poor Indian exposed his naked breast—a load of buckshot, fired by his nearest relative, pierced his heart, and he fell a corpse. Nearly three days were consumed in weeping over his grave, and then the retributors of justice wended their way off to the swamps.

A dreadful explosion occurred April 14, at 6 o'clock, in Dupont's Powder Mills, near Wilmington, Delaware. The concussion was felt at a distance of thirty miles. The packing house, drying house, and six thousand pounds of powder, were destroyed. The following persons were killed, all of whom were engaged in the mill:—Wm. Green, Matthew McGraney, Daniel Dougherty, Michael Houlton, Samuel Brown, Michael O'Brien, Wm. King, Patrick Connor, Wm. Connor, John McGinniss, John Dougherty, David Althans, Bernard Shields, Charles O'Brien, Malcom Baxter, John W. Pennington, and Thomas Lynch. The unfortunate men named above, were literally blown to atoms.

The Wilmington Blue Hen's Chicken states that of the nineteen men killed by the late explosion at Dupont's Powder Mills, fourteen were married and have families, and many of them had spent a great many years in and about the establishment. They had mostly emigrated from Ireland, settled on the Brandywine, and accumulated considerable property in order to retire comfortably to enjoy old age—some of them had beautiful farms in the neighborhood. Only nine bodies have been found; the rest were probably blown into fragments.

The Sun has received papers from the City of Mexico to the 9th ult. Accurate intelligence had been received at Vera Cruz of the numbers of the American expedition then arriving at that port. These accounts produced immense excitement in the Capitol, but had no apparent influence upon the revolutionists. They still pursued their sanguinary and fratricidal war in the streets of the Capitol. We see no prospects of peace, says the Sun, in any of the journals before us. All acknowledge the imminent danger which surrounds them, and they even give way to the worst forebodings of evil, but no one has the courage to propose an honorable peace. They say their nationality is doomed to destruction, and their country to "Yankee" domination; therefore all ideas of peace are delusive.

An Irishman named John Malone committed a murder thirty-six years ago, in Ireland, and eluded justice by escaping to America. After living in this country eighteen years, he returned to Ireland, where, after remaining in security eighteen years more, he has just been identified as the murderer, informed of, and committed for trial. He is now over seventy years of age.

SUMMARY.

A Mr. Sibell of Florida has a heavy claim which he is prosecuting against the Treasury; and his counsel are the Vice-President, Mr. Webster, Mr. Berrien, Mr. Henry D. Gilpin, and Mr. Thomas L. Smith, of this city, late Register of the Treasury. The claim covers a margin of $1,700,000. Mr. Sibell owned a large property in Florida pending the late Seminole war, sawmills for live oak, and various other improvements upon a large tract of land, the whole of which were broken up by the U. S. army, and his whole business destroyed. He petitioned Congress; and at the session of '45—'6 an act was passed for his relief to the amount of $18,000. He was not satisfied. And at the last session a bill was passed authorizing the claim to be settled by the Secretary of the Treasury on the principles of equity and justice. Hence the demand for $1,700,000 for indemnity.

On the night of the 24th ultimo, a Dr. Shultz committed an outrage of a most villainous character at Indiana, Pa. Having been repulsed in his addresses to the daughter of a Mr. Hill, he vowed revenge, and, disguising himself, proceeded to Mr. Hill's farm, and set fire to the barn. From thence he went to the dwelling house, and attempted to throw in a shell, charged with four pounds of powder. The missile exploded as it passed in at the window, and a fragment striking Shultz, tore off his under jaw, and injured his body badly. The house was much shattered, and the barn was burned down with its contents of two thousand bushels of grain, five horses, harness, &c. The incendiary was found lying upon the ground, and was lodged in prison.

The Journal of Commerce says, that the ship Gen. Jackson, now on the sectional dry dock for repairs, is more than a hundred years old, and is still in good order. She was built by the Portuguese at the Island of Goa, of teak wood. She was captured by the English in the old wars, and in the war of 1812 was captured from her English owner by the American privateer Yankee, owned by Mr. DeWolf, of Bristol, R. I. The teak planks are grooved together, and never have been caulked, but covered by sheathing. Her mizen mast and some other spars are of teak, and undoubtedly the original sticks. The ship is only of 340 tons burden, and very well shaped, though shorter in proportion to her breadth of beam than modern built ships. Her planks and timbers may ride the wave another century, for aught that appears to the contrary.

The Oregon mail line of steamers are to run monthly from Charleston, S. C., to Chagres, touching at St. Augustine, Key West, and Havana; the mail will then be conveyed by land carriages, across the isthmus, from Chagres to Panama, where it will be received by steamers for Astoria, or the mouth of the Columbia River, touching Monterey, San Francisco, and other places. The cost is not to exceed $100,000 per annum. U. S. Postmasters are to be appointed at other points on the Pacific. Postage on a single letter to Chagres 20cts., Havana, 12 1-2cts Panama, 3cts., and to the Pacific coast, 30cts.

On the morning of the 15th inst., the two celebrated and highly tractable elephants belonging to Raymond & Waring's menagerie were drowned in the Delaware. They would not be induced to place foot on board the ferry boat, and were therefore taken down the river, near Gloucester Point, to swim across. They were either chilled through, or from some other cause exhausted, and sunk before they reached the opposite shore. They are a great loss, as they have been valued at thirty thousand dollars.

Hiram Potter, son of Ezekiel Potter, of Queensbury, Warren Co., N. Y., left Belchertown, Mass., where he had been visiting a sister, on the first of May, 1846, since which time he has not been heard from. He is 19 years of age, 5 feet 10 inches high, weighed 150 pounds, with light complexion and hair, black eyes, and a scar occasioned by a hair-lip. The aged parents of this young man are exceedingly anxious to obtain information from him.

Major Drips arrived at St. Louis, from Fort Pierre, on the Little Missouri, above the mouth of Yoneton River. His trip was made through severe storms of rain and snow. On the way down Major Drips passed several encampments of Mormons. In every instance he represents them as enduring great privations and sufferings, many being entirely destitute of provisions. He passed numbers returning to the settlements. They have endured more privations this winter than any who are now famishing in Europe.

A little girl thirteen years of age, at Pawtucket, R. I., attempted suicide by drowning. She had taken an orange from a basket in front of a store, and on being told that an officer was after her, by some of the children, she run and jumped into the river just below the falls. She was rescued as she was about sinking for the last time.

During the attack on Vera Cruz, Lieut. Shubrick carefully aimed one of his guns at a particular gun in a Mexican bastion, and was watching to see the effect of his shot, when he was killed by a shot from that same gun at the moment it was dismounted by his shot. Probably the Mexican artillerist was killed also.

A correspondent of the Poughkeepsie Telegraph, had from 30 hens, the past season, up to September 1st, 3,522 eggs, and 200 chickens. The management consists in a warm dry shelter for winter; feeding with oats soaked twelve hours in warm water; and a free supply of burnt clam shells, powdered fine. The chickens are fed with a mixture of two parts of oats and one of rye, ground to meal.

Eleven ships cleared at New Orleans on the 29th ultimo for Great Britain and Ireland, freighted with corn and flour, having on board 58,000 sacks of the former, and 17,000 barrels of the latter. This is beyond doubt, says the Tropic, the largest quantity of breadstuffs which was ever cleared from any port of the United States in any one day.

The Norfolk Beacon says that thirteen ships, twelve barques, fourteen brigs, and six schooners, cleared from that port from the first of January to the fifth of April, for European ports, with 687,204 bushels of corn, 15,241 barrels of flour, and 4,218 barrels of meal.

Thompson, the celebrated hotel thief who escaped from the jail in Louisville, when arrested in New Orleans, had upon his person the different advertisements offering a reward for his arrest, and numerous newspaper articles describing his person and exploits. He had them all pasted in a little album, under the head of puffs and unbiased opinions of the press.

Mrs. Sarah Underwood, of New York, is now in Washington, having in her possession, and intending to make a public exhibition of them, the original papers found upon the person of Major Andre when arrested as a spy, during the Revolution.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Miscellaneous.

THE PAUPER'S DEATH-BED.

BY CAROLINE SOUTHEY.

Tread softly—bow the head—
In reverent silence bow—
No passing bell doth toll—
Yet an immortal soul
Is passing now.

Stranger! however great,
With holy reverence bow;
There's one in that poor shed—
One by that paltry bed—
Greater than thou.

Beneath that beggar's roof,
Lo! death doth keep his state;
Enter—no crowds attend—
Enter—no guards defend
This palace gate.

That pavement, damp and cold,
No smiling courtiers tread;
One silent woman stands,
Lifting with meagre hands
A dying head.

No mingling voices sound—
An infant wail alone!
A sob suppress'd—again
That short, deep gasp, and then
The parting groan.

Oh! change—Oh! wond'rous change—
Burst are the prison bars—
This moment there, so low,
So agonized, and now
Beyond the stars!

Oh! change—stupendous change;
There lies the soulless clod;
The Sun eternal breaks—
The new immortal wakes—
Wakes with his God.

THE LITTLE MATCH GIRL.

A Christmas Story.

BY H. C. ANDERSON.

It was so terribly cold—it snowed, and the evening began to be dark; it was also the last evening in the year—New Year's Eve. On this dark cold evening a poor little girl went into the street with bare head and naked feet. It is true she had shoes on when she went from home, but of what use were they? They were very large shoes; her mother had last worn them, they were so large; and the little one lost them in hurrying over the street, as two carriages passed quickly by. One shoe was not to be found, and the other a boy ran away with, saying that he could use it for a cradle, when he got children himself.

The little girl now went on her small, naked feet, wich were red and blue with cold. She carried a number of matches in an old apron, and held one bundle in her hand. No one had bought of her the whole day—no one had given her a farthing. Poor thing! she was hungry and benumbed with cold, and looked so downcast! The snow-flakes fell on her yellow hair, which curled so prettily round her neck, but she did not heed that. The lights shone out from all the windows, and there was such a delicious smell of roast goose in the street! It was New Year's Eve, and she thought of that!

She sat down in a corner, between two houses—the one stood a little more forward in the street than the other—and drew her legs up under her to warm herself, but she was still colder, and she durst not go home; she had not sold any matches, or got a single farthing! Her father would beat her—and it was also cold at home; they had only the roof directly over them, and there the wind whistled in, although straw and rags were stuffed in the largest crevices.

Her little hauds were almost benumbed with cold. Ah! a little match might do some good, durst she only draw one out of the bundles, strike it on the wall, and warm her fingers. She drew one out—ritch! how it burnt! it was a warm clear flame like that of a little candle, when she held her hand round it—it was a strange light!

The little girl thought she sat before a large iron stove, with brass balls on the top; the fire burnt so nicely and warmed so well. Nay, what was that? The little girl stretched out her feet to warm them too; then the flame went out, the stove vanished—she sat with a stump of the burnt match in her hand. Another was struck—it burnt, it shone; and when the light shone upon the wall, it became as transparent as crape; she looked directly into the room where the roast goose, stuffed with apples and prunes, steamed so temptingly on the table, which was laid out and covered with a shining white cloth with porcelain service. What was still more splendid, the goose sprung off the dish, and waddled along the floor with knife and fork in its back; it came directly up to the poor girl. Then the match went out, and there was only the thick cold wall to be seen.

She struck another match. Then she sat under the most charming Christmas tree—it was still larger and more ornamental than she had seen through the glass door at the rich merchant's the last Christmas; a thousand candles burnt in the green branches; and motly pictures, like those which ornament the shop windows, looked down at her. The little girl lifted up both her hands—then the match was extinguished—the many Christmas candles rose higher and higher—she saw they were bright stars. One of them fell, and made a fiery stripe in the sky. "Now one dies!" said the poor girl; for old grandmother, who alone had been kind to her, but who was now dead, had told her that when a star falls, a soul goes up to God!

She again struck a match against the wall—it shone all around, and her old grandmother stood in the lustre, so shining, so mild and blissful. "Grandmother!" exclaimed the little girl, "oh! I know you will be gone away when the match goes out—like the warm stove, the delicious roast goose, and the delightful Christmas tree!" and she struck in haste the whole remainder of the matches that were in the bundle—she would not lose sight of grandmother, and the matches shone with such brilliancy that it was clearer than in broad daylight. Grandmother had never before looked so pretty, so great; she lifted the poor girl up in her arms, and they flew so high in splendor and joy, and there was no cold, no hunger, no anxiety—they were with God.

But the little girl sat in the corner by the house, in the cold morning hour, with red cheeks, and with a smile round her mouth—dead—frozen to death, the last evening of the old year. New Year's morning rose over the little corpse as it sat with the matches, of which a bundle was burnt. She had been trying to warm herself, said they! But no one knew what beautiful things she had seen—in what splendor and gladness she had entered with her old grandmother into New Year's joys.

AFFECTING STORY.

The following story we heard a short time since from a young female in humble life—an emigrant from Ireland. During the recital, the expression of her fine intellectual face, her fast flowing tears, attested a truth we all admit—that warm hearts and gentle sympathies may exist where the refinements of polished life are wanting. The narrative is in our hands—it has lost, along with the strong accents of her country, the touching simplicity of her original narration.

"The steerage of our ship was crowded with passengers of all ages, and before we had been long at sea, a malignant disease broke out among the children on board. One after another sickened and died, and each was in its turn wrapped in its narrow shroud and committed to the deep, with no requiem but the bursting sigh of a fond mother, and no obsequies but the tears of fathers and brothers and pitying spectators. As they sullenly plunged into the sea, and the blue waves closed over them, I clasped my own babe more strongly to my bosom, and prayed that Heaven might spare my only child. But this was not to be. It sickened, and day by day I saw that its life was ebbing, and the work of death begun. On Friday night it died, and to avoid the necessity of seeing what was once so beautiful, and still so dear, given to gorge the monsters of the deep, I concealed its death from all around me. To lull suspicion, I gave evasive answers to those who inquired after it, and folded it in my arms, and sang to it, as if my babe was only sleeping, for an hour when the cold long sleep of death was on it. A weary day and night had passed away, and the Sabbath came. Like others, I wore my neatest dress, and put on a smiling face—but no! it was a heavy task, for I felt that my heart was breaking. On Monday the death of my child could no longer be concealed, but from regard to my feelings the Captain had it enclosed in a rude coffin, and promised to keep it two days for burial, if in that time we should make land. The coffin was placed in the boat which floated at the ship's stern, and through the long hours of night I watched it—a dark speck on the waves, which might shut it from my sight forever. It was then I thought of my dear cottage home, and my native land, and of the kind friends I had left behind me, and longed to mingle my tears with theirs. By night I watched the coffin of my babe, and by day looked for the land—raising my heart in prayer to Him who holds the winds in his hand, that they might waft us swiftly onward. On the third morning, just as the sun had risen, the fog lifted and showed us the green shores of New Brunswick. The ship was laid to, and then the captain with a few men left, taking the coffin with them. I was not permitted to go, but from the deck of the vessel I could see them as they dug the grave under thick shades of the forest trees, on the edge of a sweet glade, which sloped down to the water—and in my heart I blessed them, and prayed that God would reward their kindness to the living and the dead. When they returned on board, the Captain came to me and said—'My good woman, the place where your son is buried is Greenville, on the coast of Brunswick. I will write it on a piece of paper, that you may know where his remains lie.' I thanked him for his care, but told him the record was already written on my heart, and would remain there till my blest boy and I should meet in a brighter and happier world."

A DINNER IN CHINA.

Dinner being announced, we were conducted to a circular table, and each provided with a pair of ivory chop-sticks, mounted with silver, a silver ladle, a small cup of soy, a saucer for the bowls out of which we were to eat, and an elegant richly-gilt silver cup, with two handles, on a stand of similar materials. This cup was used for drinking sucy-sung, the wine of the country, and did not contain more than the old-fashioned Chinese tea-cups. After drinking the health of one of the party, it was usual to turn the inside of the cup towards him, to show that it was empty. The wine was presented boiling hot, and the cups replenished at every remove. In addition, every European was supplied with a knife and fork, and some meat. The table was laid out with eight small dishes, containing articles to whet the appetite, such as cold pork, called chin-chew, grated so fine that it resembled red-colored wool; small chips of dried salt fish and ham; roast chicken cut into small pieces shaped like dice; pig's tongue; salt fish and eggs, mixed up with tar oil. These delicacies were cold, remaining on the table throughout the entertainment, and were paid uncommon attention to by the Chinese at every opportunity afforded them by the removal of the bowls. The dinner commenced with a large bowl of bird's-nest soup, from which each person helped himself; it was very insipid until flavored with soy, the necessary condiments of salt and pepper appearing to be wholly neglected in Chinese cookery. The second dish was shark's-fin soup, with balls of crab; followed by divers others, amongst which was a vegetable soup, made of prepared seaweed from the coast of Japan. This weed, which is called taychocy, resembled in its dry state the pith found in the hollow of a quill, but in the soup its taste is similar to that of celery. There were also in the soup slices of young bamboo, and roots of the white and water lily, each having a peculiar and an agreeable flavor. After the soups came stewed mutton, cut as fine and tender as vermicelli, and with delicious gravy. This was followed by pigeon's eggs, roasted, in a very rich gravy. We found it no easy matter, however, to transfer these eggs from the bowl to our cups, by means of the chop-sticks. The Chinese do not clean or change their chop-sticks during dinner, but each thrusts his own into every dish, and helps himself throughout the repast. A very disgusting practice, which truly refined society would not tolerate.

Pure Water the best Drink.—There is no axiom of health more just than "men never have a true appetite till they can eat with relish any ordinary food." It is told of John Cailes, who lived to the age of 128, that his food, for the most part, consisted of brown bread and cheese, and his drink water and milk. He had survived the whole town of Northampton, (Eng.) three or four times over, with a few exceptions, and said strong drink, (including tea and coffee,) killed them all, though this assertion is rather too general. Water manifestly is the natural beverage of all animals; whole nations, as the Mahomedans and Hindoos, use it alone as a beverage. Unlike other drink, it does not stale the appetite, but the contrary; indeed, it was observed by Hippocrates, about two thousand years ago, that water-drinkers have generally keen appetites. Water is a fluid that requires no digestion, for it is not necessary that it should undergo any changes, it is the natural menstruum that holds in solution both what is essential for the nutrition and healthy functions of the body, and what has become refuse, after having served its destined office in the animal economy. Water, therefore, from its congenial qualities, can never much disturb the system, except it be taken immoderately, when the body is over-heated. It is told of Lord Hatfield, so well known for his hardy habits of military discipline and watchfulness, that "his food was vegetables, and his drink water, never indulging himself in animal food or wine;" and Sir John Sinclair, in his work on longevity, says, in the account of Mary Campbell, then aged 105, that she preferred pure water to any other drink.

Horse Story.—A writer in the Boston Courier tells the following anecdote of a horse. The incident occurred in a town adjoining this city.

A butcher, my neighbor, recently went to a pasture where the family horse was usually turned when idle, to get a calf which he had purchased for slaughter. Finding difficulty in otherwise catching him, he set a large bull-dog upon the calf, which soon brought him to the ground, uttering the most piercing cries. The horse, which till now had seemingly paid no attention, aroused by the cries of distress, no sooner perceived the perilous condition of his helpless companion, than with ears raised, jaws distended, main and tail erect, he hastened to his relief!

The dog still continued his hold, despite the threatening aspect of the horse, when the noble fellow, fastening his teeth upon the dog, with one toss threw him completely over an adjacent fence! Meanwhile the butcher had approached so near as to catch hold of the calf as he was rising, which the horse perceiving he turned upon him with his posterior artillery, throwing his heels every time still nearer the butcher's head, until he was glad to relinquish his hold. With what a proud and exultant air he pranced around his liberated charge, with head and tail erect, snorting defiance to all oppressors! In fact, before the butcher could secure his subject, he had first to secure this champion in the stable.

Costume of Former Times.—When Gov. Bowdoin reviewed the troops of Massachusetts, in 1747, he was dressed in a gray wig, cocked hat, and white broadcloth coat and waistcoat, red small clothes, and black silk stockings.

The Judges of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, as late as 1803, wore robes of scarlet, faced with black velvet, and in summer, black silk gowns.

In 1783, Gen. Washington arrived in New York, from Mount Vernon, to assume the duties of the Presidency. He was dressed in a full suit of Virginia homespun. On his visit to New England soon after, he wore the old continental uniform, except on Sunday, when he appeared in black.

John Adams, when Vice President, wore a sword, and walked the streets with his hat under his arm.

At his levees in Philadelphia, President Washington was clad in black velvet, his hair was powdered, and gathered behind in a silk bag, yellow gloves, knee and shoe buckles; he held in his hand a cocked hat, ornamented with a cockade, fringed about an inch deep, with black feathers—a long sword, in a white leather scabbard, with a polished steel hilt, hung at his hip.

The Judge and the Gambler.—A notorious scamp was brought not long since before an Onondaga justice of the peace, charged with the high misdemeanor of gambling. He was accused of having "come the strap game" over a native. The portly justice, wishing to decide understandingly, requested the culprit to give him a sample of his skill. "The party" instantly produced a leather strap, gave it a scientific whisk across the bench, and remarked, "You see, Judge, the quarter under this strap?" "What!" interrupted the dignified functionary; "do you mean to say that there is a quarter there?" "Sartin!" was the reply. "No such thing," said the justice. "I'll go you a dollar on it," said the prisoner. "Agreed!" exclaimed the bench. With accustomed adroitness the strap was withdrawn, when lo! there was the quarter! "Well," said the astonished Shallow, "I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't seen it with my own eyes! There is your dollar; and you are fined five dollars for gambling, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided!"

Industry and Perseverance.—An eastern paper, in an article on the subject of perseverance and industry, says:—"A few years ago, Luther Severance, Horace Greely, and James Harper, were bringing water by the pailful to wash type in a printing office;—they were knocked about by the older boys; but they did not sit down and weep, and declare they would run away from their employers. No; they stuck to the trade year after year, till they became of age. Where are they now? Severance is in Congress; Greely is the Editor of the New York Tribune, one of the leading political papers of the day; and Harper is at the head of one of the largest publishing establishments in America, and was elected Mayor of the city of New York, one year ago, by an overwhelming majority."

A physician in Georgia, says, that in attempting to prepare gun cotton from a receipt sent him by a brother physician, he was unsuccessful, and found, to his astonishment, that his cotton would neither explode nor ignite, being anti-inflammable. On investigating, to find out the cause, he found that he had not used the right acid. He repeated the process, and the result was the same; so that he claims to have discovered a method of rendering cotton incombustible. He says that this cotton can be prepared with little expense, as he has tested the matter sufficiently to know; that it can be manufactured into cloth, the lint and texture of the cotton not being in the least injured, but capable of being made into clothing, with as much ease as from the common material.

The Flushing Journal says that a lady in that town cured herself of a dropsy in the chest, by using the root of the garden parsley. A few cleaned roots were boiled in a quart of water, until it was diminished to a pint. Repeatedly during the day a small quantity was taken, mixed with a portion of gin, and every symptom disappeared. After a few doses the gin was omitted, and the decoction only used. The Journal vouches for the truth of this case.

The velocity of the wind varies from nothing to 100 miles an hour. A gentle breeze runs at the rate of 4 or 5 miles an hour, and with a force of about two ounces on a foot; a brisk wind moves from 10 to 15 miles an hour, and with a force of 12 ounces; a high wind, about 25 miles, with a force of 6 pounds; a hurricane, rooting up trees and destroying houses, has a velocity of 100 miles, and a force of 42 or 43 pounds on the square foot.

There was lately discovered, in opening a quarry at the island of Grand Canary, the skeleton of an enormous dog, in a good state of preservation. It was purchased by the Consular Agent of France, and sent to the Museum of Natural History at Paris. It is an object of the greatest interest to science, from the fact that it belongs to that enormous race of dogs which, according to Pliny, gave the name to the Canaries, and which for some centuries has disappeared from the face of the globe.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH.

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN NEW JERSEY.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I recently received a copy of the Trenton Plaindealer, containing the remarks of Dr. Goble upon the Bill for the Relief of Seventh-day Baptists, delivered in the House of Assembly, March 4, 1847. A few animadversions upon these precious "Remarks" may not be out of place.

Dr. Goble's "sensitiveness about offending or wounding the feelings of the respectable petitioners who asked a modification of the Act for suppressing Vice and Immorality," is of very little weight with us, as it evidently was with himself. We estimate his remarks, not by his professions of respect, but by that studied hostility to the feelings and interests of the petitioners, which he has shown through his whole course in reference to this subject. We have learned long ago, that Protestant Jesuitism has no more mercy in its nature, than its prototype, Papal Jesuitism, when it has power to oppress those whose sentiments and practice stand opposed to and contrasted with its apocryphal observances. When it suits its purpose, it usually suits its feelings, to take the position of Esop's wolf, who chanced to drink at a stream from which a lamb sought to slake its thirst, at the same time, but a little lower down. When that accuser could not substantiate a charge against the lamb, he could associate it with all of its kind, whom he accused of being leagued against his interests, and thus he carried his point. So with Dr. Goble and the petitioners, and all who say Sunday is no Sabbath.

The Doctor's "Remarks," however, are of some value. Notwithstanding all the false issues he attempts, he unwittingly makes some important concessions, on which we may improve for another effort. He has read a pamphlet which "is calculated to have influence with some," whose hearts are not made impervious by sectarianism. As that contains an "argument ad captandum," the Doctor, it seems, found it necessary to adapt his remarks pro re náta—to the popular ear, but to gullable legislators—an expedient for cutting off votes from a measure which was near being adopted. Well, we must give him credit for his tactics, where he had no chance of carrying his point upon truly Christian and republican principles. Let us comfort onrselves with the hope, that a second edition of this "argument ad captandum" may yet attract sufficient attention to the subject to gain us a better hearing another time.

The Doctor says, "The Constitution of the United States in this case has has no reference." This is merely his ipse dixit. He has taken no notice of George Washington's Letter, contained in that pamphlet, which says the Constitution is designed to protect the rights of every religious denomination, and to avoid all religious persecution. Nor does he take any notice of the congressional exposition of it, contained in the Post-Office Committee's Report, in 1830, in which they say, "The framers of the Constitution recognized the eternal principle, that man's relation to his God is above human legislation." He treats in the same way that section of the Constitution which says, "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." It equally suited the Doctor, to pass over that part of the pamphlet, (which he claims to have "carefully read,") where it proposes this inquiry, which we would have him answer: "By what show of justice can any local tribunal punish a private citizen, for doing on his own account, that which the servants and officers of the United States are doing at the same time for the people?" If the State of New Jersey has the right to enforce Sunday-keeping, we call upon the Legislature to say, why the servants and officers of the United States are excepted. We know of no aristocratic rights in New Jersey. Seventh-day Baptist citizens have as many rights in their private callings as have the Presbyterian servants of the United States Government. If the State of New Jersey is bound by the law of God to enforce Sabbath-keeping, it is bound to do it upon the servants of the United States Government, as much as upon private citizens. Why is not this done?

The Doctor's remarks about a State establishment of religion, are shallow enough. He admits that England has a State establishment of religion, but denies that we have any in New Jersey! Let us see what are the facts. In England, the laws give to every person "the inestimable privilege of worshiping Almighty God in a manner agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; nor, under any pretence whatever, can he be compelled to attend any place of worship contrary to his faith." If he worships Almighty God, and prefers to worship him on the seventh day, by observing the Sabbath according to his law, he can do it, and the state church does not prevent him. In what, then, consists the compulsory power of the state religion? Chiefly in state authority to maintain the forms of the Episcopal church in every parish; and in authorizing annual parish rates to support the same for the dominant sect in the land. The State religion of New Jersey consists in State authority given to one or more predominent sects, to maintain the Sunday observance, compelling the inhabitants in every town to lay aside their usual avocations on that day. What difference is there in principle? None at all. The difference in its practical working is that a common tradesman in England may have to pay two or three dollars every year to support the Episcopal church; but in New Jersey fifty-two business days are exacted of every Seventh-day Baptist tradesman, to keep up the observance of Sunday. "It may be, that these petitioners find themselves inconvenienced," says Dr. Goble. Yes, and so long as the Legislature can be controlled by the Doctor and his sect, the are noty likely to be relieved of that inconvenience. Relief may arise, however, from some other quarter.

The Doctor farther says, "The principles of the social compact require every man so to exercise his own rights, as not to take away the rights of another; that is all that is meant by the constitutional provision; it has nothing to do with the day." This is a precious admission. If the "constitutional provision" for religious equality "has nothing to do with the day," what right has the Legislature to decide upon and fix the day; and then enforce its observance by statutory enactments? This is the very premise on which our remonstrance to the Legislature is based. We do not ask the establishment of the seventh day, or any other day. We ask the Legislature to take its hands off from the day, and let it take care of itself.

But hear his complaint: "These petitioners desire that this day shall not be a Sabbath for Christians, because the modification or repeal sought virtually destroys it." From this it seems that the eyes and ears of Dr. Goble and his sect, are so keenly alive to worldly affairs, that if a few Seventh-day Baptists should be allowed their right to trade and labor on Sunday, they could not know it and worship in any comfort. They must have the day, "with all its sacred stillness" without, or there will be a turmoil within their souls which will mar all their devotions. Poor souls! Thank God, Seventh-day Baptists are not quite so sensitive on mundane matters. We keep a sacred Sabbath every week, while most of the busy world around us in full secular clangor. We are satisfied with the law which protects religious worship on all days alike. Why is not Dr. Goble? Can it be protection for religious worship that he wants? Does he not worship on other days of the week besides Sunday, without fear of interruption? Why need a special law for Sunday worship, when there is adequate law to protect ordinary public worship? Here is his reason: "The granting to the Seventh-day Baptists of the privilege to work on the Lord's day, or first day of the week, would be to weaken the obligation to observe the Sabbath, which is weak enough already." Ah! then it is not worship the Doctor wants protected, but the sentiment of his sect. He knows that the Legislature's secularizing the seventh day has not destroyed the observance of that day among those who cleave to the law of God. But he apprehends that the public sense of obligation to keep the first day of the week for a Sabbath "is weak enough already; there would in time be no Sabbath," if the Legislature should allow the Seventh-day Baptists their constitutional right to do secular business on the first day of the week! What a sad state of things! But the Legislature has already admitted the privilege we ask in part; we usually take the other part every week; and the Legislature came within one vote of legalizing the whole. We confidently expect, therefore, to get legal authority for the whole. What then will become of the Sunday Sabbath? If Dr. Goble is a true prophet, there will in time be none! He need not be alarmed; however, for Jesus Christ has said, "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass away than for one tittle of the law to fail."

"When men enter into society, and form a social compact for their protection, the majority must govern." Yes, but they must govern according to the fundamental articles of that compact. We call upon the Doctor, to show in what article of the national or state compact, the people of this country have ever voted the Legislature the right to fix or enforce their religious observances! If the Legislature have the right to enforce the observance of a weekly Sabbath, it of course must be the true Sabbath—the one specified in the law of God; and "in order to meet the whole question justly, it would be necessary to prove that the Sabbath has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. As this is a theological question," we shall claim the right to say something on it, whenever the Legislature is prepared to entertain the whole question. In the mean time, we are willing to discuss it through any respectable public medium.

Yours, as ever, S. D.

EFFECTS OF THE SCRIPTURES.

How comes it, that this little volume, composed by humble men, in a rude age, when art and science were but in their childhood, has exerted more influence on the humble mind, and on the social system, than all other books put together? Whence comes it, that this book has achieved such marvelous changes in the opinions and habits of mankind—has banished idol worship—has abolished infanticide—has put down poligamy and divorce—exalted the condition of women—raised the standard of public morality—created for families that blessed thing, a Christian home—and crowned its other triumphs by causing benevolent institutions to spring up as with the wand of enchantment? What sort of a book is this, that even the winds and waves of human prejudice and passion obey it? What other engine of social improvement has operated so long, and yet lost none of its virtue? Since it appeared, many boasted plans of human amelioration have been tried, and failed; many codes of jurisprudence have arisen, and run their course, and expired. Empire after empire has been launched on the tide of time, and gone down, leaving no trace on the waters. But this book is still going about doing good—leavening society with its holy principles—cheering the sorrowful with its consolations—strengthening the tempted—encouraging the penitent—calming the troubled spirit—and smoothing the pillow of death. Can such a book be the offspring of human genius? Does not the vastness of its effects demonstrate the excellency of the power to be of God. [Dr. M'Culloch.

RICHARD REYNOLDS, OF BRISTOL, ENGLAND.

The following accounts of this extraordinary man are given on the most satisfactory authority:

During the scarcity of 1795, after relieving the wants of his immediate neighborohood, he sent, in a cover to the London Committee, with only these words, "To relieve the wants of the metropolis,* and without any signature, the sum of £20,000.

Applying to a gentleman whom he thought rich, but who was really only in circumstances of mediocrity, he made use of this argument: "When gold encircles the heart it contracts it to that degree that no good can be issued from it; but when the pure gold of faith gets into the heart, it expands it so that the last drop of life-blood will flow into any channel of benevolence."

A lady applied to him in behalf of an orphan. After he had given liberally, she said, "When he is old enough I will teach him to name and to thank his benefactor." "Stop," said the good man, "you mistake; we do not thank the clouds for rain—teach him to look higher, and thank Him who giveth both the clouds and the rain."

His maxim was: "I am only a steward, and must soon render up my account; therefore I will make my own hands my executors;" yet he laid out £10,000 in estates, the rents to be divided forever between seven of the public charities of Bristol, to supply the wants of the poor.

Being importuned by a friend to sit for his portrait, he at length consented.

"How would you like to be painted?"

"Sitting among books."

"Any book in particular?"

"The Bible."

"Open at any part?"

"At the fifth chapter of Romans, the first verse to be legible. 'Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.'"

A NATIVE CHINESE PREACHER.

The New York Recorder says that in a letter to the Rev C. G. Sommers of this city, Dr. Macgowan, Baptist missionary at Ningpo, China, translates an extract from the journal of a native preacher who is sustained by a gentleman in this country:—

"5 month, 5 day—Worship day.—I preached the Gospel from Luke, 14 chap., 1 to 16 verse. The worshipers were above 50 in number. Ching preached in the afternoon.

"5 month, 6 day.—Took some books to the Twenty Bridges, and entered the tea balcony of the Yse family. Within were some 40 men (drinking tea,) to whom I preached the Gospel. A Mr. Tsin and a Mr. Wan said—'This is a good doctrine and true, and the exhorting of men to act the man is an excellent thing.' I said, 'We exhort men not to worship idols, which their own hands have made, which are unable to protect men, whose eyes cannot see, whose ears cannot hear, whose mouths cannot speak—mere inanimate things, which in 20 or 30 years (if left alone) would decay. Now, if they cannot protect themselves, how can they protect men? This is a true doctrine. But, gentlemen, God made heaven, earth, sun, moon, hills and rivers. He gave us life, and bestows on us all that we enjoy. He also controls the birth and death of men. He discriminates between the evil and the good. You are now exhorted to believe in Jesus's true doctrine, and to repent and do good, then in this life you will have tranquility, and after death escape destruction.' The men said, 'All this is very good, sir, but we are villagers, where can we worship God? what things must we use in worshiping him?' I said, 'There is no need of using incense sticks, candles, nor gilt paper, but to worship God you must give up evil practices, be filial, love other men as yourselves, renounce the worship of images, and with all your strength serve God early and late in your own house, and on worship days come to the Temple of the true God, in front of the General's office, where you will hear the doctrine explained from the holy book.' Each individual was pleased, and took my books.

"5 month, 7 day.—I took books to the Azure Bridge, and preached in a tea shop there to about 20 men. Two persons said, 'Before we met you, sir, we thought that Jesus was a sage of England [lit. red-haired nation,] therefore we were unwilling to believe and practice this religion—there are many who hate the English; according to what you, sir, say to-day, God in his mercy sent his loved Son Jesus into Judea, to teach people to turn from sin unto righteousness, healing men's sicknesses, and to save the world, being willing to die on the cross to atone for the sins of the people of all nations.' I said, 'Gentlemen, if you are willing to believe the true doctrine of Jesus, and conform to the Gospel of God, you will obtain eternal happiness.' All were pleased, and I gave them books.

"8th.—Took some books out side the East Gate to a tea shop, and preached to about 30 men. A person said, 'This is good, according to what you say—whilst we derived our bodies from our parents, our souls came from God.' * * * * I said, 'Venerable sir, if you are able to believe the doctrines of Jesus, you can obtain eternal happiness, thus escaping perdition.' All were pleased and took books.

[An earlier date.] "A man said, 'Why do foreigners bring opium to the central nation? What kind of doctrine is this?' I said, 'The disciples of Jesus do not sell opium, they only teach you and exhort you not to smoke opium.'"

A MOTHER TO HER INFANT SON.

My darling boy, had I my wish,
  I ne'er would ask that thou
May'st twine the wreath of deathless fame
  Around thine honor'd brow.

Thy mother's heart would rather far,
  That thou shouldst go to tell
The story of redeeming love,
  Where the dark heathen dwell.

And could we part! Could I resign
  My boy, so loved, so dear?
Ev'n now, in thought, the parting hour
  Draws down the burning tear.

Sweet prattling one, thou seem'st as if
  Thou even now didst know
Of what I speak, and in reply,
  Saidst, "Mother, I will go!" [Ballantine.

THE PEN OF IRON.

When Bishop Latimer was on his trial, he at first answered carelessly. But presently he heard the pen going behind the tapestry, which was taking down his words. Then he was careful what he said. There is an all-recording pen behind the curtain of the skies, taking down our words and acts for judgment.

It is a pen of iron. "The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and the point of a diamond." It graves deep its records on the imperishable tablets of eternity—a record of every thought, word and act. How ought we to live, since we can almost hear the all-recording pen going every hour, since we know that every day we are filling a page in the books that shall be opened at the judgment, and the record is imperishable as eternity.

A rich landlord in England once performed an act of tyrannical injustice to a widowed tenant. The widow's son, who saw it, became a painter, and years after succeeded in placing a painting of that scene where the oppressor saw it. As his eye fell on the picture, the rich man turned pale and trembled, and offered any sum to purchase it, that he might put it out of sight. If every scene of wickedness through which a man passes, should be painted, and the painting hung up about him, so that he would always see the portrait of himself, with the evil passions expressed on his countenance, and himself in the very act of wickedness, he would be wretched. Such a picture-gallery there is; and in eternity the sinner will dwell in it; for every feature and lineament of the soul, in every feeling and act of wickedness, is portrayed imperishably, and will be exhibited to the gaze of the universe forever.

By the discoveries of modern science, the rays of the sun are made to form the exact portrait of him on whom they shine. We are all living in the sun-light of eternity, which is transferring to plates more enduring than brass the exact portrait of the soul in every successive act, with all its attendant circumstances.

Interesting to the antiquarian is the moment when he drags out from the sands of Egypt some obelisk, on which the "pen of Iron, and the point of a diamond," have graven the portraits, the attitudes, the dresses, and the pursuits of men, who lived and died 300 years ago. But none can utter the interest of that moment when from the silence of eternity shall be brought out tablets thick-set with the sculptured history of a sinful soul, and men and angels, with the sinner himself, shall gaze appalled on the faithful portraiture of a life of sin. Remember, then, O transgressor, you must meet the record of your sin in eternity.

AN ALLEGORY.

A aermit was conducted by an angel into a wood, where he saw an old man cutting down boughs to make a burthen. When it was large, he tied it up, and attempted to lift it on his shoulders and carry it away; but finding it very heavy, he laid it down again, cut more wood, and heaped it on, and then tried again to carry it off. This he repeated several times, always adding something to the load, after trying in vain to raise it from the ground. In the mean time, the hermit, astonished at the old man's folly, desired the angel to explain what this meant. "You behold," said he, "in this foolish old man an exact representation of those persons who, being made sensible of the burden of their sins, resolve to repent, but soon grow weary, and instead of lessening their burden, increase it every day. At each trial, they find the task heavier than it was before; and so put it off a little longer, in the vain hope that they will by-and-by be able to accomplish it. Thus they go on adding to their burden, till it grows too heavy to be borne; and then, in despair of God's mercy, and with their sins unrepented of, they lie down and die. Turn again, my son, and behold the end of the old man whom thou sawest heaping up a load of boughs." The hermit looked, and saw him in vain attempting to remove the pile, which was now accumulated far beyond his strength to raise. His feeble limbs tottered over their burthen; the poor remains of his strength were fast ebbing away; the darkness of death was gathering around him; and after a convulsive and impotent attempt to lift the pile, he fell down and expired.

A Beautiful Sentiment.—The late eminent Judge Sir Allen Park once said at a public meeting in London: "We live in the midst of blessings till we are utterly insensible of their greatness, and of the source from whence they flow. We speak of our civilization our arts, our freedom, our laws, and forget entirely how large a share is due to Christianity. Blot Christianity out of the pages of man's history, and what would his laws have been—what his civilization? Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our daily life; there is not a familiar object around us which does not wear a different aspect, because the light of Christian love is on it. Not a law which does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity—not a custom which cannot be traced, in all its holy, healthful parts, to the Gospel."

THE EMPEROR AND THE BISHOP.

The Emperor of Constantinople was mortally incensed against St. John Chrysostom. One day, inflamed with anger, he exclaimed in presence of his court, "Would that I could revenge myself of that priest." Four or five of his courtiers assembled around him, venturing their opinions as to the manner in which his vengeance could be most effectually gratified. The first said, Exile him; the second, Confiscate all that he possesses; the third, Throw him in prison, and load him with chains; the fourth, Are you not all-powerful?—is not his life at your command?—give instant orders for his death. A fifth, possessed of more penetration than the others, and not fearing his master's displeasure, boldly said: You are all mistaken; if you exile him, what do you gain? Is not the whole world his country? Confiscate his possessions, you but deprive the poor of them, not himself. Throw him in prison, he will bless his chains, and esteem it a privilege to suffer. "Blessed are they that suffer persecution, for theirs is the kingdom of Heaven." If you condemn him to death, you unclose the gates of heaven to him. Prince, would you know the only sure means of revenge? Force him to commit a crime. I know him well; "that man fears nothing except to sin." "Hic homo nihil timet nisi peccatum." No; he fears neither exile, nor the loss of property; neither chains nor torture, of any kind. He fears but sin.

THE END OF EDUCATION.

The multitude think that to educate a child is to crowd into its mind a given amount of knowledge; to teach the mechanism of reading and writing; to load the memory with words; to prepare a boy for the routine of trade. No wonder, then, that they think every body fit to teach. The true end of education is to unfold and direct aright our whole nature. Its office is to call forth powers of thought, affection, will, and outward action; power to observe, to reason, to judge, to contrive; power to adopt good courses and to pursue them efficiently; power to govern ourselves and to influence others; power to gain and to spread happiness. Reading is but an instrument; education is to teach its best use. The intellect was created not to receive passively a few words, dates and facts; but to be active for the acquisition of truth. Accordingly, education should inspire a profound love of truth, and teach the processes of investigation. A sound logic, by which we mean the science or art which instructs us in the laws of reasoning and evidence, in the true method of inquiry and the sources of false judgment, is an essential part of a good education. God knoweth what is best for us.—Prone as our earthly spirits are to cleave to the dust, what should we be if all our earthly hopes were realized? Wise and kind is that system of discipline under which we are all placed; and when at the close of life we come to look back upon our mental history, we shall never be inclined to say of this affliction or that mortification, "it might have been spared." We shall then see that our prayers for spirituality of mind were answered by the removal of those worldly joys which produced a contrary disposition; and that when we desired that our "affections might be set on things above," our dearest friends were taken there, that so heaven might become dearer and earth less attractive. Such weaning events must tend not only to reconcile our minds to the shortness of life, but to make us rejoice in it. We feel that they are "light afflictions," because they are "but for a moment." Catholicism in Hayti.—Rev. Mr. Graves, Editor of the Christian Reflector, in a letter in that journal, gives the following information in relation to the Roman Catholic Religion in Hayti:

The Haytien Catholics refuse any allegiance whatever to the Pope of Rome. They regard the papal authority as opposed to their national and civil liberty; and, in consistency with their republican principles, they allow of no Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, or other church Dignitaries, save the single order of Priests; and of the appointing or disposing of these the President claims the right and power. The Roman Catholic Religion is, therefore, not only recognized by the government as the State religion, but is subject to legislative regulations and executive authority.

The Sunday in New York.—A correspondent of the Boston Traveler, writing from New York, on the 18th ult., says:—

"Yesterday I was much astonished to hear the newsboys announcing for sale, with a sharp voice, the Sunday papers. Even while in church I heard their cries; and after service, imagine my astonishment at beholding a stand on the corner of the church-yard, or sidewalk, covered with newspapers, and crying out, 'Here's the Sunday Atlas, Times, Dispatch,' &c., &c! This would not be allowed even in London, where you know I have dwelt a few years. That it should be permitted almost under the eaves of an American church, I would not have believed, had I not witnessed it myself. You can see the stand to which I refer, fitted round a lamp post at the corner of Beekman Street and Park Row."

Michael Angelo.—A friend called on Michael Angelo, who was finishing a statue. Some time afterward he called again; the sculptor was still at his work. His friend looking at the figure exclaimed, 'You have been idle since I saw you last.' 'By no means, replied the sculptor, 'I have retouched this part, and polished that; I have softened this feature, and brought out this muscle; I have given more expression to this lip, and more energy to that limb.' 'Well, well,' said his friend, 'but all these are trifles.' 'It may be so,' replied Angelo, 'but recollect that trifles make perfection, and that perfection is no trifle.'

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, April 29, 1847.

THE SABBATARIANS OR SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

The Reformation in the sixteenth century introduced and important era in the history of Sabbath-keeping. The great point upon which that movement turned, was the doctrine of justification by faith—a doctrine which had been nearly lost to the world. The unfolding of it necessarily led to the discussion of many kindred topics, among which was the subject of festivals. The Church of Rome had multiplied her festivals to a burdensome extent, and had taught that the days on which they occurred were inherently more holy than other days, and that there was great merit in observing them. In their zeal to oppose this doctrine, the leading Reformers went to the other extreme of maintaining that under the Gospel all days are alike. Accordingly they rejected the Sabbath. They soon discovered, however, that it was necessary to have some fixed times and public occasions for bringing the truths of religion into contact with the minds of the people. They could not go back to the ancient Sabbath, because that might subject them to the charge of Judaizing. Hence they advanced the doctrine, that the church itself has power to appoint such festivals as are necessary to its prosperity, and may alter them to suit its convenience. The first day of the week was chosen, because it was already in common use. But it is said that John Calvin once proposed to translate the weekly festival to the fifth day of the week as an instance of Christian liberty. In process of time, these sentiments respecting the day of worship were found to operate disastrously. Hence a class of Reformers sprung up, who advocated the morality of the fourth commandment, but interpreted it so as to require only one-seventh part of time, or a day of rest after any six days of labor. This doctrine spread rapidly on the Continent, and led to a controversy about the Sabbath, which soon became the principal one of the age. At an early stage of it, we find several able and zealous defenders of the Sabbath of Jehovah. Our materials for the preparation of a history of them, however, are quite deficient, this field having never been explored as it deserves to be, or as it doubtless will be sooner or later.

Early in the sixteenth century there are traces of Sabbath-keepers in Germany. The old Dutch Martyrology gives an account of a Baptist minister, named Stephen Benedict, somewhat famous for baptizing during a severe persecution in Holland, who is supposed by good authorities to have kept the seventh day. One of the persons baptized by him was Barbary von Thiers, wife of Hans Borzen, who was executed on the 16th of September, 1529. At her trial, she declared her rejection of the idolatrous sacrament of the priest, and also the mass. "Relative to Sunday and the holy-days, she said the Lord God had commanded to rest the seventh day; in this she acquiesced, and it was her desire, by the help and grace of God, to remain and die as she was, for it was the true faith and right way in Christ." A number of persons of this stamp organized a church and emigrated to America in its early settlement. In Transylvania, there were Sabbath-keepers, among whom was Francis Davidis, first chaplain of the court of Sigismund, the prince of that kingdom, and afterwards Superintendent of all the Transylvania churches. In France, also, there were Christians of this class, among whom was M. de la Roque, who wrote in defense of the Sabbath, against Bossuet, Catholic Bishop of Meaux.

The Sabbath controversy commenced in England near the close of the sixteenth century. One Nicholas Bound, D. D., of Norton, in the county of Suffolk, published a book in 1595, in which he advanced the modern notion concerning the Christian Sabbath, that it is a perpetuation of the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, but that the day specified in that commandment has been changed by divine authority from the seventh to the first day of the week. This doctrine was very taking, proclaimed as it was at a time when there was felt to be so much need of greater strictness in regard to the day of rest. According to a learned writer of that age, "in a very little time it became the most bewitching error, and the most popular infatuation, that ever was embraced by the people of England." Dr. Bound's book was suppressed by order of Archbishop Whitgift in 1599. But its suppression only led to the publication of a multitude of other works, in which every variety of opinion was expressed. While this discussion was in progress, several advocates of the seventh day arose, who vindicated its claims with great boldness and ability.

John Traske began to speak and write in favor of the seventh-day Sabbath about the time that the Book of Sports for Sunday was published under the direction of the Archbishop of Canterbury and King James I. in 1618. He took high ground as to the sufficiency of the Scriptures to direct in religious services, and the duty of the State to impose nothing contrary to the Word of God. For this he was brought before the Star-Chamber, where a long discussion was held respecting the Sabbath, in which Dr. Andrews, Bishop of Winchester, took a prominent part. Traske was not turned from his opinion, but received a censure in the Star-Chamber. Paggitt's Heresiography says that he "was sentenced, on account of his being a Sabbatarian, to be set upon the Pillory at Westminster, and from thence to be whipt to the Fleet Prison, there to remain a prisoner for three years. Mrs. Traske, his wife, lay in Maiden-Lane and the Gate-House Prisons fifteen years, where she died, for the same crime."

Theophilus Brabourne, a learned minister of the Gospel in the Established Church, wrote a book, which was printed at London in 1628, wherein he argued "that the Lord's Day is not the Sabbath Day by Divine Institution," but "that the Seventh-day Sabbath is now in force." This book having been replied to, he published another in 1632, entitled, "A Defense of that most ancient and sacred ordinance of God, the Sabbath Day." For this he was called to account before the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury and the Court of High Commission. Several lords of his Majesty's Private Council, and many other persons of quality, were present at his examination. For some reason—whether from being overawed by the character of that assembly, or from fearing the consequences of rejecting its overtures, it is not possible now to say—he went back to the embrace of the Established Church. He continued to maintain, however, that if the sabbatic institution be indeed moral and perpetually binding, then his conclusion that the seventh day ought to be kept is necessary and irresistible.

About this time we find Philip Tandy promulgating the same doctrine concerning the Sabbath in the northern part of England. He was educated in the Established Church, of which he became a minister. Having changed his views respecting the mode of baptism and the day of the Sabbath, he abandoned that church, and became a mark for many shots. He held several important disputes about his peculiar sentiments, and did much to propagate them.

James Ockford was another early advocate of the Sabbath in England. He seems to have been well acquainted with the discussions in which Traske and Brabourne were engaged. Being dissatisfied with the pretended conviction of Brabourne, he wrote a book in defense of Sabbatarian views, entitled, "The Doctrine of the Fourth Commandment." This book, which must have been published about the year 1642, was burnt by the authorities of the Established Church. One Cawdrey, a Presbyterian, and a member of the Assembly of Divines, fearing that this "sharp confutation by fire" would be complained of as harsh dealing, wrote a review of it, which is now extant.

Several causes combined to prevent the early organization of Sabbatarian churches in England. The various laws passed to secure uniformity in worship, and to hinder the holding of religious meetings among all dissenters from the Established Church, were doubly oppressive upon those who observed their Sabbath on a different day from the mass of Christians. To this and similar causes we must attribute the fact, that there were no churches regularly organized until about 1650. Within fifty years of that period, however, there were eleven Sabbatarian churches, besides many scattered Sabbath-keepers, in different parts of the Kingdom. These churches were located at the following places:—Braintree, in Essex; Chersey; Norweston; Salisbury, in Wiltshire; Sherbourne, in Buckinghamshire; Tewkesbury, or Natton, in Gloucester; Wallingford, in Berkshire; Woodbridge, in Suffolk; and three in London, viz. the Mill-Yard Church, the Cripplegate Church gathered by Francis Bampfield, and the Pinner's Hall Church under the care of Mr. Belcher. Eight of these churches have now become extinct, and hence a complete account of them cannot be obtained. Of the three which remain, the following is a brief historical sketch.

The Mill-Yard Church.

The Mill-Yard Church is located in the eastern part of London. The time of its origin is not certainly known. The records now in possession of the church reach back as far as 1673. But as they contain no account of its organization, and refer to another book which had been previously used, it is probable that the church dates from a period considerably earlier. Indeed, there can be but little doubt, from its location and doctrinal views, that this church is a perpetuation of the society gathered by John James, the martyr, which originally met in Bull-Steak Alley, Whitechapel. We think it safe, therefore, to put down John James as the first pastor of Mill-Yard. On the 19th day of October, 1661, while Mr. James was preaching, an officer entered the place of worship, pulled him down from the pulpit, and led him away to the police under a strong guard. About thirty members of his congregation were taken before a bench of justices then sitting at a tavern in the vicinity, where the oath of allegiance was tendered to each, and those who refused it were commmitted to Newgate Prison. Mr. James himself was examined and committed to Newgate, upon the testimony of several profligate witnesses, who accused him of speaking treasonable words against the King. His trial took place about a month afterward, at which he conducted himself in a manner to awaken much sympathy. He was however sentenced to be "hanged, drawn, and quartered." This awful sentence did not dismay him in the least. He calmly said, "Blessed be God, whom man condemneth, God justifieth." While he lay in prison under sentence of death, many persons of distinction visited him, who were greatly affected by his piety and resignation, and offered to exert themselves to secure his pardon. But of their success he seems to have had little hope. Mrs. James, by the advice of her friends, twice presented a petition to the King, stating her husband's innocence, the character of the witnesses against him, and entreating his majesty to grant a pardon. But in both instances she was repulsed with scoffs and ridicule. At the scaffold, on the day of his execution, Mr. James addressed the assembly in a very affectionate manner. Having finished his address, and kneeling down, he thanked God for covenant mercies, and for conscious innocence; he prayed for the witnesses against him, for the executioner, for the people of God, for the removal of divisions, for the coming of Christ, for the spectators, and for himself, that he might enjoy a sense of God's favor and presence, and an entrance into glory. When he had finished, the executioner said, "The Lord receive your soul," to which Mr. James replied, "I thank thee." A friend observing to him, "This is a happy day," he answered, "I bless God it is." Then, having thanked the Sheriff for his courtesy, he said, "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit;" and was immediately launched into eternity. After he was dead, his heart was taken out and burned, his quarters were affixed to the gates of the city, and his head was set up in Whitechapel on a pole opposite to the Alley in which his meeting-house stood.

William Sellers was pastor of the Mill-Yard Church at the time when the present records commence, 1673. The church was then in a flourishing condition, the members were quite numerous, and strict discipline was maintained. Mr. Sellers was probably the author of a work on the Sabbath, in review of Dr. Owen, which appeared in 1671. He is supposed to have continued his ministry until 1678.

Henry Soursby succeeded Mr. Sellers. He was a man of considerable controversial talent, which he exercised in defense of the Sabbath. The church records allude to a book upon the subject prepared by him, but no copy of it is now known. He ministered to the church until 1710.

Two persons named Slater about this time preached occasionally. But as there is no notice of their having become elders, it is quite likely that they were only "preaching brethren"—a class of persons always much encouraged in this church.

In 1711, Mr. Savage became pastor of the church. He had for an assistant, or co-pastor, the venerable Mr. John Maulden, who had long been the pastor of a Baptist church in Goodman's Fields, which he left on account of having embraced Sabbatarian principles. After the death of Mr. Maulden and Mr. Savage, there was a vacancy in the pastoral office, the preaching brethren officiating on the Sabbath, in an order prescribed at the business meetings of the church. It was during this period, in 1720, that Dr. Joseph Stennett was invited to take the pastoral care of the church. He was then pastor of a Baptist church in Exeter, and after considerable delay he declined the call.

In 1726, the Lord seems to have provided them a pastor peculiarly suited to their condition, in the person of Robert Cornthwaite. He was originally connected with the Established Church. But becoming convinced that the Gospel did not prescribe any religious establishment, he identified himself with the Dissenters, and commenced preaching among the Baptists. When the Sabbath controversy came before him, he decided for the seventh day, and was chosen pastor of the Mill-Yard church, which post he continued to occupy until his death, in 1754. He was a man of great mental vigor, and a firm adherent to whatever he deemed true and scriptural. He published six works relating to the Sabbath, which contributed much to draw attention to the subject, and to improve the condition of the church over which he presided.

Daniel Noble, the successor of Mr. Cornthwaite, was a member of a Sabbath-keeping family. He became pious at an early age, and entered upon preparation for the ministry. His studies were pursued first in London, then under Dr. Rotheram at Kendall, and afterward at the Glasgow University. He commenced preaching occasionally at Mill-Yard in 1752, and took the oversight of the church when the pastoral office became vacant. His ministry continued until his death in 1783.

About that time William Slater, a member of the church, was invited to conduct the services. He was afterward ordained as a preacher, became the pastor, and discharged the duties of the office until he died in 1819. For many years after his death, the church was without a pastor, the pulpit being supplied by several ministers of other denominations, until the election of the present elder and pastor, William Henry Black.

The Mill-Yard Church is indebted to the liberality of one of its early members for an endowment, the benefit of which it now enjoys. Mr. Joseph Davis was probably a member of the church at the time that John James suffered martyrdom. Being a man of considerable influence, and very bold in the advocacy of his opinions, he became obnoxious to the dominant party, and was exposed to severe persecutions. He was a prisoner in Oxford Castle for nearly ten years, from which he was released in 1673 by order of the King. Soon after being set free, he entered into business in London. Here, notwithstanding the interruption of his business occasioned by a strict observance of the Sabbath, he prospered beyond his highest expectations. He soon found himself at ease, surrounded by a happy family, and enjoying the confidence of a large circle of friends. Near the close of his life, Mr. Davis says his heart was drawn forth to do something for the pure worship of his Lord and Saviour, and to manifest that outward blessings had not been bestowed upon him in vain. He felt that "the Lord had sent him, as a Joseph, to do something for the cause of religion." Under the influence of this impression, he purchased, in 1691, the grounds adjoining the present Mill Yard church, erected a place of worship, and thus provided for the permanency of the society with which he was connected. This property was conveyed to Trustees appointed by the church in 1700. In 1706, shortly before his death, Mr. Davis bequeathed his property to his son, with an annual rent-charge in favor of the Mill Yard church, together with seven other Sabbatarian churches in England. He likewise provided, conditionally, that his whole estate might afterward become the property of that church, and be vested in Trustees for its benefit.

SUNDAY RAILWAY TRAVELING IN SCOTLAND.

On all the English Railways which carry passengers, Sunday trains are run. On some of them special facilities are afforded and inducements offerded for pleasure trains on that day. There, nothing else seems ever to have been expected, and few now or formerly have ever thought of remonstrating. Individual share-holders upon two or three lines have indeed made motions on the subject, as if to exonerate themselves, and meetings to memorialize have in a few instances been held, but no one is surprised, that the motion made, and possibly seconded, it is quietly allowed to drop.

Not so in Scotland, however. Here, faith in the falsehood of a first-day Sabbath of divine appointment, has been more carefully instilled, and this, therefore, forms the scene-ground on which the battle has to be fought. No doubt have I, however, that even here Sunday trains will soon be run on all the important lines, and that legislative efforts to preserve the sanctification of the first day, stringent as they are in ancient enactments, will speedily be relaxed. As regards Sunday railway traveling, a Bill has already passed both Houses of the British Legislature, which virtually annuls all the laws both of ancient and modern times prohibiting it. No company is thereby compelled to rnn trains on Sunday; but so far are they from being in danger of pains and penalties if they should, that it expressly provides that any railway in the Three Kingdoms, which does run passenger trains on Sunday, must run third-class passenger carriages. It is matter of choice whether they shall accommodate the rich in the matter of Sunday profanation; but if such accommodation be granted, it must be extended to the poor also.

But a return has just been made by order of the House of Commons, showing which railways run on Sunday. The Return lies before me, and I observe that on the Dublin and Kingston line, no less than one hundred and ten trains have run on Sunday in the summer season. On the London and Brighton, &c., line, fifty-two trains run; and on the London and North-Western line, fifty-one Sunday trains are run. But I notice this Return specially for its bearing upon Scotland. It is made on the motion of Joseph Hume, with the avowed intention of founding upon it an Act making it compulsory to run passenger trains on all the lines in the United Kingdom on Sunday. He may not succeed in getting such an Act passed, but I think it probable that he will.

The cause of Mr. Hume's motion avowedly is, the strong opposition which has been made to the running of Sunday passenger trains on the Edinburgh and Glasgow line. At the late meeting of shareholders of that Company, the contest was very close. For a week after, it was uncertain whether the decision was for or against the reöpening of the line on Sunday, and when at length the vote was announced, the scrutineers gave in two different opinions relative to certain proxies. The Chairman determined their application, and by a small majority, the line remains at present closed against passengers, although the mail trains continue to be run. Every effort had been made by different sections of the church, and memorials presented from the most distant parts of the country. It was an English shareholder, however, who by a circular secured the majority of votes for stopping the Sunday trains, purely as a matter of expediency, and against his own opinion, as he avows that he sees no harm in their being run. And I see it stated yesterday, that this same gentleman's carriage ran over a boy at Manchester last Sunday.

The Nowcastle and Berwick line has been completed within twenty miles, and this space is to be run by omnibuses in connection meanwhile. This joins Scotland with England, and may be regarded as opening more effectually the flood-gates of Sunday traveling, apart from legislative enactments. J. A. Begg.

The Eclectic Commentary.—We have examined the first four parts of the Eclectic Commentary on the Bible, and find them to equal our highest expectations. The complete work will contain the substance of the comments by Henry and Scott, together with the most valuable observations of more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of biblical literature. As a help to Sabbath-school teachers, and families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures, we know of nothing better. Published by Robert T. Shannon, No. 118 Fulton-st., N. Y.

The Christian Parlor Magazine.—The May number of this popular monthly commences a new volume. It will henceforth be under the editorship of Rev. J. T. Headley, author of "Napoleon and his Marshals," "Sacred Mountains," "Letters from Italy," &c. He promises to give it his exclusive care and attention, and we doubt not it will present stronger claims than ever to public patronage. The number before us contains, besides its usual variety of choice reading, a steel engraving of the Vale of Nazareth, a beautiful colored flower, and two pages of original music. Published by E. E. Miles, at 151 Nassau-st.

The Mother's Magazine for May is out. Mrs. Whittlesey, its early editor, having recently withdrawn from it, the work will hereafter be edited by Rev. O. B. Bidwell, assisted by Rev. John S. C. Abbott. Published by G. W. & S. O. Post, at 5 Beekman-st., Clinton Hall.

Church-Fellowship Withdrawn.—Brother Richard S. Geer, on behalf of the church in Diana and Pitcairn, of which he is Clerk, requests us to give notice, that at a meeting of said church, on the 9th day of April, the hand of fellowship was formally withdrawn from Solomon S. Coon, a member with them, who had received a license to preach the gospel. Mr. Coon is charged with having married a second wife, while his first wife, from whom he had been separated for two or three years, was still living. Although cited to attend the meeting of the church when his case was to be considered, he neither appeared nor communicated with them.

Letter from Father Mathew.—The Albany Evening Journal publishes a letter from Father Mathew, dated at Cork on the 31st of March. He says that "the magnificent humanity of the beloved brethren in the States, for the suffering Irish, has inspired every heart with ardent gratitude." The immense supply of Indian Corn received within a few days, had reduced the price from £19 to £10 the ton. In conclusion, he says, "I am resolved, God willing, to leave Ireland for the States next summer. It shall be my constant, anxious prayer, that the Lord may remove every obstacle, and allow me to indulge this darling desire of my heart."

A Polite Hint.—The publisher of the Morning Star has a straight-forward, unmistakable way of saying things, which deserves praise. In the last number of his 'Business Notes,' we find the following hint, which will no doubt be easily comprehended by the party concerned:—"If Wm. Howe, of Guildhall, Vt., will pay the postage on a notice of his marriage sent us, we will publish it. It is enough to publish the marriages of non-patrons gratuitously, without paying postage on them."

The Pope in the Pulpit.—A foreign paper says that on the 13th ult., there was a great concourse in the church of St. Andrea della Valle, to hear a sermon by the Padre Ventura, the most eloquent of Roman orators. But a taller and more majestic figure was seen making for the pulpit; it was the Pope, who ascended the rostrum and preached a sermon; the first time that any occupant of St. Peter's chair has done so for three hundred years. He said that he could not help taking that opportunity of responding to the affections and loyality which had been manifested towards him by the people; a revival of old Roman reverence for the chair of St. Peter, however now inadequately filled. "The best return he could make would be by a renewal of his efforts for their welfare, political as well as religious; for the latter especially, as immeasurably the nearer and dearer to his breast."

Turkish Massacre of Christians.—Recent foreign papers state that the massacre of Christians by that monster Turk, Beder Khan Bey, has been renewed with horrible ferocity. A letter from Mosul, dated March 15, 1847, says that he had just beheaded a bishop and a priest, and put several other Christians to the most atrocious tortures. The Chaldeans were in hourly apprehension of a massacre. Nothing has yet been done by the General Government to suppress these appalling scenes. The Porte has flattered Beder Khan with presents, endeavoring thus to ensnare him; but the barbarous monster is too cunning, and now the Sultan promises to send 40,000 men to rescue those poor Christians who are yet alive.

A Factory Girl's Beneficence.—By a statement in the Missionary Herald, it appears that a pious female in one of the Lowell factories has for several years furnished the means of educating a pupil in the schools of the Nestorian Mission—which pupil has now become a preacher. Of this preacher the missionaries say—'He is remarkably winning and impressive in his proclamation of the gospel. Though a mere stripling in years and in size, he is still manly in appearance, and mature in character; and it is not without good reason that the rude villagers, to whom he preaches, regard him with great respect, and many with strong affection. His audiences are often melted to tears by the pertinency and power of his discourses.

General Intelligence.

WAR NEWS.

The news from the city of Mexico, since our last, does not indicate a very speedy termination of the war. Santa Anna has issued proclamations in which he charges his defeat at Buena Vista, and the loss of Vera Cruz, to the dissensions among the Mexicans themselves. These being healed, he expresses a determination to proceed towards Vera Cruz, contest the progress of our army inch by inch, and sacrifice his own life rather than make peace or allow the city of Mexico to be taken.

The troops under General Scott are proceeding towards the Capital. A detachment was sent forward to Alvarado, and captured it without loss, taking a great number of cannon and other military stores. Several Mexican ports have been taken, and Com. Perry was about to leave with the fleet, intending to take every Mexican port on the Gulf.

From Monterey, news has been received that the wounded men are suffering much, and many of them are dying. Our army, as a matter of necessary precaution, has burned down all the towns and ranchos between Monterey and Camargo.

From California information has been received, that on the 8th of January, Com. Stockton and Gen. Kearney, with a force of 500 men, met the enemy's artillery and dragoons at San Gabriel, under Gen. Flores, numbering 700 or 800 men. A severe contest ensued, but the Americans charged the battery with spirit, and captured it with considerable loss to the enemy. Next day the contest was resumed at Mesa, and the Mexicans directed the principal attack against our seamen, who were armed with boarding-pikes and cutlasses, but our men repelled them gallantly after a severe contest. The Mexican lines being broken, were charged by our mounted riflemen with great carnage, which gained a decided victory for our arms. We had sixteen killed and wounded. Lieut. Rowan was slightly wounded, being the only officer hurt. After this discomfiture, Flores wanted to negotiate, but Com. Stockton refused, and threatened to shoot him as a rebel, whereupon Flores discreetly surrendered to Col. Fremont, promising fidelity and obedience to the American authority.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

The Steamship Cambria reached Boston on the evening of the 20th inst., bringing Liverpool papers to the 4th inst.

There has been a great decline in the price of Indian corn, and American provisions generally.

The suffering from famine in Ireland, Scotland, and on the Continent, does not appear to recieve any abatement.

The distress that exists in all parts of France is very great, and in some departments carts and boats laden with Corn have to be accompanied by detachments of soldiers to save them from being pillaged by the people.

The Municipal Council of Paris had voted a sum of 750,000 francs to be employed in bread tickets for the indigent population of that capital during the first fortnight of April. The city had already granted for that object, since the 10th of November last, 3,221,145 francs.

The committee of the British Association for the relief of extreme distress in Ireland and Scotland made a report of the sums received, which now amount to above £240,000, which includes £50,000 received from her Majesty's Secretary of State for Home Department, being part of a collection under the Queen's letter.

Mr. O'Connell had just quitted Paris on his way to Italy. He is not so ill as the London papers have represented, but his medical attendants doubt that he will ever be able to again appear in public life.

Prince Jules de Polignac, the prime minister of Charles X. and whose unfortunate administration produced the revolution of 1830, died at St. Germains, near Paris, on the night of the 29th. He died of a gouty affection, from which he has suffered for the last two years.

The Journal des Debats announces the death at Nancy, in his 73d year, of the celebrated Count Drouot, Lieut. General of Artillery. Napoleon said of Count Drouot, that "his morality, probity and simplicity would have done honor to the epoch of Cincinnatus." Napoleon bequeathed him 100,000 francs, which he expended in acts of beneficence.

All the inhabitants of the town of Eglesbach in the grand duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, 1400 in number, have requested permission to be allowed to emigrate to the United States.

From Bremen the number of Emigrants has been really extraordinary, and in April and May will be yet greater. Throughout all Germany extensive preparations are making for emigration to the States. Indeed, some districts are threatened with complete depopulation.

The Caucasians have massacred a whole tribe who had joined the Russians. They did it treacherously, while pretending friendship.

The Emperor of Russia has issued an ukase, declaring that Jews in the army shall be allowed to rise to the rank of Lieutenant.

The Winter has been unusually severe in the north of India. Snow to the depth of three feet had fallen at Simla.

Galignani's Messenger says that a young man was arrested at Rome in a coffee house frequented by foreign artists, for having spoken disrespectfully of the Pope. He called himself Count Baldi, a native of Fano, and in his lodgings several poinards, air-guns, and other prohibited arms were found. He at first would give no explanation, but at last stated that he had intended to assassinate Pius IX. on the day on which his Holiness should distribute religious banners to the different quarters of Rome. He is said to be implicated in the conspiracy recently discovered at Rome and Ancoma.

Incendiary Paper.—The New York Tribune says that the Grand Jury of Accomac Co., Virginia, on the 29th ult., presented the New York Christian Advocate and Journal (the organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church) as an incendiary paper, in the following words:

"We, the Grand Jury, upon our oaths do present, that the New York Christian Advocate and Journal, a newspaper published in the City of New York, is a paper which is circulated through the post-offices of this County, and advises, and is calculated and intended to persuade persons of color within this Commonwealth to make insurrection, or rebel, and denies the right of masters to property in their slaves, and inculcates the duty of resistance to such right, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided.

"This presentment is made upon the examination of the paper itself.

LEWIS L. SNEAD Foreman."

One of the subscribers to the Advocate in Accomac Co. writes that they will be compelled in consequence of this presentment to forego the reading of the paper. A copy of the presentment has been served upon all the Postmasters in the County to deter them from delivering the paper to subscribers. The Advocate dares not even give the name of its correspondent, lest he should be thereby subjected to the operation of Lynch law! The authors of these proceedings are understood to be either members or partizans of the Southern Methodist Church, and they are kept in countenance by the Richmond Christian Advocate, one of the organs of that Church. The paper thus proscribed is regarded by Abolitionists at the North as pro-slavery, and it certainly has said more against Abolitionism than it ever has against the 'peculiar institution.'

Routes to Boston.—The New York Tribune says that there will be this summer no lack of conveyances between New York and Boston. First there are the two old night lines, that by Stonington, with the magnificent boats, the Knickerbocker and the Oregon. Then there is the New Haven day route, which is now in successful operation; the Long Island day route will also doubtless soon be started again. There is also the evening line to Hartford, which gives passengers a chance for a long sleep, and reaches Boston just noon the next day. Besides all these, there is the Fall River line, which is to commence early next month, and which we imagine will be a popular one. With all these six direct routes, one would suppose there would be no difficulty in getting to Boston.

SUMMARY.

The New York Tribune says that as one of the South Ferry Boats from Brooklyn was approaching the dock, and was within a few feet of the bridge, an impatient passenger endeavored to jump from the boat to the bridge; a young man on the shore, equally impatient, at the same moment attempted to jump from the bridge to the boat in order that he might be, a passenger on her return trip—the two jumpers met in mid air, and both plunged down into the water. They were fished out, without farther accident, except that a spectator, laughing at the mishap in spite of himself, tumbled in after them, and was slightly bruised by the fall.

The London Correspondent of the Boston Atlas says: Among the singular crotchets of the religious party has been a proposition from Liverpool to shut up the soup-kitchens on Sunday. Lord Brougham rose in the House, and with an energy worthy of the Henry Brougham of former days, denounced the supporters of this impious proposal, with the severity such fanaticism richly merited. Had their pious wishes been complied with, nearly 20,000 people, who now receive their only meal from these institutions, would have been deprived for 48 hours of the smallest sustenance.

A correspondent of the Atmospheric Railway Gazette, on passing the celebrated Galvanized Iron Wire Rope Works of Mr. Andrew Smith, Millwall, Poplar, witnessed the shipment of a wire rope, which the manager of the works informed him was no less than 3600 yards long, 3 inches circumference, and weighed 7 tons 15 cwts., and ordered for an inclined plane in Lancashire, between Blackburn and Bolton. This is, no doubt, the largest wire rope ever yet made. The wire was in bars of iron not more than ten days before.

Speaking of Lieut. Col. Clay, the N. O. Picayune says: "his last words where of his father. When he was shot down a second time, he drew a brace of pistols from his belt, handed them to Capt. Cutter and requested him to deliver them to his father, with this message—'Say to him that he gave them to me, and that I have done all that I can with them and now return them to him.' Here the enemy came thick around him, and these were the last words he was heard to utter."

The business of bristle dressing is carried on in Cincinnati at three different establishments—Rutherford's, Whitaker's, and Zuter's—and gives, (says Mr. Cist,) occupation to more than one hundred hands, whose labors it engages during a part of the year, affording higher wages, or rather netting to the laborer more profits, than almost any other journeyman employed in Cincinnati. These bristles are sent to our eastern cities, where they are assorted for various uses. The market value there of our season's supply is thirty-five thousand dollars.

It is a melancholy fact, that negroes have become the only reliable staple of the tobacco-growing sections of Virginia—the only reliable means of liquidating debts, foreign and domestic. They are sold by hundreds, under the hammer of the auctioneer. The domestic cannot compete with the south-western demand for them, for the plain reason, that the tobacco-grower cannot make one-half of one per cent. per annum upon slave labor, while the cotton and sugar planters make, perhaps, from fifteen to twenty per cent.

An important law case was tried in Columbia County, Ohio, at the last term, against Dr. William Robertson, of Hanover, for mal-practice as a surgeon, in which the jury returned a verdict of two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars for the plaintiff. The action was for mal-treatment of a dislocation of the knee joint, which resulted in amputation of the limb.

Lafontaine, the principal Chief of the Miami tribe of Indians, died at Lafayette, Indiana, on the 13th. He had arrived there a few days before his death, with some 60 or 70 of his friends and relatives, on his return from the West, and it had been his intention to reside upon his estate near Huntington, and conform as near as might be to the usages and customs of the whites.

Mrs. Mary Hoffman, 107 years old, died in South Brunswick, Middlesex County, N. J., on the 6th ult., where she had resided for the last fifty years. She left 14 children—60 grand children—115 great grand children, and 23 great great grand children. She was born in Hunterdon, and lived in Middlesex County 50 years. The eldest son now living is 85 years old. Her youngest, Thomas W. Hoffman, Esq., is now 58 years old. She retained her reason until a few hours before her death.

The Great Suspension Chain Bridge, near the Falls of Niagara, 700 feet long 200 feet above, the river, to afford a continuous route from Michigan by the Great Western Railroad in Canada West, is now surveyed, and about to be commenced. It will unite with the Buffalo and Albany Railway. The time at present occupied in reaching Buffalo from Detroit is from 36 to 44 hours; by the proposed route, the same distance can be accomplished in ten hours, and probably in eight hours.

Speaking of the expense of living in Santa Fé, a correspondent of the Sun says: We have paid as high as $10 for 140 lbs. of "crushed wheat," $1 50 to $2 for sheep weighing from 20 to 30 lbs,; $60 each for mules, worth in the States about $35; $70 for a yoke of steers, worth in Missouri $30; for corn $3 50 per bushel, and other things at the same ratio. When these prices would obtain supplies we have freely paid them rather than levy forced contributions.

Few people in America are aware of the enormous expenses at which the game forests on the estates of some of the English noblemen are supported. A correspondent of the London Daily News says, "I know a moderate sized estate, not many miles from Petersfield, Hampshire, where the keeper has twenty-one bushels of corn served out to him once a week for feeding the pheasants alone."

It is said by many able physicians that fasting is a means of removing incipient disease, and of restoring the body to its customary healthy sensations. Howard, the celebrated philanthropist, says a writer, used to fast one day in every week. Dr. Franklin, for a period, did the same. Napoleon when he felt his system unstrung, suspended his wonted repast, and took his exercise on horseback.

The Isaac Newton Capt. Peck, brought more than a thousand passengers from Albany, on one of her trips. The Captian, who was very attentive to his guests, remarked, that he never had expected to see the day when the largest steamer in the world could not fully accommodate the passengers making a voyage from Albany to New York!

The following problem was once the subject of dispute among the learned. "When a man says, I lie, does he lie or does he not? If he lies he speaks the truth; if he speaks the truth he lies." Many were the books written by the philosophers on this subject.

The usefulness of the New York Prison Association is indicated by the fact that of 273 male recipients of its bounty, during the past two years, only five have been recommitted. The relief most commonly afforded by the society is the procuring of suitable employment.

In the capture of Vera Cruz, less than a hundred Americans were killed. The loss of the Mexicans is estimated at one thousand, half of whom, it is thought, were women and chilren! Bombshells did the work of blowing houses into atoms, with all their inmates. Such are the appliances of modern civilization.

J. K. Mills, Esq., of Boston, has purchased the entire water privileges and factories opposite South Hadley, Canal Village, for a company who intend to enter largely into manufacturing. Four young men went from Calcutta to England, not long since, to complete their medical education. They appear to have conducted in a very creditable manner, and to have received the special commendation of the board of examiners. Three of them have recently obtained diplomas as surgeons; the fourth was prevented from receiving the same degree by a want of the requisite age.

A colporteur makes the following singular disclosure:—In one place in the Alleghany mountains, settled in 1808, containing over sixty souls, they never saw the face of a preacher till 1840. There was neither a Bible or a spelling book, nor a page of reading, in the settlement; the children have never seen a preacher.

A letter to the publishers of the New York Tribune, mailed at Andover, Mass., on March 1st, came safe to hand by the way of York, England and Liverpool, after having made a journey of six weeks. Some sharp-witted agent of the astonishing Post Office Department evidently mistook the direction to New York, written as plainly as pen could make it, and sent the letter to England.

Benj. B. Colvin, a clerk in the Post Office at Buffalo, has been arrested on charge of opening and abstracting $248 from a letter mailed by Wm. H. Doyle of Youngstown to Messrs. Coit & Farnham of Buffalo. He was committed to await his trial at the next term of the U. S. District Court.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

Board of Instruction.

IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

Miscellaneous.

CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL.

Marshall was noted for extreme plainness of person and address, and a childlike simplicity of character. His carelessness of his personal attire, in early life particularly, is well known, and on one occasion, (as stated in the Liberty Messenger,) while traveling, occasioned his being refused admittance into a public house. On the occasion which we are now to relate, it caused him the loss of a generous fee. Marshall, when just rising on the professional ladder, was one morning strolling through the streets of Richmond, attired in a plain linen roundabout and shorts, with his hat under his arm, from which he was eating cherries, when he stopped on the porch of the Eagle Hotel, indulged in some little pleasantry with the landlord, and passed on. Mr. P., an elderly gentleman from the country, then present, who had a case coming on before the court of appeals, was referred by the landlord to Marshall, as the best advocate for him to employ; but the careless, languid air of the young lawyer had so prejudiced Mr. P. that he refused to engage him. On entering court, Mr. P. was a second time referred to him by the clerk of the court, and a second time he declined. At this moment entered Mr. V., a venerable-looking legal gentleman, in a powdered wig and black coat, whose dignified appearance produced such an impression upon Mr. P., that he at once engaged him. In the first case which came on, Marshall and Mr. V. both addressed the court. The vast inferiority of his advocate was so apparent, that, at the close of the case, Mr. P. introduced himself to young Marshall, frankly stated the prejudice which had caused him, in opposition to advice, to employ Mr. V.; that he extremely regretted his error, but knew not how to remedy it. He had come into the city with one hundred dollars, as his lawyer's fee, which he had paid, and had but five left, which, if Mr. Marshall chose, he would cheerfully give him for assisting in the case. Marshall, pleased with the incident, accepted the offer; not, however, without passing a sly joke at the omnipotence of a powdered wig and black coat.

Marshall was accustomed to go to market, and frequently unattended. Nothing was more usual than to see him returning at sunrise, with poultry in one hand, and vegetables in the other. On one of these occasions, a would-be fashionable young man, from the North, who had recently removed to Richmond, was swearing violently because he could hire no one to take home his turkey. Marshall stepped up, and ascertaining of him where he lived, replied, "That is my way, and I will take it for you." When he arrived at his dwelling, the young man inquired, "What shall I pay you?" "O, nothing," was the rejoinder, "you are welcome; it was on my way, and no trouble." "Who is that polite old gentleman who brought home my turkey for me?" inquired the other of a bystander, as Marshall stepped away. "That," replied he, "is John Marshall, the Chief Justice of the United States." The young man, astounded, exclaimed, "Why did he bring home my turkey?" "To give you a severe reprimand, and teach you to attend to your own business," was the answer.

A SLAVE AUCTION.

"DECEMBER 26th, 1846.

"DEAR SIR—Myself and two others lately visited the eastern part of Virginia to see the cheap lands now so much talked of in agricultural circles, and there saw a slave auction. My friends were not Abolitionists before, and pitied my credulity when I told them the horrors of slavery; but one week in the Old Dominion has added two staunch adherents to our cause. I wish every pro-slavery man and woman in the North could witness one slave auction.

"We attended a sale of land and other property near Petersburgh, and unexpectedly saw slaves sold at auction. The slaves were told they would not be sold, and were collected in front of the quarters, gazing on the assembled multitude. The land being sold, the auctioneer's loud voice was heard, 'Bring up the niggers.' A shade of astonishment and afright passed over their faces, as they stared first at each other and then at the crowd of purchasers, whose attention was now directed to them. When the horrible truth was revealed to their minds, that they were to be sold, and nearest relations and dearest friends forever to be parted, the effect was indescribably agonizing. Women snatched up their babies and ran screaming into the huts. Children hid behind the huts and trees, and the men stood in mute despair. The auctioneer stood on the portico of the house, and the men and boys were ranged in the yard for inspection. It was announced that no warrants of soundness were given—the purchasers must examine for themselves. A few old men were sold at prices from $13,00 to $25,00, and it was painful to see old men, with beards white with years of toil and suffering, stand up to tell of their diseases and worthlessness, fearing they would be bought by traders from the Southern market.

"A white boy, about 12 years old, was placed on the stand. His hair was brown and straight; his skin exactly the same hue as other white persons, and no discoverable trace of negro feature in his countenance.

"Some coarse and vulgar jests were passed on his color, and $5,00 was bid for him, but the auctioneer said, 'That is not enough to begin on for such a likely young nigger!' Several remarked, 'they would not have him as a gift.' Some said a white nigger was more trouble than he was worth. One man said it was wrong to sell white people. I asked him if it was not wrong to sell black people. He made no reply. Before he was sold, his mother rushed from the house upon the partico, crying in frantic grief, 'My son, oh, my boy, they will take away my dear ———.' Her voice was lost, as she was rudely pushed back, and the door closed. The sale was not interrupted for a moment, and none of that crowd of ruthless tyrants appeared to be in the least degree affected by the scene. The poor boy, afraid to cry before so many strangers, who showed no signs of sympathy or pity, trembled, and wiped the tears from his cheeks with his sleeve. He was sold for $250. The monsters who tore this child from his mother would sell your child and mine if they had the power. During the sale, the quarters resounded with cries and lamentations that made my heart ache. A woman was next called by name. She gave her infant one wild embrace before leaving it with an old woman, and hastened mechanically to obey the call, but stopped, threw her arms aloft, screamed, and was unable to move.

"One of my companions touched my shoulder, and said, 'Come, let us leave here, I can bear no more.' We left the ground. The man who drove our carriage from Petersburgh had two sons who belonged to the estate—small boys. He obtained a promise that they should not be sold. He was asked if they were his only children. He answered, 'all that's left of eight.' The others had been sold to the South, and he would never see or hear from them again.

"As Northern people do not see such things, they should hear of them often enough to keep them awake to the sufferings of the victims of their indifference.

Very respectfully, your friend,
ELWOOD HARVEY.

THE BRAVE BOY.

I was sitting by a window in the second story of one of the large boarding-houses at Saratoga Springs, thinking of absent friends, when I heard shouts of children from the piazza beneath me. "O yes; that's capital! so we will! Come on now! There's William Hale! Come on, William, we're going to have a ride on the Circular Railway. Come with us!" "Yes, if my mother is willing. I will run and ask her," replied William. "O, O! so you must run and ask your ma. Great baby, run along to your ma! An't you ashamed? I didn't ask my mother!" "Nor I," "Nor I," added half a dozen voices. "Be a man, William," cried the first voice, "come along with us, if you don't want to be called a coward as long as you live. Don't you see we are all waiting?" I leaned forward to catch a view of the children, and saw William standing with one foot advanced, and his hand firmly clenched, in the midst of the group. He was a fine subject for a painter at that moment. His flushed brow, flashing eye, compressed lip, and changing cheek, all told how that word coward was wrangling in his breast. "Will he prove himself indeed one, by yielding to them?" thought I. It was with breathless interest that I listened for an answer, for I feared that the evil principle in his heart would be stronger than the good. But no. "I will not go without I ask my mother!" said the noble boy, his voice trembling with emotion, "and I am no coward either. I promised her I would not go from the house without permission, and I should be a base coward if I were to tell her a wicked lie." There was something commanding in his tone, which made the noisy children mute. It was the power of a strong soul over the weaker; and they involuntarily yielded him the tribute of respect. I saw him in the evening among the gathered multitude in the parlor. He was walking by his mother's side, a stately matron, clad in widow's weeds. Her gentle and polished manners, and the rich full tones of her sweet voice, betrayed a southern birth. It was with evident pride she looked on her graceful boy, whose face was one of the finest I ever saw, fairly radiant with animation and intelligence. Well might she be proud of such a son, one who would dare to do right, when all were tempting to the wrong. I shall probably never see the brave, boy again, but my heart breathed a prayer that that spirit, now so strong in its integrity, might never be sullied by worldliness and sin, never, in coming years, be tempted by the multitude to evil. Then will he be indeed a joy to the widow's heart—a pride and an ornament to his native land. Our country needs such stout, brave hearts, that can stand fast when the whirlwinds of temptation gather thick and strong around them—she needs men who from infancy upward have scorned to be false and recreant to duty.

FUEL IN PARIS.

It is quite cold to-day, and I have been obliged to have a fire; I therefore purchased two francs' worth of wood. There is a marchand de bois across the street, who occnpies not a spacious wood-yard, as you would probably imagine, but a small shop, and that shop, small as it is, is large enough to stow many thousand francs' worth of this precious article. They would no more think of exposing it to the depredations of the needy and unprincipled, in the open air, than a silver-smith with us, would pile up his wares in a yard; why, while the marchand de bois was looking away, some scoundrel might fill his pockets and be off. For two francs I got twenty-three sticks, rather small; and for two sous each I purchased two bundles of kindlings in fagots. It is, I believe, about a franc and a half for fifty pounds. When a fellow was going to buy a foot, they hardly thought him sane, and inquired if he would pay on the spot. The shop of the marchand de bois is decorated outside with paintings of piles of wood in perspective, presenting a perfect El Dorado, like the piles of gold in the brokers' windows, only less real; they sell also charbon de terre and charbon de bois. They also sell (it will make you laugh to hear) small pine cones, four for a sous, for fuel. In the winter they burn English coal, which is dear too, mixed with wood. The forests in France are mostly consumed, and great complaint is made of the high duty on English coal. —— astonished his barber by telling him that he had burnt up while champaigning out many thousand francs worth of wood in one night! Their manner of sawing wood expresses the value they put upon it; instead of subjecting it to the rude contact of a saw-horse, they hold it carefully in their hands, and rub it up and down the saw! The sawdust is of course carefully preserved; they would as soon waste gold dust. A good deal might be said on the influence which the scarcity of fuel has had on the French character, driving them to the café and the spectacle, from the fireside.

BEET BREAD.—Letters from Vienna state that a baker in that city has made a discovery of great importance—the use of the beet in the manufacture of bread. Two loaves of bread, one composed of half beet, the other five-eights, and the rest of wheat flour, were sent to the French Government. Although when received, they had been prepared three weeks, they were still in a good state of preservation. They were made as other bread, only with less water and more salt. The Government had given directions to have the value of this discovery tested by experiments.

GOD SAVE THE PLOUGH.

See, how the shining share
Maketh earth's bosom fair,
Crowning her brow;
Bread in its furrow springs,
Health and repose it brings,
Treasures unknown to kings—
God save the plough.

Look to the warrior's blade,
While o'er the tented glade,
Hate breathes his vow;
Strife its unsheathing wakes,
Love at its lightning quakes,
Weeping and wo it makes—
God save the plough.

Ships o'er the deep may ride,
Storms wreck their banner'd pride,
Waves whelm their prow;
But the well-loaded wain
Garnereth the golden grain,
Gladdening the household train—
God save the plough.

Who are the truly great?
Minions of pomp and state,
Where the crowd bow?
Give us hard hands and free,
Culturers of field and tree,
Best friends of liberty—
God save the plough. [Col. Herald.

SAYINGS OF JOHN RANDOLPH.

THE GENTLEMAN.—The character of the real gentleman is the most respectable among men. It consists not in plate, and equipage, and rich living, any more than in the disease which that mode of life engenders, but in truth, courtesy, bravery, generosity; and learning, which last, although not essential to it, yet does very much to adorn and illustrate the character of the true gentleman.

VANITY AND INDIFFERENCE.—Self-conceit and indifference are unfriendly, in an equal degree, to the attainment of knowledge, or the formation of an amiable character. The former is more offensive, but does not more completely mar all excellence than the latter; and it is truly deplorable that both flourish in Virginia as if it were their native soil. The vanity of excelling in pursuits, where excellence does not imply merit, has been the ruin of many a young man. I should, therefore, be under apprehensions for a young fellow, who danced uncommonly well, and expect more hereafter from his heels than from his head.

SELF-EDUCATION.—We, all of us, have two educations; one which we recieve from others; another, and the most valuable, which we give ourselves. It is the last which fixes our grade in society, which determines, eventually, our actual value in this life, and perhaps the color of our fate hereafter. Yes, dear Theodore, your destiny is in your own hands; nor would all the professors and teachers in the world make you a wise and good man without your own co-operation; and if such you are determined to be, it is not the want of them that can prevent it.

MARRIAGE.—One thing, at least, is true—if matrimony has its cares, calibacy has no pleasures. A Newton, as a mere scholar, may find employment in study; a man of literary taste can receive in books a powerful auxiliary; but a man must have a bosom friend, and children around him, to cherish and support the dreariness of old age. Suitability is the true foundation.

SINGULAR SENSIBILITY TO MUSIC.—Some years since, when the steamer "Cleaveland" was one of the "crack" boats on Lake Erie, we took passage one beautiful morning for Detroit. A fine band stationed upon the hurricane deck discoursed most delightful music, and contributed not a little to enliven the party. Among the passengers were a lady and her infant. The child was lying listless upon its mother's lap, when, the moment the music struck up, a singular change came over its little frame. Its eyes brightened, its lips were parted, its hands elevated, it vibrated throughout its whole frame like a harp-string to the time of the tune. A livelier air was played, when it was affecting, almost painful, to behold the quiverings of the little creature. Every feature was wrought up to an expression of the most intense interest. The music ceased, and the child wept.

So far as our limited observation in such matters avails us, it is rarely that a mere child weeps. It squalls, balls, and yells outright, but the silent tear seldom trickles down its cheek. The little incident made an impression upon our mind, and we then thought that if the child's ability should equal its susceptibility to the concord of sweet sounds, we should hear of it again. The denouement of the affair is yet to be told. A day or two since, we met the identical mother and daughter, the latter a sprightly girl of ten, with an eye full of soul, and a voice full of melody. She presides at the piano as though it had been her companion from infancy, and sings like a bird. May her song never be softened by the touch of sadness.

MILTON'S HOUSE IN LONDON.—This memorable dwelling is yet standing. It no longer opens into St. James' Park. The ancient front is now the back, and overlooks the fine old, but house-surrounded garden of Jeremy Bentham. Near the top of this ancient front is a stone, bearing the inscription—'Sacred to Milton, the prince of poets.' This was placed there by no less distinguished a man than William Hazlett, who rented the house some years, purely because it was Milton's. Bentham, when he was conducting people round his garden, which is now in the occupation of Mr. Gibb, the engineer, used to make them sometimes go down upon their knees to this house. The house is tall and narrow, and has nothing striking about it. No doubt, when it opened into St. James's Park, it was pleasant; now it fronts York street, which runs in a direct line from the west end of Westminster Abbey. It is No. 19, and is occupied by a cutler. The back, its former front, is closed in by a wall, leaving but a very narrow court; but above this wall, as already said, looks into the pleasant garden of the late venerable philosopher.

TOLERATION.—Toleration itself, applied to religion, implies the assumption of a power that ought not to exist, that in itself is tyranny. It implies that you, an earthly authority, an earthly power, say to me, so condescendingly, I permit you the free exercise of your religion. You permit me! And what authority have you to permit me—God commands me; and do you dare to say that you tolerate me? Who is he that dare come between me and God, either to say Yea or Nay? Your toleration itself is tyranny, for you have no right to meddle with the matter.

VARIETY.

A correspondence is published in the Paris and London papers, between Alex. Dumas and the Marquis de Maleville. Mr. Dumas, feeling himself insulted by some remarks of the Marquis in the Chamber of Deputies, sent a challenge by M. Viennet, Peer of France, President of the Society of Men of Letters, to learn the day, the place, and the hour, "ou il vous convenient que nons couperons la gorge." To which the other sent the following humorous reply: "Sir, I thank you for having afforded me the opportunity of seeing the agreeable and excellent M. Viennet. As to the proposal which you are good enough to make, to cut my throat, I am chagrined beyond measure at not being able to accept it. I have not the honor to be a gentleman!"

A rather laughable affair occurred a few days ago in one of the Boston Hotels, showing the peculiar regard which some men have to rank or title in office. Several members of the House of Representatives were seated at the dining table, (feeling rather dignified, we suppose,) when one of them said, "Will the gentlemen from Andover please pass the butter this way." Pretty soon another spoke, "Will the gentleman from Worcester please pass the salt this way," when one of the city wags, taking the hint, turning round to the black waiter and said distinctly, "Will the gentleman from Africa please pass the bread this way."

The famous Jemima Wilkinson, who, with a number of her followers, had fixed her residence at the head of Seneca Lake, announced to them that on a certain day she would walk on the water. Hundreds collected on the shore of the Lake, and she thus addressed them—"My dear friends, it will be of no use for me to attempt this miracle, unless you have faith. Say, do you verily beleive that I can do it?" "Certainly, certainly," answered a hundred voices. "Very well," replied the prudent impostor, "if you believe it, that is enough—there is no need of my doing it, and we will go quietly to our homes."

The railway between Shipley and Keighley, Ireland, is progressing rapidly, with the exception of that part near Bingley Church, called the Bingley bog. Sixty tons of earth and stones are cast into this bog every hour of the day. Notwithstanding this immense quantity is being dropped into the gulf at both ends, all is swallowed up every morning; the heavy matter sinking thus forces the lighter up, and makes a black spongy embankment on both sides.

Catch a rat in a wire trap, keep him until night, then procure a preparation of phosphorus in oil, apply it all over the rat, except his head, and turn him loose into his hole. Such a scampering and getting out of the house as occurs, as his phosphorescent majesty pursues his alarmed friends who he is anxious to overtake, afford certainly a security against the return of the depredators for a long season.

In the vast prairies of Texas, a little plant is always to be found, which, under all circumstances of climate, change of weather, rain, frost or sunshine, invariably turns its leaves and flowers to the north. If a solitary traveler were making his way across these trackless wilds, without a star to guide or compass to direct him, he finds an unerring monitor in an humble plant, and he follows its guidance, certain that it will not mislead him.

The best liquor law we have seen yet, is that passed by the Legislature of Maine, at its last session. It prohibits the sale of intoxicating drinks, under the penalty of from one to twenty dollars for the first offence, and from five to twenty for the second, with a bond of fifty dollars to abate the nuisance for six months. Money paid for liquors can be recovered back again, even by the heirs or widow and orphans of the unfortunate drunkard.

Horses are liable to consumption when kept in badly ventilated stables; and we are informed by Mr. Edward Chadwick, that a discovery was only lately made as to the effect of defective ventilation on the cavalry horses in some of the Government Barracks of England; and it is stated that a saving of several thousand pounds per annum was effected by an easy improvement of the ventilation of the barracks near the metropolis.

A correspondent of the Christian Intelligencer writes from New Orleans and says that the markets are all open on Sunday, and so also are the retail stores and mechanic shops of every description, particularly among the French. The military parade the streets with music, and the places of amusement are put in better trim, and more frequented on Sunday than any other time.

Dr. Gutzlaff records a remarkable effect of the British invasion of China. The natives expected that their idols wold repel the invaders, but seeing them unable to make the least resistance, even to save themselves from the hands of an excited soldiery, veneration gave way to their worthlessness, the Chinese refused to worship them, and the shrines and priests were deserted.

The Moniteur of February 29, publishes the result of the recent census of France. It is 35,400,486 souls, an increase of 1,170,308. The increase of population in France is therefore very slow, and has not doubled in a century and a half. In 1700 it was nearly twenty millions.

A highly respectable retail dealer in one of the principal thoroughfares of London, justifying himself from the charge of ruinous dealers said very naively, "This is the fourth time within two years that I have sold off my stock at considerable loss, with considerable profit."

It is remarkable that there is not in the world such a thing as a railroad in any country where the Spanish language is spoken, with the exception of the short one in Cuba, which owes its existence to American enterprise.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH.

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

ELD. HULL'S MISSIONARY REPORT.

On the third of February, I went to Diana, Lewis Co., and arrived just in time to give notice through the school for a meeting in the evening. I had a good congregation, composed mostly of young people, who were generally, if not all, non-professors. There is, for the number of inhabitants, a large proportion of young people, and but very few of them professors, in all the towns where I preached, which was five. Many of the old people are non-professors, and many are backsliders. Infidelity is quite common. Indeed, I felt as if I was on missionary ground. I staid in this place through the week, visited in the day time, and preached evenings. I found the state of religion quite low as a general thing, although some seemed established and devoted. The church here seemed generally determined to maintain the cause of religion; still, for some cause, they seemed not to entertain such hopes of increase as are important to success. In fact, it seemed to me that one of the prevailing difficulties in all the churches in the region which I visited, was a want of moral courage. There are causes probably for this state of things. Our church is scattered over a large territory; the members have not the conveniences for getting together which many of our churches in an older country have; and they are seldom blessed with the preached word oftener than once in two months. These embarrassments will probably account for the evils or difficulties I have mentioned.

On sixth-day I went with the brethren of Diana, and met the brethren of the other neighborhoods at the house of Bro. Burdick, in Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co., in covenant meeting. We had an interesting season. The church seemed quite glad to welcome me there. They were united, and traveling together, except two persons, for whom much anxiety was felt, and many fervent prayers offered. On Sabbath was their communion season. Eld. Robinson was present, and took part in the exercises. A deep solemnity marked the interview. In the evening I preached again.

On first-day Bro. Robinson and myself went to Fullerville, in the town of Fowler. We called on a deacon of the Baptist Church, and found there the minister, who invited one of us to preach in the after part of the day. It was learned during the forenoon exercises, that we were Seventh-day Baptist ministers, and at intermission we were requested to preach on the Sabbath question. We expressed a willingness to do so if the congregation desired it. When we came together the minister asked the congregation if they desired to hear us on that subject, and they by the show of hands said they did. I accordingly preached two sermons, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. I commenced by examining the claims of Sunday, and took up in order the general propositions by which it is sustained, and labored to disprove them. On finishing my objections to the first proposition, I asked them if their doctrine appeared sound on that point, to which some of the congregation responded audibly, and some in a whisper, No. So of all the general propositions examined. Their hearty responses showed that deep feeling prevailed in the con gregation. I finished my objections to Sunday-keeping, and dismissed the congregation with an appointment for evening. As the congregation were leaving the house, one of the church members asked their former pastor, who invited me to preach, saying she did not like it, for, said she, he has taken our Sabbath all away. He told her not to mind that, as I would bring back one in the evening that would be as good as the one I had taken away. In the evening the congregation was larger than in the day time. I proceeded to defend the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, by showing, in the first place, that it is not Jewish in its character; second, that it is universal in its claims; and, third, that it is perpetual in its obligation. As in the day time, so in the evening, when I passed from point to point, they would audibly assent to what I said. I think I never attended a discussion of any doctrinal question, where the views of the congregation were opposed, and so much good feeling prevailed. Quite a number professed themselves convinced of the truthfulness of our cause—some half a dozen at least, among whom were their former minister and deacon. One member of the church said she could not keep Sunday any more; another, that he wished the whole church would consider the matter and turn; another, that she was extremely troubled. I did not hear of any who expressed their feelings, who did not acknowledge themselves convinced. Still I presume there were those who would not make such an acknowledgement. After sermon I gave liberty for any candid question to be asked. The minister wanted to know how we would get along with the observance of the seventh day, where it was six months day and six months night. I replied, that I did not like to answer objections to our views, which rested with equal force against the observance of any day, unless the objector should take no-Sabbath ground, but in this case I would do it. I stated, in the first place, that there was no part of the earth where it was impossible to distinguish and reckon days; second, that those portions of the earth to which the objector alluded were mostly uninhabited; third, that such an objection could hardly be admitted by a Baptist, who would not yield to the objection of Pedobaptists, that there are portions of the earth where immersion cannot be administered; and fourth, that if there are any places on the earth where men cannot keep the commandments of God, they had better keep away from them. He assented fully, and said that he had not asked the question on his own account, but on the account of others.

REPLY TO "D. E. M." ON TEMPERANCE.

I almost determined not to reply to the last communication of "D. E. M." in reference to the point in hand; but perhaps I am justifiable in showing that I have something more to say. My antagonist remarks, that all the proof I adduce in favor of my position, consists in two quotations from the Bible. I observe, that other passages may be quoted, but even now I have the advantage of him, as he produces no scriptural proof at all, and therefore, he is driven to argue from expediency or propriety, to neither of which I object.

The idea that I should in any case have a scriptural warrant to rob my neighbor of his corn, because the disciples plucked the ears as they passed through the corn-field, is perfectly ridiculous. I might feel myself justified, however, in occasionally taking a little wine, could I obtain the unadulterated juice of the grape, as it is to be inferred from several portions of holy writ that it was commonly done. It is very doubtful whether any kind of stimulant was used in that age of the world, and in that part of the globe to which Scripture history refers, except the wine made from their rich grapes. That this sort of drink was plentifully made, is evident from the fact that vineyards were as common as our gardens and orchards. A failure was considered a divine judgment, as may be seen by a perusal of the prophets in a great multitude and variety of their prophecies. It would be superfluous to quote the many texts on this point, as every habitual reader of the Bible has them in his recollection. It may be fairly supposed, that what we call ardent spirits were not manufactnred, and of course not in use. We may imagine that wine was so plentiful that no other kind of stimulant was thought of, neither rum nor whisky. Respecting the last-mentioned drinks, I should suppose most people know, that they produce a deleterious effect on the human system when used in a regular way, and it is doubtful whether they are not injurious altogether, taken alone. I have no hesitation in saying now, that the regular use of ardent spirits is a most dangerous experiment, as the thirst for them seems almost invariably to increase with their regular use.

What "D. E. M." says in answer to my reference to the Saviour's turning water into wine, is no answer at all. I neither said nor thought that this display of his divinity afforded a warrant for the improper use of wine; but the use of it is certainly deducible from the fact that he did make it for the purpose of being drank. How could it have been known that it was the best wine, had they not drank it? Yea, how could it have been known that it was wine at all? And hence, where would have been the knowledge of the miracle? Can this reference to Christ's converting water into wine in any sense encourage the drunkard to appeal to the Sciptures in defense of his practice, or even the use of ardent spirits at all? It must be allowed by any candid man, that in this case there is no appeal for him. Nor do I think many drunkards, if any, would be silly enough to adduce it in the presence of any sensible person. No, sir, the drunkard has no appeal from the sacred word—that denounces him in the most alarming language.

It is said and believed by some, that there is no medium between drinking and drunkenness, and it seems that my friend has this notion in his mind. Now I must acknowledge that this is a kind of logic I cannot understand. I thought it was understood by every body, that there is a wide difference between the use and the abuse of a thing. I know of no one blessing of providence which may not be so abused as to turn it into a curse. Water, bread, and meat, our fruit, and all the produce of the earth, may be so abused as to ruin our health. Our appetites and our passions may be so gratified as to produce disease in our bodies, ruin our reputation, break up domestic peace, injure mankind, and expose us to everlasting destruction. I am perfectly satisfied that God has drawn a line so plain between the use and abuse of every thing, and has endowed man with a capacity of discerning it so strong, that he cannot cross that line without knowing it or feeling guilty. I do think, then, that I am the fortunate discoverer of the line of demarkation between the moderate and immoderate use of anything. I do think, too, that when persons talk about being a little drunk by the use of wine, of the smallest possible quantity, that they have quaffed some spirit which has intoxicated their brain. Do not suppose from what I have said, that I am in the habit of taking stimulants, or of using them at all. I am a total-abstinence man, not because I think the Bible requires it—nor because I have any fear of getting over the line—nor because I think a glass of good wine occasionally would hurt me—but because I would not encourage a man in drinking who has no command over his appetite—because I am determined on countenancing every society which I think has a tendency to correct the prevailing evils of the time—and because I am persuaded that it is the duty of Christians to make every effort in their power to reform the world.

SALEM, N. J., April 12, 1847.

THE POWER OF TRUTH.

How simply and beautifully has Abd-oll-Kadir, of Ghilon, impressed us with the love of truth in a story of his childhood. After stating the vision which made him entreat of his mother to go to Bagdad, and devote himself to God, he thus proceeds:—

I informed her of what I had seen, and she wept; then taking out eighty dinars, she told me I had a brother, half of that was all my inheritance; she made me swear, when she gave it to me, never to tell a lie, and afterwards bade me farewell, exclaiming—

"Go, my son, I consign the to God; we shall not meet until the day of Judgment."

I went on well, till I came near Hamandnai, when our Kafillah was plundered by sixty horsemen. One fellow asked me "what I had got?" "Forty dinars," said I, "are sewed under my garments." The fellow laughed, thinking no doubt I was joking with him. "What have you got?" said another; I gave him the same answer. When they were dividing the spoil, I was called to an eminence where the chief stood.

"What property have you got, my little fellow?" said he.

"I have told two of your people already," I replied; "I have forty dinars sewed in my garments!"

He ordered them to be ripped open, and found my money.

"And how came you," said he in surprise, "to declare so openly, what had been so carefully concealed?"

"Because," I replied, "I will not be false to my mother, to whom I have promised I never will tell a lie!"

"Child," said the robber, "hast thou such a sense of duty to thy mother at thy years, and am I insensible at my age, of the duty I owe to my God? Give me thy hand, innocent boy," he continued, "that I may swear repentence upon it."

He did so. His followers were all alike struck with the scene.

"You have been our leader in guilt," said they to their chief, "be the same in the path of virtue."

And they instantly, at his order, made restitution of their spoil, and vowed repentance on his hand. [History of Persia.

A CHAPTER ON MISTAKES.

1. Persons who write long articles for family newspapers, make a great mistake, when they expect them to be generally read.

2. Writers who select subjects of controversy, are greatly mistaken if they suppose that a protracted discussion will interest a majority of readers.

3. Writers who extend obituary notices much over half a column, are greatly mistaken if they imagine that they secure the attention of one half the general readers.

4. Those who write only a few lines to indicate respect for the deceased, are greatly mistaken, if they suppose their brief notices will be overlooked.

5. Writers, of careless habits, are greatly mistaken if they suppose an editor has nothing to do, but to correct their miserable punctuation and orthography, and remodel one half their clumsy sentences.

6. Writers, of indolent habits, are greatly mistaken, if they think that printers can decypher scratches as readily as they can well-formed letters.

7. Writers of verses are greatly mistaken when they suppose that an editor will always think as highly of their productions as they do themselves. His taste may be at fault.

8. A writer whose article may be declined, is greatly mistaken when he charges the editor with prejudice and partiality.

9. Any reader who may suppose we mean him in any one of the above paragraphs, will be greatly mistaken, as we write not with individual reference.

10. Unless we are greatly mistaken, it will be well to stop at this point. [Methodist Prot.

STRENGTH OF EARLY IMPRESSIONS.

A right and respectable Jew of Silesia employed a Christian nurse in his family. She was a pious woman, sincerely devoted to the Lord. When she rocked the little girl in the cradle, or bore it in her arms, instead of singing silly songs, she repeated in a mild voice the solemn and harmonious hymns of her Church. As the little child grew, she seemed to take pleasure in the hymns, and as the nurse remained several years in the service of her father, she had time to conceive for her a strong attachment.

The seed sown in the heart of the child was not lost. Hidden from the eyes of men, it sprouted and grew under dew from on high. At the age of sixteen, the young girl was led to ask the privilege of becoming a Christian. She would take no rest until a Protestant took her under his instructions, and soon after, she had the pleasure of being admitted to the holy sacrament of baptism. Often she attested afterward, that her nurse was the principal instrument of her conversion. The hymns sung to her in her childhood had left on her mind impressions so deep, that nothing could efface them. A counsel to pious parents! [N. Y. Observer.

MINISTER'S EXPENSES.

The following, copied from the Advocate, is a truthful delineation, if hundreds in this matter may be permitted to bear their testimony. We believe that many a church might trace an abscence of blessing on the words and means of grace, to the want of a disposition to give them an adequate support. It is too bad to add pecuniary, to the other cares and anxieties of the minister of Christ.

'I think,' said a worthy brother in a Baptist church, to his pastor, 'you ministers must be somewhat extravagant, or else you do not know how to manage very well, for you most all complain that you can't live on your salaries.'

Pastor.—That is true enough. We do find it somewhat difficult to square up with the end of the year; at any rate, I do.

Brother.—Well, how is it? you have five hundred dollars a year, and I should think that enough.

P. How much does it cost you a year?

B. I don't know; I never kept an account.

P. Well, how much do you think it costs a year to support your family?

B. I can't say—but nothing like five hundred dollars.

P. Are you sure of that?

B. Why—yes, I'm sure it can't amount to anything like five hundred dollars.

P. What do you pay for rent?

B. Eighty-four dollars.

P. Can you keep your horse for less than a hundred dollars a year?

B. No—I cannot—that would be moderate.

P. What does it cost to clothe yourself, wife, and four children?

B. Can't say, exactly; but I should think one hundred dollars or so.

P. How many barrels of flour do you use a year?

B. Four or five.

P. You take a quart of milk every day, don't you?

B. We always take three pints; but we get it rather low; my brother lets us have it at four cents a quart.

P. How much butter do you think you use a year?

B. Well—let me see—perhaps about one hundred and fifty pounds.

P. Can't you get along with a dollar a week, for what you take from the butcher's cart?

B. O yes! I should think so. Let me see—last week, on Tuesday, beef, 61 cents; on Thursday, mutton, thirty-five cents; on Saturday, corned beef, forty cents. I don't know—I guess the average would be a dollar a week.

P. I wonder what you pay a year at brother Jones's store? What do you think your coffee, teas, sugar, molasses, oil, and every thing else you get at his store amount to, in the course of a year?

B. Well—I—you had better stop—I ain't so sure, after all, of coming much inside five hundred dollars. However, I know what my bill was last year, for I let it run. It was ninety-seven dollars.

P. Do you know how many cords of wood you used.

B. Last year we used seven.

P. What do you pay the girl that lives with you?

B. A dollar a week.

P. Now let us see:—

House rent, - - - - - -	$84,00
Expenses of horse and carriage, -	100,00
Clothing, - - - - - -	100,00
Four barrels of flour, at $6, - -	24,00
Milk, - - - - - - -	21,00
150 lbs. butter, at 15 cents, - -	22,50
Groceries, - - - - - -	97,00
Seven cords wood, at $5, - -	35,00
Girl, at a dollar a week, - -	52,00
Butcher's meat, - - - - -	52,00
	$587,50

There—according to your own estimate, you already have run up to $587,50.

B. You don't—(looking over the items, and casting up.) Yes—you have cast it right. Well—I declare—I couldn't have thought it.

P. You never have any sickness in your family, do you? Now and then, a small fee for the doctor, eh?

B. I forgot that.

P. I suppose you sometimes buy vegetables, such as potatoes, beets, beans, peas, turnips, &c. &c., and occasionally a barrel of apples. Now and then it don't come amiss to buy a good book or two. You are fond of reading the papers, I reckon, from the number you often take from the Post Office. Then, too, you want to give something handsome every year to good objects, for you know you told the church, the other night, that Christians ought to be liberal. Once in a while, a new piece of furniture does not particularly wound your conscience, I guess, judging from that new sofa I saw going in your front door yesterday.

Your children need books for their school, I suppose; sometimes you have company; and sometimes your wife goes a visiting, and, if I mistake not, once in a while, you journey a little by railroads and steamboats; and, if I may make so bold, the last time you came from New York, somehow or other a gold watch came with you for your wife, and no small variety of presents for your children; and then, too, you recollect—

B. Stop—stop—I give in—I give in. You need not go any farther.

P. Well then what do you think now—is it such an easy matter for a minister to live on $500 a year?

B. I've changed my mind on that subject; and I will tell you another thing—I'll keep an account of my expenses after this; and I'll tell you still another thing—at our next society meeting, I shall make a motion that your salary be increased to $600 a year; and one thing more and I have done; please give this (handing him a $50 bill) to your wife, with the kind regards of a friend.

THE YOUNG PRUSSIAN.

Frederick, King of Prussia, one day rang his bell, and nobody answering, he opened his door, and found his page fast asleep in an elbow chair. He advanced toward, and was going to awaken him, when he perceived a letter hanging out of his pocket. His curiosity prompting him to know what it was, he took it out and read it. It was a letter from the young man's mother, in which she thanked him for having sent her a part of his wages to relieve her misery; and finished with telling him that God would reward him for his dutiful affection. The King, after reading it, went back softly to his chamber, took a purse full of ducats, and slipped it with the letter into the page's pocket. Returning to the chamber, he rang the bell so loudly that it awakened the page, who instantly made his appearance. "You have had a sound sleep," said the King. The page was at a loss how to excuse himself; and putting his hand into his pocket by chance, to his utter astonishment he there found a purse of ducats. He took it out, turned pale, and looking at the King, shed a torrent of tears, without being able to utter a single word. "What is that," said the King, "What is the matter?" "Ah, sire," said the young man, throwing himself on his knees, "somebody seeks my ruin! I know nothing of this money which I have just found in my pocket." "My young friend," replied Frederick, "God often does great things for us, even in our sleep. Send that to your mother; salute her on my part, and assure her that I will take care of both her and you."

VALUE OF ONE LEAF.—There was once a caravan crossing, I think, the north of India, and numbering in its company a godly and devout missionary. As it passed along, a poor old man was overcome by the heat and labors of the journey, and sinking down, was left to perish on the road. The missionary saw him, and kneeling down at his side, when the rest had passed along, whispered into his ear, "Brother, what is your hope?" The dying man raised himself a little to reply, and with great effort succeeded in answering, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin;" and immediately expired with the effort.

The missionary was greatly astonished at the answer; and in the calm and peaceful appearance of the man, he felt assured that he had died in Christ. "How, or where," he thought, "could this man, seemingly a heathen, have got his hope?" And as he thought of it, he observed a piece of paper grasped tightly in the hand of the corpse, which he succeeded in getting out. What do you suppose was his surprise and delight, when he found it was a single leaf of the Bible, containing the first chapter of the first epistle of John, in which these words occur. On that page the man had found the gospel.

[Children's Missionary Newspaper.

THE PRIZE POEM.—When Milton was going to St. Paul's school in London, at one of the public examinations, the subject for poetical composition happened to be our Savior's first miracle, the turning of water into wine at the marriage feast. Folios were written and handed in on the subject. When it came Milton's turn to hand in his poem, from which not much was expected, he merely wrote on a slate one line,

'The conscious water saw its God, and blushed.'

The Judges looked at each other in astonishment; the laconic beauty of the line, and simple sublimity of the idea, were so striking. After bestowing ecomiums upon the more elaborate productions, according to their merits, they awarded the prize to the future bard of 'Paradise Lost.'

DUE ESTIMATE OF AFFLICTION.—Richard Baxter prosecuted his manifold labors as an author and preacher, under the constant embarrassment of bodily weakness and disease. His comment upon the case of the man whom the Saviour healed at the pool of Bethesda, is not less affecting than singular:—

"How great a mercy it was to live thirty-eight years under God's wholesome discipline. Oh, my God, I thank thee for the like discipline of fifty-eight years; how safe a life is this, in comparison with full prosperity and pleasure!"

To a person who regretted to the celebrated Dr. Johnson that he had not been a clergyman, because he considered the life of a clergyman an easy and comfortable one, the doctor made this memorable reply:—'The life of a conscientious clergyman is not easy. I have always considered a clergyman the father of a larger family than he is able to maintain. No, sir, I do not envy a clergyman's life as an easy life; nor do I envy the clergyman who makes it an easy life.'

A celebrated writer on the side of scepticism and irreligion, in a book published since his death, to recommend atheism to the world, has been pleased to say, that all the devout persons he had ever seen were melancholy. This might very possibly be; for, in the first place, it is most likely that he saw very few, his friends and acquaintances, being of another sort; and secondly, the sight of him would make a very devout person melancholy at any time. [Horne.

The way in which vanity displays itself in little things, is often amusing. Every body has heard of the warm farmer, who complained of the heat of wearing silver buttons, when he found those he sported unnoticed; in like manner, Dr. Johnson related an anecdote of a man who was so fond of displaying on his sideboard all the plate he possessed, that he actually added his spurs to the shining heap.

Dr. Johnson compared plaintiff and defendant, in an action of law, to two men ducking their heads in a bucket, and daring each other to remain longest under water.

THE SABBATARIANS OR SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

The Cripplegate Church.

The congregation of Sabbatarians in London, commonly known as the Cripplegate or Devonshire Square Church, was gathered in the reign of Charles II., by the learned Mr. Francis Bampfield. Mr. B. was descended from an honorable family in Devonshire, and was a brother of Thomas Bampfield, Speaker in one of Cromwell's Parliaments. Having been from childhood designed for the ministry, he was at sixteen years of age sent to Wadham College, Oxford, from which he received two degrees at the end of eight years. He was soon afterward provided with a living in Dorsetshire, and was also chosen Prebend of Exeter Cathedral. Thence he was transferred to the populous town of Sherbourne, where he exerted an extensive influence among the adherents to the Established Church. While there, he began to doubt the authority of his church to prescribe forms of worship, and finally became an open non-conformist. The consequence was his ejection from the ministry, and his imprisonment in Dorchester jail, for preaching and conducting religious services contrary to law. During this imprisonment, which lasted about eight years, his views upon the subjects of baptism and the Sabbath underwent a change, and he became a firm Seventh-day Baptist. He preached his new opinions boldly to his fellow-prisoners, and several were led to embrace them. Soon after his release from Dorchester, Mr. Bampfield went to London, and there his 'liberty to preach the Gospel continued, like his former imprisonment, about ten years.' His labors were at first in the vicinity of Bethnal Green, in the eastern part of London, where he preached and administered the Lord's Supper to a company of brethren in his own hired house. At the end of one year, on the 5th of March, 1676, to use the language of the record, they "passed into a church state, on these two great principles, viz: Owning and professing Jesus Christ to be the one and only Lord over our consciences, and lawgiver to our souls; and the Holy Scriptures of truth to be our only rule of faith, worship, and life." Mr. Bampfield continued to labor as pastor of this church until 1682, when he was brought before the Court of Sessions on a variety of charges connected with his non-conformity. He was several times examined, and at each examination the oath of allegiance was tendered to him, which he constantly refused, because his conscience would not allow him to take it. The result was, that the Court declared him to be out of the protection of the King, his goods to be forfeited, and he to be imprisoned during life, or the King's pleasure. His constitution had always been feeble, and the anxieties of his trial, together with the privations which he endured, brought on disease, of which he died in Newgate Prison, on the 15th day of February, 1684, at the age of sixty-eight years. His funeral sermon was preached by Mr. Collins, one of his fellow-prisoners; and his body was interred, amidst a large concourse of spectators, at the burial place of the Baptist church in Glass-house Yard, Goswell-st., London.

After Mr. Bampfield's imprisonment, the church was dispersed for a season. But the times becoming more favorable, they reünited in church fellowship on the 14th of October, 1686, and invited Mr. Edward Stennett, of Wallingford, to take the oversight of them. He acceded to their wishes in part, and came to London at stated periods to preach and administer the ordinances. He still retained his connection with the people at Wallingfield, however; and finding it difficult to serve the church in London also as he desired, he resigned the pastoral care of them in 1689, recommending the appointment of some one to fill his place. Mr. Stennett is described as "a minister of note and learning in those times." He is distinguished as being the ancestor of the famous Stennett family, who all kept the seventh day, and were for several generations an ornament to religion, and to the cause of Protestant Dissent. The part which he took in the civil wars, being on the side of Parliament, exposed him to the neglect of his relatives, and many other difficulties. His dissent from the Established Church, deprived him of the means of maintaining his family, although a faithful and laborious minister. He therefore applied himself to the study of physic, by the practice of which he was enabled to provide for his children, and to give them a liberal education. He bore a considerable share in the persecutions which fell upon the Dissenters of his time. Several instances are recorded, in which his escape seems altogether miraculous, and affords a striking evidence of Divine interposition.

In 1690, Mr. Joseph Stennett, the second son of Edward Stennett, was ordained pastor of this church. With a view to usefulness in the ministry, he early devoted himself to study, mastered the French and Italian languages, became a critic in the Hebrew, and made considerable proficiency in philosophy and the liberal sciences. He came to London in 1685, and was employed for a time in the instruction of youth. But he was at length prevailed upon, by the earnest solicitation of his friends, to appear in the pulpit, where his efforts attracted considerable attention, and led to his being called to succeed his father. His ministry was eminently evangelical and faithful. His labors were not confined to his own people; but while he served them on the seventh day, he preached frequently, if not constantly, to other congregations on the first day. Among the Dissenters of England, he maintained a high standing and exerted a powerful influence. In the reign of King William, he was chosen by the Baptists to draw up and present their address to his Majesty on his deliverance from the assassination plot. On another occasion, he was appointed by the dissenting ministers of London to prepare an address to Queen Anne, which was presented in 1706. He also prepared a paper of advice, which was presented by the citizens of London, to their Representatives in Parliament, in 1708. When David Russen published his book, "Fundamentals without a Foundation, or a True Picture of the Anabaptists," Mr. Stennett was prevailed upon to answer it, which he did with so much ability that his antagonist never thought fit to make any reply. The popularity which he gained by this work, led to many solicitations from his friends to prepare a complete History of Baptism. This he intended to have done, and he was several years engaged in collecting materials for it. But the feeble state of his health prevented his carrying out the plan. Early in the year 1713 he began to decline, and on the 11th of July he fell asleep, in the forty-ninth year of his age, and the twenty-third of his ministry.

For fourteen years after the death of Mr. Stennett, the church was without a pastor, during which time the pulpit was either supplied by ministers of other denominations, or the meetings were held with the Mill Yard Church. But on the 3d of December, 1727, according to the record, "the church gave themselves up to Mr. Edmund Townsend," who continued to serve them until his death in 1763. Although not an educated man, he was a faithful and useful minister, and was much esteemed among his own people and others with whom he associated. He seems to have been sent to London as a Messenger from the church at Natton. For a while he preached to both of the London churches, in the Mill-Yard Chapel, until invited to take the pastoral care of the Cripplegate Church.

After the death of Mr. Townsend, the church was for about four years supplied by various Baptist ministers, until Mr. Thomas Whitewood was chosen pastor, in June, 1767. His race, however, was short; for after having preached three times, and administered the Lord's Supper once, he was laid aside by severe illness, of which he died in October of the same year.

At that time Dr. Samuel Stennett, a great-grand-son of Edward Stennett, and son of Dr. Joseph Stennett, was pastor of the Baptist church in Little Wild Street, London. As his principles and practice corresponded with those of the Cripplegate Church—"his judgment, as is well known, being for the observance of the seventh day, which he strictly regarded in his own family"—he was solicited to accept the pastoral office. There is no record, however, of his having done so, although he performed the duties of a pastor, administered the Lord's Supper, and preached for them regularly on the Sabbath morning. The afternoon service was conducted by four Baptist ministers in rotation, among whom were Dr. Jenkins and Dr. Rippon.

This state of things continued for nearly twenty years, until, in 1785, Robert Burnside was chosen pastor of the church. Mr. Burnside belonged to a Sabbath-keeping family, was received into the church in 1776, and was afterward educated for the ministry at the Marischal College, Aberdeen. He sustained the pastoral relation to the church forty-one years. Meanwhile he was occupied more or less in giving instruction in families of distinction, and in preparing several works for the press, among which was a volume on the subject of the Sabbath, and two volumes on the Religion of Mankind. He died in 1826.

John Brittain Shenstone succeeded Mr. Burnside. During the early part of his public life, he labored as a minister among the Baptists. For more than forty years he was connected with the Board of Baptist ministers in London, and by many was regarded as the father of that Board. Having become convinced of the claims of the seventh day, he commenced observing it as the Sabbath in 1825. Soon after Mr. Burnside's death, he was called to the pastoral care of the church, and continued to serve them until his own death on the 12th of May, 1844. Since that time this church has been without a pastor.

The Natton Church.

The Natton Church is located near Tewkesbury, in the west of England, about ninety miles from London, and fifteen from Gloucester. The exact time of its organization is not known. It is certain, however, that it existed as early as 1660; and it is quite probable that there were Sabbath-keepers in that region as early as 1640, who were prevented, by the unsettled state of the country, and their exposure to persecution, from forming a regular church.

The first pastor of this church, of whom any satisfactory account can be given, was Mr. John Purser. He is spoken of as a very worthy man, who suffered much persecution for conscience's sake, between 1660 and 1690. He was descended from an honorable family, and was heir to a considerable estate, of which his father disinherited him because he persisted in keeping the seventh day as the Sabbath. Notwithstanding this, it pleased God to bless him in the little he had. He became a reputable farmer, as did many of the most worthy ministers of that time, and reared up a large family of children, who "all walked in his steps." The principal place of meeting in the early days of the church, was at the house of Mr. Purser in Asston; but other meetings were held at different places within a range of twenty-five miles, for the accommodation of the widely-scattered congregation. Mr. Purser was a faithful and laborious minister among them until the close of his life in 1720.

About that time there were two young men in the church who gave promise of considerable usefulness—Mr. Philip Jones and Mr. Thomas Boston. Mr. Jones was chosen pastor of the church, and discharged the duties of that office until his death in 1770—a period of nearly fifty years.

He was succeeded by his nephew, Mr. Thomas Hiller, who, although a Sabbatarian, became also the pastor of a first-day Baptist church in Tewkesbury. His ministry is spoken of as having been "successful at Natton as well as at Tewkesbury." He died a few years ago, since which time the church, now dwindled to a mere handful, has been destitute of a pastor, but has enjoyed the assistance of a worthy Baptist preacher from Tewkesbury.

It may be well here to state, that in 1718, Mr. Benjamin Purser, a son of the first pastor of this church, purchased an estate at Natton, on which he fitted up a chapel for divine worship on the Sabbath. It is a small room, with a board floor, a pulpit, one pew, a row of benches, a communion table, and a gallery. He also walled in a corner of his orchard for a place of burial. When he died, in 1765, he left the chapel and burying place to the church, together with a small annuity from his estate to all succeeding ministers.

The foregoing is a brief sketch of the only three Sabbatarian churches now remaining in England, out of the eleven which existed there one hundred and fifty years ago. Their decline has been gradual, but certain and unchecked. Sufficient causes for it may be assigned, however, without supposing any unsoundness in their doctrines. There can be little doubt, that the observance of the Sabbath upon a different day from the one commonly observed, is connected with greater inconveniences than results from embracing the peculiar doctrines of any other Christian denomination. It would not be very surprising, therefore, if in England, where the standard of piety, even among Dissenters, has been gradually adjusting itself to the notions of the Established Church, the number of Sabbath-keepers should as gradually diminish. But aside from this, there have been influences at work in the churches themselves exactly adapted to produce the results which are witnessed. From a very early period, it has been the practice of Sabbatarian preachers to accept the pastoral care of first-day churches—thus attempting to serve two masters at once, and practically proclaiming a low estimate of the doctrine by which they were distinguished. Closely connected with this, and perhaps a natural result of it, has been an almost total neglect, for a long period, to make any energetic efforts to promulgate their views. Take into account these two considerations, together with the fact that no missionary or associational organizations were ever formed to promote acquaintance and brotherly feeling among the churches, and their existence at all seems more a matter of surprise than their gradual diminution.

CONCERTS OF PRAYER FOR THE HEATHEN.

It is instructive to notice how intimate a connection there has been between the monthly concerts of prayer for the heathen and Christian efforts for their salvation. These concerts were commenced, it is said, in 1784, by the North Hampton Association of Baptist ministers in England, with Ryland, Fuller, and Sutcliff at their head. It was not long before Dr. Carey appeared among them, and asked to be sent to India. That was the starting point of modern protestant foreign missions. Who can estimate the wondrous results of this agreement among a few country ministers to meet on a certain day of each month for prayer? Missionaries are laboring in nearly every quarter of the globe, and there is scarcely any body of orthodox Christians who do not now have a monthly season of special prayer for the spread of the gospel in heathen lands.

How is it with the monthly concert in our own churches? The first Sabbath in each month was long ago chosen as a fit time for this object. Is it observed? In some places we know that it is, and with great profit. It should be so in all. We solicit the attention of ministering and lay brethren to the subject. There has never been a time when the occasion for faithful attendance upon the concert seemed greater than at present. Our missionaries are probably now on heathen ground, surrounded by many trials, and anxiously laying their plans for future labor. Let them be remembered in earnest and frequent prayer before Him who alone can guide and protect them.

The American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews, in this City, received in donations and subscriptions from March 15 to April 15 the sum of $381 94.

A SABBATH DISCUSSION—ALMOST.

Recently there like to have been—and we really began to hope there would be—a Sabbath Discussion between the editor of the Catholic Herald and the editor of the Christian Chronicle. As it may gratify our readers to know how the matter began, progressed, and terminated, we will give them the particulars, and leave them to make their own reflections.

The editor of the Catholic Herald was the aggressor, and he commenced the aggression by publishing in his paper the following paragraph:—

"The Sabbath Recorder attributes the religious observance of the first day of the week instead of the seventh, to the 'working of the mystery of iniquity, which had begun its movements even in the times of the Apostles.' It is also stated in the same paper, that 'those who observe the first day of the week,' are to be regarded as 'symbolizing with Popery.' Our Protestant brethren will not relish this much. But there is certainly much truth in the latter part of the paragraph. It is impossible for them to defend the change of the Sabbath, without resorting to the very arguments which Catholics employ with still greater force, to defend other points which Protestants deny. There is certainly no express authority in Holy Scripture for the change. Consequently, all consistent Protestants should be Sabbatarians."

Thus far the Catholic Herald, published in the city of Philadelphia. Now the Christian Chronicle, a Baptist paper published in the same city—(and of course a staunch vindicator of Protestantism, as all Baptists are)—could not allow such an assertion as that "all consistent Protestants should be Sabbatarians," to pass unrebuked. Hence it copied this paragraph, and accompanied it with the following remarks:

"We quote the above from the Catholic Herald of this city. It is worthy of note. It will show that it is necessary for those who do not wish to be regarded as 'symbolizing with Popery,' to know on what grounds they rest the observance of the first day of the week. Who is so fearful of results, that he shrinks from a candid and full examination of all that the Scriptures teach in regard to the Sabbath and the Lord's Day? Baptists, certainly, have nothing to fear from such an examination. They profess to cling to nothing which the Bible does not teach and command. They make no laws to bind the followers of Christ; they only enforce what they find made by the Head of the Church, and recorded in the Scriptures. Hence they reject infant baptism—and hence they are ready to reject all that does not spring from the Scriptures. We shall be obliged to the Catholic Herald to point out any thing which Baptists advocate by resorting to the very arguments which Catholics employ to defend other points which we deny. We shall regard it as a special favor.

"The Herald probably has not examined the question in regard to the Sabbath and the Lord's Day very fully, or he would hardly have affirmed so confidently, that the absence of express authority in Holy Scripture for the change would compel all consistent Protestants to become Sabbatarians. This is assuming what he might find it difficult to prove."

To this the editor of the Catholic Herald replies in the following mild and gentlemanly manner, showing a willingness to engage in the discussion just as soon as his opponent will commit himself by stating on what ground he stands:—

"The Christian Chronicle takes some exceptions to a paragraph in our paper two weeks ago, in which it was asserted that 'all consistent Protestants should be Sabbatarians.' His strictures, however, have left us in doubt as to the ground on which he advocates the abolition of the Jewish Sabbath, and the institution of Sunday in its place. And as this is the main point, we must be fully enlightened in regard to it, before we can attempt a reply. We must, therefore, inquire whether he professes to find in the Holy Scriptures alone a sufficient warrant for the change? If so, let him give us the passages on which he relies, not forgetting at the same time to prove that his interpretation of such passages is correct. We are, of course, familiar with the passages to which Protestants generally appeal in regard to this question, but in our judgment they are so utterly irrelevant that their bare citation proclaims the desperate nature of the case."

To the above question, the editor of the Christian Chronicle has not yet deigned to reply, although several weeks have passed since the question was asked. We must confess ourselves somewhat surprised at this, inasmuch as he evidently provoked discussion. The Herald first asserted that "all consistent Protestants ought to be Sabbatarians." The Chronicle expressed doubts on that point, and requested the Herald to "point out any thing which Baptists advocate by resorting to the very arguments which Catholics employ to defend other points which they deny." In order that this request might be intelligently granted, the Herald asked to be informed whether the Chronicle "professes to find, in the Holy Scriptures alone, a sufficient warrant for the change" of the Sabbath;—as much as to say, 'If you do, then I am ready for you.' But this is coming right back to the point from whence they started, and brings the question a little too close home. Hence the Chronicle, thinking no doubt that "discretion is the better part of valor," says nothing more about the matter, and evidently hopes that it will blow over. We should be sorry to believe that the editor of a Baptist paper could be frightened at so simple a question as this, especially when presented by one whom he is accustomed to regard as a representative of Antichrist. May we not hope, that he will yet rally, and put to flight this follower of the "beast," by showing that his own practice can be vindicated by the Scriptures alone?

Rum Triumph.—The recent vote upon the license question shows a lamentable revolution since last year. Many towns which then went against all licenses, with overwhelming majorities, have this year given majorities for license. Such a revolution was feared by some, in view of the very similar turn which things once took in Massachusetts and Connecticut. But still their fears have been more than realized. There is reason to believe, however, that this result has been brought about by an extraordinary effort on the part of the rum-selling and rum-drinking portion of community, and that the sober second thought of the people will put things right again at the next trial.

—It occurs to us here to correct an impression which some may have, that this has been a general vote on the license question. It is not so. Last year almost all of the towns went against licenses, and that verdict was final unless one-fourth of the legal voters in any town should unite in demanding a new trial. In most of the strong anti-license towns this has not been done, and of course there has been no vote in such towns upon the question. The vote has been taken only in those towns where the friends of licenses had reason to hope that they could carry the day. In too many of these places, it is true, they have succeeded. But this does not prove, by any means, that a majority of the people in the State are in favor of granting licenses.

Testimony against the War.—The Third Presbytery of New York, at a recent meeting, adopted a series of resolutions in relation to the war with Mexico, in which they declare, among other things, that it is against the principles of the Word of God, and the law of humanity, for a Christian nation to engage in war, unless it be strictly in self-defense; that the prosecution of war cannot be justified for the sake of conquest, or for any ends of mere pecuniary or territorial advantage; that they view with mourning and horror the great slaughter of the Mexicans, as well as Americans, and especially of defenseless women and children, in the recent battles and sieges against Mexico; and that every consideration of humanity, justice and duty, calls upon our government to stay the farther progress of these desolations, and to offer peace at once, on terms of the most complete generosity and forbearance.

Missions in Germany.—Letters recently received at the Baptist Mission Rooms in Boston, show that a good work is going on in Germany, notwithstanding there have been some exhibitions of intolerance. Mr. Oncken reports seventy-three baptisms at Hamburg during the past year; Mr. Lehman, the same number at Berlin and its outstations, with twelve candidates for the ordinance. Mr. Doerkson recently baptized two converts at Memel on the Baltic. Mr. Steinhoff, in a tour through parts of Germany and Switzerland, baptized thirty-five believers.

Baptist Anniversaries.—The 15th Anniversary of the Baptist Home Missionary Society is to be held in the meeting-house of the Oliver-street Baptist Church, on Tuesday evening, the 11th of May. The American and Foreign Bible Society will hold its anniversary in the morning of the same day, at the First Baptist Church in Broome-street.

Sabbath Law in New York.—The Albany correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of April 26, says that "a bill is in progress to prevent the commencement of lawsuits against persons on Saturday, who religiously keep that day as other folks are taught to keep Sunday." He thinks it will become a law.

The Sunday Mail Report.—Barnabas Bates, Esq., in a letter to the Boston Chronotype, denies that he is the author of Col. Johnson's celebrated Sunday Mail Report. He says:

"Justice to that gentleman compels me to say, that although I concur with him in opinion, yet I did not write the report, nor did I see it until it was published in the papers. I would also add, that the reverend gentleman, with whom the Colonel then resided, in Washington, and to whom the authorship has also been ascribed, stated to me, in a conversation upon the subject, that 'Colonel Johnson was as truly the writer of that Report as his namesake was of the Rambler.' 'Honor to whom honor is due,' is my motto."

British Anti-State-Church Association.—Such is the title of an association recently organized among the Dissenters of England with a view to secure the separation of the church from the State. Its first triennial conference will be held in London early in May. The following are the fundamental principles upon which it is based:—

"That in matters of religion man is responsible to God alone; that all legislation by secular governments in affairs of religion is an encroachment upon the rights of man, and an invasion of the prerogatives of God; and that the application by law of the resources of the State to the maintenance of any form or forms of religious worship and instruction, is contrary to reason, hostile to human liberty, and directly opposed to the Word of God."

Death of a Missionary.—The Boston Atlas says that the Rev. Charles Robinson, of Lenox, Mass., for sixteen years a missionary at Siam, died on the passage home—which he undertook on account of his health—on board the bark Draco, of New-Bedford, when one week from St. Helena. His widow and four children arrived at New-Bedford in the Draco, on Friday evening. Mr. Robinson was a missionary of the American Board.

WAR NEWS.

Advices from Gen. Taylor, to the 28th of March, report that communication has been again established between Monterey and Camargo. All was quiet at Saltillo and Monterey, and the inhabitants of both places were generally returning to their homes, and in the country they were engaged in planting their crops. The troops are said to be in good health, and the wounded are recruiting.

From the division of the army in the vicinity of Vera Cruz, the news is more stirring, as will be seen by the following letter of the correspondent of the N. O. Picayune, dated at San Juan, April 14 :—

The division of Gen. Worth, from the excessive heat and wearisome road, suffered incredibly.

An express has come down from Gen. Twiggs to the effect that Santa Anna was before him at Cerro Gordo, with fifteen thousand men, as near as could be judged from a reconnoisance made by Captain Hardy, and other officers of dragoons.

Lieut. Col. J. E. Johnson had been severely but not mortally wounded, while examining Santa Anna's works, which appeared to be a succession of breastworks, on an eminence in the vicinity of Cerro Gordo.

Every thing would go to show that Santa Anna is determined to make a bold stand.

A dragoon, who had been sent down expressly by Gen. Twiggs, was yesterday found shot by the road-side just beyond this; his papers had not been touched.

The Mexicans are playing a bloody, and at the same time a bolder game than is usual for them, as it is thought they have killed no less than fifty of our men within the last three days on the road.

FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Sarah Sands arrived at New York on Thursday evening last, bringing two days later foreign news. The Tribune thinks her news will generally be regarded as favorable to trade.

There was a fire in London on the 5th ult., which destroyed considerable property.

From Ireland, the accounts of suffering continue. But the opening of spring has somewhat alleviated it. The Cork Constitution gives a dismal account of the devastations committed by fever, the victims to the contagion filling the graveyards to overflowing.

The same paper says that hundreds of comfortable-looking farmers, of young men and women, all decently clad, continue to arrive daily, with the view of emigrating to America. In such numbers do they come, that the rapidity with which the bakers' shops in the vicinity of the quays are cleared of bread is scarcely credible. A curious fact connected with the desire to emigrate, is the large quantities of potatoes that some of these emigrants have taken with them.

The Crown Solicitor for Cork says, that the anxiety of the prisoners at the assizes for that county is, not that they should be acquitted, but that they should be found guilty! The learned gentleman has made a report to that effect to Government. The jails of the county are crowded by a class of offenders created by the famine.

We learn from Munster (Westphalia) that on the 29th of April the Bishop of that diocese, while walking in the corridors of his cathedral, between six and seven in the evening, was struck with apoplexy, and died in a very few minutes. His last words were, "My hour is come. O God! have mercy on my soul!" He was raised to the see only on the 10th of December last.

The royal court of Amiens decided lately that the Evangelical Baptist Society is beyond the pale of the religions authorized by law, in France, and, consequently, an illicit association.

Mr. George Thompson, the President of the Anti-Slavery League, has been bound over for trial, on a charge of assaulting one William Wardell in an omnibus.

According to a letter from India, a boy, seven years old, was lately discovered near Forozepore in the den of a she-wolf, who is supposed to have "nursed and done for him" as an ancestress of her's is said to have done for Romulus some centuries ago. The boy is quite savage and will touch nothing but raw flesh.

Upward of 6,000 German emigrants have, within the last fortnight, passed through Cologne, on their way to Bremen, Havre, and Antwerp, where they will take their departure for America.

More than 30,000 negroes in Africa and the West Indies have subscribed toward the statue of their benefactor, Sir T. F. Buxton.

Mr. Anthony, surgeon, of Brixham, was lately called to a young female, about 19 years of age, who had taken about 100 grains of oxalic acid. He administered milk, with a view to form a coagulum, which succeeded in the most effectual way by producing instantaneous vomiting, as he expected; after [illegible]y ejection from the stomach, Mr. A. repeated the dose of milk, in quantities of a pint, and sometimes half a pint, until vomiting ceased, and the pulse was restored to its natural tone. Milk being a decided antidote to the poison, too much publicity cannot be given for the information of the public.

RARA AVIS.—A white pelican was shot on Burlington beach, a few days since. Its wings measured 7 feet nine inches from tip to tip—from the point of its bill to the tail it measured four feet ten inches—the bill itself, to the opening of the mouth, was fourteen inches—the perpendicular hight of the bird was two feet eight inches. This is the first bird of the kind that we have ever heard of being shot in North America. The white pelican is a native of Africa, and the pelicans of America, according to Buffon, are brown; so that this wanderer must have flown a long way from his native shores before he made his final descent on our beach. Ornithologists represent these birds as being exceedingly indolent and voracious. They never leave their resting place except when impelled by hunger, which seems not to be very seldom. Their nights are confined to the coasts or over the shallow water where small fish are to be found in large quantities; and how this one happened to make its way to Canada, is a mystery which we cannot pretend to unravel.

DISGRACEFUL PERSECUTION.—Under this head the Liverpool Mercury states that Mr. Frederick Douglass, the fugitive slave, was denied the privileges of a gentleman on his passage home in the Cambria. Mr. Douglass engaged his passage of the agent in London. He first inquired for a second class passage, but was told that no such distinction was recognized by the company. He then asked if his color would prove any barrier to his enjoying all the rights and privileges of the other passengers, and being assured that it would not, he paid the usual price for berth No. 72. On reaching Liverpool, however, he found that his berth had been given to another, and was told that the agent in London had acted without authority in selling the ticket. The Liverpool agent would not allow Mr. D. to go on board the Cambria unless he would agree to take his meals alone and not to mix with the saloon passengers. Having made all his arrangements to return home, and his luggage being on board, Mr. D. had to submit to these disgraceful conditions, though he had paid the full price. The Mercury speaks of the conduct of the agents in terms of great severity. [Tribune.

THE WANTS OF IRELAND.—Maria Edgeworth, well known in this country as an authoress, has written a letter to New York, in which she states that the published accounts of suffering in that country are in no degree exaggerated. She writes :—

"I assure you that, during my sixty-six years residence in Ireland, I never knew of distress equal to the present. I will not give you any private instances; some might touch you deeply, but none can or ought to strike you and influence your feelings and your action so much as the general information—the positive facts of greatest magnitude and awful consequence. Famine, disease, deaths innumerable, are in all parts of the kingdom—putrefaction and pestilence in some—and if the people are not immediately relieved by supplies of food, and enabled by supplies of seed to sow the land, the famine, disease, death and pestilence must be still more dreadful next year."

IMPORTANT DECISION.—A case was lately decided in the Court of Common Pleas, in the Kershaw District, South Carolina, involving considerations of vital interest to the slave owners of that State. It appears that a grog-dealer sold the plaintiff's slave, Bob, a gallon and quart of whisky—that on the road home, Bob drank of the whisky, became very drunk, fell down several times, and once in a creek, and would probably have been drowned, if he had not been assisted out—that he lay out all night, and was found dead near the road the next morning—that his death was caused by the intoxication, and exposure to the inclemency of the weather. The Jury, under the charge of the judge, found a verdict for the plaintiff for six hundred and fifty dollars. [Tribune.

SUMMARY.

MR. ROEMER, a Dutch Cavalry officer now in this city, has invented a new mode of constructing the fore-wheels and axle of carriages, by which the wheels move in turning the carriage independent of the axle. It is said that the strength and cheapness of the carriage, as well as safety in turning, are all increased by the plan, while at the same time it is more elegant than the ordinary mode. Mr. Roemer has also invented a new mode of hanging carriages, by which a more agreeable motion is secured.

The Chronotype tells a story about some recruits for the new regiments who lately came from Maine, in a Kennebec steamer, and got drunk on board of her, kicking up several rows, to the wonder of the Captain, who could not guess where they got the liquor. It seems that a man was on board who had a barrel of specimens of animals, packed in New England rum, which he was collecting for the museums and cabinets of the curious; among them were skunks woodchucks, squirrels, minks and weasels, with the skin and fur all on. This barrel had been tapped by the "patriotic" recruits, and the liquor "reännexed."

It appears from returns made to the War Department at Washington, that there are now en route for the army in Mexico forty-one companies of the ten new regiments of regulars, comprising an aggregate strength or 3,244 men. The other companies are fast filling up in various parts of the country, and it is probable, remarks the Washington Union, that nearly six thousand new troops will be placed on the banks of the Rio Grande before the close of May.

The Vermont (Mass.) Register states that the sea-weed, used as manure in potatoe hills, effectually prevents potato disease. Also that peat is believed to produce the same result. We had a fine field of potatoes last year, entirely unaffected by the rot, while other lots around us were more or less affected, and some of them badly. We attributed the entire exemption, in our own case, to the use of tanner's manure, containing, among other ingredients, a considerable per centage of lime.

The New-Orleans Picayune of the 20th gives an account of the death of a race rider who was killed on Sunday in the ninth heat by his horse throwing him and falling upon him. The Picayune says his name was 'Jim,' and he belonged to Mr. Kirkland Harrison, who within the past fortnight had purchased him expressly as a rider, for the sum of $2500.

We learn from the "Floridian" of the 17th ult., that Achille Murat, the eldest son of Napoleon's celebrated Marshal, died on the 15th at his residence in Jefferson county, Florida. Prince Murat has resided in this country since 1821, living without austentation as a citizen of the Republic he had adopted. He died at the age of 46 years.

The Editor of the Chicago Journal, R. L. Wilson, Esq., was very seriously injured by the accidental discharge of a cannon, which he was assisting to load, at the celebration in that city of Taylor's victory at Buena Vista.

The Commisioners on the part of Rhode Island and Massachusetts to settle the boundary line between the two States have agreed upon the line of division, which now awaits only the sanction of the two Legislatures to be confirmed. This line makes scarcely any changes, and we think will prove acceptable to both Legislatures. The boundary has been in dispute ever since 1791, and a resort to the Supreme Court at Washington would have entailed great expense on both States.

The Scientific American says that Mr. P. M. Droyer of this city has invented a very ingeniously constructed piece of furniture, which will unquestionably be brought into general use, for its manifold excellent qualities. It is called "The Magic of Transformation Table," and can be changed, in a moment, from a table into a bedstead, settee, sofa, a musical instrument, and a settee and table-stand in one. The construction is not liable to get out of order, and the objectionable features of the settee and sofa-bedsteads now in use, are obviated.

Green, the reformed gambler, has been challenged to a discussion by a man named Freeman, who acknowledges himself one of that proscribed fraternity. He intends to show that gambling is not fifty per cent. below stealing. Mr. Freeman has undertaken the most difficult part of the discussion, but between him and Mr. Green the uninitiated public stand a fair chance of learning some of the mysteries of the craft, or of seeing how dextrously the unsophisticated can be fleeced of their money.

It is stated in the Dublin Herald, that Lord Ashley, Rev. Mr. Bickersteth, and others, have raised nearly one hundred thousand dollars for the employment of a new body of Scripture readers in Ireland. Seven hundred colporteurs are thus to be immediately dispersed among the poor of that afflicted nation, to read the Word of God, and instruct the people from house to house.

The number of emigrants arriving at this port on the 26th, 27th, and 28th ult. was 1609. Of these, 307 came from Antwerp, 48 from Rotterdam, 13 from Norway, 177 from Irish ports, 853 from Liverpool, (all Irish, doubtless,) and 211 from London. On the Liverpool ships, four in all, 20 deaths took place on the voyage, and 13 of their passengers were sent to the hospital at the quarantine on arriving.

The expenses of compiling, editing and publishing the "Encyclopedia Brittanica," in the seventeen quarto volumes, amounted to $600,000. The publishers, Constable & Co., are in a way to realize profitable returns from their enterprise. They have already received nearly $550,000 from its sale. Authors and contributors to the work have been paid more than $100,000.

Peter McKeever, of Albany, has memorialized the Legislature, setting forth that large beds of Anthracite coal are to be found near Albany and Greenbush. The prospects of the wheat crop in Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, are represented to be much more flattering than was anticipated a few weeks since. The severity of the winter touched many fields badly, but the injury is said not to have been general, and where the wheat seemed most injured, the recent showers have revived the root so that a fair crop is expected to be realized.

It is the custom of affectionate seamen, when they go long voyages in government ships, to leave a portion of their wages to be drawn by their wives. The Paymaster here thought a while ago that a certain woman came often for the domestic share of her husband's wages, and on an examination of the matter, he found that she was the wife of no less than five different seamen.

The Boston papers contain accounts of the hiving of a swarm of bees, after the abstraction of their whole supply of honey, by throwing the little workers into a sound oblivion of what was going on around them, for half an hour or so. This was done in Cambridge, near Boston, the Letheon being applied by injection into the hive by a skillful hand. Is there any thing "new under the sun?"

Also a similar reward for the arrest of the parties concerned in outrages upon the Coons of the same County, during the present month.

The Dubuque (Iowa) Republican, publishes an account of a fall of ærolites, in that neighborhood. In one instance, a large stone, some six feet in diameter, and resembling a mass of sulphur, in its descent went through a large tree crushing it to atoms, and entered the earth to the depth of about 12 feet, from whence it was afterwards recovered by those who witnessed its fall.

The followers of Joanna Southcote continue to parade about the streets of London, uttering melancholy wails for the sin which brought down famine upon Ireland. Their long beards, tunics, and large leather girdles, give them a grotesque appearance. Several times they have been taken before the magistrates and admonished, but they heed not the advice.

Dr. Delany, the spirited editor of the "Mystery," of Pittsburg, has been fined $150 for a libel. The alleged offence consisted in publishing one Johnson, a colored man, as a slave-catcher. It was not denied that the charge was true, but human law is a queer thing sometimes.

One-third of this sum is to be paid over immediately, and the remainder at the decease of his two sisters.

There is no longer a doubt of the decease of Hon. Geo. C. He fell a victim to a violent attack of pleurisy, at his residence in Brunswick, Co. Va., after a very brief illness.

An emigrant Hamburg ship, while on her passage to Canada, was lost in the Gulf Stream, and dreadful to relate, 160 emigrants and the crew perished. She was called the Stephonie, Capt. Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

From the Saturday Messenger.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Speak no ill of erring kindred!
Breathe no slander on the name
Of thy brother, unbefriended,
Tarnish not his humble fame.
Let thy lips for e'er be sealed
'Gainst the weakness of another;
Till thine own frail heart is healed,
Utter naught against thy brother.

Lips may check, aye, blight forever,
Ardent hopes and joyous hearts;
Poison-tip'd, the tongue may sever
Idol-friends by cruel arts;
Or, harmless, it may firmly fasten
Kindred souls with golden coil,
And may, cheerful, aid and hasten
Youth to fortune from his toil.

Hard the heart that seeks its glory
On the crush'd heart's funeral pile;
Weak the tongue that lends its story
Only to its kind revile.
Such a spirit sinks our nature—
Tramples on the law of love—
Spurns the blessings of our Maker,
Sent in kindness from above! Y.

TAKING A WHALE.

April 8*th* 1843. We were running down for the Albadra Islands, with a fine steady breeze. The morning was bright and clear, and the water of that peculiar color which whalemen regard as the favorite resort for whales. I had the forenoon watch below, and was just congratulating myself upon getting through with my "double altitudes," when the loud, clear voice of a man at the mast head came ringing down the forecastle.

"There she blows!" was the thrilling cry.

"That's once!" shouted the captain.

"There she blows."

"That's twice, by jingo!"

"There she blows!"

"Three times! Where away, Tabor?"

"Off the weather bow, sir, two points!"

"How far?"

"A mile and a half. There she blows!"

"Sperm whale! Call all hands!"

There was a rush on deck, each man trying to get to the scuttle first. Then came half a dozen loud knocks, and a hoarse voice shouting:

"Larbord watch ahoy! Turn out, my lads! Sperm whale in sight! Heave out! Lash and carry! Rise and chime! Bear a hand, my lively hearties!"

Those who were "rolled in" rolled out as soon as possible and buckled on their ducks, and in less than two minutes were all on deck, ready for orders. The tubs were put in the boats, and the main yard hauled aback. We all now perched ourselves in the rigging, and kept a sharp look-out on every side for the whale's next rising. Twenty minutes elapsed since the spout was first seen; twenty-five passed, and the captain began to get into a state of nervous anxiety. We strained our eyes in all directions to "make a spout." Half an hour flew by, and no spout was seen. It began to look like a hopeless case, when Tabor, whose visual organs appeared to have the power of ubiquity, sang out:

"There she blows! there she blows!"

"Where now?" roared the captain.

"Off the weather quarter! Two large sperm whales, sir. Go it, boats!"

"Clear away the boats! Come down from the mast head, all you that don't belong there! Bear a hand! we'll take them this rising!" shouted the captain, in a fierce, sharp voice.

"All ready, sir."

"Lower away, then!"

The waist and larboard boats were instantly down, ready to "bend on." Captain A—— and some of his boat's crew being too ill to man the other boat, we struck off for the whales without them. I pulled the aft oar, as usual; and as, by this time, I was as tough and muscular as my comrads, the boat danced along the water in fine style. Although the larboard boat was much easier pulled, and had the oldest and the stoutest of the whole crew, we contrived, by unusual exertions, to keep ahead of her, till the real "tug of war" came. Then was our mettle put to the test! One of the whales was leisurely making to windward not more than half a mile off.

"Lay back, my lads!" cried P———, pale with excitement. "Keep the larboard boat astern! Never say die! That's our whale! Oh, do spring—do spring! No noise! Steady and soft's the word."

We replied to this appeal by "piling up the agony" on our oars. Away sprang our boat, trembling and quivering as she darted through the waves. She really seemed to imbibe the general excitement as she parted the clear blue water, and dashed it foaming from her bows. Onward we flew! The larboard boat was hard upon our stern; the whale rolling lazily in the trough of the sea, a few darts ahead.

"Oh, lay back! lay back!" whispered P———, trembling with eagerness not to be outdone by the mate. "Do spring, my boys, if you love gin! Now's your time. Now or never! Oh, see him! see him!—how quiet he lies! Put the beef on your oars, every mother's son of you. Pile it on! pile it on! That's the way to tell it! Our whale this time!"

"Stand up, Tabor!" cried P———, in a low voice.

Peaking his oar, Tabor sprang to his feet, and grasped a harpoon.

"Shall I give him two irons?"

"Yes; he may be wild."

Another stroke or two, and we were hard upon him. Tabor, with unerring aim, let fly his irons, and buried them to the sockets in the huge carcass of the whale.

"Stern all!" thundered P———.

"Stern all!" echoed the crew; but it was too late. Our bows were high and dry on the whale's head. Infuriated by the pain produced by the harpoons, and doubtless much astonished to find his head so roughly used, he rolled half over, lashing the sea with his flukes, and in his struggles dashed in two of the upper planks. "Boat stove! boat stove!" was the general cry.

"Silence!" thundered the second mate as he sprang to the bow, and exchanged places with Tabor. "All safe, my hearties! Stern hard! stern! stern! before he gets his flukes to bear upon us!"

"Stern all!" shouted we, and in a moment more we were out of danger. The whale now "turned flukes," and dashed off to windward with the speed of a locomotive, towing us after him at a glorious rate. We occasionally slacked line in order to give him plenty of play. A stiff breeze had sprung up, causing a rough, chopping sea; and we leaked badly in the bow planks. It fell to my lot to keep the water bailed out and the line clear as the others hauled in, a ticklish job, the last; for, as the second mate said, a single turn would wipe off a shin "as slick as goose grease."

Notwithstanding the roughness of the sea, we shot ahead with incredible swiftness; and the way we walked past the larboard boat, whose crew were tugging and laboring with all their might, was surprising.

"Hoora for the waist boat!" burst from every lip. Three hearty cheers followed, much to the annoyance of the other boat's crew and mate. We exultingly took off our hats and waved them a polite "good bye," requesting them, if they had any news to send to the windward ports, to be quick about it, as it was inconvenient for us to stop just then. I believe Solomon says it is not good to be vain glorious. At all events, while we were skimming along so gallantly, the whale suddenly milled, and pitched the boat on her beam ends. Every one who could grasp a thwart hung to it, and we were all fortunate enough to keep our seats. For as much as a ship's length the boat flew through the water on her gunwale, foaming and whizzing as she passed onward. It was rather a matter of doubt as to which side would turn uppermost, until Tabor slacked the line, when she righted. To have a boat, with all her irons, lances, gear, and oars, piled on one's head in such a sea, was rather a startling prospect to the best swimmer.

Meanwhile the whale rose to the surface to spout. The change in his course had enabled the mate's boat to come up; and we lay on our oars in order that Mr. D— might lance him. He struck him in the "life," the first dart, as was evident from the whale's furious dying struggles; nevertheless, in order to make sure, we hauled up and churned a lance back of his head.

I cannot conceive any thing more strikingly awful than the butchery of this tremendous leviathan of the deep. Foaming and breaching, he plunged from wave to wave, flinging high in the air, torrents of blood and spray. The sea around was literally a sea of blood. At one moment his head was poised in the air, the next, he buried himself in the gory sea, carrying down in his vast wake a whirlpool of foam and slime. But this respite was short. He rose again, rushed furiously upon his enemies; but a slight prick of a lance drove him back with mingled fury and terror. Whichever way he turned, the barbed iron goaded him to desperation. Now and again the intense agony would cause him to lash the water with his huge flukes, till the very ocean appeared to heave and tremble at his power. Tossing, struggling, dashing over and over in his agony, he spouted up the last of his heart's blood. Half an hour before, he was free as the wave, sporting in all the pride of gigantic strength and unrivaled power. He now lay a lifeless mass; his head toward the sun, his tremendous body heaving to the swell, and his destroyers proudly cheering over their victory.

BENEVOLENT SAILOR BOY.

As a schooner was sailing near Montauk Point, Long Island, during the past year, she was suddenly struck by a heavy gust of wind, upset, and instantly sunk. A vessel near by, which had seen the calamity, sent its boat to save from sinking any that had not gone to the bottom. On coming near where the schooner went down, they saw a little boy twelve years old, floating on some wood, and went to take him off. As they approached him, with a nobleness of soul not often manifested, he exclaimed, "Never mind me, save the captain; he has a wife and six children."

The kind-hearted boy knew that the captain's family loved him, and would need his support. Both, however, were saved.

Three days after the vessel was lost, the boy got into a car as it was passing between Boston and Fall River. As he was poor and ragged, some of the passengers who wore fine clothes, slightly shrunk from him. He took his seat quietly, and the sea-captain, who entered the car with him, told a minister what had happened. In telling the touching story, the captain was much affected, and generously added:

"The boy has only the clothes you see, sir, or he would not be so ragged. I care not much for myself, though I too lost all; but the poor lad will have a hard time of it."

Several persons who heard the story, gave the poor orphan small sums of money, and advised him to tell others what he had gone through, who would no doubt give him something. Many boys in his situation would have readily taken the advice, and told the story of their misfortunes in order to get help. But the poor boy replied, "I am not a beggar; I don't wish to beg their money."

A fine, benevolent-looking person then arose, and plead the case of the boy in such a manner, that the passengers gave ten dollars for him. The man who obtained this sum for the unfortunate boy had been a sailor and sufferer himself, and therefore knew how to pity the distressed.

EXPRESSIVE CHINESE PROVERBS.

Good iron is not used for nails, nor are soldiers made of good men.

Wood is not sold in the forest, nor fish at the tank.

Ivory does not come from a rat's mouth.

An avaricious man is like a serpent wishing to swallow an elephant.

Exaggeration is to "paint a snake and add legs."

To ride a fierce dog to capture a lame rabbit, is to attack a contemptible enemy.

To instigate a villain to do wrong, is like teaching a monkey to climb trees.

An inefficient man to do anything, is like taking a locust's shank for a carriage shaft.

To climb a tree to catch a fish, is talking much and doing nothing.

Looking for promotion, is hanging to the tail of a beautiful horse.

Two skins cannot be stripped from one cow, is to say that exertion has its limits.

To win a cat and lose a cow, expresses the folly of going to law.

Let every man sweep the snow from his own doors, and not busy himself about the frost on his neighbor's tiles, conveys a lesson for people of all nations.

A CHARACTER.—John C. Neal, the "Charcoal Sketcher," in his limning of "Tribulation Trepid, a man without Hope," thus admirably hits off that class of people who are never so happy as when they are miserable:

"How are you, Trepid? How do you feel to-day, Mr. Trepid?

"A great deal worse than I was, thank'ee; most dead, I am obliged to you; I'm always worse than I was, and I don't think I was ever any better. I'm very sure, any how, I'm not going to be anything better; and for the future you may always know I'me worse, without asking any questions, for the questions make me worse if nothing else does."

"Why, Trepid, what's the matter with you?"

"Nothing, I tell you, in particular; but a great deal is the matter with me in general; and that's the danger, because we don't know what it is. That's what kills people when they can't tell what it is: that's what's killing me. My great grandfather died of it, and so will I. The doctors don't know; they can't tell; they say I'm well enough when I'm bad enough, and so there's no help. I'm going off some of these days, right after my great grandfather, dying of nothing in particular, but of every thing in general. That's what finishes our folks."

EDUCATION IN PRUSSIA.—All children between the age of seven and fourteen years are directed to be either sent to school, or educated at home by their parents. If the latter plan is preferred, the municipal authorities are to be informed in what manner the education is provided. If the former, attendance is insured by keeping lists of absentees, and submitting them, at short stated intervals, to the inspection of Local Committees. These are empowered to summon the parents in case of negligence, and to, reprimand them; or in extreme cases, to punish them by the infliction of such penalties as are commonly awarded by police tribunals—that is, we presume, by fine and imprisonment. The parents are also deprived, as a measure of extreme rigor, of all participation in the public provision for the poor. On the other hand, if poverty be the cause of absence, the commune is to furnish needful assistance in the shape of clothes or otherwise. The number of children thus educated is stated by M. Cousin to have been 2,043,030 in the year 1831—a number which, after deducting unavoidable absentees, embraces the whole population between seven and fourteen years of age. [Fraser's Magazine.

SINGULAR IF TRUE—AND CAPITAL IF NOT TRUE. As a gentleman was passing along Fifth Street, he passed a place where some boys were playing marbles. One of them, in shooting his marble, cleverly put it under the gentleman's foot. The gentleman slipped and stumbled against a lady also passing, precipitating her along with him upon a large hog, which was examining the gutter geologically for debris. The hog, frightened out of his propriety, bolted off, and ran between the legs of another gentleman, who in falling drew the string of a kite from the hands of a boy. The kite of course fell, and in falling frightened a span of horses attached to a wagon in an alley near by. The horses ran down the alley. A man who was building a fire in a carpentershop, by which they passed, started up to see what was the matter, and in so doing dropped his lighted match among the shavings. A fire was the consequence. The engines assembled, and in the hurry consequent upon the alarm, a man fell into the track of one of them and had his arm broke—which ended this budget of accidents for the day. [Morning Herald.

TENURE OF LAND IN CHINA.—The laws which regulate agriculture and the transfer of lands, &c., are the same as those laid down by Confucius. The Emperor is the universal owner, so that all lands are held in occupation from him. The occupier can be dispossessed at pleasure. The chief security a Chinese farmer has in the possession of his land, is the means of cultivating it. When this is the case, a spot of land will descend from father to son for many generations. Many farmers lease out a portion of their land, the rent of which is partly paid in kind. By far more than one-half of the cultivated land in China is held in this manner. There is no law against mortgages, except land held by soldiers, which cannot be mortgaged. On applying for unregistered land, the applicant must prove that he possesses means to cultivate it. There are no fishing privileges nor game laws. The land tax is paid in kind and in money, and remitted in seasons of distress. Evading the land tax by a false pretence, is punished by blows and confiscation. [Montgomery Martin's China.

CULTURE OF THE CRANBERRY.—A "Practical Farmer," in the Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph, says:—"The efforts of scientific gardeners and fruit-raisers, have of late abundantly demonstrated the important fact, that the cranberry is susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation on soils of almost every description, not even excepting the lightest lands. The yield, per acre, in many instances, has exceeded three hundred bushels! a crop which, in Boston market, would, at recent prices, be worth from four to five hundred dollars." A writer, who professes to have had no inconsiderable experience in the cultivation of the cranberry, says:—"The method of preparing the ground is the same as for grain. The wild cranberry is transplanted in rows twenty inches apart; a little hoeing is all that is required, when they will spread, without care."

CITY OF THE SLEEPLESS.—There is no end to the ingenuity of luxury at Paris. The last new idea is to have a theatre which will commence at midnight and close at daylight—to have restaurants which will give meals during these same hours—and to make the city so brilliant with gas, that there shall be very little difference between any time of night and any time of day. The sleepless, and those with whom sleep is capricious, are eloquently pleaded for by the writer from whom we gather the details of the movement. There are many also to whom it would be much more healthful and convenient to rise and breakfast just before going to a ball, beginning the evening with the fresh spirits of morning, and dining after the four or six hours' exercise of waltz and polka—taking the after dinner to drive in the dewy air of sunrise, and going to bed at the heavy close of the afternoon.

All that a fish drinks goes out of his gills, is to describe a spendthrift.

VARIETY.

No well-bred person will be insolent to his inferiors. On the other hand, he will observe a scrupulous tenderness of manner towards them—a care of word and action, that shall lighten the burden of humility which they must necessarily feel, as much as possible. This refinement of heart is the most prominent characteristic of a high and noble spirit. It is the only mark of a lady or gentleman that is wholly unequivocal. When we see a person very choice of his words, and very dainty at the table, yet capable of insulting the unfortunate, or ridiculing distress, we always think of the ass in the lion's skin.

We read in a letter from Egribos, (Greece,) of the 25th ult.: "There is in the whole of Greece only one guillotine. Whenever an execution is to take place therefore, the guillotine must be taken to the place. For some time past, this instrument had been stationary at Athens, as there were so many brigands to decapitate who had been taken in the environs. The guillotine is now making the tour of the provinces, and is at this moment at Egribos, where it has just served to cut off the heads of eleven persons, one of them a priest, who were condemned to death some time ago for piracy.

The following incident goes to illustrate the great numercial force of the printers with the army. Gen. Scott, on a recent occasion, wanted to have some general orders printed at a given time. He sent directions to the office of the Tampico Sentinel to have them done. He was told that in consequence of the scarcity of hands the work could not be accomplished. He then, on morning parade, ordered all printers to step forward three paces from the ranks, when several hundred men—all printers—obeyed the order!

General Chevert, at the siege of Prague, just at the moment of placing the first ladder to mount to the assault, called to him Sergeant Pascal. "Grenadier," said he, "by that ladder you will mount the first; the sentinel will cry Qui vive! You must not reply, but continue to advance. He will demand a second and a third time, and then he will fire; he will miss you; you will kill him, and I shall be there to support you." The grenadier felt inspired, and all succeeded as foretold.

Amongst the ornaments of Trinity churchyard, New York, is a monument just erected by the corporation of Trinity church, in memory of Capt. Lawrence, who was killed on board the frigate Chesapeake, in Boston Bay, during the last war. Besides the monument, which is of brown free stone, representing a sarcophagus on an oblong base, there have been placed around it eight NINE-POUNDERS, with their muzzles upwards, each carrying a ball, and all connected by iron chains!!

Iron ploughs were first invented and used in the year 1701, by William Allen, of Lanarkshire, Scotland. Strange to say, it was a long time before they were used beyond the precincts of the little village, where alone, from ocular evidence, their superiority in every respect over the wooden ones could not be gainsayed. What an invention! and yet few inventors' names are more seldom heard than his.

A French scientific journal states that the ordinary rate per second of a man walking, is 4 feet; of a good horse in harness, 12; of a reindeer, in a sledge on the ice, 16; of an English race-horse, 43; of a hare, 88; of sound, 1038; of a twenty-four pounder cannon-ball, 1300; and of the air which, so separated, returns into space, 13,000 feet.

The rapidity with which bottles are made is almost incredible. A workman, with the assistance of a gatherer and blower, will begin and finish one hundred and twenty dozen of quart bottles in ten hours, which averages nearly two and a quarter a minute, and this is ordinarily done; and in some works the men are restricted to two per minute, to prevent the work being slighted.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

MR. EDITOR:—Your correspondent and myself, and all our readers, may yet "see eye to eye," in regard to the essence of moral law. We are not now quite as one. Our difference is important, as it determines the issue of our discussion. In his sense, no law is properly moral; for law cannot be discovered purely by the light of nature. The term includes the idea of verbal and authoritative precept. The sabbatic law, is, in this respect, precisely in the situation of every other moral law that God has established. When we call the crude conceptions and intangible impressions of untaught heathen minds, laws, we do not follow an exact mode of speech. Those are strange laws, which are as variable, and as uncertain as the wind. What are "acts of worship" among Pagans? "Equity and kindness," they often understand to mean neglect and murder. A law on these subjects is what they need. It is just what nature never furnishes. Her lessons are dark and unsatisfactory. Moral law is a verbal statement, describing a moral duty. A moral duty grows out of the nature and relations of moral beings. A moral law, therefore, is founded in the nature and relations of moral beings. Whatever may be the phraseology employed—"essential utility;" rectitude; the constitution of things; nature of the case, or the nature and relation of moral beings, the meaning is one and the same. I little reflection will show the identity of these various expressions. Whatever is essential to the glory of God and the well-being of man, if embodied in precept, is a moral law. It grows out of the nature of the case. Its authority does not rest solely on what is positive. The bases of moral law are partially palpable to the mind. This, however, does not make them moral. They are seen because they are moral; and not moral, because they are seen. Their morality lies in their "essential utility." This, so far as it is seen by the untaught heathen, is what we call natural law; using the term in its loose, metaphorical sense. Natural law is properly opposed to positive law. They indicate different ways of ascertaining duty. Moral law is properly opposed to neither of them. It relates to the duty itself. The law of love is moral and positive; and not the less moral because it is positive. There is distinction between them, but not opposition. The antagonism into which so many writers have forced them, is false and injurious. It may savor a little of irreverence, and, perhaps, provoke a sneer from such as believe in the infallibility of Butler; but, by your leave, Mr. Editor, I will just intimate a suspicion, that, when Mr. Butler penned the sentence quoted by "Indagator," his ideas were somewhat confused. Bishop Andrew Fuller, who had a clearer head than ever graced the shoulders of Bishop Butler, illumined by the serene light of common sense, has taken the crude idea from the misty laboratory of the Prelate, and given it "a local habitation and a name." Moral law, according to him, is commanded because it is right; positive law is right because commanded. The one is founded in rectitude; the other in authority. I do not think, however, that "Indagator" has correctly apprehended the meaning of Mr. Butler. His ideas, when fully developed, would be found to coincide with what I have stated. "Moral duties," he says, arise out of the case itself; prior to (apart from) "external command."

The statements of "Indagator" are not consistent with themselves. "The web of traditional interpretation" has evidently embarrassed the operations of his discriminating intellect. His ideas, on this subject, are not clear and distinct; separated from each other, by defined and visible lines. He has all along insisted, that, a law is not moral, unless it be discoverable purely by the light of nature. This, he regards as the only ground of moral obligation. The sabbatic law cannot be learned from nature alone, and for that reason is not moral. In seeming contradiction to this, he states, in the progress of his reasoning, that, "whenever our minds perceive any of those relations which are the basis of obligation—it matters not whether our knowledge of those relations be obtained through the unaided understanding; or only from the mirror of the written word—conscience decides as to our duty in the case." When I at first stated that "the fourth commandment was as clearly moral as any other precept of the Decalogue," I meant, that it was as essentially and intimately connected with "those relations, which are the basis of moral obligation." This is what "I did then, and do now, mean by 'essential utility.'" The moral government of God cannot be upheld without it.

"Some duties," he, says, "grow so plainly out of our moral relations that we feel, before inquiring into their 'essential utility,' that we ought to perform them." This sentence was, surely, not well considered. To say that a "duty grows out of our moral relations," is just saying that it rests on "essential utility." "Our moral relations," show a given course of conduct to be important and necessary—hence arises the idea of duty. The "essential utility" suggests and determines the duty. Indeed the entire paragraph to which the foregoing quotation belongs, though it accords throughout with the theory the brother has adopted, is unconsidered. "The law which commands them," says he, "is the law of conscience; the prescription which his Maker whispers to the soul of man." "This is the moral law, while the several intimations of duty given by conscience are moral precepts. This law, with all its precepts, is obviously, and must ever be, binding on mankind!" If the heathen mother, in obedience to the authoritative dictates of conscience, gives her living child to the hungry crocodile, she performs a moral duty!—acting in conformity with the only moral law in existence! God holds her responsible to this law! The truth is, conscience prescribes no law. Its function is not legislation, but execution.

"Indagator" proceeds to apply his view of moral law to the fourth commandment. Is the sabbatic law discoverable by the light of nature? It is not; nor is any other moral law. The light of nature alone defines nothing—fixes nothing. Its impressions lie at the mercy of "every wind" of circumstance. We "see from the nature of the case itself," that rest is necessary; that it should be stated and regular, and at these stated seasons it should be as perfect as possible—that God ought to be worshiped; and that there should be special seasons immediately consecrated to His service. All this is the moral basis of the law. The particular time to be devoted to these objects, God has fixed by positive law.

I consider the Sabbath as involving the idea of a "religious rest." Abstinence from all secular labor, implies intellectual or spiritual employments—in the same way that when a man sits down he ceases to stand up. I do not suppose God intended to enact Atheism by law, or inculcate the spirit of slumber. The word only embodies a religious idea. This cannot be realized unless the Sabbath be observed as a religious rest. The law refers the mind to the God of creation. Is there no design in this reference? Is it not intended that we shall think of Him? To think of God properly, is to adore Him. The Sabbath was ordained to bring the God of creation and providence to the thoughts of men. I wish "Indagator" would explain the terms of the Sabbath law. The very general remarks he makes on that head, are unsatisfactory; and differ from the law itself. He intimates, that if "the duty of keeping the Sabbath is moral, it cannot be evangelical." His meaning, I cannot imagine. He is displeased with the idea of giving "a part of our time to the immediate service of God." Does he suppose we can "consecrate" the whole "of our time to His immediate service?" It is necessary to the theory of my ingenious brother, to deny the title of all the Decalogue to the character of moral. The Sabbath law, then, only shares a fate common to its fellows. "On what authority," do we apply the phrase, moral law, to the commandments? I answer: they are seen and felt to be moral; and for this reason, are so denominated—the very authority so exalted in the communication of your correspondent. These simple and comprehensive precepts are seen to ramify through all human relations; and are acknowledged to be sufficient to regulate all human conduct. The Saviour adopts the entire law, in both its parts, without exception, and affirms it to be moral—embodying the two great moral principles, which underlie and support the moral universe of God. The Apostle Paul deems it moral, when he declares it to be "holy, just, and good."

The remarks of "Indagator," on this subject, strike me as "strange" and original. "The new legislator," says he, "in giving the substance of the moral law, concentrates the whole into a pair of fruitful precepts, neither of which is found in the Decalogue!" Look at that "pair of fruitful precepts," and then look at the Decalogue. Does it contain neither of them? It is true, the "substance" is "concentrated." Reasoning here is vain. The thing is to be settled by inspection. "Christ and his apostles," he continues, "bring from the Decalogue, and the rest of the code, indifferently, those facts of the law which were of perpetual force." What is meant by "the rest of the code?" What are "those parts of the law" taken from "the rest of the code," and which are not contained in the Decalogue? But the Lord, it seems, is particularly averse to "formal precepts," and "external injunctions;" and desires all to feel that "love in its most enlightened exercise" is "the fulfilment of all previously existing laws." Strange, then, that he gives so many "particular and formal precepts." I had always supposed that "particular and formal precepts" promoted "the exercise of the most enlightened" love. It would seem that "enlightened" love, was dependent on light. The heathen cannot have enlightened love, for the very reason that they have not "particular and formal precepts." May I ask, what ceremonial observances are inculcated in the ten commandments?

The way in which he accounts for the solemn manner in which the ten commandments were given, will not bear examination. They were of immediate concern to the Jews. So were all the other peculiarly Jewish institutions. But those fundamental principles are just as applicable to the Gentile, as to the Jew. This was not regarded by the Jew as "exclusively moral." Nor is it so regarded by others. It is regarded as containing, in a condensed form, all moral principles necessary for the regulation of human life.

"The law," it is true, "is done away in Christ." But what law? And in what sense? "The law is holy, and the commandment is holy, just, and good." Is that done away as a rule of life? "I was alive without the law once, but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." Could a law, no longer in force, so act on the conscience? The connection between the old and new economy is not so settled as to command universal consent. So acute a thinker as "Indagator," it is presumed, has not taken ground on this question, without due consideration. I cannot quite adopt his statement, however, as the expression of my creed. The old economy, I understand to embody principles, which belong to the things that "remain." There were other things national and temporary. The nature of these, the apostles point out. The ten commandments are themselves great principles, necessary to the Jew, and not less necessary to the Gentile. They support both the Jewish and the Christian edifice. All other commands lean, in a sense, on them. This is the reason, as I "suppose," why they were given amid such remarkable demonstrations. I do not see in them, any of the mingling and confusion, which "Indagator" ascribes to "the law," as he calls, I know not what. The Decalogue is as remarkable for its unity as it is for its comprehensiveness. It is, in all respects, complete. It stands in the Bible, as the sun does in the heavens, an everlasting monument of infinite wisdom—a miracle, as decided and palpable as any ever recorded. Coming down to us from the ages of a remote and obscure antiquity, it remains unrivaled. Governments, communities and individuals approximate perfection, only as they conform to its provisions. It is God's law; given by his own hand; amid prodigies and miracles, which stunned the senses, at the time; and have forever fixed the regards of the race, in all its tribes and generations.

Did the Sabbath exist before the Jew? This the scheme of "Indagator" makes it necessary for him to deny. If it existed before the Jew, it is not exclusively a Jewish institution. "The Sabbath was made for man." He, after Paley, refers the origin of the institution to the wilderness. The entire passage condemns everything he has said about it. The Lord does not there direct Moses "to consecrate the next day." The people were not ignorant of a Sabbath. The preparation for the Sabbath commenced with the people, without consulting the rulers. The existence of it was well known; but the rulers did not know that manna would be withheld on that day, "Fixed, he says, there to a particular day of an already existing week." I will have "Indagator" to prove that assertion. I deny it. The thing itself is absurd. A week, and nothing to mark it! "Traditional interpretation indeed!" The explanation he gives of the consecration of the seventh day at the time of creation, is unnatural and inconsistent. It is adopted only for the sake of a theory; but for which, it would never have been thought of. "The consecration of the seventh day in the intention of God!" The object, in part, at least, of its consecration, and the occasion of it, was to commemorate the "rest of God." "God rested the seventh day," in fact, not in intention. His resting and express order sanctified it at the time. This is the fair and natural interpretation of the passage. "The works were finished from the foundation of the world." Strange the apostle did not think of the wilderness. The Sabbath was before the Jew. The reason of the institution has no exclusive respect to the Jew. It was enforced on the Jew, because the Jew was a man; and because it embodied one of the great principles that descended, through the Jew, to all men.

BAPTIST MISSIONS IN CHINA.

The New York Recorder publishes a letter from Rev. Wm. Dean, dated at Hong Kong, January 29, 1847, from which the following is taken. We agree with the editor of the Recorder, that it must be painful to our missionary brethren, as they look abroad upon the desolations of paganism, and present to us faithful pictures of their observations, to find so little sympathy in the churches at home, and themselves so poorly supported and reinforced. The fields are white, but the churches send not the laborers:—

"I have your long and very valued letter of 30th September, for which I can now give you but a scrap. A-Bak is at Chek Choo, one of our stations, but is expected here next week, when he will probably be able to respond to your letter to him. * * * We have now with us the Rev. Mr. Mattoon and wife, for Bankok, and Rev. Mr. Quarterman, for Ningpo, all of the Presbyterian Board, expecting soon to proceed to their respective fields of labor. We hold on to the interests of our missions in China by a very precarious tenure, so far as agency is concerned, having but a single missionary at Ningpo, one in the Canton department, and one in the Tie Chiu. Should either of these men die or be disabled, the expenditure of the past, and the encouragements of the present, must apparently be lost. We have one consolation in the conviction that the interests of our enterprise are bound to the throne of Jehovah by cords, which neither the vacillations of time, nor the apathy of the church, can sunder. But while this is the ground of our hope, it in no degree lessens our obligations to duty, or the consequences of neglect. The want of piety in the church, and of patient perseverance in the work of the Lord, is accumulating a catalogue of consequences, which no man in his sober reason could covet, but which too many who bear the Christian name are laboring hard to merit. May the descent of the Holy Spirit and the moving love of Him who died for us, exclude us from all participation in this work of ruin, and give us the more delightful employment, and more desirable reward, of living to bless the world, and laboring to glorify our Master. If our hearts were warmed with love to the Saviour, should we be satisfied with our present measure of effort in his cause? Could we oftener visit the Mount of Olives, the garden where the Son of God in agony cried, till the bloody sweat proved the intensity of his feelings; could we stand in thought at the cross, and hear the cries of our dying Lord; could we realize the import and bearing of his last command, and then feel no more, and pray no more, and do no more than we now do?

"Oh, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit! Oh, for the love of Christ!—his humility, benevolence, and self-denial, and zeal, to take possession of all our hearts. Could we weep over unconverted children, and kindred, and countrymen, then should we not be willing to see the heathen go down to the dismal abodes of a pagan's eternity, without a struggle to rescue them. It is, as I have often thought, and often told my friends, while in America, it is not for the want of information but the want of love to Christ that so little is done."

THE CRUCIFIXION.

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Faint and bleeding—who is He?
By the eyes so pale and dim,
Streaming blood, and writhing limb,
By the flesh with scourges torn,
By the crown of twisted thorn,
By the side so deeply pierced,
By the baffled, burning thirst,
By the drooping, death-dew'd brow,
Son of Man! 'tis Thou, 'tis Thou!

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Dread and awful—who is He?
By the sun at noon-day pale,
Shivering rocks, and rending veil,
By earth that trembles at His doom,
By yonder saints who burst their tomb,
By Eden promised, ere he died,
To the felon at his side,
Lord, our suppliant knees we bow;
Son of God! 'tis Thou, 'tis Thou!

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Sad and dying—who is He?
By the last and bitter cry,
The ghost given up in agony;
By the lifeless body laid
In the chambers of the dead;
By the mourners come to weep
Where the bones of Jesus sleep;
Crucified! we know thee now—
Son of Man! 'tis Thou, 'tis Thou!

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Dread and awful—who is He?
By the prayer for them that slew—
"Lord, they know not what they do!"
By the spoil'd and empty grave,
By the souls he died to save,
By the conquest he hath won,
By the saints before his throne,
By the rainbow round his brow—
Son of God! 'tis Thou, 'tis Thou! [Milman.

A FOREST FUNERAL.

We had one long and weary, and somewhat unsuccessful expedition last fall. We made our calculations to go through the whole hunting district in the course of six days, and reach the river ten miles below our cabin, on Saturday, so that we might attend church there—or rather, hear preaching, in a log school-house, from a clergyman, who, once a month, visited the small settlement. We worked hard during the week, and we were not sorry at dusk on Saturday to sit down in the comfortable frame house of Colonel ———, who is the owner of some thousands of acres in that immediate vicinity. The school-house in which services were to be held, is beautifully situated in a grove of oaks, on a point around which the river bends and runs rapidly, with a lulling sound. Did you ever notice how different the voice of a river is in passing different scenes? Up in the gorge above it is wild, and rages, as if angry with the rocks it meets, and its voice is like the voice of a roused warrior. But here it goes slowly and sedately by the little "oak school-house," as it is called, and would seem to linger, as if loving the quiet scene.

It was nearly midnight of Saturday night, that a messenger came to Col. ———, requesting him to go to the cabin of a settler some three miles down the river, and see his daughter, a girl of fourteen, who was supposed to be dying. Col. ——— awoke me and asked me to accompany him, and I consented, taking with me the small package of medicines, which I always carried in the forest. But I learned soon, that there was no need of these, for her disease was past cure.

Leaving the house, we descended to the bank of the river, and stepped into the canoe that lay in an eddy, and seizing a pole, flattened at one end for a paddle, Col. ——— pushed the slight vessel out into the current, and we shot swiftly down. I have described so many night scenes that I forbear giving you this. You may imagine the scene if you choose, as I lay in the bottom, and he used now his pole and now his paddle, to guide the bark in the rapids.

"She is a strange child," said the Colonel, "her father is a strange man. They live together alone on the bank of the river. They came here three years ago, and no one knows whence or why. He has money, and is a keen shot. The child has been wasting away for a year past. I have seen her often, and she seems gifted with a marvelous intellect. She speaks sometimes as if inspired; and she seems to be the only hope of her father."

We reached the hut of the settler in less than half an hour, and entered it reverently.

The scene was one that cannot easily be forgotten. There were books and evidences of luxury and taste lying on the rude table in the center. A guitar lay on the bench near the small window, and the bed furniture, on which the dying girl lay, was as soft as the covering of a dying queen. I was, of course, startled, never having heard of these people before; but knowing it to be no uncommon thing for misanthropes to go into the woods to live and die, I was content to ask no explanations, more especially as the death hour was evidently near.

She was a fair child, with masses of long black hair lying over her pillow. Her eye was dark and piercing, and as it met mine, she started slightly, but smiled and looked upward. I spoke a few words to her father, and, turning to her, asked her if she knew her condition.

"I know that my Redeemer liveth," said she, in a voice whose melody was like the sweetest strain of an Æolian. You may imagine that the answer startled me, and with a few words of like import, I turned from her. A half hour passed, and she spoke in that same deep, richly melodious voice:

"Father, I am cold; lie down, beside me"—and the old man lay down by his dying child, and she twined her emaciated arms around his neck, and murmured in a dreamy voice, "Dear father, dear father."

"My child," said the old man, "doth the flood seem deep to thee?" "Nay, father, for my soul is strong."

"Seest thou the thither shore?"

"I see it, father; and its banks are green with immortal verdure."

"Hearest thou the voices of its inhabitants?"

"I hear them, father; as the voice of angels falling from afar in the still and solemn night-time; and they call me. Her voice, too, father,—Oh, I heard it then!"

"Doth she speak to thee?"

"She speaketh in tones most heavenly."

"Doth she smile?"

"An angel smile! But a cold, calm smile. But I am cold—cold—cold! Father, there's a mist in the room. You'll be lonely, lonely, lonely. Is this death, father?"

"It is death, my Mary."

"Thank God."

I stepped out into the night, and stood long and silently looking at the rushing river. The wife of a settler arrived soon after, and then the Colonel's excellent lady and her daughter, and we left the cabin.

Sunday morning broke over the eastern hill before we reached the school-house again; but never came light so solemnly before. The morning service in the school-house I have not room to describe now, for I have taken more time and space than I had any idea of.

As evening approached, a slow and sad procession came through the forest to the little school-house. There, with simple rites, the good clergyman performed his duty, and we went to the grave. It was in the enclosure where two of Col. ———'s children lie, a lovely spot. The sun was setting as we entered the grove. The procession was short. They were hardy men and rough, in shooting jackets, and some with rifles on their shoulders. But their warm hearts gave beauty to their unshaven faces, as they stood in reverent silence by the grave. The river murmured, and the birds sang, and so we buried her.

I saw the sun go down from the same spot, and the stars were bright before I left it—for I have always had an idea that a graveyard was the nearest place to heaven on this earth; and with old Sir Thomas Browne, I love to see a church in a graveyard, for even as we pass through the place of graves to the temple of God on earth, so we must pass through the grave to the temple of God on high. THE BATTLE FIELD.

Amid the congratulations of the secular press on the result of the late remarkable battle at Buena Vista, it is a consolation to hear an occasional voice uttering more than common-place sympathies for the bereaved, and protesting against the infatuation of war.

"Every battle field," says the Louisville Journal, "is the source of inexpressible grief, and woe, and agony. To say nothing of the gory victims that on such fields yield up their latest breath, who shall attempt to portray the agony that must pierce the hearts of their surviving friends! The battle of Buena Vista may be consecrated to fame, and poets may hymn its glories and attune their harps to sing the praise of the survivors, and to chant mournful requiems over the graves of the gallant dead; but that bloody field will also be consecrated to human woe. Each one of the thousand that were martyred to the fell spirit of war, had his friends, by whom his loss will be mourned. Many fathers there fell, leaving helpless children to struggle with the stormy tides of life, without the protection of the parental arm. Many husbands there died, leaving trusting wives to lament in bitterness of soul their loss. The dearly-beloved sons of hoary-headed sires there sighed their last breath away, to be mourned awhile, and soon to be followed to the land of spirits by those to whom their loss is irreparable. When we reflect on the desolation that will be carred to thousands of firesides—the gloom that will hang like a cloud over numberless homes, lately bright with the hues of happiness—the tears of orphans, the shrieks of wives, and mothers, and sisters, and the groans of fathers, and sons, and brothers—the wide-spread and lasting grief that will result from the carnage of the field of Buena Vista, what heart can refuse its sympathy with the bereaved, or refrain from cursing the infatuation which renders such scenes of blood necessary?"

NEITHER THIS NOR THAT.

A gentleman who had been active in aiding a missionary collection, was met the following day by one of different habits, who chided him with the folly of which he deemed him guilty, in giving to such an object, and in such profusion. It was folly, he said, to be sending heaps of money abroad, to be spent no one knew how, while there were so many unemployed, starving poor at home. "I will give £— to the poor of ———, if you will give an equal sum," said the Christian friend. "I did not mean that," replied the objector; "but," continued he, "if you must go from home, why so far? Think of the miserable poor of Ireland." "I will give £— to the poor of Ireland, if you will do the same." "I do not mean that either," was the reply. No, it is neither this nor that which this class of objectors exactly mean; but simply to veil their covetousness by blaming the proceedings of liberal men, whom, if they did not condemn, they must, for very shame, in some degree imitate.

RELIGION AND POLITICS.

A Christian has no right, any where or under any circumstances, to be any thing else than a Christian. He must ask about a political as well as about any other act, the question, Is it right or wrong? and by the answer to that question must he be guided. It is just as wicked to lie about politics as to lie about merchandise. It is just as immoral to act without reverence to the law of God at a caucus, as any where else. To prefer our own interests or the interests of a party, to that of our country, is treason against that country, and sin against God. And it matters not whether that treason be perpetrated with ballot or bayonet, at caucus or in the field. And still more, no man can more surely be putting an end to his religion. That man may yet find himself in eternity without his religion, and it may not be there quite so easy as it is on earth to resume it. "There is no shuffling." [Wayland.

THE SABBATARIANS OR SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

The Seventh-day Baptists in America date from about the same period that their brethren in England began to organize regular churches. Mr. Stephen Mumford was one of the earliest among them. He came from England to Newport, R. I., in 1665, and "brought with him the opinion, that the Ten Commandments, as they were delivered from Mount Sinai, were moral and immutable, and that it was an anti-Christian power which changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week." He joined the First-day Baptist Church in Newport, and soon won several members of that church to his views. They continued to walk with the church, however, for a time, until a difficulty arose in consequence of the hard things which were said of them by their brethren, such as, that the ten commandments, being given to the Jews, were not binding upon the Gentiles, and that those who observed the seventh day were gone from Christ to Moses. In November, 1671, they came to an open separation, when Stephen Mumford, William Hiscox, Samuel Hubbard, Roger Baster, and three sisters, entered into church covenant together, thus forming the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in America. William Hiscox was chosen and ordained their pastor, which office he filled until his death in 1704, in the 66th year of his age. He was succeeded by William Gibson, a minister from London, who continued to labor among them until he died in 1717, at the age of 79 years. Joseph Crandall had been his colleague for two years, and was selected to succeed him. When he died, in 1737, Joseph Maxson was chosen pastor, and discharged the duties of the office until 1743. He was followed by William Bliss, who served the church as pastor until his death, in 1808, at the age of 81 years. Henry Burdick succeeded him in the pastoral office, and occupied that post until a few years ago, when he died. Besides the regular pastors, this church has ordained several ministers, from time to time, who have labored with great usefulness, both at home and abroad. It has also included among its members several distinguished characters, two of whom, Richard and Samuel Ward, Governors of the State of Rhode Island, are well known to history.

For more than thirty years after its organization, the Newport Church included nearly all persons observing the seventh day in the States of Rhode Island and Connecticut; and its pastors were accustomed to hold stated meetings at several distant places, for the better accommodation of the widely-scattered members. But in 1708, the brethren living in what was then called Westerly, R. I., (comprehending all the south-western corner of the State,) thought best to form another society. Accordingly they proceeded to organize the Hopkinton Church, which had a succession of worthy pastors, became very numerous, and built three meeting-houses for the accommodation of the members in the different neighborhoods. At present there are seven churches in Rhode Island, and one in Connecticut, all in a healthy condition.

The first Seventh-day Baptist Church in New Jersey, was formed at Piscataway, about thirty miles from the city of New York, in 1705. The circumstantce from which it originated, is somewhat singular and note-worthy. "About 1701, one Edmund Dunham, a member of the old first-day Church in that town, admonished one Bonham, who was doing some servile work on Sunday. Bonham put him on proving that the first day of the week was holy by divine appointment. This set Dunham to examining the point, and the consequence was, that he rejected the first day, and received the fourth commandment as moral, and therefore unchangeable." In a short time seventeen of the church sided with Mr. Dunham, formed a church, chose him as their pastor, and sent him to Rhode Island to be ordained. He served the church until his death in 1734, and was succeeded by his son, Jonathan Dunham, who died in 1777, in the 86th year of his age. Since then the church has enjoyed the labors of several worthy pastors. From this church originated the one at Shiloh, about forty miles south-west of Philadelphia, which was organized in 1737, and now embraces more members than the mother church. There are four Seventh-day Baptist churches in New Jersey, located at Piscataway, Shiloh, Marlborough, and Plainfield.

In the State of New York, there are over thirty Seventh-day Baptist churches; the following sketch of which, is arranged according to their geographical position. A church was organized at Berlin, Rensselaer Co., about twenty-five miles from Albany, in 1780, which has gradually increased in numbers, and has established a branch in Stephentown. It has also led to the formation of a church a several miles north in the town of Petersburgh. From this neighborhood, several families removed to Adams, Jefferson Co., and organized a church, from which another has since sprung up in the adjoining town of Hounsfield. A church was organized at Brookfield, Madison Co., in 1797. As it increased in numbers, and gradually extended over a larger territory, two other churches were formed in the same town, which are now in a flourishing condition. Scattered around these churches in Central New York, are the churches at Newport, Herkimer Co., at Verona, Oneida Co., at Preston, Chenango Co., at DeRuyter, Madison Co., and at Scott, Cortland Co. Proceeding westward, there will be found ten churches in Allegany Co., one in Erie Co., one in Niagara Co., and one in Cattaraugus Co.

Other churches there are, many of them of recent origin, scattered over the south and west. There are four in Pennsylvania, four in Virginia, six in Ohio, two in Wisconsin, one in Indiana, and one in Iowa. Besides these, there are numerous little societies of Sabbath-keepers, who are accustomed to meet weekly for prayer and conference, but who have not yet been organized into regular churches.

The following list of the churches, together with the number of their members and the dates of their organization, is taken from the minutes of the Seventh-day Baptist General Corference for 1846:—

From the foregoing it will be seen, that there are sixty-four churches connected with the Conference, and that the number of communicants is above six thousand. The number of ordained ministers is fifty-eight, and of licentiates twenty-four. The following table, of the number of communicants from year to year since 1807, may be interesting in this connection, as serving to show the gradual increase of the denomination:—

ANSWER TO "QUESTIONS FOR SOLUTION."

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Eld. Langworthy's 'Questions for solution' appeared in your paper some time since, and not having received answers, to my knowledge, I send you the following suggestions:—

"1st. What are the means mostly to be used to produce a revival of pure religion in the churches?"

Let the teachers preach sound doctrine, trusting in God, while themselves and professed believers practice the teachings, "calling upon the name of the Lord," and a revival of "pure religion" will surely follow. Let us try it.

"2d. What is the best plan for churches to adopt in raising money for sustaining missionary and other benevolent operations?"

The simplest and most natural—that which is attended with the least ostentatious display. Let individual members "lay by them in store," and at the proper time every one give as "God hath prospered him," and if there is the genial warmth of "pure religion," there will be no mistake but what the required amount will be forthcoming; and a want of this amount is only a sure index of the state of religion.

If the amount is wanting, we must get up a revival of "pure religion" as the first step towards effective effort in any benevolent enterprise. Get the church right, and the world will soon come to its aid, for "truth is mighty and will prevail." LUD.

Brookfield, April, 1847.

P. S. The 3d question belongs to others to answer, though I have an opinion. L.

Another Translation of the New Testament.—Dr. Perkins, of the mission to the Nestorians in Persia, in a letter dated November 30th, gives the gratifying intelligence, that the last sheets of the New Testament, in modern Syriac, were then passing through the press. "The most interesting auspices, he says, under which we give the Nestorians the New Testament, is found in the present state of our field. The unspeakably precious shower of divine grace, that has been descending upon this people, during most of this year, has wrought a state of preparation for the acception of the truth in the love of it, and created an eager, longing desire for the Word of God." The American Bible Society defrays the expense of this edition of the New Testament.

SABBATH LEGISLATION.

Albany, May 4, 1847.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Since I wrote last, the Bill for the protection of Sabbath-keepers has assumed a variety of shapes. Mr. Barlow, of the Senate, disliking the Bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, (which has been published in the Recorder,) moved that it be referred again to that Committee. He then drafted an entirely different Bill, which the Committee refused to adopt. What the terms of that Bill were, I cannot ascertain, as it is in the hands of Mr. Spencer, who is absent. The Committee then reported the following Bill:—

Sec. 1. No person whose religious faith and practice is to keep the seventh day of the week as a day set apart by divine command as the Sabbath of rest from labor, and dedicated to the worship of God, shall be subject to perform military duty or jury duty in a justice's court on such day.

Sec. 2. Any person who shall knowingly and maliciously cause or procure any process issued from a justice's court, in a civil suit, to be served on said day upon any such person, or who shall so serve any such process, which shall be made returnable on said day, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to fine or imprisonment or both.

Sec. 3. Any person who shall in like manner procure any such suit pending in such court against any person of such religious faith and practice, to be adjourned to be tried on said day, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to like punishment.

Sec. 4. The Act entitled, "An Act in relation to Seventh-day Baptists," passed May 7, 1839, is hereby repealed.

This Bill was passed without opposition in the Senate. The Committee would not consent to make it any better for us. The Bill was then sent down to the Assembly, and reported on favorably by Mr. Balcom, of the Judiciary Committee. It came up for a third reading on the 29th ult., and was warmly advocated by Mr. Balcom, and opposed by several members on account of the penalties connected with it, and by one member because one Sabbath was enough. The vote being taken on its final passage, sixty voted for and seventeen against it. Sixty-five votes being necessary for its passage, it was declared lost. A re-consideration was then moved and carried for the purpose of trying it in a fuller house. The next day it came up, and was amended and passed as follows:—

1st. Add at the end of the first section the words, "Except such persons shall be subject to perform military duty on such day in cases of invasion, insurrection, or in time of war.

2d. Strike out Sections 2 and 3, and insert the following:—

Sec. 2. No process issued by any Justice of the Peace, shall be served or executed on the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, by or upon any person whose religious faith and practice is to keep such seventh day of the week as a day set apart by divine command as the Sabbath of rest from labor, and dedicated to the worship of God, except in cases of the breach of the peace, or apprehension of persons charged with crime and midemeanor; and no process issued by any Justice of the Peace against any person whose religious faith and practice is to keep such seventh day of the week as the Sabbath of rest from labor, and dedicated to the worship of God, shall be made returnable on such seventh day of the week, except in cases of the breach of the peace, or apprehension of persons charged with crime and misdemeanor.

Sec. 2. No Justice of the Peace shall knowingly, where objection is made, adjourn any civil suit or proceeding to which any person is party whose religious faith and practice is to keep the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, as a day set apart by divine command as the Sabbath of rest from labor, and dedicated to the worship of God, for trial or hearing on such seventh day of the week.

Mr. Balcom consented to these amendments, as it could be passed in no other form while so few members were present.

The Bill was then returned to the Senate, and referred again to the Judiciary Committee. I then conferred with the Committee, and explained our wants, and requested that they would so modify the Bill that both Houses could agree. This morning Mr. Lester reported the Bill, concurring in the first amendment of the Assembly, and non-concurring with the second. On conferring with some of both Houses, it was thought it would be fatal to the passage of the Bill to bring it up again for action before the adjournment of the Legislature, especially as there are important bills before it to be acted upon by the 12th inst., and very thin houses. In the mean time our Associations can take the several bills, and frame one that they will be satisfied with, and present it when the Legislature shall meet in September next. Mr. Beach, of the Senate, and Mr. Balcom, of the Assembly, and others, have taken a deep interest in the passage of the Bill, and will aid us still farther.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE AND THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

Several meetings were held in New York last week, for the purpose of forming an Evangelical Alliance for the United States. A question relative to the admission of Seventh-day Baptists came up at the first meeting, and was discussed with considerable interest. The following report of the discussion is given in the Y. Y. Tribune. We publish it to-day without comment, but may have something to say about it hereafter:—

The proposed Constitution for the Alliance was then taken up, and all that part of the Preamble copied from the statement of the General Alliance, unanimously adopted. A portion introduced by the Committee who prepared the Constitution, relating to the right and duty of reading the Scriptures, the duty of keeping the Sabbath, forms of worship, diffusion of the Scriptures, and Slavery, was, on the suggestion of Dr. Cox, postponed till after the Constitution should be considered and voted on. The first thing in order, he said, was to form the organization; after that any peculiar declaration or modification of principles might appropriately be made.

The Preamble and Constitution having been approved, article by article, on the question of its adoption as a whole, it was inquired if the article in the preamble relating to the desecration of the Lord's Day, would not exclude the Seventh-day Baptists from the Alliance? In this connection an interesting and prolonged discussion arose as to whether the conscientious keeping of the seventh instead of the first day of the week should constitute a bar to membership, and as to the mode in which, in case it should not, the fact that no such exclusion was intended should be expressed.

Rev. Mr. Kirk believed that a doctrinal basis was necessary, and if the question of Slavery should come up, he should take that ground; it was necessary, not as a Church creed, but as a ground of Christian union. He was not in favor of excluding the brethren in question.

Dr. Forsyth recollected that when the original language was adopted in London, the same question was raised by a Seventh-day Baptist, and the Alliance refused to use any other form of speech than the expression "Lord's Day." In their view it was not a question of language, but of principle. If it was desired to act together with the Seventh-day Baptists, the phrase must be stricken out. But each party regarded the other as departing from the true way of the Lord, and could not adopt each other's language. Moreover, the expression, as it stands, contained the view held by the majority of Evangelical Christians, and could not be changed to suit extreme or exceptional cases.

Subsequently Dr. Forsyth said that he did not hold the idea that the Seventh-day Baptists should not be admitted. He must object to altering phraseology in respect to a verbal proposition while the views of its subject held by different parties were diametrically opposed. He was willing that the denomination spoken of should come in on such a basis as might be mutually agreed, provided it was the will of the Alliance that nothing should be said on the question of the Sabbath, otherwise he should not. The clause should be stricken out, or it should stand wholly as it was.

Mr. Kirk was averse to any explanatory resolution or note, on the ground that there could be no end to explanations of this kind. The article containing the clause discussed ought never to have come into the statement. The Alliance was formed to promote the greatest possible object, the Union of the Disciples of Christ. This ought to be held as its object without reference to others. At the meeting in London, different branches of the Alliance had different objects. The Scotch brethren desired to attack Papacy; the English brethren also had their own purposes. Had this article not been introduced no difference on this point would have been called out. He was averse to explanatory resolutions on this article. Beside, he did not wish to commit himself to his Baptist brethren on the point. He should fight them in love till death upon it, as he should other brethren on other points, and did not wish his sword arm to be disabled. If the Seventh-day Baptists could come in as the article stands, he should wish to have them, but would rather they should be excluded than incur the evils of making explanations of the article.

The Chair had objections to the fourth article. Other commandments might as well be specified as peculiar objects for the Alliance as that relating to keeping the Sabbath. Profanity, adultery or Sabbath-breaking were not forbidden any more than stealing. If one was to be specified by the Alliance, why not the other? If possible he should prefer to strike out the article altogether.

[At this point a short recess was taken, after which the discussion in relation to the expression "Lord's Day" and the Seventh-day Baptists was resumed.]

Rev. Mr. Kirk said that the Conference had arrived at an important stage of its proceedings. He was not fully prepared to act maturely, and would prefer, as the debate hitherto had been rather informal, that it should be continued in an informal conversation, and that a committee should be appointed to be instructed by such conversation as to the sense of the house, and to mature a resolution properly expressive of it. Possibly it might be found advisable to strike out the article, and to adopt the section without it. At present he was not prepared to vote for any thing.

Dr. Lewis made an impressive argument in favor of the propriety of singling out the fourth commandment as especially sacred.

Dr. Lansing was troubled by nothing except the article in question, and wished to have the Preamble altered in that respect.

Dr. DeWitt made a statement of reasons for opposing the striking out of the article.

Rev. P. P. Sandford was opposed to any change. He would deprecate the going forth of any thing which should imply that the Conference recognized any other day than the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath. Had the phrase never appeared in the preamble it might very innocently have been left in silence. But being there, to alter it would imply that the Conference did not regard the subject with a sufficient sense of its true character.

Dr. Cox was very much pleased by the prevailing disposition. He saw nothing like party issue or pushing things, and by the grace of God meant to keep clear of it.

Rev. A. Wheelock, during the recess, had been looking over the proceedings of the meeting in London and found that Dr. Hoby, a Baptist pastor of London, had brought up the subject there, and had offered an amendment striking out the clause excluding the Seventh-day Baptists. His motion was not seconded, little attention was paid to it, and the subject was dropped. He could see no serious evils in appending an explanatory note which would relieve several thousands of Christians in the United States and enable them to fraternize with the Alliance.

Rev. Mr. Kirk would welcome Seventh-day Baptists, but should vote against appending an explanatory note for two reasons. In the first place, the Alliance did not undertake to clear the wheat-field of tares, nor to include within itself all regenerate men and no others; it did not pretend to render the visible Church coëxtensive with the invisible, and to embrace all Christians. It undertook to lay a broad intellectual basis—a doctrinal basis. It did not take up practical questions, or pretend to embrace all subjects, and can go no farther. In trying to bring in all, interminable differences would arise. In the second place, he did not think the brethren referred to were so near right as the other evangelical denominations, and would not lend any influence, even in a note, in expressing an apparent indifference as to the day which should be observed as the Sabbath. He should, therefore, vote against any explanatory note, and welcome the Seventh-day Baptists.

Rev. G. B. Abbott spoke in favor of leaving the Preamble to stand as it was.

Finally the question was settled by the refusal of the Conference to make any explanation in regard to the subject.

Having disposed of this difficulty, the meeting proceeded to consider the subject of slavery, with a view to decide whether the Alliance should take any action upon it. The debate upon that point lasted something over three days, and was finally concluded on Sabbath afternoon last, by the adoption of the following declaration:—

"That while the Evangelical Alliance admits into its bosom such persons only as are respectable members of Evangelical Churches, we are nevertheless persuaded that the great object of the Association, the promotion of a larger Christian Union, may be furthered by a frank expression of our sentiments on the subject of slavery. We therefore declare our deep unalterable opposition to this stupendous evil, and we hold it to be the duty of all men by all wise and Christian means to seek its entire extirpation and removal from the land. Still the one object of the Alliance shall be steadily kept in view, which is the promotion of Christian Union and brotherly love."

Text-Book and Treasury.—Such is the title of a work, compiled by the Religious Tract and Book Society for Ireland, and republished in this country by Lewis Colby & Co., of 122 Nassau-st. It is divided into two parts of one hundred and fifty pages each. The first part contains Scripture texts arranged to illustrate nearly every religious subject of a practical nature which is likely to come up in a Christian family. The second part is designed to afford a general view of the manners, customs, and history of the Jews and other nations mentioned in Scripture, and of the geography, natural history, and art of the ancients, together with a variety of other subjects recorded or referred to in the sacred volume. The book can not fail to be of great service to ministers of the Gospel, Sabbath-school teachers, and to individuals of every class who desire to study the Holy Scriptures systematically and thoroughly.

A Mormon Preacher.—The Christian Secretary says that a Mormon preacher, known as Elder J. G. Adams, is figuring to some extent in Boston just at present in the double capacity of preacher and play-actor. He was caricatured by a Mr. Estabrook in a scandalous little paper printed in Boston. The Mormon Elder provided himself with a cow-hide and at the first opportunity gave Mr. Estabrook a flogging. After he had finished his business, he addressed a crowd of some three hundred persons who had assembled to see the fun, as follows:—

"Gentlemen, I am J. G. Adams. This person, without the slightest provocation on my part, has wantonly assailed my character in a paper of which he is the editor, and for this I have punished him. I am going to play an engagement at the Providence theatre, and, please God, will return here on Sunday in season to preach the gospel!"

Baptists in England.—The (English) Baptist Reporter, for 1846, furnishes reports of one thousand and six public baptisms, when ten thousand five hundred and twenty-nine professed disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ were "buried with him by baptism." Of this number seventy-five were teachers and one hundred and five scholars in Baptist Sunday Schools. Ten Roman Catholics; 18 Independents; 13 Presbyterians; 147 Episcopalians; 1 Quaker; 1 Jew; 4 Unitarians; 1 Presbyterian minister; 1 Episcopalian; 7 Methodist, and 6 Independent ministers, were also among the number.

Blackwood's Magazine for April has been republished by Leonard Scott & Co. Among its articles we find a long review of Carlyle's "Cromwell," and a pretty full account of "How they manage Matters in the Model Republic." The office of publication is removed to 79 Fulton-st., corner of Gold-st., entrance in Gold.

☞ We have on hand a variety of communications, poetic and prosaic, which shall receive attention at as early a day as possible.

General Intelligence.

WAR NEWS.

Important war news has been received within the past week.

The first that came was an account of the battle of Sacramento, defeat of the enemy, and capture of Chihuhua. According to the official dispatches of Col. Doniphan, the loss of the enemy was his entire artillery, 10 wagons, masses of beans and pinola, and other Mexican provisions, about three hundred killed, and about the same number wounded, many of whom have since died, and forty prisoners.

Next came an account of the battle of San Pasqual, between the troops under Gen. Kearney and a party of about 160 Californians, under a brother of the late Governor. The number of killed among the enemy is not known; of our own men some twenty were killed, and a much larger number wounded.

This was followed by an account of the capture of Tuspan by the squadron under Com. Perry. Four of our men were killed in this engagement, and fourteen wounded, among whom were four officers.

But the great battle was fought at Cerro Gordo. It commenced on the 17th ult., by Gen. Twiggs's advance division. It was renewed on the 18th by the full American force under Gen. Scott. A complete rout ensued. Six thousand Mexicans were taken prisoners, and near five hundred Americans were killed and wounded. Gen. La Vega and five other Mexican Generals were taken. Santa Anna escaped after his defeat. Had it not been for the cowardice of Santa Anna, who ran before the battle was half lost, the slaughter would have been far greater. He escaped by cutting a saddled mule from the harness of his magnificent coach, mounting him, and subsequently taking to the chapporal. The service, of massive silver, all his papers, money, and every thing in the carriage—even his dinner—were captured.

The following items are taken from an account of the battle given by Kendall, of the N. O. Picayune:—

The Mexican loss upon the hights was awful—the ground in places is covered with the dead! Among the bodies found was that of Gen. Vasquez, and near him was Col. Palacio, mortally wounded. Their loss in the retreat was terribly severe—every by-path was strewn with the dead.

La Vega was in command of the Cerro Gordo on the first day of the fight, but a deserter from our dragoons, a German, going into their camp at night and informing them that the main attack was to be on the right of their line —the work so fiercely attacked by Gen. Pillow —he changed places with Gen. Vasquez. The latter was killed—La Vega defended his post until the lines of the enemy were completely turned. Several Mexican Colonels have been killed. A brother of Gen. La Vega, a Colonel of artillery, was severely, and, as is supposed, mortally wounded.

The officers and men of the Mexican army are to be turned loose on their parole not again to take up arms during the war. Fifteen of their officers have refused to sign, but have given their parole of honor to report themselves, without delay, to Col. Wilson at Vera Cruz, as prisoners of war. Among these are Gens. La Vega and Jarero, the latter Governor of Perote during the time the Texan prisoners were there, and distinguished for his good treatment of them. The officers will either be kept in the Castle of San Juan de Ulua, or else proceed to the United States.

The American loss in killed and wounded is estimated at five hundred.

The army is to advance toward Mexico immediately.

A letter from Monterey, dated April 14, says that three days ago the Alcalde and Priest of a small town some 20 miles distant, on the road to China, came in and reported to Gen. Taylor the murder of 24 Mexicans, at Gualopa, a small rancho about six miles from Ramus. The murder was committed, they say, by a party of Americans numbering about 20; and was done in the night. The murdered men were first made prisoners, tied, and afterward all shot through the head.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Coledonia reached Boston on the 6th of May, bringing English papers to April 20. The following summary embraces the principal news:—

Throughout the last fortnight a heavy business has been transacted in wheat, flour and Indian corn, and the depression which prevailed in the latter end of March has given way to buoyancy and activity.

The state of affairs in Ireland is improving. Matters have reached their worst and are now mending. The latest accounts of Mr. O'Connell's health are very unsatisfactory.

Two millions of human beings, according to the Dublin Nation, are destined to perish by this year's famine in Ireland! a population sufficient for a powerful State—and two-thirds of our own at the time of the Revolutionary struggle. The mind shudders at the bare contemplation of the fact; what then must be the feelings of the spectators of the horrible calamity?

A letter from Constantinople mentions an act of liberality on the part of the Sultan, which does him great credit. Upon hearing of the sufferings of the Irish, the Sultan caused to be handed to Hon. Mr. Wellesley, £1,000, to be disposed of by him in the best way towards their alleviation.

The U. S. ship-of-war Jamestown arrived at Cork on the 12th of April, in fifteen days from Boston. Her arrival was greeted with much popular enthusiasm; an enthusiasm which need not be ashamed of its cause—for the arrival was a victory—a partial one to be sure—over a real enemy, an enemy of all mankind, unsparing famine. The bells of the city were rung, and there was much excitement in the streets. A deputation was sent on board the Jamestown to Capt. Forbes, who made an appropriate reply. He and his officers were sumptuously entertained at a public dinner on the 15th, by the people of Cork, and the next day a meeting of the inhabitants was held to express their gratitude to the Americans for their timely relief.

The Rochester, from Liverpool for New York, on the morning of the 18th ult., struck on the north end of 'Black-water Bank,' between Dublin and Wexford, within 12 miles of the latter place, and immediately filled. It is feared she will be a total loss. A greater part of the passengers were brought into Wexford by the Arklow, and the remainder were being saved by other boats.

In Spain, at the Palace of the Escurial, is being performed, after the most approved fashion, the farce of "Three weeks after Marriage," in which the most Catholic Queen and her royal husband take the principal parts. There seems but little "passional attraction" between them. It is difficult to tell what cause of quarrel, if any, exists; in this respect regal have no advantage over other matrimonial squabbles.

Portugal is suffering as much as ever from bad government and defective institutions. The Queen considers herself in personal danger in the Capital, while the Provinces are mostly in possession of the rebels.

M. Ronge is undergoing a month's imprisonment at Breslau, for preaching without permission of the authorities.

A good deal of discussion and correspondence has appeared in the papers since the sailing of the Cambria, respecting Mr. Frederick Douglass, an anti-slavery lecturer, who went out passenger in that vessel.

SUMMARY.

The N. Y. Tribune says that on Monday last the Commissioner of the Alms-House informed the inmates of Bellevue that they must get ready to move to the new Alms-House on Blackwell's Island. There they would be expected to labor as much as they had the strength, and would be wholly deprived of liquor. On Tuesday afternoon, a steamboat was got ready to carry them to their new home, when some 200 of them expressed a wish to be dismissed into the street, rather than go to the island; and a large number, who were afraid that they could not obtain permission, scaled the fences, and got off in that way. About four-fifths of them are foreigners.

An atrocious attempt to murder was committed in Brooklyn one evening last week. As Mr. Alvah Hotchkiss was passing through Clinton-st., on his way home, he was knocked down, by a slug-shot, as is supposed, and his pockets rifled of their contents. When found, some time afterward, he was insensible, his skull broken, and the brain exposed. He was not expected to survive. The perpetrator has not been arrested, although a large reward has been offered by the city authorities for his apprehension.

Captain Tobin says that the battle ground of Buena Vista is half classic—as it is the site where 12,000 Spanish regulars were cut to pieces by 18,000 rancheros in the war with Spain for Mexican independence. A note appended to some of the diagrams of the field, which have been published, says, "it is distinguished in Mexican history for one of the bloodiest battles that was fought during the revolution of 1823 and 1824."

The Water-Cure Establishment of Priessnitz at Grafenberg was visited during the last year by 1,022 patients. Of these 555 were Germans, (246 Austrians, 236 Prussians, 75 Hamburghers,) 165 Russians and Poles, 127 Englishmen, 65 Hungarians, 26 Danes, 21 Americans, and 63 inhabitants of other countries. There were also present 14 physicians, part of them as patients and part as students of the cure.

There are now four parties of engineers engaged in surveys for the Hudson River Railroad. The location is expected to be settled by the latter part of this month, from this City to Fishkill, a distance of sixty miles. It is understood that the directors will, immediately after the location is settled, put this, the most important portion of the line, under contract.

A correspondent of the Rochester Democrat, writing from Avon, May 3, says:—The cry of "Winter-killed Wheat," won't answer for this region. I have traveled for many miles in this vicinity, and inquired of farmers generally in reference to the subject, and the universal response is, that the crop gives indications as promising as last season.

In the New York Evening Post, it was some time since published, that three hundred and eighty bodies of human beings, who had died from drunkenness, were gathered up in the streets of this city by the coroner, and buried, in the year 1845, at the public expense. If this number died in the streets, we leave to conjecture how many died from the same cause in other places.

As the Sunday train of the Petersburg railroad was crossing a bridge near Welden, North Carolina, the props gave away, and the mail and passenger cars were torn from their wheels and precipitated into the river. No passengers were seriously injured, as the locomotive had crossed the bridge, and held the whole train of wheels suspended.

One of the national-school masters in Ireland, says a correspondent, remarked that this time twelve months he had one hundred and forty school children, this day he had not one. Half, he said, are dead, and the remainder are unable to attend for want of sufficient food and raiment, and he is himself obliged to get some situation on the roads to support a large family.

Messrs. Coe & Brown, lawyers, received the large fee of eight thousand dollars, from the corporation of Memphis, Tennessee, for attending to a recent suit of that city before the Supreme Court at Nashville, involving the right of city wharfage.

On Friday or Saturday night, says the Times, between 20 and 25 Negroes, belonging to different plantations in Kenton Co., Ky., across the river, left for parts unknown, via the State of Ohio. We learn that the aggregate amount of reward offered for their apprehension is over four thousand dollars.

The ship Stephen Baldwin arrived at New Orleans after a voyage of seventy-four days from Liverpool. According to the manifest there were 161 passengers on board at the time she started. Of this number 24 died at sea, and at least two-thirds of those who arrived were mere living skeletons. Some of them were so worn down by sickness and hunger, that they had not the strength to walk, and had to be conveyed in vehicles to the Charity Hospital. Sixty were admitted to this institution on the first day of their arrival, many of them so destitute of clothing that decency was shocked in beholding them.

We learn from the Lynn (Mass.) News, that John Augustus, the true philanthropist, stated at a temperance meeting in Lynn, a few days ago, to show the good effects of the decision of the Supreme Court in favor of the license law, and the good effects of enforcing the law, that there were but eighty commitments for drunkenness, this year, during the same length of time, and at the same season, in which there were one hundred and eighty last year.

A little girl (colored) was kidnapped from Salem, Ohio, on the 25th ult. The kidnapper pretended to come from a man with whom a brother of the child lived, with directions to take her there, and no suspicion was excited till some time after he had gone. Pursuit was made as soon as the real state of the case was known, but the scoundrel had crossed the line, and was safe in Virginia with his prey.

The news by the Caledonia gives very general satisfaction, especially to the produce dealers. The immediate effect has been a rise in all descriptions of breadstuffs, and an influx of still larger profits to the holders. There is, however, among some of the stock dealers, an apprehension of a crisis in the monetary affairs of England and France, which may extend its effects to this country.

As some laborers were engaged in pulling down a store, in Liberty-st., between Nassau-st. and Broadway, the chimney fell, and injured four of the workmen. Three of them were taken to the City Hospital, where it is said their recovery is considered doubtful. The fourth was slightly wounded on the head, and another escaped injury.

A Charleston paper gives the important places between Vera Cruz and Mexico, one attained and the other yet to be gained by our a army, with their distances as follows:—From Vera Cruz to Jalapa 70 miles; to Perote 55; to Puebla 95; to Mexico 80. Total, 300 miles. Between Jalapa and Perote the road ascends 9,900 feet. About half way between Puebla and Mexico; the descent is rapid for about 20 miles.

The London journals estimate that the immigration from Ireland alone, in the coming six months, will be from 200,000 to 300,000. There will probably be as many from Germany, Switzerland, and France, besides many from England and Scotland; amounting in all, probably, to 600,000. Make room for them at the west.

On the occasion of the illumination in Baltimore, on Wednesday evening, the whole of Barnum's Hotel, including the lights in the transparencies, exceeding 3,000 in number, were lighted in less than half a minute, and at the Exchange Hotel, 1,700 candles were lit in five seconds. The wicks were previously wet with spirits of turpentine, and persons stationed to light at a given signal.

A great Emperor of India, little known in Europe, but who nevertheless was the chief of thirty millions of men, has recently died. We mean MIN-MEAH, the ruler of Anam, Sovereign of Cochin-China, of Tonquin and of Cambodia. It is said that his successor is determined to open the ports of the empire of Anam to the vessels of all commercial nations.

Rowland Hill stated, at a meeting held in Liverpool, that the average amount of money returned to the dead letter office, enclosed in letters which were refused, amounted to £400,000 per annum; and many thousands of pounds were yearly found in letters which had absolutely no address upon them whatever.

The New London Advocate states that five out of eight whale ships, which have arrived at that port the present season, have been withdrawn from the whaling business, and, tempted by the uncommon rates of freight, engaged for the merchant service. The Advocate thinks that the whaling business is overstocked with vessels, and that it would be better to divert even more of them to the merchant service.

The Buffalo Express says that out of thirty-nine persons enlisted by Captain Wilder, of Rochester, nine, or about one-fourth of the whole, were shoe-makers. The very large arrival of this class of mechanics from Germany, and other countries, is fast depressing the wages of boot and shoe-makers, down to the European standard.

An English paper says: "There are at this moment in London three pretenders, viz: the Count de Montemolin, aspiring to the crown of Spain; Don Miguel, aspiring to that of Portugal; and Prince Louis Napoleon, entertaining hopes of yet wearing a revolutionary diadem in France."

Indian corn is worth two dollars and sixteen cents a bushel in England, and but little more than nine cents in Illinois. Thirty thousand bushels have recently been purchased near Springfield, Ohio, at twenty-five cents per bushel.

A note which was lately paid into the Bank of England was dated the 28th of July, 1736, No. 94, value £25. This note, which had been out 111 years, would, at compound interest, have produced £6,400 at five per cent.

SUGGESTIONS TO OUR FRIENDS.—Five numbers more will complete the third volume of the Sabbath Recorder. In making two or three suggestions to our friends, just at this time, we trust that we shall not be regarded as giving too much prominence to our own affairs.

The first suggestion we wish to make is, that a considerable number of new names ought to be added to our list of subscribers before the commencement of the new volume. Our list has always been too small to enable us to go on without fear of embarrassment. Besides this, there are generally at the close of a volume more or less subscribers parting company with us, whose places must be supplied. How shall this be done? It will not do to keep traveling agents in the field for that exclusive object, but we must rely mainly upon the voluntary assistance of our friends. We doubt not that a very little effort on the part of each individual who feels anxious to have the Recorder sustained, would easily accomplish all that is desired. Shall not that effort be made? We trust that many of our friends will answer, Yes, and that we shall see the fruit of their decision before the volume closes.

The second suggestion we wish to make is, that some of our subscribers have not yet paid for the current volume, and ought to give immediate attention to it. A large majority of our subscribers, we rejoice to say, have promptly remitted their subscriptions, for which they have our thanks. But in publishing a paper, the expenses of which are about equal to the income, it is easy for a few individuals to create serious embarrassment by neglect on this point. In many cases the publication of religious papers has been rendered impossible by delinquency on the part of those who professed to be firm friends of the cause to which the paper was devoted. We hope that those who are indebted to us will embrace the first opportunity to forward what is due. That would be the best encouragement they could give us to go forward in the work we have undertaken.

DR. CHARLES H. STILLMAN takes this mode of giving notice to those who have made inquiries, that he is prepared to receive under his care a limited number of patients affected with diseases of the Eyes, particularly those requiring surgical operations, at his residence, Plainfield, N. J

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, }
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

Miscellaneous.

From Whittier's Supernaturalism of New England.

A YANKEE GHOST.

Guilt or remorse for injuries inflicted upon those whose forgiveness cannot be known, and whose power of retaliation in their new condition cannot be estimated, is the prolific mother of spectral annoyances. Whomsoever we have injured, however despicable and weak while living, becomes formidable by death. I have noticed in our thrifty, money-loving community, that there is a very common notion, that the disposal of an estate contrary to the known wishes of the testator, is the most potent spell of all others for raising Yankee Ghosts. Among the many anecdotes which corroborate this opinion, I must content myself with citing one, the scene of which happens to be in an adjoining town.

Some years ago an elderly woman, familiarly known as "Aunt Morse," died, leaving a handsome little property. No will was found, although it was understood before her decease that such a document was in the hands of 'Squire S., one of her neighbors. One cold winter evening, some weeks after her departure, 'Squire S. sat in his parlor, looking over his papers, when, hearing some one cough in a familiar way, he looked up, and saw before him a little, crooked old woman, in an oil-nut colored woolen frock, blue and white tow and linen apron, and striped blanket, leaning her sharp pinched face on one hand, while the other supported a short black tobacco pipe, at which she was puffing in the most vehement and spiteful manner conceivable.

The 'Squire was a man of some nerve; but his first thought was to attempt an escape, from which he was deterred only by the consideration that any effort to that effect would necessarily bring him nearer to his unwelcome visitor.

"Aunt Morse," he at length said, "for the Lord's sake get right back to the burying ground! What on earth are you here for?"

The apparition took her pipe deliberately from her mouth, and informed him that she came to see justice done with her will; and that nobody need think of cheating her, dead or alive. Concluding her remark with a shrill emphasis, she replaced her pipe, and puffed away with renewed vigor. The 'Squire had reasons for retaining the document at issue, which he had supposed conclusive, but he had not reckoned upon the interference of the testator in the matter. Aunt Morse, when living, he had always regarded as a very shrew of a woman, and he now began to suspect that her recent change of condition had improved her, like Sheriden's ghost, "the wrong way." He saw nothing better to be done under the circumstances than to promise to see to it that very evening.

The ghost nodded her head approvingly, and, knocking the ashes out of her pipe against the chimney, proceeded to fill it anew with a handful of tobacco from her side pocket. "And now, 'Squire," said she, "if you'll just light my pipe for me, I'll be agoing."

The 'Squire was, as has been intimated, no coward; he had been out during the war in a Merrimac privateer, and had seen sharp work off Fayal, but, as he said afterwards, "it was no touch to lighting Aunt Morse's pipe." No slave of a pipe bearer ever handed the chiboque to the Grand Turk with more care or reverence, than the 'Squire manifested on this occasion. Aunt Morse drew two or three long preliminary whiffs, to see that all was right, pulled her blanket over her head, and slowly hobbled out at the door. The 'Squire being true to his promise, was never again disturbed. It is right in conclusion to say, that there were suspicions at that time, that the ghost was a reality of flesh and blood—in short, one of the living heirs of Aunt Morse, and not the old lady herself.

AN OLD MAN'S REMINISCENCE.

I had quarreled with my little brother Willie, who had not quite passed his sixth year. I was two years his senior, and he was the only being I ever loved. Willie was a frail and affectionate little fellow, not meant to struggle long through this dark and weary existence. The little golden locks fell upon his slender and beautiful neck, and his large blue eyes wore a soft and confiding expression, which called forth irresistibly your love and protection. I went to the corner of the garden, and continued building a house we had begun together. The evening was fast coming on, and I still required about a dozen bricks to finish it; I therefore stalked up to one which, after great trouble, he had just completed, and pulled down part of the walls for that purpose. The little fellow could not bear it, and snatched them back from me. I, in a rage, struck him violently on the breast, and he fell to the ground.

In a short time he recovered his breath, and said:

"Jamie, tell Annie to come and carry me in, I cannot walk; my breast is very, very sore."

I slunk quietly in at the back of the house. In a few moments I heard a low and mournful whisper go through the dwelling; my little Willie had broken a blood vessel. The next evening, about sunset, I went to the door of the room where he lay, and as I looked in, he beckoned me to him. The setting sun fell upon his golden hair, and as he reclined upon the snowy pillow, methought he seemed like a little angel floating on a fleecy cloud.

I crept up slowly to the side of his bed, and hid the little hand which lay upon the coverlid, within my own hand.

"Jamie," said he, "Jamie, I am going to die."

I hid my face beneath the bed clothes, and sobbed aloud.

"Don't cry," said the little fellow, "you know I love you dearly; come, Jamie, let me play with your hand again, as I used to when we sat together on the little grass plat in the warm sunshine, and don't cry, my dear little brother Jamie. You will be kind to my little pussy, when I am gone, and fill his saucer with new milk, won't you, brother?"

Pussy lifted up her head, as she heard her name, and purring, smoothed her sleek and glossy coat against the pallid face of the young sufferer, as though to thank him for his kind remembrance.

"I am going to heaven," he continued, "and that is a happy place, you know, for God, our Father, whom we say our prayers to every night, lives there, and you know how often we have wanted to see him, Jamie; and there is Jesus, whom we love so much, and who loves little children, too, so dearly; he will be there, and he will carry me to his Father, for he will be like a big brother, and take care of me, you know, Jamie. And then there is little Harry Bently, he is gone to heaven, too, and I shall see him there, and we will have two little wings, and a little golden music book between us, but we will leave a corner for you, Jamie, so that when you come, we will all bow down together before the throne of God, our Father, and sing his glory for ever and ever."

The little fellow lifted up his bright blue eyes to heaven, and his countenance seemed to grow brighter and brighter; I gazed upon his face for some minutes in silent anguish; but as I gazed, his face appeared to wax brighter and yet more bright; a smile still lingered upon his parted lips, and his little soul winged its flight to a sure and glorious eternity.

And now, when the hurricane of riotous and irresistible passion sweeps over my soul, tearing down all distinctions of right and wrong, and dethroning reason, their cherub voices seem to come, wafted on the gale, and as these two little angel forms, with their little golden music book, and my empty and unmerited conduct, rise up, as it were, in a vision before me, and my passion vanishes, my frame shudders, and I burst into tears. THE DISCOVERIES OF 1846.

We apprehend that there can be no doubt that the year 1846 will be memorable to the end of time for the remarkable extensions, or new applications, of human knowledge, which will come before future historians as rendering illustrious its narrow limits. Most evident is it, that we are now living in the days predicted by the Hebrew Prophet—when "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

1. Foremost among these may be placed the use of ether, inhaled for facilitating surgical operations. Like all other appliances of this kind, it meets with failures, and even with fatal results in a few cases. But for one fatal result and five failures we have five hundred instances of vast benefit, in many of which, beyond all doubt, lives have been saved which would otherwise have been lost. Without describing it as infallible, or in all cases safe or to be relied on, there can be no doubt that this discovery has conferred vast benefits on mankind.

2. The substitution of a new explosive material—the gun-cotton—in place of gunpowder, is another remarkable event. The extent of its utility is not yet ascertained. Whether it will be largely adopted in warfare is still a point on which no decided opinion has been formed. But of its great utility in all blasting and mining operations, not the slightest doubt can exist. It is both cheaper and more powerful than gunpowder; and the absence of smoke gives it a decided advantage. There can remain no question, that in all works of this description, the new agent will rapidly supersede the old one.

3. The third discovery of 1846 is perhaps even of greater importance than either of the former. We allude to the lately patented process for smelting copper by means of electricity. The effect of this change will be quite prodigious. It produces, in less than two days, what the old process required three weeks to effect. And the saving of fuel is so vast, that in Swansea alone the smelters estimate their annual saving in coals at no less than five hundred thousand pounds. Hence it is clear that the price of copper must be so enormously reduced as to bring it into use for a variety of purposes from which its cost at present excludes it.

The facility and cheapness of the process, too, will enable the ore to be largely smelted on the spot. The Cornish mine proprietors are anxiously expecting the moment when they can bring the ore which lay in the mine yesterday, into a state to be sent to market to-morrow; and this at the very mouth of the mine. In Australia, also, the operation of this discovery will be of the utmost importance. Ten thousand tons of copper ore were sent from Australia to England last year to be smelted at Swansea; and the result was only 1600 tons of copper. But Australia in future will smelt her own copper, by a 36-hours' process; saving all this useless freight of the 8400 tons of refuse; and saving also the cost of the old and expensive process. In a very few years Australia will send to market more copper than is now produced by all the rest of the world. But if our future penny-pieces are to bear any proportion to the reduced cost and value of the metal, they must be made of the size of dinner-plates.

INFATUATION OF GAMING.

A Mr. Potter, in the reign of Queen Anne, possessed one of the best estates in the county of Northumberland; the fee of which, in less than twelve months, he lost at hazard.

The last night of his career, when he had just perfected the wicked work, and was just stepping down stairs to throw himself into his carriage, which waited at the door of a well-known house, he suddenly went back into the room where his friends were assembled, and insisted that the person he had been playing with, should give him one chance of recovery, or fight with him; his rational proposition was this: that his carriage, the trinkets and loose money in his pocket, his town house, plate and furniture, should be valued in a lump, at a certain sum, and be thrown for at a single cast; no persuasion could prevail on him to depart from his purpose; he threw and lost. He conducted the winner to the door, told his coachman that was his master, and heroically marched forth, without house, home, or any creditable source of support.

He retired to an obscure lodging in a cheap part of the town, subsisting partially on charity, sometimes acting as the substitute of a marker at a billiard table, and occasionally as helper at a livery stable.

In this miserable condition, with nakedness and famine staring him in the face, exposed to the taunts and insults of those whom he had once supported, he was recognized by an old friend, who gave him ten guineas to purchase necessaries.

He expended five in procuring decent apparel; with the remaining five, he repaired to a common gaming house, and increased them to fifty; he then adjourned to White's, sat down with his former associates, and won twenty thousand pounds. Returning next night, he lost it all, and after existing many years in abject and sordid penury, died a ragged beggar, at a penny lodging-house in St. Giles.

FOUR BRAHMIN WIDOWS.

The following account is copied from a Calcutta newspaper of November 10, 1823:—

"A suttee took place about eight o'clock on Friday morning, at Koonaguhr Ghaut, where four women, from the age of thirty to fifty, sacrificed themselves on the same pile with the corpse of their dead husband, Kummal Chattiyer, a Coolin brahmin, of Koonaghur, who was not only permitted, but paid for the liberty to marry thirty-two wives whilst living in this world, and who departed this life on the evening of the 5th instant. Directly information was sent to his different wives, who were in general living at their fathers' houses, only two of his wives living with him; four of them determined on eating fire, as the natives call it; two were living near, one at Calcutta, and the fourth at Bosborrah, above Hoogly; however, they were soon brought together, and the necessary permission having been obtained from the magistrate of the district, at least, so the police people said who attended the suttee, they surrounded the funeral pile, which they enclosed all around with a paling of bamboos, so as to prevent the escape of any one who might be so inclined after having once entered it. In less than one minute after the fire was lighted, the whole of them must have been suffocated; and in less than ten minutes, their bodies were burnt to a coal, so excessively hot was the fire. So common was the sight in this neighborhood, that only a few hundred people collected together to see it, and nearly all of them women. It is said that twenty-two of his wives were living at his death, and it was expected more of them would have joined the four."

Too much Anxiety.—Of the causes of disease, anxiety of mind is one of the most frequent and important. When we walk the streets of large commercial towns, we can scarcely fail to remark the hurried gait and care-worn features of the well-dressed passengers. Some young men, indeed, we may see with countenances possessing natural cheerfulness and color; but these appearances rarely survive the age of manhood. Cuvier closes an eloquent description of animal existence and change with the conclusion, that "life is a state of force." What he would urge in a physical view, we may more strongly urge in a moral. Civilization has changed our character of mind as well as of body. We live in a state of unnatural excitement, because it is partial, irregular, and excessive. Our muscles waste for want of action; our nervous system is worn out by excess of action. Vital energy is drawn from the operation for which nature designed it, and devoted to operations which it never contemplated.

Titian.—The anecdote of Charles having twice picked up the great artist's pencil, and presented it to him, saying, "To wait on Titian was service for an Emperor," is well known; but we do not remember to have before met with the following: Titian had painted the portrait of Charles several times, but now being called to the court of the Prince, he, for the last time, painted his portrait, just as he then appeared in the latter part of his life; and this picture also much pleased the renowned Emperor. Certain it is, that the very first portrait Titian drew of him so struck him with admiration, that he never would sit to any other artist; and for every portrait Titian took of him, he gave him a thousand crowns of gold. Titian, in all, painted three portraits of the Emperor; and when he last sat to him, at the conclusion of the picture, Charles said with emphasis, "This is the third time I have triumphed over death!"

Mohammedan Drunkards.—The following punishment of drunkenness was lately inflicted by the populace of Constantinople. An unfortunate Mussulman, who under the influence of wine, had lost the perpendicular, was tied upon a lame mule, with his head, upon which was placed a round European hat, towards the tail of the animal, and behind was tied a dog, back to back. After having paraded him through the streets, stopping at every fountain to sprinkle him with mud and water, he was taken by the populace to the banks of the Bosphorus, and plunged into the water with his innocent companions. The hair on the back of the dog was cut in the form of a cross, and the head of the Mussulman was shaved with the same razor. He was subsequently plunged into the Bosphorus, and his purification was considered complete.

London Thieves.—The "swell mob" of London perpetrate robberies with singular ingenuity and address, and appear never to be at fault. A lady alighted at a bank, ascended the steps, entered the vestibule, presented a check to the paying teller, received a very large amount of bank notes, which she deposited in her purse, and returned to her carriage. Just as she had taken her seat, a gentleman came down the steps of the bank, without a hat, wearing spectacles, and having a pen behind his ear, and said—"Madam, we have forgotten to take the numbers of those notes; will you allow me to take them off?" She gave him the notes, and he ascended the steps and entered the building. The lady having waited some time, finally returned to the bank, and soon ascertained that no such person had been authorized to ask for the notes.

Lake Michigan.—This lake is 400 miles long, 60 in breadth, and well ascertained to average 900 feet in depth. This being true, it contains a volume of water sufficient to fill a river 24,000 miles long, one mile wide, and 900 feet deep! Or it would make a river as large as the Mississippi—supposing it to be one mile wide and to average ten feet in depth—that would reach around our globe more than ninety times! But carrying it still farther, it would make a volume of water ten feet in depth, and one hundred feet in width (as large as Passaic River) that would reach nearly 5,000 times around our globe, or 108,540,000 miles! more than the distance between our earth and the sun.

The Duke of Northumberland was once speaking of the comfort of reading newspapers at breakfast. "The comfort of reading newspapers!" said Lord Mansfield. "Mark my words; you and I shall not live to see it, but, sooner or later, these newspapers, if they go on as they now do, will most assuredly write the dukes of Northumberland out of their titles and possessions, and the country of its king. Mark my words, for this will happen."

The Slave's Idea of Freedom.—The following eloquent passage is taken from a speech delivered in the Assembly of Virginia, by James McDowell, the present Governor of that State:—

"You may place the slave where you please; you may dry up to your utmost the fountains of his feeling, the springs of his thought—you may yoke him to your labor as an ox which liveth only to work, and worketh only to live: you may put him under any process, which, without destroying his value as a slave, will debase and crush him as a rational being—you may do this, and the idea that he was born to be free will survive it all. It is allied to his hope of immortality; it is the etherial part of his nature, which oppression cannot reach; it is a torch lit up in his soul by the hand of Deity, and never meant to be extinguished by the hand of man."

British Post-Office.—It appears that the Post-Office business, under the penny postage system and the supervision of its author, Mr. Rowland Hill, is so rapidly extending itself that more than a hundred new hands are to be taken on this week. The money order department has become so complete a banking concern that a building has been erected for it near the central office, giving it seemingly all the importance of a separate establishment. It will be impossible to foretell, or perhaps it would lead to incredulity to state, the magnitude to which this money department is destined to extend. As the penny post gets more perfected, the advantages of the money order office will become more evident, until it will prove of itself to be a vast source of revenue to the country.

[Cor. Jour. Com.

The Wedding Ring.—The use of the wedding ring may be traced to the Egyptians, who placed it, as we do, on the fourth finger of the left hand, because that vein or nerve ran directly to the heart. The Greeks and Romans adopted their belief, and followed their example. The Jewish wives wore it on the index, or fore finger. Christian usages have been various in this respect. In the Greek church, the ring was worn on the right hand by the husband and wife; in some churches in the north of Europe, it was put upon several fingers successively, in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; being finally left on the fourth.

The Tongue.—A white fur on the tongue attends simple fever and inflammation. Yellowness of the tongue attends a derangement of the liver, and is common to bilious and typhus fevers. A tongue vividly red on the tip and edges, or down the center, or over the whole surface, attends inflammation of the mucous membrane of the stomach or bowels. A white velvety tongue, attends mental diseases. A tongue red at the lips, becoming brown, dry and glazed, attends a typhus state. The descriptions of symptoms might be extended infinitely, taking in all the propensities and obliquities of mental and moral condition. The tongue is a most expressive as well as unruly member.

VARIETY.

A gentleman, passenger by a steamer, having missed his pocket-handkerchief, suspected an ugly looking character that was near him, whom he charged with the theft; which the other, who was an Irishman, indignantly repudiated. After some time, the gentleman found the missing handkerchief in his hat, and apologized to the Irishman for the unintentional insult he had offered him; upon which Paddy, with characteristic naivete, replied, "Oh! don't be after making an apology, it's all a mistake. You tuk me to be a thief, and I tuk you to be a gentleman."

If you cannot be happy in one way, be happy in another; and this faculty of disposition wants but little aid from philosophy, for health and good-humor are almost the whole affair. Many run about after felicity, like an absent man seeking for his hat, while it is on his head, or in his hand.

We find upon a human face, when it is old, the notched counting-stick of severe sorrows, which have so rudely passed over it; and when it is young, it appears to us like a blooming flower-bed on the slope of a volcano, whose next eruption will overwhelm it with destruction. Ah! either the future or the past is written on the face, and makes us, if not melancholy, at least mild and gentle. [Richter.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

Mr. Editor:—I have stated the difficulty which I feel in allowing the validity of the sabbatic law, as to Christians, either as being naturally binding without express command, or as having been expressly commanded to us. My object was to have my doubts resolved, if possible, by one who thought the subject had not heretofore been scripturally inculcated; but in what respects he differs from the prevailing view, unless it is in going one step farther than most, from what seems to me prima facie the plain truth, I must confess myself unable to perceive. Certainly, I have not found the satisfaction I desire. Since, however, it would be tedious to argue every point involved fully, particularly the abstract, though most interesting question as to the nature of the moral law, which at another time I should be glad to discuss; and since I wish to present an outline of the whole case as it lies in my mind, I shall proceed to raise some farther questions concerning the evangelical aspects of the subject.

In coming to the New Testament, I find quite a different religious system from that of which the former volume treats. "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." In that preparatory kingdom of God, a law, minute, rigid and burdensome, asserted its control over every action; intended partly in its ritual institutions, as well as its moral precepts, to impress on those under it a sense of dependence on God and subjection to him, and so to make ready their hearts for that Gospel to be afterwards revealed, of which they had already some dark adumbrations in those provisions of their law, which were shadows of good things to come. Thus the law was their schoolmaster to bring them to Christ, and coming to Christ, he is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. Such have become dead to the law, delivered from it, that being dead wherein they were held; the law hath no more dominion over them.*

In the kingdom of Christ, then, the believer is freed from all obligation to observe the law of Moses, or any part of it, simply as such. There are parts of it which he must observe, it is true; as there are parts of the system of Solon, and Confucius; and all on the same ground—not that Moses, or Solon, or Confucius, required them, but because they are a part of that eternal system which God requires of all human beings.† Not that the Christian is lawless, or any less regulated by law than the Jew; he is in fact far more obedient to law. But he is distinguished from the Jew as to this in two particulars.

First—He, belonging to the new dispensation, looks for direction immediately to the Founder of that dispensation, Christ Jesus, to whom Moses himself said, that even the Jews should hearken. Christ in the New Testament is his lawgiver, who supplies for him the deficiencies of conscience, and adapts to the circumstances of His kingdom, as Moses did to the Jews, the eternal principles of morality, with the addition of such positive institutions as they need. When He opposes to what was "said by them of old time" his "But I say unto you differently," he implies the abrogation of the former system, so far as respects His kingdom. Whatever, therefore, beyond the law of conscience, the Christian finds not required exclusively, or implicitly, by Christ personally or through His inspired messengers, he deservedly rejects as not obligatory on him. So that if a question arises in his mind whether he is bound to rest from labor one year in seven, to abstain from certain kinds of food, to love his enemies, or to keep the seventh day holy, he refers at once not to Moses but to Christ.

Secondly—The law which governs the Christian disciple, operates in another way, not by the constraint of external precepts, but by the spontaneous impulse of an internal principle. That principle is love. Love is to the Christian the fulfillment of the law. To carry out this principle, is to him in place of all attempts to keep the particular precepts of the former law. To develop his renewed nature is of necessity to keep the moral law, and the specific requirements of the New Testament present rather the model to which it conforms, than the mould into which it is compressed—the barriers which repel what is foreign to itself, than the bounds by which it is restricted. The idea is that of the government of a child by pure filial love rather than by mere parental authority. "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Having received a disposition to which the eternal principles of the law are congenial, the law becomes in an important sense the natural rule of the soul's exercises, as it is with those in heaven, and renders the constraint of external commandments superfluous.

This primary and all-comprehending element of Christian disposition, determines every exercise of the soul—operates proportionally in all directions. It makes an unconditional offering of every thing to God as a Father in Christ. To him it consecrates every power and faculty of body and mind—every farthing of possessions, every particle of influence, every moment of time. It reserves nothing to itself. It recognizes an obligation, not from external command, but from an inward inclination to do, to say, to feel and be, every thing in the name of the Lord, as unto the Lord. It turns all this into religion. It renders the Christian, so far as he is the subject of it, holy in all manner of conversation. To him therefore all work is holy work, all time is holy time. Whether in his own house or in the house of public worship—in the crowded mart as well as in the closet—in business as well as in devotion—in the world as well as in the chhrch—in every sphere of enjoyment or of duty, eating and drinking, waking and sleeping, living and dying, he is the Lord's. All his time and all his strength will be devoted to the immediate service of God. He will not, it is true, be all the time in worship, since this is only a part of God's service; worship and work will bear a just proportion to each other in his life, and each in its place is equally acceptable to God, equally holy in His sight.

Now in what sense can such a man keep the seventh day holy? Ceremonially holy it might be kept, like any other festival, any consecrated place or sacred order, in an economy like that of the Jews, but not in one which of necessity and expressly requires that every thing shall be done, every moment spent, in the exercise of love to God. Here, just as Christ fulfils the law which forbids murder, by causing his disciples to cherish the spirit of kindness; and that which forbids false swearing, by teaching them to swear not at all; and that which enjoins love to their neighbor, by requiring them to love all men; so that to keep holy one day in seven, by keeping all days holy. Just as in this kingdom all the people are priests, "God's clergy," the every-day use of their consecrated powers is their "reasonable service." For them to distinguish one day above another in this respect, as is done by many now, so far from being of "essential utility," contributes, I am persuaded, in an awful degree, to the secularizing and carnalizing of the heart of Christ's Church.

Such is an imperfect sketch of the theory of the Gospel, as I understand it, in relation to the matter in hand. And with this, whatever specific intimations touching it, are given in the New Testament, seem to agree. Our Saviour himself, by repeatedly shocking the notions of his countrymen, and even, as would seem, disregarding the letter of the law on this subject, and certainly departing from the spirit of its early administration, by asserting absolutely His superiority to it without the slightest salvo to the authority of the precept—and by indicating its ritual and transient character, when he declared that man was not made for the Sabbath, seems already to have reckoned it not among the weightier matters of judgment and mercy. But the example of his disciples we should expect to find still more decisive. Accordingly not one of them, in any communication, of which we are told, to any Christian or body of Christians, ever alluded to their duty to keep the fourth commandment; and in several recapitulations of the substance of the law, and even the Decalogue, this is uniformly omitted. Considering the circumstances, this is a remarkable fact. On the other hand, when Judaism commenced those seductive attempts, the success of which, alas! in spite of the apostles, is too fully attested by the harlotry of Romanism; when the false teachers endeavored to patch their ceremonial observances upon the faith of Gentile Christians; and when it would require the most cautious discrimination to separate the Sabbath from other Jewish festivals; with what decision does Paul maintain the equality of all days, (Rom. xiv. 5,) how warmly reprehend some for observing days, (Gal. iv. 10,) and warn others against suffering their conscience to be enslaved to the observance of a holy day, or of a new moon, or of the Sabbaths, all of which last are pronounced without qualification or restriction, to be mere shadows of good things to come, of which the believer finds the substance in Christ.

With this view of the general system of the Gospel, as well as its special instructions, I find it hard to admit the perpetual obligation of the Sabbath, and still more so to base the observance of the Lord's Day on the Jewish precept. I am almost constrained to ask, with Bunyan, "What can be more plain, these things thus standing in the Testament of God, than that the seventh day Sabbaths, as such, were given to Israel only;" and that the Gentiles, as such, were not concerned therein; and conclude as he does, that "the old seventh day Sabbath is abolished and done away, and has nothing to do with the Gentiles." If a day of weekly rest be important on civil, social or dietetic grounds, as something of the kind undoubtedly is, then let the proper authorities see to it, by all means, but not make it a specially religious ordinance as being required by the written Law of God. How, indeed, the unbelieving, irreligious world can have any lot or part in the Sabbath as a religious institution, either as given to God's people, the Jews, or as being continued by Christ in his kingdom, granting this to have been so, is a question which mightily tempts me to tease you with another long paragraph; but I will spare you. I fear I have already worn out the patience of yourself, and your readers; but I earnestly desire to see this subject elucidated, and hope that "E. W. D." will come to the discussion frankly, in the spirit of the New Testament, and with his powers untrammelled by traditional interpretation. I think I may assure you that another article, perhaps, on the Lord's Day, specifically, as that which under the Gospel has about the same relation to the Sabbath as baptism to circumcision, is all with which you will be troubled for the present, by INDAGATOR.

---

* By the term law, when applied in the New Testament to the Jewish system, I suppose to be meant generally the whole body of precepts and institutions enjoined on the Jews, particularly in the books of Moses, for their permanent observance. They did not distinguish, as we do, between moral, ceremonial, &c.; the law was one whole to them. As such, Christ fulfilled it; as such, in him it is done away. If they made any distinction in his time, it was probably by ranking what we call ceremonial first in importance. Hence "E. W. D." will understand what I mean by the "rest of the code;"—and that it is the substance of the WHOLE law, Decalogue and all, which is concentrated into the twofold precept of love.

† Heaven forbid that I should compare Moses with any uninspired lawgivers, except merely AS lawgivers FOR US.

LINES WRITTEN OFF ST. HELENA.

BY MRS. E. C. JUDSON.

Blow softly, gales! a tender sigh
  Is flung upon your wing;
Lose not the treasure as ye fly,
Bear it where love and beauty lie,
  Silent and withering.

Flow gently, waves! a tear is laid
  Upon your heaving breast;
Leave it within yon dark rock's shade,
Or weave it in an iris braid,
  To crown the Christian's rest.

Bloom, ocean isle, lone ocean isle!
  Thou keepest a jewel rare;
Let rugged rock, and dark defile,
Above the slumbering stranger smile,
  And deck her couch with care.

Weep, ye bereaved! a dearer head,
  N'er left the pillowing breast;
The good, the pure, the lovely fled,
When mingling with the shadowy dead,
  She meekly went to rest.

Mourn, Burmah, mourn! a bow which spanned
  Thy cloud has passed away;
A flower has withered on thy sand,
A pitying spirit left thy strand,
  A saint has ceased to pray.

Angels rejoice, another string
  Has caught the strains above;
Rejoice! a new fledged wing
Around the Throne is hovering,
  In sweet, glad, wondering love.

Blow, blow, ye gales! wild billows roll!
  Unfurl the canvas wide!
O! where she labored lies our goal;
Weak, timid, frail, yet would my soul
  Fain be to hers allied.

SHIP FANEUIL HALL, Sept., 1846.

ACTIVITY IN HEAVEN.

Because heaven is a place of rest, it does not follow that it is a place of idle inactivity. Like the Sabbath, which is its type, it will be a state of such rest as is consistent with active worship. The activity of heaven will be tireless and untiring. The highest mental and spiritual exercises of those who are admitted there, will not tire; there will be neither flesh nor blood for them to tire; and emancipated from these, the soul in heaven, like the soul on earth, could it be thus set free, will exercise its highest powers, untiring and untired. Nor is this all. Heaven is a state of active beneficence. There all are employed in doing good. They who tasted beneficence as a luxury on earth, shall banquet on it in heaven forever. All shall do good; from the highest seraph that bends before the throne, to the last soul saved, as by fire. No sooner do saved spirits breathe the atmosphere of heaven, than they fly off on errands of love—"ministering angels"—to all who need their ministering offices. How sublimely did Dr. Beecher discourse on this theme to his pupils. Hear him:

"Excepting freedom from sin, intense, vigorous, untiring action, is the mind's highest pleasure. I would not wish to go to heaven, did I believe that its inhabitants were to sit inactive by purling streams, to be fanned into indolent slumbers by balmy breezes! Heaven, to be a place of happiness, must be a place of activity. Has the far-reaching mind of Newton rested from his profound investigation? Have David and Isaiah hung up their harps, useless as the dusty arms in Westminster Abbey? Has Paul, glowing with god-like enthusiasm, ceased itinerating the universe of God? Are Peter and Cyprian, and Luther and Edwards, idling away eternity in mere psalm singing? Heaven is a place of activity, of never tiring thought. David and Isaiah will sweep noble and lofty strains in eternity, and the mind of saints, unclogged by cumbersome clay, forever feast on a banquet of thought—rich, glorious thought. Young gentlemen, press on—you will never get through. An eternity of untiring activity is before you, and the universe of thought your field."

THE LEPER.

A day or two after our arrival at Bombay, I was strolling, about sunset, on a beach of Colaba—a small island separated from Bombay, only when the tide rises, by a narrow creek, the passage being perfectly dry at low water—when my attention was arrested by a peculiar object. A man approached me in the costume of the lowest orders, having only a cloth wrapped round his loins. I could not help being forcibly attracted by his appearance. His skin was perfectly white, as white as chalk; and when he came near me I perceived that it seemed glazed, as if it had been seared with a hot iron. His hair, for he wore no turban, was precisely the color of his skin, and hung in long strips upon his lean and withered shoulders. His eyes, excepting only the pupils, were of a dull, murky red, and he directed them perpetually toward the ground, as if the light was painful to him, which, upon inquiry, I discovered to be the case. His gait was slow and tottering, and his limbs were shrunk to a state of attenuation quite ghastly. His ribs were so prominent that they might be counted at the distance of several yards, and the whole anatomical development was so singularly conspicuous, that he seemed to stand before me a living skeleton. He did not at first venture to approach within several yards of me. I advanced, but he gently retreated, beseeching me to give a miserable man a few pieces to save him from death, as he was an object of universal scorn, and an outcast from his tribe. His supplication was piteously imploring. He bid me not come near him, as he was a polluted creature, against whom the hand of every one was raised, and for him there was no pity. By speaking kindly to him, I in a short time obtained his confidence, when he stood still and allowed me to stand close beside him. I asked him the reason of his extraordinary appearance. He told me that he had been for years a martyr to the leprosy, which, though at length cured, had left upon him the brand of irremediable pollution. The very hue of his skin had changed from a brown to a cadaverous and sickly white, and no one could mistake that he had been a leper.

In India, lepers are held to be accursed of the Deity; they are in consequence universally shunned, and many yearly die in an abject state of destitution truly deplorable, from the universal abandonment to which their dreadful visitation exposes them. Though the poor man was of the lowest cast, none of the members of his tribe would hold intercourse with him, and he was cast forth a wanderer, where he could find none but such as were laboring under a similar infliction, who felt any sympathy in his wretchedness. Nothing can be more melancholy than the thought of a human creature so situated. Not only an outcast from general society, but shunned even by the most degraded of his tribe; he has no home but such as he makes for himself apart from the haunts of men, who frequently drive him into the jungles, where he becomes a prey to the wild beasts; or when he refuses to withdraw himself beyond the remotest neighborhood of human habitation, in violation of every law, both human and divine, the members of his own family will frequently put the wretched creature to a cruel death.

[Oriental Annual.

TRIUMPHANT DEATH.

The widow of the late Rev. Dr. Blatchford, of Lansinburg, N. Y., a little before her death, said, "I did hope and pray that the cloud might be removed, and it has all passed away. I thought if I could get but one glimpse of my Saviour, it would satisfy me; now I enjoy, not merely a glimpse, but a full blaze of the divine glory as revealed to me through Christ. I dared to hope and pray only for peace—that I might be delivered from darkness; but O, it is the fullness of joy, the fullness of joy. It's wonderful! it's wonderful! matchless condescension! infinite grace!!"

One of her children said, "You will soon be in heaven, and will meet our dear father." "Yes, yes, and what shall I tell him?" "Tell him we are all following on to meet you there." "What, all?" she earnestly exclaimed, directing a penetrating glance to her children around her; "shall I tell him that you are ALL coming to meet us? shall I tell him you will ALL be there?" With bursting hearts they responded, "Yes, mother, all." As if every wish of earth was satisfied in the confident hope of meeting all her loved ones again, she clasped her hands, and, raising her eyes to heaven, said, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." After a long pause, which seemed to be spent in prayer, she continued, "My great desire is, that my children may all be united to the God of their father. I desire them all to be united to the visible church. It is not the name, nor the form, but the power of godliness I pray for. They must be clothed with the righteousness of Christ; the righteousness of Christ; THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF CHRIST; that alone will be sufficient in the great day." It was said to her, "You will spend yourself; do take a little rest." She turned to the speaker with an almost reproving look, "O, I have done nothing during my whole life; let me do something in death."

Would the reader "die the death of the righteous," let his life be the life of the righteous; a life of prayer and faith—a life of self-denial and devotion to the Redeemer's cause.

THE JEWS IN INDIA.

In Bombay and the neighboring places, there are some five or six thousand Israelites. Some of these have recently come from Arabia, and are called white Jews. Some have come from Cochin, and are called black Jews. But by far the greater portion, who have been long settled in the country, and to whom Mahratta is the vernacular language, are called Israelites, or Bent Israed. When their ancestors arrived here is not certainly known. They say it was about 1600 years ago—that the ship in which they came was wrecked, and that seven men and women who escaped settled at Nagao, some thirty miles to the southeast of Bombay. They were at one time generally engaged in the manufacture of oil; but at present many of them are masons, carpenters, cultivators, &c. When the missionaries first came to this country, some thirty years since, the Israelites were generally unable to read, and were almost wholly ignorant of their own Scriptures. They had generally ceased to observe the Sabbath as a day of rest, and were in many respects conformed to the customs of their own Hindoo and Mohammedan neighbors. It is stated, in a printed journal of one of the earlier missionaries, that the magistrate described them at that time as being the most drunken and troublesome people on that Island. The missionaries in Bombay have, from the first, taken a deep interest in the Israelites or Jews. They early established schools among them, in which both sexes were taught to read. They furnished them with the Scriptures, translated into their vernacular language, and instructed them in Hebrew, that they might be able to refer to the original. The Jews have in consequence, forsaken many of those things which they, on becoming acquainted with the Scriptures, found to be forbidden; and they had greatly advanced in intelligence, wealth, morality, and general respectability. Some of them may feel little gratitude for labor and expense bestowed upon them; but we believe they are generally free to acknowledge that the missionaries have been their dearly well-wishers and their best friends. The Jews worship only one God, the Creator and Preserver of all things; and they regard all idolatry as sinful. They believe the Old Testament or first part of the Christian Scriptures, and that alone, to be the Word of God. They have two regular synagogues or places of public worship in Bombay, and one at Revadunda. Here they meet on Saturday, which is their Sabbath or day of rest, and read the Scriptures both in Hebrew and Mahratta. At Alibag, Panwell, and other places, where there is no synagogue, their meetings are held in any private dwellings. The white Jews have two such places for public worship in the fort. [Littell's Living Age.

MISSIONARY LABOR IN GERMANY.

The N. Y. Baptist Register publishes an account of the labors of Mr. Steinhoff, a Baptist missionary in Germany. The following extract will give some idea of his way of getting along:

In the Duchy of Nassau several believers were by baptism added to the church. Proceeding to Hesse, he arrived in the night near Marburg, where he saw a few of the Lord's chosen ones. A number of young converts arrived, desiring to be baptized; fifteen were examined, and twelve were baptized towards the dawn of the morning. Soon after this he was obliged to repair to another town to escape the vigilance of the police and their emissaries. If the authorities get a clue to his movements, the police are immediately in search of him. Having to avoid the main road, he was compelled to travel on foot. A number assembled at the house where he was staying, and three brethren of the most decided and satisfactory character were chosen to take the oversight of this flock, and were commended to the Lord in prayer. Just as they arose from prayer, the gensd'armes arrived to search the house, and he retreated into a lumber-room, and escaped detection. On their departure prayer was offered to the Lord for his protection, and they all then went into a large room and sat down to show forth the Lord's death.

But he had scarcely placed himself at the table and read four verses, when another company from the prince of darkness was heard below, and he had only time to flee into a bed and have the bedding thrown upon him, when they entered. Bro. Grimmel took his place at the table, and commenced reading at the 10th of Acts. The officers remained silent, and the Lord strengthened Bro. G. to testify of his glory with much power. In the mean while Bro. Steinhoff prayed fervently under his load of bedding, where he could hardly breathe, that Bro. G. might this time preach a short sermon. However, he had to wait patiently for a considerable time. The names of all were taken down twice, and inquiry also made if any one else was there. But the eyes of the enemy were held, and they left. Bro. S. emerged now from his prison, and they celebrated the Lord's death, and were comforted by his presence.

On leaving for Marburg he had to disguise himself in peasant's apparel. He afterwards returned, and with a bundle of leather he passed for a country shoemaker, and was thus enabled to reach the river and baptize a disciple. The next day he left; traveling some distance on foot, he ventured to take a seat in the diligence, and providentially his name was entered wrong by a mistake of the agent, or he might have been discovered. He saw the Lord's hand in it. On reaching Hersfeldt he took up his abode in the church steeple a few days, where the brethren came to visit him. A regiment of soldiers having just arrived here, attention was drawn to them. The brethren here are closely watched; however, they celebrate the Lord's Supper together. In Cassel he found those seeking the truth, but the hatred and opposition was so great that he did not consider it safe to remain long, and he directed his course towards Eimbeck.

"Whilst writing this letter," he says, "I have been summoned before the authorities, and threatened with heavy fines and imprisonment did I not desist from preaching. My reply was, that I could not live without the communion of saints. Thus far the Lord has helped me, and he will help me farther. I baptized thirty-five converts on this tour."

THE SILENT POWER OF TRUTH.

A Swede, after receiving a good education, became a wanderer in the world. At one time he was a soldier, at another he was a sailor, and at length, having, while intoxicated, sustained an injury, he became a patient in a hospital. A tract visitor entered the ward in which he lay, and observing that he was asleep, quietly laid a tract upon his bed, and went away. That man was an avowed infidel. When he awoke he saw the tract, and read it. It related to the evidences of Christianity, and the Lord made it the means of removing his unbelief. He became a new creature; and when he left the hospital, he experienced the power of vital Christianity, and felt an earnest desire to do good. Observing that there were many seamen in the port who were his countrymen, and that they knew but little of the English language, he collected small companies of them together, and read, and sung, and prayed with them. Afterward he obtained the use of a floating bethel on Sunday mornings, and sometimes added exhortation to other exercises. But he longed to hear the gospel preached there by some minister from his native land; for this he prayed, and, as he had opportunity, made known his wishes to his fellow Christians, and now there is a church in the ship, with a Swedish clergyman for its pastor.

Here the reading of a single tract was blessed. Such has often been the case, and this even when the person to whom it was given had cast it aside unread. A man having received a tract, used it in filling up the space between the inner and outer sole of a shoe. Some time afterward another man sat down, on a Sunday morning, to put a new sole to that shoe, but when he had cut away the old leather he saw the tract, and his attention was instantly arrested by its title, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." It was an arrow from the quiver of the Almighty. The work was immediately laid aside, and the man hastened to the house of God; his soul was troubled, nor could he find rest until he found it at the cross of Christ.

Our sorrows, more than our joys, are the children of the Lord's mercy, since our joys bring us back to ourselves, but our sorrows to Him. In prosperity, the bountiful Giver is obscured by the multiplicty of His gifts, but when the tempest of adversity descends, the cloud is dispersed, and man, desolate and forlorn, feels his weakness and dependence, his hopelessness, and need of divine aid.

THE SABBATARIANS OR SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

[Concluded.]

Yearly Meetings—General Conference—Associations.

A Yearly Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptists in America was established at an early period. In 1708, when the church in Newport, R. I., organized a part of its members into the distinct body now known as the 1st Hopkinton Church, an annual interview was agreed upon, for a friendly interchange of sentiment, and for mutual encouragement and edification. The bounds of this confederacy gradually enlarged, as new churches were formed, until it included the early churches in Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, and New York. The churches generally appointed their ministers and several leading members to attend the meetings, who traveled for the most part at their own expense, and sometimes occupied nearly a quarter of the year in this social and religious visit. The result was every way happy. It furnished an opportunity for brethren who were widely scattered, and would otherwise have been comparative strangers, to become acquainted with each other, and also served to interest them in the efforts which were being made in different sections to promote the cause of Christ.

About the year 1800, the churches observing the Sabbath having greatly increased in numbers, and being not altogether agreed in doctrinal sentiments, the question arose whether union and prosperity among them might not be promoted by a somewhat more formal ecclesiastical organization. The question was under consideration for two or three years, and resulted in the formation of the General Conference. This body was composed of delegates from the churches, and its object was to counsel and advise them in cases of difficulty which might be referred to it. A meeting was held each year, at a place previously agreed upon, and this place so chosen that the annual meetings might take a circuit of the denomination. The Conference has continued, with some modifications, to the present time. At a meeting in Shiloh, N. J., in September, 1846, a resolution was passed that its meetings should hereafter be held triennially, instead of annually. Accordingly it adjourned to meet in Rhode Island in 1849.

The division of the denomination into Associations took place in 1835. It was thought by many, about that time, that the Conference had too much business to transact, and that the denomination was too widely scattered to justify the continuance of a general meeting every year. They therefore proposed a division of the churches into two Conferences, according to their geographical position. When the subject came up for action, however, it was thought advisable to continue the General Conference, but to divide the denomination into Associations, which should meet each year, transact the business of the churches within their own bounds, and appoint delegates to represent them in the Conference. Four Associations have been formed in partial accordance with this plan—the Eastern, embracing the churches in Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New Jersey; the Central, embracing those in the State of New York east of the small lakes; the Western, embracing the churches in Western New York and Pennsylvania; the South-Western, embracing all the churches in Ohio, Virginia, Wisconsin, and Iowa.

Societies, Institutions, &c.

The Seventh-day Baptists, as a denomination, have always been forward to engage in the benevolent enterprises of the day. They have repeatedly taken action, in their ecclesiastical bodies, against slavery, and in favor of temperance and other moral reforms. They have also had among them for a long time societies for missionary purposes, and to promote the circulation of religious tracts and books.

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association was organized in 1842. Its object is to disseminate the Gospel at home and abroad. In carrying out this object, it has employed men from time to time to labor with the feeble churches in this country, and to preach to the destitute wherever an opportunity should offer. It has also sent four missionaries—Messrs. Solomon Carpenter and Nathan Wardner, with their wives—to preach Christ among the heathen. These laborers in the foreign field sailed from New York in January, 1847, and are designated to the northern part of China.

The American Sabbath Tract Society was organized in 1843. Its object is "to promote the observance of the Sabbath, as originally instituted, enjoined in the Decalogue, and confirmed by the precepts and example of Christ and the Apostles." This it is laboring to do by the circulation of tracts and books. It has now a series of eleven stereotyped tracts, of which editions are published according to the means and demands of the Society. Besides these, it has several publications not connected with the series, but all relating to the subject of the Sabbath. It has also recently issued a work in Defense of the Sabbath, written by George Carlow, and originally published in London in 1724.

The Seventh-day Baptists have two Literary Institutions, designed to encourage and furnish the means of securing a thorough education. The first, called the DeRuyter Institute, is located at DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y., and was founded in 1837, at an expense of between twenty and thirty thousand dollars. It has had many difficulties to contend with, but is now in a prosperous condition, and gives promise of great usefulness. The other is located at Alfred, Allegany Co., N. Y., and called the Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary. It has a charter from the State, and furnishes the means of education to a large number of students.

For the last sixteen years, the Seventh-day Baptists have had a denominational paper, published weekly, devoted to religious and general intelligence, in connection with such matter as relates particularly to the condition and welfare of their own churches. It is now published in the city of New York, under the name of "The Sabbath Recorder."

Few words will suffice to conclude this article. In the light of the foregoing it will be seen, that from the time when Seventh-day Baptist principles were represented in this country by a single man at Newport, R. I., to the present time, their progress has been slow but sure. Many obstacles have stood in their way. Those who have embraced them have been subject to no small personal inconvenience, and often to opposition and reproach from persons bearing the Christian name and professing better things. They have been oppressed by law, and shut out from not a few social and literary privileges which they might otherwise have enjoyed. The consequence has been, that thousands who were trained up in the observance of the Sabbath, and who believed in heart that the practice was accordant with Scripture, have abandoned it; while thousands of others, who were convinced of its claims, have refused to embrace it. Only the few, who felt that duty was theirs and consequences God's, have dared to adhere strictly to the divine commandment. Yet the number of such has gradually increased, and the prospect before them has gradually brightened. They believe the day is now dawning in which their principles will be examined with more candor, and allowed to work their natural effects upon the minds of men.

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

The Anniversaries of the principal Benevolent and Reformatory Societies centering in New York, were held last week. The following condensed statement of the condition of several of them, is prepared from lengthy reports published in the Daily Tribune:—

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions held a public meeting on Sunday evening, in the Grand-street Church. An abstract of the Annual Report was read, stating that the receipts for the year have been $95,628, and the expenditures $95,458. Ten ministers, two licentiate preachers, one of whom is a physician, a teacher, a steward, a carpenter, and ten females, wives of the missionaries, have been sent to different fields of labor during the past year. The Board has now under its care 42 ordained ministers, 3 licentiate preachers, 2 physicians, and 11 teachers and printers, who, with their wives, make 100 persons, exclusive of native laborers not ordained.

The American Seamen's Friend Society held its 19th Anniversary at the Tabernacle on Monday evening, at which the Annual Report was read, and several speeches were made. The receipts of the Society during the year were $17,515, while the disbursements were $17,908, not including local expenditures, nor a legacy lately received of $2,400. The Sailor's Home, under the care of this Society, has accommodated 4,319 sailor boarders within the year, and 18,256 within the last five years.

The Baptist Home Missionary Society held its 14th Anniversary on Tuesday evening, in the Oliver-street Church. The receipts for the year were $30,797 43. The expenditures were $28,307 89, leaving in the hands of the Treasurer, on the 1st of April, $2,489 54, of which only $951 72 were available. The Secretary reported that the number of agents and missionaries who have acted during the past year, is 140; being 34 more than the previous year, and 18 more than were ever before appointed in one year. Of these, 30 were new appointments. The whole number of States and Territories occupied, was 21, including the Province of Canada. The missionaries have statedly occupied 505 stations and out-stations, and the aggregate amount of time bestowed by them is equal to that of one man for more than 83 years. They report the baptism of 490 persons, the organization of 29 churches, and the ordination of 25 ministers.

The Foreign Evangelical Society held a public meeting on Tuesday evening. The object of this Society is to disseminate the Gospel, according to the tenets of the Reformed Protestant churches, throughout the world. To advance this object, preachers and colporteurs are employed in different countries, particularly the Catholic countries of Europe. Dr. Baird, the Corresponding Secretary of the Society, has journeyed some 18,000 miles in his recent tour through Europe, for the purpose of learning the actual condition and wants of Protestantism, and the best way to promote its vitality.

The American Anti-Slavery Society held its 13th Anniversary in the Broadway Tabernacle on Tuesday forenoon, when the house was well filled. The Annual Report presented a statement of the operations and plans of the Society, and attempted to vindicate its fundamental principles and leading measures. The receipts during the past year have been $8,797. This money has been expended in publishing the National Anti-Slavery Standard, and in supporting public lecturers, principally in New-England, New York, and Pennsylvania. The reading of the reports was followed by an eloquent speech from Wendel Phillips, in vindication of the Society's most unpalatable doctrine of a dissolution of the Union. Frederick Douglass, once a slave, but now a freeman, spoke next. His speech was lengthy, and was designed principally to vindicate himself and the Society from the charge of misrepresenting slavery, and the feelings of American Christians respecting it, in the recent missions to England. He also replied to the charges of Dr. Cox and other American ministers in relation to disturbing the World's Temperance Convention. His remarks were listened to attentively, and drew forth many cheers from the audience.

The American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society held its Anniversary Meeting in the Tabernacle on Tuesday afternoon. Arthur Tappan presided, and Lewis Tappan read the Annual Report. The receipts of the past year have amounted to $12,635, and the expenditures to $8,127. In consequence of the ill health of the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. A. A. Phelps, it has been found impossible to carry out all the plans devised at the last annual meeting. Mr. Phelps has recently returned from a visit to the West Indies, but in feeble health. The war with Mexico was spoken of in the Report with abhorrence, and a strong belief was expressed in conclusion, that the day is hastening when this country will be free to all. Remarks to appropriate resolutions were made by S. P. Andrews, Esq., of Boston, Rev. H. H. Garnett, of Troy, Rev. Joshua Leavitt, Rev. W. W. Patton, and Rev. S. R. Ward.

A Public Breakfast of this Society was attended on Wednesday morning in the large room under the Tabernacle. About five hundred persons, many of them people of color, were present. After disposing of the creature comforts, speeches were made by Messrs. Colver, Leavitt, Snodgrass, Davis, and Houston.

The American Female Moral Reform Society held its Annual Meeting on Tuesday evening. This Society has been in existence thirteen years; has several hundred auxiliaries; a periodical, averaging an issue of 11,000 or 12,000 semi-monthly; has published 10,000 volumes of the "Walks of Usefulness," and more than a million pages of Tracts. It has now in contemplation the erection of a "House of Industry and Home for the Friendless," whose design shall be to furnish a temporary home and employment for destitute and deserving women, till they can be provided for respectably and safely; also for friendless, homeless children, till places can be procured for them by adoption or otherwise. One hundred and eight life-members have been added to the Society during the year, making in all 806.

The American Home Missionary Society's 21st Anniversary was held on Wednesday evening. The Annual Report states that owing to severe pecuniary embarrassment during a large portion of the year, the Executive Committee have been hindered from undertaking most of the enlargement that was proposed a year ago. They have however appointed thirty-two new missionaries in the Western States. The receipts have been $116,170. The Society has had in its service, the past year, 972 ministers of the Gospel, in 26 different States and Territories, including two who are about to proceed to Oregon. The number of congregations supplied, in whole or in part, is 1,470. A change having been made in the time of closing the missionary year, the returns for this year cover only eleven months. In this period, the missionaries have performed an aggregate of 713 years' labor.

The American Tract Society held its 22d Anniversary at the Tabernacle on Wednesday morning, at which the various reports were read, and several addresses delivered. The result of the past year's labors may be summed up as follows:—

New publications 48, in five languages, making the whole number 1,252, of which 212 are volumes. In foreign lands 98 new publications have been sanctioned; making a total of 2169, including 172 volumes. The circulation has been greater, by nearly 30,000,000 of pages, than during the previous year; amounting to 515,975 volumes, 5,841,580 publications, or 153,575,624 pages. Total in 22 years, 3,375,624 volumes, 89,693,713 publications, 1,823,272,025 pages. The gratuitous distribution by foreign missionaries, and chaplains to the army and navy, seamen and boatmen, Sunday schools, literary and humane institutions, home missionaries, colporteurs, etc. in 1,234 distinct grants, amounts to 31,096,748 pages. Issued to life-members and directors, 4,828,460 pages. Total, 35,926,208; in value nearly $24,000. The American Messenger has had an average monthly circulation of 60,000. The receipts for 11 1-2 months, to April 1, exceed those of any previous year by $6,214, amounting to $160,131—of which, for publications, $92,360; in donations, $67,770. The sum of $20,742 is due for paper previous to September 18. The Society's house has been rebuilt, for greater security, economy, and efficiency, by a loan secured on the premises, without drawing any thing from the charitable contributions.

The American Bible Society held its 31st Anniversary at the Tabernacle on Thursday morning. The Treasurer's Report stated that the receipts for the year had been $205,068, being $7,760 more than the previous year. The Managers' Report stated, that during the year 110 Auxiliary Societies had been recognized in nineteen different States and Territories; 648 persons had been made Life Members and Life Directors; and 671,500 Bibles and Testaments, in English, German, and French, had been printed, most of which had been circulated. Ten thousand dollars had been appropriated to aid in the circulation of a new version of the Scriptures about to be issued in China, and about the same sum to aid in publishing the Hebrew-Spanish, Hebrew-German, and modern Armenian Scriptures in the Levant. $18,000 had been appropriated to assist in publishing Bibles at foreign missionary stations.

The American Temperance Union held its Anniversary on Thursday evening. The report gave a brief account of the World's Temperance Convention, and alluded to the progress of the temperance cause in this country. There is no liquor sold on any of the railroads running out of Boston, and one of the roads has resolved not to carry any intoxicating liquors. Among seamen, and in the army and navy, abstinence has increased. In Sweden and Germany, great progress has been made, and in the former kingdom 500 distilleries have been closed. In India, there is much prosperous temperance action. The report acknowledges donotions of $1,522. After the reading of the report, addresses were delivered by Mr. Scudder, Rev. Mr. Todd, Rev. Mr. Ludlow, and Dr. Hewitt.

The American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews held an anniversary meeting on Thursday evening. The Treasurer's Report showed that the receipts had been $6690, while the expenses had been about the same. This Society does not design to organize distinct churches of converted Jews, but leaves the convert free to unite with that religious society which may have been instrumental in his conversion, or where his inclinations may lead him. Six of this class have been brought under the influence of the Gospel the past year, and received into the communion of the church.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions celebrated their anniversary on Friday morning. The Report stated that more than 500 persons were connected with the mission operations of this Board. Their number has been considerably increased within the year, and twenty new missionaries are ready to go forth before next winter. But the receipts have fallen off. The expenses of the Board are about three hundred thousand dollars a year, and they hope to raise that sum during the year to come. The missions are generally in a prosperous condition, particularly among the Nestorians, in the Sandwich Islands, and in China.

American and Foreign Sabbath Union.—A sermon was preached before this Society on Sunday evening, by Pres. Hopkins of Williams College. His text was Isaiah 58: 13, 14. The design of the sermon was "to show, on Scripture grounds, the religious and moral duty of keeping holy the Sabbath; that the prosperity or adversity of the Jews was much connected with pure Sabbath-keeping; that the command of God to keep the Sabbath is still in force, and that its observance is essential to the preservation of our free institutions, the danger to which is not from without, but from corruption within, working under the forms of liberty."

The Evangelical Alliance.—This body held another meeting on Tuesday last week. The subject of slavery was brought up soon after the opening of the meeting. But after debating it most of the forenoon, they passed a vote the effect of which was to secure an indefinite postponement of all farther action. In the afternoon they succeeded in electing officers, and made Hon. Chief Justice Hornblower, President. They also determined that Romans 15: 7 should be adopted as the motto of the Alliance—"Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, for the glory of God." On a motion to publish the names of the Members of the Conference, Dr. Cox said his only objection was, that there were so few of them. He was ashamed of such a paucity, and was sorry to see that there was so little Christian feeling. There were many eminent clergymen in New York and Brooklyn who stood aloof, and exhibited no interest in the Alliance. Without determining to publish, the Alliance adjourned to meet next year. The N. Y. Tribune, in closing a report of the meeting, says: "We must not omit to add, that during the whole of the appointment of officers, and the subsequent proceedings, a good degree of hilarity prevailed in the Conference, and several first rate clerical jokes were perpetrated with perfect success."

Inquiry.—Do the Scriptures teach that Christians should forgive those who trespass against them, if those who commit the trespass do not repent thereof? This being a question the right decision of which has an important effect upon the Christian character, I would request those having light on it to give it in the Recorder.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

At the last Annual Meeting of the Missionary Association, which was held in Berlin, N. Y., it was made the duty of the Executive Board to determine the time and place of the next Anniversary. Accordingly, at a meeting of the Board held in New Market, N. J., on the 9th inst., it was resolved, that the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association hold its next regular meeting in DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on the 17th day of September next ensuing, commencing at 9 o'clock A. M.

It is proper to state, in this connection, that, at a former meeting of the Board, it was determined conditionally, that the Anniversary should take place in Alfred; and, in that view, correspondence was held with the 1st Alfred Church. But, upon more mature deliberation, it was thought, that the remoteness of that location, and its inconvenience of access by public conveyance, would leave us without a delegation from the eastern portion of the denomination. DeRuyter, being a more central spot, was selected for the sake of accommodating all parties. It is hoped that the time is not distant, when these annual convocations will become so interesting, that our brethren will overcome the greatest obstacles for the sake of attending them, and that, in whatever remote part of the denomination held, they will call together the crowded assembly. Indeed, the few meetings that have already been held have been occasions of intense and absorbing interest; and those who remained at home under the impression that they were dry business meetings, in which the mass of our people had no particular concern, suffered much loss. For the ensuing anniversary we earnestly bespeak a full and large attendance. It is confidently expected that we shall have communications from our foreign missionaries, brethren Carpenter and Wardner, to read on that occasion. They have no doubt arrived at their field of labor before this.

It will be a prominent object of the annual meeting to concert such measures as will give the greatest possible efficiency to our foreign missionary operations, as well as to put our home missions upon such a footing as will harmonize the views and secure the hearty coöperation of all our brethren. We entreat the brethren to arrange their duties at home, so that nothing shall hinder their attendance.

In conclusion, although we have judged it advisable to reconsider the vote which at first selected Alfred as the place of convocation, yet we are exceedingly anxious to have our western brethren attend at DeRuyter, and trust that they will spare no pains to do so.

On behalf of the Board,
THOS. B. BROWN, President.

REMITTANCE TO THE MISSIONARIES.

It is expected that a favorable opportunity to make a remittance to our missionaries will occur early in July. As it is desirable to embrace that opportunity, the Board request that the churches of the denomination feeling an interest in this great work—(and, surely, no Sabbath-keeping church can be otherwise than interested)—would forward to the Treasurer, A. D. Titsworth, Metuchen, N. J., their contributions with as little delay as possible. It is now upwards of four months since our missionaries took their departure, and, by the time they receive our bounty, the little that they took with them will in all probability be exhausted. Let it be borne in mind, that they are strangers in a strange land—a land of heathens—a land of darkness and death. May it never be said to our reproach, that we have left them to suffer. In all probability we shall hear from them within a month or two, and shall be able to increase the interest of the Anniversary by presenting their letters. At the Annual Meeting a full report of what it cost for their outfit, passage, the amount they took with them, &c., &c., will be submitted, when it is hoped many will be present to hear and judge for themselves.

On behalf of the Board,
Thos. B. Brown, } Com.
Geo. B. Utter, }

Meeting of the Adventists.—The Adventists held a conference in this city last week, which continued four days. The Tribune says that there were a goodly number present, among whom were a good supply of preachers. The several sessions were occupied in listening to reports from brethren from different sections of the country, to sermons on passages of Scripture illustrative of their views, and to the discussion of questions respecting the advancement of the cause. The reports from the different sections exhibited an encouraging state of things, for those interested in the prevalence of those views. The meetings of the Conference, by the numbers in attendance, and the unanimity and interest manifested in the discussions of the various questions, indicated a stability of the cause which was cheering to its adherents. Various resolutions were discussed and unanimously passed, deprecating every thing of an irregular or fanatical tendency, and expressive of interest in all the moral and benevolent movements of the day, and of Christian affection for all who live the life of a Christian.

"Sabbath Discussion" Ended.—We learn from the last Christian Chronicle, that "E. W. D." and "Indagator" have said all they intend to at present. Two more articles remain to be published in the Recorder, after which we may find room for some reflections which the controversy suggests.

General Intelligence.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Britannia arrived at Boston on Sunday last, with a fortnight later intelligence.

The price of cotton had fallen. The flour market had been fluctuating, but was settling down at a higher price. The potato blight had reäppeared in the neighborhood of Belfast.

The latest accounts from Ireland represent the mortal career of the Lord Lieutenant as rapidly drawing to a close. The Dublin Evening Post holds out no hope of his recovery.

A most diabolical plot to murder the Pope has been discovered. It was first found out by the French Ambassador; he revealed the names of the conspirators to the Pope. Their intention was to assassinate him while giving audience to one of them, who was appointed to kill him. A Capuchin Priest presented himself for an audience of the Pope. His Holiness requested his name. This he gave; but before admitting him, the Pope looked over the list of conspirators, and finding the name of the Capuchin there, he immediately summoned Carbines, who, on the Capuchin's entrance, seized him, and on searching him, found he had a brace of pistols and a poisoned dagger about his person. The Capuchin was conveyed to prison. Many arrests took place.

A few days ago not fewer than 2,000 emigrants sailed from Hamburg for the United States. In some parts of the country emigration is carried on to almost an alarming extent; whole villages go away en masse, and entire districts become depopulated.

The Queen of Spain and her husband show symptoms of enduring each other. They have appeared together in public; and the reconciliation is said to have given rise to great rejoicings.

The amount which the Americans have sent to the starving Irish has been the universal theme of eulogy in Ireland, and of warm and generous sympathy in England.

WAR NEWS.

The principal news received during the week from the seat of war, is embraced in the following article from the New Orleans Commercial Times, of May 6th. It was brought by the steamship New Orleans, which left Vera Cruz on the 29th ult.:—

Gen. Scott was vigorously pressing the enemy, affording the defeated Mexicans no respite. Jalapa and Perote have been occupied, and the report was current when the New Orleans sailed that Gen. Scott was on the point of making a demonstration on Puebla itself.

Santa Anna, when last heard from, was in so forlorn a condition that it was expected he would give himself up to the American Governor of Vera Cruz, preferring to trust himself to the generosity of an open foe to exposing himself to the tender mercies of his own countrymen who now denounce him as their betrayer.

The Mexican Army, after heavy losses of killed and wounded, among which was General Ciriaco Vasquez, and other chiefs and officers of less note, who fell on the field of battle, has broken up altogether, not an officer or soldier remaining with their standard.

Gen. Santa Anna, who commanded in chief, was the first, according to some, and the last according to others, to leave the field, accompanied by only 25 Dragoons, taking the byways, and a party is even found to assert that they saw him in one of the villages of the Sierra, in search of horses to remount his escort.

The fact of this General not having fallen back on Jalapa, has left room for the supposition that his flight is prompted by the fear of being sacrificed for treason imputed to him, and which has no other foundation than the adverse results experienced by the Mexican arms in every encounter with the Americans.

Gen. Canalizo, in his retreat on Puebla, dismantled the Fort of Perote, carrying off all the ordinance he could, and spiking such as he had to leave behind. He set at liberty all the criminals confined there, including the assassins of Falconi and his brother-in-law, who, some of our readers will remember, have been cruelly murdered in this city.

Perote has been abandoned by the Mexicans, after spiking all their large guns, and will be taken possession of without opposition.

One of the papers says that there is no reason to believe that the victory of Cerro Gordo will bring us any nearer to a peace than we were before. The war is not unpopular with the mass of the Mexicans. They have suffered none of its horrors.

It is believed by Gen. Scott and the officers with him, that it will be necessary to occupy the whole country. This he thinks can be easily done.

With 20,000 men he will march to the capital, take possession of the Government, disarm the people, establish a provisional Government under the authority of the United States, and defray its expenses from the customs and mines, the chief sources of revenue in Mexico.

SANDWICH ISLANDS NEWS.

The following items were collected from files of Sandwich Island papers to December 26, 1846:—

On the 9th of November five barrels of brandy were seized by the police, having been smuggled on shore from the Hamburg brig Helene. This being the first offence under the stringent new law, a fine of $2,500 was imposed, and the vessel, which might have been confiscated, was allowed to go free. The brandy was emptied into the street in front of the Custom House.

The first Danish ship that ever visited the Islands was the frigate Galethea, Capt. Steen Anderson Bille, with a full scientific corps. A treaty of amity and commerce was made with the Danes by this opportunity. To enlighten the babel of tongues, in that region it was necessary to publish the treaty in English, Hawaiian, French and Danish.

There has been, it seems, an irreconcilable split among the Mormons at San Francisco. The little volcano has been rumbling for some time, and has at last broke forth in flame. The result of this explosion will be to throw them into different parts of California.

On the 29th Sept. died at Kailua, island of Hawaii, Mrs. Pamela P. Andrews, wife of Rev. Seth P. Andrews, of the American Mission. Her death was very sudden. On Friday she was well—on Tuesday she died; her disease was fever.

The 'Polynesian' chronicles the arrival of a young grisly bear brought from Columbia river, Oregon. 'It is a small cub, 3 months old, with a growl like small thunder and teeth and claws that beat little Red Riding Hood's wolf all hollow.'

The number of licenses for the sale by retail of spiritous liquors granted in 1846, was only 5, all in Oahu. Three licenses to publish periodicals were granted.

Nov. 28, the 3d anniversary of Hawaiian Independence was celebrated with due honors. The King gave a grand dinner to some 60 dignitaries, closing with toasts, speeches, &c.

Luke W. Avery, of Groton, Conn., was killed by a whale, Aug. 10. The first officer and three men of the French whale-ship Ajax were killed by a whale in May.

Peter le Gueval was fined $500 for selling a glass of liquor to a native chief.

The Outrage in Brooklyn.—We gave last week some account of the murderous assault upon Mr. Alvah Hotchkiss, in Brooklyn. Mr. H. was alive at the last reports, but was not expected to recover. On Friday last, for the first time, he was able to speak. The following article from the N. Y. Tribune will show that the probable murderers have been arrested, and the manner in which it was done:—

Shortly after the assault, Mayor Stryker, of Brooklyn, sent for Justice Osborne, and conversed with him in reference to the outrage, and the most effectual means of ferreting out the murderer. The conference resulted in those gentleman selecting Wm. H. Stephens of this city, and Folke and Stillwell of Brooklyn, for the accomplishment of that object. Those officers soon ascertained that some conversation which had taken place between two of the accused had been overheard, also the nature of that conversation, which led them to visit a house at the corner of Mulberry and Cross streets, on Sunday evening, where, on entering a room upstairs, they found a group of men and women. One of the number, from a description given, was supposed to be a man by the name of Baily, with whom officer Stephens entered into conversation, while the Brooklyn officers engaged the attention of the others. After a brief sojourn at the house in question, the officers took into custody Edward Baily and Laforest Logan, on suspicion of having been concerned in the outrage upon Mr. Hotchkiss. After safely lodging these fellows in the Brooklyn Jail, the officers returned to the house in Mulberry-st., and there learned from Julia Stevens and Nancy Pool, two of the inmates, that Baily, in conversation with them, said he was afraid to go out, and when asked why, he said he had inflicted a severe wound upon a person in Brooklyn who had attempted to cheat him at a gambling-table. It was also ascertained that one of the accused parties had exhibited a considerable sum of money at the house in Mulberry-st., in gold coin and bank notes; and also that there had been still another man in company with them at that house, by the name of Williams. The officers then returned to the Brooklyn Jail, and inquired of the accused, then in custody, the name of their other companion. They were informed that it was George Buchanan, and that he lived in Cherry-st. By going from house to house in Cherry-st., they at length ascertained that Buchanan had gone to Brookhaven, about 80 miles from Brooklyn, whither the officers immediately repaired, and found Williams at the house of his mother, and the watch of Mr. H. on his person; which has been identified by Mrs. Hotchkiss, J. H. Snider, Mr. H.'s clerk, and by Mr. Elisha Marriott, who repaired it for Mr. H. He was brought back to Brooklyn, and on being questioned as to the manner he came in possession of the watch, said he bought it from a man named John Martell, on the Battery. Martell was also arrested yesterday, but alledges that he did not sell it nor ever had it in his possession; and it is believed, from various other circumstances, that he had no participation in the murderous transaction.

It will be remembered that also, on Thursday night of last week, a murderous assault with slung-shot was made on Mr. Bennet, the pilot of one of the Williamsburgh ferry-boats, under the impression, as is supposed, that he was the ferry-master returning with his money. Mr. Bennet went to Brooklyn, and identified Buchanan as the man who struck him.

In addition to the above facts, it has been ascertained that the principal part of the accused parties, after committing the act, returned the same evening to this city, and went to the Bowery Theatre; they there met with some of their comrades, on which occasion Williams remarked that Ned (meaning Baily) had made more money that night than they had made during ther late cruise; while busy at the same time a short distance from them, under a light, endeavoring to rub off some marks on his coat-sleeve, supposed to be blood, Williams called to Baily, "never mind," he could rub them off to-morrow.

Baily came from the State Prison on the 18th March last, having just served out a sentence of 2 years' imprisonment. Buchanan alias Williams, and Laforest Logan, have just returned from a voyage to the Mediterranean.

Distress in Madeira.—The Tribune is indebted to Mr. Burden, an intelligent gentleman from Madeira, at present in this city, for some information relating to the famine which has vexed and is vexing that Island. He says, that for months past, the poor inhabitants of Madeira have been in as deplorable a condition as the suffering Irish. The potato crop has failed for two years; and this calamity, followed by a deficiency in the supply of breadstuffs—in consequence of the rise of prices in this and other countries—has left the poor there without any of the most absolute necessaries of life to depend upon. The mother country, Portugal, could not aid them, if it would. Immersed in all the evils of rebellion, and insurrectionary riots, the Government of that country can hardly maintain itself; probably will be compelled to call in foreign assistance. The Government of the Island has done all in its power for the needy and destitute; but all was necessarily little; for the Government itself is poor.

The Judicial Election Law.—This statute is published at length in the Albany Evening Journal—it imposes important duties on the several Boards of supervisors—and provides, that

The first election of Appeals and Supreme Courts Judges, County Judges, (except in New York City and County,) District Atternies, Recorders of Cities, (except New York,) Surrogates, (in certain Counties only,) and one Clerk of the Court of Appeals, is to be held on Monday, June 7, next. Recorders go into office next January, and hold it four years.

A separate officer is to be elected to do the duties of Surrogate, in each County containing less than 40,000 people. County Judges and Surrogates are to go into office next July, and hold their places 4 1-2 years.

The Boards of Supervisors are to meet on the 25th inst., and fix the salaries of Judge and Surrogate, where these officers are united and where separate—unless said Boards have already fixed said salaries.

New York Legislature—The Excise Law.—The Legislature of the State of New York adjourned on Thursday last; or, rather, it took a recess from that time until the 8th of September next. One of its last acts—an act which will give it an unenviable notoriety—was the repeal of the Excise Law. The friends of that law supposed it to be safe from repeal during the present session. But by some crooked management among its enemies, the deed has been done. There can be but little doubt that the next Legislature will be asked to let the people vote for or against a complete interdiction of liquor selling, to take effect throughout the State. If the privilege is granted them, we believe they will go against the nefarious traffic by an overwhelming majority.

SUMMARY.

The Supreme Court at New Bedford has decided that a party cannot be a witness in his own case, to prove the contents of a trunk lost while traveling. Linus Snow sued the Eastern Railroad Company for a trunk lost upon that road, and obtained in the Common Pleas a verdict against them, based upon his own testimony, which was received as to the contents. The Supreme Court now decides that he could not be a witness in this, any more than in any other case where he was interested, and therefore set aside the verdict and ordered a new trial.

The Albany Evening Journal says that an order has been made by the Governor, Controller, and Attorney General, as provided by the 8th section, chapter 245, of the laws of 1844, transferring the counties of Rensselaer, Columbia, Greene, Schoharie, Lewis, Jefferson, and Oswego, to the prison district of the Clinton prison, and directing that all persons convicted and sentenced to confinement in the State Prisons, from and after the 15th of May, in any of the counties above named, shall be sent to Clinton Prison.

The Albany Evening Journal says that the house of Hiram Wheeler, a peaceful citizen of Tacghacee, Columbia Co., N. Y., was fired into on Saturday night by a gang of incendiaries. Four musket balls were found lodged in the building, two of which were found near the beds in which Mr. Wheeler and his children slept. Such outrages should and will awaken a general and indignant sentiment in the community. Unfortunately, while none doubt by whom these crimes are perpetrated, the authorities are unable to obtain the proof necessary to their conviction.

The Boston Mail of May 11th says that gentlemen from the interior of New Hampshire, on the 4th, report two feet of snow on a level, in the woods, and large banks in the roads. The Franconia mail continued to go through the Notch on runners, and the sleighing was reported "first rate." In Pecham, Vt., on the 1st of May, the ground was extensively covered with snow, and there were banks in every direction from two feet to eight feet deep.

A most violent hurricane passed and re-passed over Madison, Indiana. It passed first from the South-west and returned from the North-west. A number of houses were unroofed and otherwise injured, and one or two were blown down. A Mrs. McKee was instantly killed, and one of her daughters had both her legs broken. The steeple of the First Presbyterian Church was so much injured that it will probably have to be re-constructed.

A letter from Louisiana, dated May 1, says that there never was so much sickness in this country, in the whole ten years I have lived here, as there has been here this winter and spring, which should have been the healthiest part of the season. There appears to have been an epidemic prevailing among the people, both black and white. The malignant scarlet fever, the bronchitis, and nemonia, are the principal complaints. Many do not survive twenty-four hours—very seldom over three days. We have now sixteen doctors in this place—not any of them, however, have been able to stay the plague.

The robbers who hoped to carry off $36,000 from Mr. Keep were disappointed by the prudence of his wife. Mr. K. is a traveling agent or collector between some of the Banks of Canada West and this City, and had occasion to leave his wife at Kingston with the above large sum in her charge. She went to visit some of her friends, but took the money with her, and the villains who broke open her trunk at the hotel were able to plunder it of nothing but clothing. They have since been arrested.

It is proposed to tunnel the St. Lawrence, opposite the island of Montreal, in order to connect the railroad running to the Atlantic. The proposed tunnel under the St. Lawrence at its narrowest part, near St. Helen's Island, will be about one-third of a mile from shore to shore, and about one-third the length of the principal tunnels in England. The depth of the water in the river is 43 feet.

At Algiers, opposite New Orleans, on Sunday, 25th ult., there was an immense crowd to witness the footrace on the Bingaman course, for a purse of $3,000—distance five miles. Only two men started—Cornelius Desmond of Boston, and John Smith, the Mountaineer, of New York. Smith gave up after running two miles, Desmond completed the five miles in thirty-two minutes and sixteen seconds.

The Mayor and Aldermen of Boston had a meeting upon the subject of license. A proposition to limit the number of licenses to fifty was rejected. A motion to grant no licenses was carried by a vote of 7 to 1; but it appearing that some Aldermen voted under a misapprehension of the question, the vote was reconsidered, and the subject was thereupon laid on the table. It is understood that four, if not five, are in favor of the principle of licensing.

A New Brunswick paper gives an account of the loss of the sealing schooner Margaret. Some of the crew, who arrived in Harbor Grace, report that the vessel ran ashore in the neighborhood of Greenspond, when the Master, Mr. David Power, a man much respected, and twenty of the crew, were in a few moments hurried into eternity!

On Sunday, while one of the congregations of Utica were engaged in administering the rite of baptism, in the Mohawk river, a bridge adjoining the scene gave way, and some 16 persons were precipitated some 20 feet into the river. One person, Mr. Smith, was killed, and several severely wounded.

The St. John New Brunswicker mentions that James Brannen, private, 33d regiment, was shot by a Corporal, while in chase of him and other deserters. Brannen leveled a stick heavily loaded with lead at the Corporal, who, in self-defence, shot him with a pistol.

In a mineralogical report of Lapland, presented to the Swedish Government, amongst other curious facts, the discovery of a great waterfall in the river Lulea is particularly mentioned. It is said to be one-eighth of a mile broad, and at its greatest height to fall 400 feet.

The N. O. Picayune has received an account of the killed and wounded at Cerro Gordo. There was no officer of the regulars killed—14 were wounded, 30 privates were killed, and 196 wounded. One volunteer officer was killed and seven wounded, three privates killed and 48 wounded.

The license party in Delaware have engaged Mr. Clayton and other eminent counsel to test the constitutionality of the law giving the people the privilege of voting for or against licenses to taverns, etc.

Passengers are now carried from Mechanicsville to Whitehall, and any of the places on Lake Champlain, at which the steamers land, at 37 1-2 cents.

George W. Wilson, postmaster at Fishersville, Va., has been sentenced to six months imprisonment and a fine of one dollar, for opening and embezzeling a letter addressed to George Coiner.

Asa B. Hutchinson, a member of the celebrated "Hutchinson Family," was married at Nantucket on the 3d.

The U. S. ship Jamestown has returned to Boston from her mission to relieve the starving Irish.

One-third of the people of Annaduff parish, Ireland, have emigrated or died from starvation.

DIED,

In Albion, Dane Co., W. T., April 20, of hectic fever, Mrs. S. P. Burdick, wife of Israel F. Burdick, in the 22d year of her age. Sister Burdick made a profession of religion when quite young, which profession she adorned with a consistent life. She bore her severe sickness of many weeks' continuance with most entire patience and resignation, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, with a full assurance of a glorious immortality.

In Alfred, N. Y., April 20, of consumption, Susan Pierce, in the 25th year of her age. She was a member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred. In life she was obedient, and in death she was triumphant.

In Alfred, April 1, in the 21st year of her age, Janette King, of Genesee, Allegany Co. She wes a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Her life was an illustration of the power of the Gospel to save from sin. During her illness, which was short, and as she drew near her end, she frequently expressed her confidence in God, and not unfrequently would she say to her attendants, "O, I am happy! O how blessed to die the death of the righteous!"

Suggestions to our Friends.—Four numbers more will complete the third volume of the Sabbath Recorder. In making two or three suggestions to our friends, just at this time, we trust that we shall not be regarded as giving too much prominence to our own affairs.

The first suggestion we wish to make is, that a considerable number of new names ought to be added to our list of subscribers before the commencement of the new volume. Our list has always been too small to enable us to go on without fear of embarrassment. Besides this, there are generally at the close of a volume more or less subscribers parting company with us, whose places must be supplied. How shall this be done? It will not do to keep traveling agents in the field for that exclusive object, but we must rely mainly upon the voluntary assistance of our friends. We doubt not that a very little effort on the part of each individual who feels anxious to have the Recorder sustained, would easily accomplish all that is desired. Shall not that effort be made? We trust that many of our friends will answer, Yes, and that we shall see the fruit of their decision before the volume closes.

The second suggestion we wish to make is, that some of our subscribers have not yet paid for the current volume, and ought to give immediate attention to it. A large majority of our subscribers, we rejoice to say, have promptly remitted their subscriptions, for which they have our thanks. But in publishing a paper, the expenses of which are about equal to the income, it is easy for a few individuals to create serious embarrassment by neglect on this point. In many cases the publication of religious papers has been rendered impossible by delinquency on the part of those who professed to be firm friends of the cause to which the paper was devoted. We hope that those who are indebted to us will embrace the first opportunity to forward what is due. That would be the best encouragement they could give us to go forward in the work we have undertaken.

Dr. CHARLES H. STILLMAN takes this mode of giving notice to those who have made inquiries, that he is prepared to receive under his care a limited number of patients affected with diseases of the Eyes, particularly those requiring surgical operations, at his residence, Plainfield, N. J

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON,
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Alfred, June 23, 1846.

SONG OF THE DOVE.

FROM FREDERIKA BREMER'S "HOME."

There sitteth a Dove so white and fair,
All on the lily spray;
And she listeneth how to Jesus Christ
The little children pray.

Lightly she spreads her friendly wings,
And to Heaven's gate hath sped;
And unto the Father in Heaven she bears
The prayers which the children have said.

And back she comes from Heaven's gate,
And brings—that Dove so mild—
From the Father in Heaven who hears her speak,
A blessing for every child.

Then children lift up a pious prayer,
It hears whatever you say—
That heavenly Dove so white and fair,
That sits on the lily spray.

THE SHILLING AND THE GUINEA.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

Some time ago, the Duke of Buccleuch, in one of his walks, purchased a cow from a person in the neighborhood of Dalkeith, and left orders to send it to his palace the following morning. According to agreement, the cow was sent, and the Duke happened to be in dishabille, and walking in the avenue, espied a little fellow ineffectually attempting to drive the animal forward to its destination. The boy, not knowing the Duke, bawled out to him—

"Flimun, come here an' gin 's a han' wi' this beast."

The Duke saw the mistake, and determined on having a joke with the little fellow. Pretending, therefore, not to understand him, the Duke walked on slowly, the boy still craving his assistance; at last he cried in a tone of apparent distress—

"Come here, mun, an' help up, an' sure as ony thing, I'll gie you half I get!"

This last solicitation had the desired effect. The Duke went and lent a helping hand.

"And now," said the Duke, as they trudged along, "how much do you think you'll get for this job?"

"Oh, dinna ken," said the boy, "but I'm sure o' something, for the folk up by at the house are good to a' bodies."

As they approached the house, the Duke darted from the boy and entered by a different way. He called a servant, and put a sovereign into his hand, saying, "Give that to the boy that has brought the cow." The Duke returned to the avenue, and was soon rejoined by the boy.

"Well, how much did you get?" said the Duke.

"A shilling," said the boy, "an' there's the half of it t' ye."

"But you surely got more than a shilling," said the Duke.

"No," said the boy, with the utmost earnestness, "as sure 's death that's a' I got—and d' ye not think it's a plenty?"

"I do not," said the Duke; "there must be some mistake, and as I am acquainted with the Duke, if you return, I think I'll get you more."

The boy consented—back they went—the Duke rang the bell, and ordered all the servants to be assembled.

"Now," said the Duke to the boy, "point me out the person that gave you the shilling."

"It was that chap there with the apron," pointing to the butler.

The delinquent confessed, fell on his knees, and attempted an apology; but the Duke interrupted him, indignantly ordered him to give the boy the sovereign, and quit his service instantly.

"You have lost," said the Duke, "your money, your situation, and your character, by your covetousness; learn, henceforth, that honesty is the best policy."

The boy by this time recognized his assistant in the person of the Duke, and the Duke was so delighted with the sterling worth and honesty of the boy, that he ordered him to be sent to school, kept there, and provided for at his own expense.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.

Sowing Clover Seeds.—As we are among those who believe, that no land can be preserved in a state of fertility, without the system of culture embraces clover within its economy, as well for turning in, as for food for stock, we advise all who may have wheat fields, (if they have not done so already,) to sow thereon, upon every acre, from twelve to sixteen pounds of good clean clover seed.

Sowing Grass Seeds.—So soon as the frost is out of the earth, and the ground sufficiently dry to be plowed without injury, all kinds of grass seeds may be sown—as Timothy, Herd's grass, Orchard grass, Rye grass, and Lucerne. A practice prevails in some parts of the country of sowing Timothy and Clover seed together. The practice we think a bad one. Clover flowers are fit to cut several weeks before Timothy, and is therefore ill-suited to be grown with it on the same field. We would always sow Timothy seed alone. With regard to the quantity of the seed, we would remark, that less than a peck per acre should never be sown, and that a peck and a half per acre, could very advantageously be used on that space of ground.

Clover and Orchard Grass—Though they do not flower at the same time, may be sown together with a decided improvement both for pasture and hay. The Clover must direct as to the time of cutting the hay. So soon as the Clover is in bloom, without looking to the state of the Orchard grass, is the time to cut. When thus sown together, 12 lbs. of Clover seed and one bushel of Orchard grass should be sown on an acre. Pastures thus sown are much better than when Clover is alone sown thereon; are measurably exempt from contracting the disease called the hoven. The quantity of hay which may be grown on an acre is greater, while the quality is better.

Clover Fields.—All clover fields which have not been treated so already, should have, as soon as possible, a bushel of plaster sown on each acre. Such work is best performed in a moist, cloudy day.

Oats.—Let the cultivator of this grain bear in mind, that the sooner he sows his seed after the frost is out of the ground, the heavier will be his oats, and the larger their yield. It is a crop which has frequently yielded from sixty to one hundred bushels, and ought, under good management, good soil, and a good season, to yield on average 60 bushels to the acre.

Barley.—If there are any who desire to engage in the culture of barley, we should remark, that the sooner it is got in the better. The soil best adapted to its culture is a deep rich loom. The ground should be well prepared, and as the grain has a hard, dry husk, it would be well to soak the seed in a solution of horse dung for 12 hours before it is sown.

Meadows.—Where they may be turf-bound, an improvement in product may be effected by harrowing the ground as soon as the frost is out of it, and sowing thereon a mixture composed of five bushels of ashes and one of plaster to each acre. If the stand of grass should be thin, it would be well to sow four or five pounds of Timothy seed per acre, and harrow it. Meadows may be restored to productiveness by such management, without incurring the labor and expense of replowing.

Grain Fields.—It is considered a good practice to harrow and roll grain fields, as soon as the ground is sufficiently hard to bear these operations without poaching. In England, the best results have followed such practice.

Root Crops.—As potatoes have become a precarious crop, it would be well for farmers to turn their attention to the growth of Beets, Mangel Wurtzel, Carrots, and Parsneps, as a substitute for that root. The cultivation of these latter roots cost but very little more than potatoes, and if properly managed, will yield much more to the acre.

A SINGULAR CASE.

We find in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, the following account of the anomolous case of Miss Sarah Burbeck, of Salem, who is represented not to have slept for a moment, nor been free from pain, for fifteen years. Her body and limbs are in perpetual motion—and almost all the joints of her body have been dislocated thousands of times:—

"When I entered her room, she was sitting up in bed, and her right arm, hand and fingers were twisting about in every direction; presently she leaned forward and threw herself back against the headboard, as if determined to break her head. The headboard was within an inch or two of the wall, and though a large, well-stuffed pillow was placed against it, when her head struck the pillow it was with such force that the beadstead struck the wall, causing the whole house to tremble. During ten minutes that I sat there, she was thrown back in that manner over thirty times. It appeared to me that each blow of her head against the pillow, board and wall, was sufficient to stun a common person, yet she hardly appeared to notice it.

"During the intervals between these spasms her right arm, hands and fingers were twisting about, and her right shoulder and under jaw were drawn out of joint and continually the bones rattling and grinding together with a noise that could be heard in other rooms, as I was told by several present. Being deaf, I could not hear them, but by placing one hand on her cheek and the other on her shoulder, I could feel the grinding and crackling as the muscles kept them in constant motion.

"Sometimes her jaws are locked several hours and even days; and at one time, if I remember right, they were locked twenty-five days, when all the nourishment she took was through the aperture caused by the loss of a tooth.

"Her jaws have been so often dislocated, she can bite nothing except when the contraction of the muscles throws her teeth together, and then her tongue is often caught between her teeth and severely bitten. She takes no nourishment except in a liquid state, and that with the greatest difficulty, as it causes strangulation, spasms, and severe distress.

"These spasms sometimes throw her from her bed to the plastering over head, and sometimes on to the floor, and any attempt to hold her increases her agony.

"Her hand is sometimes thrown up into her face with such force as to bruise her face and break the skin, and one of her eyes has thus been destroyed.

"While conversing with her, her jaw was thrown out of joint, and drawn down in a most shocking manner, and she was thrown back three times with such force as caused the whole house to shake, and the moment the spasm ceased she finished her sentence, commencing at the very word where the fit had interrupted her, and with so calm a voice, that I asked her, in astonishment, if she felt no pain when thus attacked. She said the pain was so excruciating, if she would give way to her feelings, her screams might be heard half a mile; but as that would only distress others, she had learned to be quiet.

"Her father is over 90 years of age, and had a shock of palsy, from which he had partially recovered when I saw him. Her mother is over 70, and has had the care of this suffering child until prevented by sickness within a year and a half. At the time of my visit she was confined in the same room in a very feeble state."

Duty.—A life of duty is the only cheerful life; for all joy springs from the affections; and it is the great law of nature, that without good deeds all good affection dies, and the heart becomes utterly desolate. The external world, too, then loses all its beauty; poetry fades away from the earth; for what is poetry but the reflection of all pure and sweet, all high and lofty thoughts? But where duty is—

"Flowers laugh beneath her in their beds,
And fragrance in her footing treads;
She doth preserve the stars from wrong,
And th' eternal heavens, thro' her, are fresh and strong."

Number of Grasses.—Farmers only cultivate a very few varieties of the grasses; and very few are aware what a variety there is within a few miles of them. There are, for instance, 120 species in the State of New York; 121 in Massachusetts; 96 in Chester Co., Pa.; 100 in Kentucky; 162 in Carolina and Georgia; a catalogue of plants growing in the vicinity of Quincy, Middle Florida, names 96 species; and according to Torrey, there were in 1831, in North America, 329 species. It is pretty certain that many more of these will yet be brought into cultivation. [Prairie Farmer.

An affecting Scene.—The late Geo. Dunn, jailer—or, as modern magniloquence will have it, governor—of Kilmainham, was a blunt, kind-hearted Northumbrian, who had witnessed many affecting scenes in his time. Being required to mention the incident, connected with capital punishments, which had most affected him during his long experience, he selected one so simple, and so touching, as proves him to have been possessed, not only of very tender feelings, but of a most correct and delicate judgment. At the last interview between a condemned criminal and his wife—their child, a bonny wee thing—just beginning to prattle—was playing about the cell. Her little eye was caught by the glitter of the bolts which confined the father's legs, and she cried out, in blissful ignorance of their use—'Oh, daddy, what pretty things! You never wore these at home.'

'Many a sad thing I have seen,' said the honest jailer, 'and many a bitter cry I have heard within these walls; but never one that made me blubber like a child till then. The mother, sir, and the poor fellow himself—oh, sir, it was terrible, terrible.' [Tait's Magazine.

Yankee Trick.—During the Revolutionary war, two brothers from one of the eastern ports, were commanders of privateers; they cruised together, and were eminently successful, doing great damage to the enemy, and making money for themselves. One evening, being in the latitude of the shoals of Nantucket, but many miles to the eastward of them, they espied a large British vessel, having the appearance of a merchantman, and made toward her; but to their astonishment, found her to be a frigate in disguise. A very high breeze prevailing, they hauled off in different directions. One only could be pursued, and the frigate gained rapidly upon him. Finding he could not run away, the commanding officer had recourse to a stratagem. On a sudden he hauled in every sail, and all hands were employed in setting poles, as if shoving his vessel off a bank! The people on board the frigate, amazed at the supposed danger they had run, and to save themselves from being grounded, immediately clawed off, and left the more knowing Yankee "to make himself scarce." As soon as night rendered it prudent for him, he hoisted sail in a sea two hundred fathoms deep.

How to Choose a Wife.—"A place for every thing, and every thing in its place," said the patriarch to his daughter. "Select a wife, my son, who will never step over a broomstick." The son was obedient to the lesson. "Now," said he pleasantly, on a gay May day, to one of his companions, "I appoint that broomstick to choose me a wife. The young lady who will not step over it shall have the offer of my hand." They passed from the splendid saloon to the grove; some stumbled over the broomstick, and others jumped it. At length a young lady stooped, and put it in its place. The promise was fulfilled. She became the wife of an educated and wealthy young man, and he the husband of a prudent, industrious and lovely wife. He brought a fortune to her, and she knew how to save one. It was not easy to decide which was under the greatest obligations. Both were rich, and each enriched the other.

The Telegraph.—The American Messenger relates the following of the inventor of the Telegraph: "He had occasion to leave the city to attend a meeting of the Directors of the Western line, at Utica, at a time when he was anxiously expecting intelligence from a daughter, who had sailed for a foreign port. At Albany no dispatch was received. At Utica, with a heart burdened with anxiety, he went to the office of the telegraph, communicated with New York, and received the almost instantaneous reply that the 'Cayuga had arrived at —— in 12 days, all well.' He handed the dispatch to the Board, with the remark, that, 'If his invention had been instrumental of affording relief but to one anxious father's heart, similarly circumstanced, it would be a sufficient reward for all his thought and toil in perfecting his telegraph.'"

Music in the Family.—An excellent clergyman, possessing knowledge of human nature, instructed his large family of daughters in the ordinary practice of music. They were all observed to be amiable and happy. A friend inquired if there was any secret in his mode of education. He replied, 'When any thing disturbs their tempers, I say to them, Sing; and if I hear them speaking against any person, I call them to sing to me, and they sing away all causes of discontent, and every disposition to scandal.' Such a use of this accomplishment might seem to fit a family for the company of angels. Young voices around the domestic altar, breathing sacred music, at the hour of morning and evening devotion, are a sweet and touching accompaniment. [Mrs. Sigourney.

Life of the Husbandman in Hindostan.—The husbandman rises with the earliest dawn, washes, and says a prayer, then sets out with his cattle to his distant field. After an hour or two he eats some remnants of his yesterday's fare for breakfast, and goes on with his labor till noon, when his wife brings out his hot dinner; he eats it by a brook or under a tree, talks and sleeps till two o'clock, while his cattle also feed and repose. From two till sunset he labors again; then drives his cattle home, feeds them, bathes, eats some supper, smokes, and spends the rest of the evening in amusement with his wife and children, or his neighbors. The women fetch water, grind the corn, and do the household work, besides spinning and such occupations. [Elphistone's History of India.

The dying Boy.—Lest he might feel ill at ease in my lap, I laid him down upon my cloak, and kneeled by his side, to watch the change in his features. The present now was all to me—the future I knew I should not longer reck. Feeling my breath close to his cheek, he half opened his eyes, looked as if, after a long absence, he again suddenly recognized his father, and, putting out his little mouth, seemed to crave one last token of his love. The temptation was too powerful; I gently pressed my lip upon that of my babe, and gathered from it the proffered kiss; life's last faint spark was just going forth, and I caught it on the threshold. Scarcely had I drawn back my face, when all respiration ceased: his eyestrings broke, his features fell, and his limbs stiffened forever.

VARIETY.

A boy named Coolidge had his arm badly crushed in a Boston steam bakery a few days since, and it was amputated by Dr. Lewis while the patient was under the influence of ether. In a few hours after he died. The ether was properly administered, by Dr. Hayward, surgeon of the Massachusetts Hospital, who, with Drs. Jackson, Cabot, and others, were present at the operation. It seems from the report that, in the opinion of Dr. Lewis, "the inhalation of the ether was the immediate cause of the boy's death." Several cases of this kind have been recently recorded, proving that this wonderfully affecting agent is to be administered with the greatest caution.

Mr. M'Donald, in his travels through Sweden, says:—"Young children, from the age of one to that of eighteen months, are wrapped up in bandages, like cylindrical wicker baskets, which are contrived so as to keep their bodies straight without interfering much with their growth. They are suspended from pegs in the wall, or laid in any convenient part of the room, without much nicety, where they exist in great silence and good humor. I have not heard the cries of a child since I came to Sweden."

Cobbett says:—"Talk, indeed, of your pantomimes and gaudy shows, your processions and installations, and coronations! Give me, for a beautiful sight, a neat and smart woman heating her oven and setting in the bread. And if the bustle does make the sign of labor glisten on her brow, where is the man that would not kiss that off rather than the plaster from a duchess?"

A wealthy Brahmin at Benares, India, not long since, committed his son to the care of a missionary, using this extraordinary language:—"I feel convinced, sir, after reading your holy shasters, that they contain the true religion. I have not the power to come up to its precepts. But there is my son, take him as your son; feed him at your table, and bring him up a Christian." At the same time he made over to the missionary the sum of $5,000, to defray the expenses of his son's education.

A singular and serious accident occurred at Cincinnati. In company with a gentleman, in a buggy, a young lady was returning to the city from a country jaunt. Her long dress, flying over the side of the vehicle, caught in the splinters of a broken felloe of the hind wheel, and dragged her violently and suddenly out upon the pavement. In the fall her skull was fractured, and her recovery is doubtful.

For the last three years the number of students of theology at Berlin has considerably diminished. In 1844 the number amounted to 643, and now there are 247. In all the German Universities the number of theological students of late years has very much fallen off, but not in so great proportion.

ALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

MR. EDITOR:—In his last communication, "Indagator" gives "a sketch of the theory of the Gospel," as he understands it, in its relation to the law. Many of his observations are just and excellent. With his theory, however, I cannot agree. I acknowledge, that I did not read it without pain. It seems to me, to leave the world without a Sabbath; and virtually without a Divine law. Perhaps I do not understand him. At a time of reigning infidelity, when the restraints of God's law are, at best, but as the feeble threads of gossamer, every tendency to remove these restraints, is to be deprecated as a real and deep affliction. Truth, however, will, in the end, vindicate her own character and claims. Her God ever lives. Here rests our strong hope. In order to compare my own "theory," with that of my friend, I shall mainly confine my remarks to a brief examination of his statements. The question of relation between the two dispensations is one of amazing interest; as it involves the theory of revelation, and must determine our views of God's moral government over us. Not only the sabbatic law, but all religion, is vitally concerned in it.

The Old Testament and the New, according to "Indagator," belong to "different systems of religion." To my mind, this language is much too strong. I prefer to regard them as parts of the same system; differing only in degrees of maturity, as the man differs from the child. Revelation, comprising Moses and the prophets, the Evangelic and Apostolic writings, presents to the contemplation the delightful spectacle of one complete, beautiful, and compact system. The administration of one God, by one Spirit, through one Messiah, and in one Zion, is every where visible. In structure, in spirit, and in object, the chain of unity is unbroken. This one administration divides itself into two branches, each necessary to the other, and together forming one whole. These embrace the two comprehensive, spiritual ends, contemplated in the system of revelation—the devolopment of law and of grace. The Old Testament matured the one, and prepared the way for the other; the New Testament finished the entire work. "The law came by Moses; but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." As grace is not confined, in its operations, to either Testament, so the law is not. They are companions, essential to each other, constituting the channels through which God's government of the world is administered, and belong to all dispensations. As law is primary, it was first matured.

In order satisfactorily to determine, in what sense, and how far, the Old Testament is abolished, it will be helpful to look more narrowly into the peculiar structure of the two departments of revelation; and consider more minutely their relation to each other. The former, as we have seen, contemplates mainly two objects—primarily to give body and form and legal sanction to those duties, which "God requires of human beings." This was necessary, fully to define to man his moral standing before his Maker. "The law entered that sin might abound." "I had not known sin but by the law." If this be one object of the Old Testament, we should expect to find some where in it, a full, distinct, formal and solemn statement of those duties. The ten commandments realize this just expectation. In these few precepts is "concentrated the substance" of all moral law. The New Testament adds nothing. It only recognizes and interprets. It applies to every possible relation of moral beings. It serves the double purpose of direction and conviction. True, it was immediately addressed to the Jews; as the precepts of the New Testament were immediately addressed to Christians of the first age. This is a mere circumstance, and does not affect the extent of their application. But simple law does not meet the wants of man. He is a sinner; and it provides no Saviour. Its province is to condemn. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." The world must be gradually prepared for this great development. This work of preparation also is assigned to the old economy. In what way is it accomplished? Instead of the confusion, of which "Indagator" speaks, the most perfect order prevails. An impressive system of ritual observances; a succession of inspired seers; an organized external government, are distinct compartments of a rich and pregnant prophecy of Christ and his kingdom. They were the "shadows of things to come." Their nature and design cannot be mistaken. Moreover, inasmuch as the existence of the Jewish nation was necessary; and must be rendered a fit instrument for the accomplishment of God's designs, certain civil and social regulations were enacted to meet the exigency. From all and every one of these the law of the ten commandments is separated by a space wide and deeply marked. In its nature, office, manner of delivery, the manner in which it was regarded by the devout and intelligent Jew, and by Christ and his apostles, it stands alone.

The entire law, moral, as well as ceremonial, "Indagator" affirms to be "minute, rigid and burdensome." If these epithets are justly applicable to any part of the past economy, they certainly are not to the decalogue. It is very opposite of "minute." And if it is "rigid and burdensome," what shall we say of our Lord's comments on its precepts? Wresting the commandment from the cold and carnal interpretation given to it "by them of old time," he assigns to it a wider range and a more emphatic application. He includes anger in the same category with murder.

In what sense and how far is the law abolished? Your correspondent says, in every sense, and in all its provisions, civil, ceremonial and moral. The passages, however, which he adduces to confirm his position, relate only to the believer. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Believers become dead to the law by the body of Christ. But how is the unbeliever affected? Is he dead to the law also? If the law is literally and wholly abolished, is the unbeliever free? Is he under law to Christ? Is he under the law, or under grace?

How is it that the law comes to have "no dominion over the Christian?" Is it by the coming of Christ, and the passing away of the former dispensation? The theory of "Indagator" is built upon that supposition. Is it so? By no means; but by regeneration. "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death." The law is in force in every individual's case, till conversion. Nay, it is even actively concerned in the work of conversion. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." "I was alive without the law once, but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died."

But he affirms that the law is abolished, and cites proof. It is found in Matthew v: 21, 22. He and I read scripture differently; and our readers must judge between us. Instead, however, of deriving evidence from this passage that the law is abolished, I should have drawn from it an inference the very opposite. By rejecting the false interpretation given by others, and giving his own, the Lord shows that the law is not "abrogated.

It is not abolished, and cannot be, as appears from "Indagator's" own showing. "Parts of it must be observed," it seems, "because they are a part of that eternal system, which God requires of all human beings." What are those parts of the law so honored? Are they not the ten commandments? But the Christian is under no obligation to observe the law of Moses "simply as such"—simply as the the law of Moses. It is not the law then that is abolished; but the authority of Moses. The law itself stands. These "must be observed," too, not because Christ incorporates them in the laws of his kingdom; but because of their own intrinsic excellence. They are permanent, because they are moral. Their "essential utility" is the ground of their adoption. Christ, it must be observed, is not the sole lawgiver in his kingdom. Here are laws in force, independently of his sanction! His office is only to "supply the deficiences of conscience!" I wish some one would define those "deficiencies of conscience." If conscience is a lawgiver, it ought to speak intelligibly, and with some degree of precision. Wherein is its superiority over Moses?

But the Christian, it seems, is not free from the law of Moses only, as a rule of life; but from "the constraints of external precepts" altogether. He is led only "by the spontaneous impulse of an internal principle." How far this is so, any one can readily see, by looking into the New Testament. Are no "external precepts" found there? No appeal to authority? Is all mere direction? Is the Christian left to mere "spontaneous," internal development? By the way, what is the difference between a "model, to which the renewed nature conforms," and a "mould into which it is compressed?" Are they not different figures, expressive of the same idea? The mould and the model, both determine the form of things. The truth is, under both dispensations, the "internal principle," and the "external precept," are combined. "Indagator" thinks, that the renewed nature of the believer, spontaneously developing itself, will lead to the devotement of all time, and all strength, to the immediate service of God. Is this mere rhetoric? To devote all the time, and all the strength to the immediate service of God is impossible; and were it possible, would be a sin. We should "do all to the glory of God," but a portion of our time, and of our strength, should be devoted to the immediate service of our fellow men. When I am engaged in my secular calling, I am not employed in the immediate service of God. For this reason, and because the depraved hearts even of Christians are ever going astray from God, it is indispensable, that a portion of our time be set apart exclusively for the immediate service of God—for worship. This cannot be safely left to the "spontaneous impulse of the internal principle;" but must be indicated with the precision and authority of the law. Quakerism has been tried; and has signally failed. To talk about spending every moment in the exercise of love to God, and of keeping every day holy, is to utter words without consideration. The Christian loves God supremely, but his bosom is the seat of other exercises, besides that of love. The only sense in which time can be called holy, is that of separation for a religious purpose. Can all our time be so separated? A portion of it must; or the "internal principle of love to God" will be soon wanting in the world. Our spiritual interests are not too well served, though we give all our time and all our strength to the service of God; and, in addition, devote every seventh day to the immediate worship of God. The "spontaneous impulse of the internal principle," is neither so strong nor so sure as "Indagator" supposes. It needs both the guidance and the authority of law.

Of course "Indagator" will not take it ill, if I express my decided conviction that his "theory" contains grave and fundamental errors. It seems to me, to vitiate seriously his interpretation of very plain passages in the New Testament. A law, which an apostle declares to be "holy, just, and good," he affirms to be "minute, rigid, and burdensome." May we and our readers understand and practice "the truth as it is in Jesus." E. W. LINES,

Suggested by reading an article in the Recorder, entitled "Judson at Bradford."

Swift wafted on the briny foam,
Ahead! ahead! toward the strand;
O his are burning thoughts of home,
As he hears the cry of land! land!

On Burmah's far benighted shore,
That holy man had labored long;
Full thirty years had numbered o'er
Their changes to his spirit strong.

He comes, and many a friendly tone,
A thousand hearts, his coming greet;
He comes, who now is twice alone,
To tread again with pilgrim feet,

And court the breeze's cooling balm,
Where o'er him spread the skies of youth;
Where life had been so pure and calm,
In all its holiness and truth.

One place there is—he knows it well,
Though time has written changes there—
That house in Bradford, which could tell
Of her who once had shared his care.

He walks its parlor, drinks the cup
From memory's hand; how throbs his brow!
His thoughtful eye is lifted up,
And lo! she stands before him now.

Can it be true? or is 't her ghost,
Revisiting the scenes of time,
Who now, with the angelic host,
Feels not that scorching eastern clime?

That very look, with which she sped
So lightly through her father's halls;
Those very eyes, whose tears were shed
For him, in Ava's prison walls;

Those lips have seeming motion caught,
And from that canvass breathe her prayer,
While every lesson faith has taught
Is trembling on their native air.

And think you not that mourner gained
New strength to keep his toilsome way—
That on his field of missions beamed
Another star of light that day! K.

LETTER FROM MRS. JUDSON.

MY DEAR MRS. GILLETTE:—One year ago I was sitting in your pleasant parlor, never dreaming of such an overturn in life as this, and very happy, but no happier than I am now. We had a very long passage, but it was pleasant most of the way, and I did not suffer half as much as I expected; we had pleasant company on board—an excellent, pious captain—respectable officers—and an orderly, active crew; it was a temperance ship—and no profanity was allowed on board. It was just twenty weeks to a day from the time we left Boston that we anchored at Amherst. The ship was a fine sailer, but we had unfavorable winds most of the way, and several calms; we had two heavy gales off the Cape, and some rather dangerous squalls in the Bay—otherwise the weather was very fine. I am perfectly delighted with every thing here as far as I have yet observed. To be sure, there is but little of what in America is considered comfort—but there is a picturesque beauty—a mingling of awkward simplicity, with magnificence quite as awkward and clumsy—a rich gorgeousness, a fantastic extravagance, a rudeness sometimes annoying, but oftener ludicrous—in short, the scenery, the works of art, (there is no small degree of skill displayed in building a pagoda, and ornamenting the carriages that go up with offerings to Guadama,) the manners of the people, the coloring of the sky, the atmosphere, all are in perfect keeping with each other. The houses of the missionaries are the plainest possible—built of teak wood boards (wood the color of cherry) and furnished with the same kind of wood without varnish. The partitions between the rooms are mere screens, reaching a little way above the head, so that a word spoken in one room, is heard all over the house. To my eye, however, even these houses have an air of relative beauty about them which new ones would not have.

The natives flocked around us with offerings of fruit, fish, eggs, and goat's milk, as soon as we arrived; and are full of sympathy for me, because I do not know their language. They love the Doctor as I never saw man loved before. Poor creatures! Now the true state of the case is, if we were to settle down in this house, with the comforts we should be able to secure, and the pleasant English and missionary families about us, although in a very different condition from the family of a pastor at home, my taste would be gratified, and I should, as far as the things of this world are concerned, be perfectly happy; but that is not to be. I lay no claim to a certain rabid qualification called "a missionary spirit," but my conscience will not allow me to settle down in delightful Maulmain, while there is the slightest hope of my husband's being able, by going to a place of danger and privation, to do any thing for the miserable nation at the door of which we are standing. I am not myself made for great things, but when I see his heart turning that way, I can say, "go," and when the trouble comes, I know I can cheer and comfort him. As soon as I can get a few words of the language, a couple of months perhaps, we shall be off to Rangoon, and there wait an opportunity to creep into Ava. I have discovered, since I left America, that I am incapable of the emotion of fear. I have been two or three times pretty severely tried in that respect. I may meet with things, however, at Rangoon, that will make my hair bristle. God only knows, and quietly, in my own closet, I ask his direction and assistance. You and your dear husband will, I trust, help me ask, for none ever needed all the graces of godliness combined with singular wisdom more than I do just now; I hate all cant, and make-believe, but I do love the cause of Christ with my whole heart—and I love these poor wretches, that in ignorance of the way of life, are going down to eternal misery. God make me useful to them. I do not believe in practicing self-denial for self-denial's sake—I think that a relic of Popery; but I should be the worst, and most ungrateful creature in the universe, if, after all the blessings that God has showered upon my path for years, I should shrink from suffering, or even death, in his cause. I pray that I may not be like Peter, when I say, I never will. EMILY C. JUDSON.

READING AND SINGING IN GERMANY.

The Bibliotheca Sacra and Theological Review for May, has an article from the pen of Professor B. B. Edwards, of Andover, consisting chiefly of "translations" from the sermons of Professor Muller, of Halle. In some introductory remarks, Professor E. gives the following interesting description of the preaching and singing in Germany:—

Discourses from the pulpit in Germany are, for the most part, addressed to the feelings rather than to the reason. The theologian does not often discuss on Sunday the profounder mysteries of his faith. Such discussions are reserved for the lecture-room, or the printed page. Discourses like those with which Drs. Hopkins and Emmons, or even Dr. Dwight, edified their auditories, if not quite unknown in Germany, are exceedingly rare. The sermon is often a mere homily, or a mere exposition of a passage of Scripture which occurs in the lessons of the day, or it is a popular illustration of some truth, interspersed or concluded with appeals to the hearers. It is generally level to the capacity of the great mass. It is likewise, for the most part, short. Nothing would be more appalling to a continental audience, or even to one in England, than those protracted discussions once so common in New England and Scotland, and happily not now wholly discontinued. The length of the discourses to which the writer has listened, has varied from twenty to thirty-five minutes. One reason of this brevity is, the time which is occupied in singing. In this delightful exercise the whole congregation, without exception, unite. Those who might have been wearied with the sermon, now awake and join in the hymn with the whole heart.

The writer can never forget a spectacle of this kind which he saw in one of the old churches in Nuremberg. The great edifice was crowded, one-half of the auditors at least standing. The sermon had been delivered in a fervent manner, and had apparently much interested the feelings of the audience. Immediately a powerful and well-toned organ sent its peals through all the corners and recesses of the cathedral, and in a moment every adult and child in the vast throng broke forth in praise to the Redeemer, in one of those old hymns mellowed by time, and which breathe not of earth, but of heaven. The effect, at least upon a stranger, was overpowering. Nothing like it ever can be produced by a small choir, however scientifically trained. The performance of the latter must be comparatively dead, because, being so artistic or scientific, or so modern, or it has been subject to so many mutations, that few can join in it, if they were permitted so to do. The music for a popular audience must be simple, and then, especially if a great multitude unite, it will often be affecting and sublime. The singing in the German churches sometimes occupies an hour, or more than an hour. The number of the hymns and of the stanzas is affixed in large letters to the walls and pillars in various parts of the house, so that there is no confusion or delay in finding the page.

FESTIVALS.

It would be well if domestic anniversaries were more regarded. They furnish rallying points for the hope and love of childhood—pictured scenes, where memory fondly lingers, in future years, or in a far-off clime. The birthday of a parent, or a grand-parent, of a brother, or a sister, or a favored domestic, might be made seasons of pleasant household gratification. They might cause the blood to flow more briskly through the bounding veins of children, as flowery spots by the wayside—seasons of seeking the happiness of others, rather than their own. The preparation of simple gifts exercises their ingenuity—their little secret consultations on such subjects, and the rich pleasure they feel in surprising some dear one, with an unexpected gift, should be the productions of their own hands, or the purchase of their earnings. The latter result is not so difficult as might be imagined. There are many kinds of needle-work and of domestic occupation, for which a mother might feel it both pleasant and proper to compensate her daughter. Thus she might aid in confirming habits of industry, while she supplies aliment for tokens of friendship and deeds of charity.

A mother once told me, that from the time her little girl was first able to hem a handkerchief neatly, she had allowed her a regular price for whatever she had done for the family. She commenced a little book, in which she taught her to record her receipts and expenditures, with mercantile punctuality, and perhaps this laid the foundation of an accuracy in accounts and a capacity for business, which distinguished her when she became a woman. Having an affectionate disposition, she made a list of birth-days, not only for her immediate relatives, and the members of the household, but also for those of her pastor, her teachers, and her most intimate friends. At the return of these anniversaries, they were often delighted to receive from her an affectionate note, or a book purchased from the purse, into which she never put her hand without a pleasant consciousness that the contents were the fruits of her own industry, and would impart happiness to those whom she loved.

A man of wealth once allotted a portion of his ample garden to his young sons. They were to cultivate it as they pleased, with a right to ask the advice of the gardener, but not to claim his personal assistance. For the sallads which they proudly brought to the table, the strawberries that enriched the dessert, the ears of corn gathered by their own hands into the garner, they received fair payment. To induce the habits of punctuality and exactness, their father required them to keep an account of every production, with the correspondent dates, and to present him a bill in due form, at the close of their harvest season. At receiving the annual amount, their first pleasure was, to allow their little sisters an equal portion with themselves. The remainder was strictly their own, but with an understanding that it was not to be expended in selfish gratification. Many benefits were secured by this wise parental arrangement; the delight of horticulture inspired the boys with a love of home, drew them from the risk of sports with promiscuous companions, and taught them the manly consciousness of useful industry, not often tested by the children of the rich; neatness in penmanship and accuracy in accounts were collaterally aided, while fraternal affection, generosity and benevolence, were alike gratified. All these were but the different forms of happiness. [Mrs. Sigourney.

DR. CHALMERS' ELOQUENCE.

The following is one of the most striking among the many anecdotes told illustrating this celebrated Scotchman's eloquence. Soon after the promulgation of his fame, he preached in London, on a public occasion, in Rowland Hill's Chapel. His audience was numerous, and principally of the higher circles. Upwards of one hundred clergymen were present, to whom the front seats in the gallery were appropriated. In the midst of these sat Mr. Hill himself, in a state of great anxiety, arising from his hopes, and fearful that he would not succeed before an audience so refined and critical. The Doctor as usual began in his low, monotonous tone, and his broad provincial dialect was visibly disagreeable to the delicate ears of his metropolitan audience. Poor Mr. Hill was now upon the rack; but the man of God having thrown his chain around the audience, took an unguarded moment to touch it with the electric fluid of his oratory, and in a moment every heart began to throb and every eye to fill. Knowing well how to take advantage of this bold stroke, he continued to ascend; and so majestic and rapid was his flight, that in a few minutes he attained an eminence so high that every imagination was enraptured. The rapid change from depression to joy which Mr. Hill experienced, was too much for him to bear. He felt so bewildered and intoxicated with joy, that unconsciously he started from his seat, and before his brethren could interfere, he struck the front of the gallery with his clenched fist, and roared out with a stentorian voice—"Well done Chalmers!"

SHAME KILLED HIM.

Some years since, a certain man, in one of our Atlantic cities, was charged with a very base act—was charged with opening a letter which had been put into the post office, and divulging some family secrets which that letter contained. He denied the charge. A committee was appointed to investigate the charge, and make a report. I was present when the report was made. In the presence of some one or two hundred citizens, the chairman of the committee came forward and said—"We have investigated the charge alledged against the gentleman, and find it to be true." I saw the man the moment his character was thus blasted forever. After one frantic effort with a pistol to take the life of the person who had thus exposed him, he dropped his head; he could not bear to look upon man or woman any more; and, returning to his lodgings, he laid himself down upon his bed, and died of a broken heart. Shame killed him. And now, if the divulging of one base act in such an assembly on earth occasioned him such overwhelming, heart-breaking shame, O! what intolerable shame must come upon the sinner when every base act, when every impure thought, when every unlawful deed, shall be revealed, as we have said, before God, and angels, and men! Methinks, in anguish, he will exclaim—"O that I had never had a being!" or, "O that I could now hide me beneath the mountain's base or the ocean's wave!" "Shame shall be the promotion of fools!"

TEST OF PIETY.

What sacrifice would it be to a man who has £500 a year, to devote annually £100 to the purposes of religion and intellectual improvement; to another, who has £1000 a year, to devote £300; and another who has £10,000, to allow £4,000 annually for the same object? It would not deprive any one of them either of the necessaries or of the luxuries of life, or of any thing that contributes to comfort, honor, or sensitive enjoyment. It is now high time that the sincerity of profession of Christianity should be tried by the test of pounds, shillings, and pence. That man who refuses to come forward with his wealth, when it is proved to be requisite for the purposes alluded to, ought not to assume the name of a Christian. He has never felt the influence of that divine maxim of our Saviour, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." He virtually declares that "laying up treasures on earth," providing fortunes for his family, keeping up a certain rank of society, and living in luxurious abundance, are matters of far greater importance than the approach of the millenium and the regeneration of the world. If a man is in doubt with respect to the existence of religious principle in his soul, I know not a better test than this by which to try the sincerity of his Christian profession. Is he willing, at the call of God, to give up a portion of his possessions to his service, and even to "forsake all" to prove himself "a follower of Christ?" [Dr. Dick.

THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER.—There is something, says Jeremy Taylor, in the very act of prayer, that for a time stills the violence of passion, and elevates and purifies the affections. When affliction presses hard, and the weakness of human nature looks around in vain for support, how natural is the impulse that throws us on our knees before Him who has laid his chastening upon us, and now encouraging the hope that accompanies our supplications for His pity. We believe that He who made us can not be unmoved by the sufferings of His children, and in sincerely asking His compassion, we almost feel that we receive it.

PENNSYLVANIA SUNDAY LAWS—EFFECT OF ENFORCING THEM.

Upon the statute-books of nearly every State in the Union, there are laws designed to secure a strict observance of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. Such laws have in most instances been passed by legislators without the least idea of their remote bearings. Petitions for them have been presented from professedly religious persons—bills have been framed by parties interested in favoring their wishes—and nobody has felt sufficiently interested to risk a reputation for piety by opposing them—and so they have been passed and placed upon record. But it is a lucky circumstance, perhaps, that these laws are so palpably unjust in their practical workings as to render their enforcement in most cases impossible. Hence matters go on in a majority of the States just about as well as though they had never been enacted.

In the State of Pennsylvania, however, where "Sabbath Associations" and "Sabbath Conventions" have been particularly numerous and popular, things have taken a somewhat different turn, and one which is likely to show very well the natural result of attempting to enforce the Sunday laws. In that State, a law was passed in 1794, forbidding men to pursue their "ordinary callings" on Sunday, and also prohibiting "unlawful games, hunting, shooting, sports, and diversions." Notwithstanding the existence of this law, the German Seventh-day Baptists were for a long time accustomed to attend to their farming on Sunday as on other working days. At length, however, "certain lewd fellows of the baser sort" took upon them to disturb the religious meetings of this peaceable body of Christians, for doing which they were dealt with according to law, at the instigation of persons in no way connected with said Society. Hereupon they determined to have revenge, and accordingly commenced a series of petty persecutions by entering complaints against those who, after having kept the seventh day of the week, pursued their "ordinary callings" on the first day. One result of this movement was that several persons were fined four dollars each and costs for Sunday labor. But another and far more important result is, that a case is to be brought before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in which the question will be tested, whether the Sunday law is not inconsistent with the Bill of Rights adopted by the State, which declares that "no human authority can in any case whatever control or interfere with the rights of conscience," and that "no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship." In the decision of this question, a deep interest is felt by many of the best citizens of Pennsylvania, of all religious persuasions. Not a few persons have expressed their conviction that the Sunday statute is inconsistent with the Bill of Rights, and dangerous to religious liberty. Whatever the Supreme Bench of the State may decide, the discussion of the subject has already done more to create hostility to Sunday laws than could ever have been done by the peaceable labors of the whole German Society.

Take another case, tending to the same result. Several months ago, Charles C. Burleigh was delivering lectures upon the subject of Slavery in different parts of the State of Pennsylvania, and at the close of his lectures was accustomed to offer certain anti-slavery books for sale. Not having the fear of the Sunday law before his eyes, he continued his custom upon the first day of the week; whereupon a certain pious deacon, who had been somewhat worsted in a recent debate with Burleigh, entered complaint against him for trading on Sunday. One result was, that the offender was fined, and in default of payment was nominally imprisoned. Another result was, that several public meetings were held, in which the Sunday law was denounced as unconstitutional, anti-republican, and inconsistent with religious freedom. But another, and vastly more important result was, that Mr. Burleigh prepared a tract upon the subject, of which a very large edition was printed for gratuitous circulation throughout the State. In this tract it is strenuously maintained, that all sabbatical statutes are glaring instances of interference with the rights of conscience—that every statute which exacts conformity to the faith or usage of the majority in relation to the holiness or holy-keeping of a particular day, plainly violates the rights of the minority—and that the keepers of the first day are no more entitled to protection from the annoyance of worldly occupations in their holy time, than the Jews and the Seventh-day Baptists in theirs, or the Friends in their regular week-day meeting.

Nor does the effect of enforcing Sunday laws in Pennsylvania end here. A pamphlet upon the subject, written by William Logan Fisher, of Germantown, has recently fallen into our hands, in which the unconstitutionality of all such laws is very ably argued. It seems to have been written with special reference to the case of the German Seventh-day Baptists, and we can not doubt that it will exert a salutary influence. Speaking of the fact that different days of the week were observed by different sects when the Constitution was framed, the writer says: "It must be evident that no specific law could be formed, that would meet such a variety of cases. The Sabbath of the Jews, and the Sunday of Constantine, are not the same day. The weight of authority for the observance of either, is decidedly in favor of the seventh day of the week. The right of individual judgment could not be sustained, and religious liberty protected, if all were required to observe either, and the only proper course was to secure liberty of conscience to all. It is evident that this was the intention, not only from the language of the Constitution, but also from the testimony of those who framed it." When will legislators learn the truth of this position, and save themselves the trouble of passing laws for the protection of the different sects, by passing one general law which will give equal privileges to all?

MISSIONARY LABOR.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In January last, I visited the Second Church in Genesee, in the western part of Allegany County; and on the evening of the 22d, preached to a respectable congregation. I found the state of religion quite low as a general thing, and particularly among the youth. I made a number of family visits, and preached six times to an increasing congregation, which began to give better attention, and manifest considerable feeling.

On the 25th, at evening, I preached in the First Church in Genesee, and on the following evening gave an exhortation to a few brethren in Wirt.

On sixth-day, the 29th, I returned to the Second Church in Genesee, and preached several times. The following first-day, Bro. Thomas E. Babcock came to assist me. We labored several days with apparent success. The church was revived, backsliders returned, and several were converted.

On one occasion, I had a conversation with a young man who denied that he had ever been reproved by the Spirit, and said that he felt very happy. At evening he appeared very much broken down, asked to be prayed for, and acknowledged that he had been in trouble for some time, so much so that he could not sleep nights. Another young man denied the reality of religion, and the truth of the Bible, but afterwards acknowledged his faults.

By invitation from Bro. Scott, I returned to the First Church, where he labors, and continued there from the 5th of February, visiting days, and preaching evenings, until the 12th, when a Quarterly Meeting, held with this church, commenced; after which I staid one week. Bro. T. E. Babcock was with us four or five days during the time, and took a good part in preaching. The brethren here were so busy on account of their lumber, that we could not get large congregations except on the Sabbath. But we had quite a good state of feeling. The church was considerably revived.

I next visited the church in Persia, Cattaraugus Co., and preached several times. A unmber of first-day brethren met with us and manifested considerable interest.

About the middle of March, I left Persia for Hayfield, Crawford Co., Pa., where I arrived on the 19th. The following day being the Sabbath, I preached at the meeting-house. This is Bro. A. A. F. Randolph's field of labor. There has been a revival here the past winter, and the brethren seem to exhibit more Christian union, and to stand upon better ground, than I have ever before known them. There are a number who have lately embraced the Sabbath, and united with them. The church has indeed lengthened her cords, and strengthened her stakes. I staid here four Sabbaths, during which time I visited a considerable number of our first-day brethren, by whom I was generally well received, particularly the Christ-ians, for whom I preached. Bro. Randolph is well spoken of by all denominations, and appears to be doing much good here. RAY GREEN.

ALFRED, May 10, 1847.

ISLAND OF ST. HELENA.—Many interesting associations cluster around this island. It not only furnished a tomb for Napoleon, but is the resting place of the two missionaries, Mrs. Judson and Mrs. Chafer, both of whom died on their passage home. Mrs. Brown, on her recent return from Assam, spent a few days at St. Helena, and became deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of its inhabitants. In a letter to the Baptist Publication Society, soliciting a box of books for them, she says:—

"I had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with the Rev. J. McRager Bertram, the only dissenting minister on the island. He is a Scotchman, belonging at present to no society or denomination of Christians, but is anxious to become united with the American Baptists, and connected with our Board of Foreign Missions, and I expect will soon make application to that effect. Mr. Bertram is one of the most zealous and talented preachers I have ever heard, and has, during his short stay of one year upon the island, been very successful. When I was there in December, his labors had been blessed to the hopeful conversion of some hundred souls, and the work was still going on. Meetings were well attended, and the Spirit of the Lord evidently in their midst. Among the converts was the American Consul, William Carrol, Esq. It was delightful to witness the child-like simplicity and faith of this aged disciple. Mr. Bertram found the inhabitants in a dreadfully ignorant state with regard to religious things. His hearers are mostly from among the poorer class, and are unable to give him much support. There is a great destitution of books among them, and he plead earnestly that I would intercede with some of the benevolent societies in America, to forward him a box of religious books."

STATISTICS OF UNITARIANISM.—There are now in Boston twenty-five regularly-ordained Unitarian ministers, settled over as many religious societies, and one unsettled clergyman who ministers to another congregation—making twenty-six in all. Five of these are connected with the ministry at large. The whole number receive salaries to the amount of $42,000 annually. The houses in which they preach, and the sites on which the churches stand, are estimated to be worth $800,000. How many members belong to these so-called churches, or whether there are any, it is difficult to say, as in most or all of them there is no confession of faith, no examination or formality of admission, and no distinction kept up between the church and the congregation. Whenever the Lord's Supper is administered, it is administered to all who choose to receive it. Theodore Parker is not included in this estimate of the Unitarian clergy, because he openly denies the miracles of Christ, and the divine origin of the Christian religion. So says an exchange.

MISSIONS IN CONSTANTINOPLE.—Rev. Mr. Dwight, missionary in Constantinople, writes that the Armenians are, in considerable numbers, embracing Protestantism, and have at length obtained a place for worship in the city proper. There had been some opposition manifested by the Patriarch; but the right of the Protestants to hold their meetings has been virtually acknowledged by the Turkish judge. Mr. Dwight also speaks of the death of the native pastor sent recently from Niromedia to Adabazar, to take charge of the little church in that place. Mr. D. says that while there, he was a most faithful pastor, and met with the most encouraging success during the short period of his ministry. The death-bed scene, at which Mr. D. was present, was that of the triumphant Christian, and afforded a blessed example to numbers of his flock, who assembled to witness his happy end.

METHODIST MISSIONS.—The 28th Anniversary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in New York last week. The Society has missionary stations in Liberia, Oregon, South America, and China. The China mission is scarcely established yet. Two young men, of respectable attainments and ardent piety, have been sent out, with directions to locate themselves at Fuchau in the Province of Fuhkien. The Oregon mission is said to be increasing in importance, and has now eight regular missionaries. The stations in Western Africa have sixteen regular missionaries. One of the greatest obstacles in their way is the unhealthiness of the climate. It was stated in the Report, that the infant church of Liberia, during the last year, has raised for missionary purposes, the sum of $300, which is equal to an average of thirty-eight cents per member, or about three times the average amount contributed by the members of the church at home!

REMARKABLE BAPTISM.—The N. Y. Recorder of May 19, says that the Rev. Henry Davis, of the Cannon-st. Baptist church, baptized, on Sunday last, an old gentleman, aged 87, who for more than half a century had been a member of the Scotch Presbyterian church. His attention was arrested to the subject of baptism last autumn, on witnessing the immersion of a member of his own family, and a diligent examination led him to embrace Baptist views, which he now holds with a great deal of firmness and satisfaction. He descended into the water with the energy of a youthful disciple, and accounted the privilege as one of the happiest events of his life.

EDUCATION IN IRELAND.—The Courier and Inquirer publishes an article on the subject of education in Ireland, in which it is stated that a far larger portion of the children of Ireland than of England go to school. The only University is Trinity College, which is under the control of members of the establishment, but, unlike Oxford and Cambridge, is open to students of all religious persuasions. Its course, in point of extent and adaptation to modern times, is confessedly superior to that of the English Universities. Most of the Presbyterian ministers were educated at Glasgow University until the establishment of the Belfast College, in which a course of education similar to that of the Scotch Colleges was adopted.

CHINA.—A letter, dated January 3, at Amoy, from Mr. Pholman, states that the people can be reached in all parts of the country with perfect ease, and that he often addressed hundreds at a time, who listened with great attention, and often exclaimed, "that's right!" "true!" &c. Mr. P. was present on the arrival of the Viceroy of Fukein, a province containing about fourteen millions of people; an officer, seeing him in the crowd, invited him to a seat on the platform. Messrs. Johnson and Peet, from Siam, had arrived at Foochofoo, and describe the scenery of the country as resembling that of the Hudson.

PERSEVERING.—The Christian Index of April 22, announced the death at Mount Jefferson, Ala., of Mr. Lewis P. M. Slaughter. That number of the Index was the first for the year, that did not contain a communication from his pen. He died of consumption, and though only 26 years old, he seems to have acted on the principle of the venerable Bede and our own Boardman, who persevered in useful labors up to the very close of their lives.

HOW TO DO IT.—Rev. S. Mower, a Methodist preacher, sent to the editor of the Christian Advocate TWENTY-SEVEN new subscribers, all of which, he says, he "procured with but little effort, by presenting the subject to the different societies on the circuit." The editor of the Free-will Baptist paper mentions this fact, and adds: "Will not our ministers try this plan? Just present the 'Morning Star,' brethren, to your congregations, and say what you see proper in favor of it, and see what the effect will be. We have no doubt that much might be done in this way to increase its circulation. Remember, the more readers it has, the more extensive will be its usefulness, and the more it will do for our benevolent causes." So far the Morning Star. We leave our readers to "guess" what our suggestion would be, and shall wait to see who guesses right.

THE SUNDAY IN ENGLAND.—A correspondent of the Christian Chronicle gives the following account of the way they keep Sunday—Sabbath, he calls it—in England: "We anchored in the Mersey, and in full view of Liverpool, on Sabbath morning, but I assure you the appearance of the piers and docks gave no intimation of the day, and I have since observed, what I then discovered, that among the lower class there is no respect for the Sabbath—they make no change in their apparel, press through the streets and crowd the wharves by thousands, and, in short, appear to be entirely ignorant of the object and obligations of the sacred institution."

CANTON CHAPEL FUND.—The Baptist Register says that one object of Mr. Shuck's return home from China was that of collecting funds for the erection of a chapel in Canton; but it seems now, according to the Southern Missionary Journal, that the demonstrations of popular prejudice against foreigners in that city, render it exceedingly difficult to procure ground to make the erection, and that as the same prejudice does not exist at Shonghai, it is deemed best to wait the arrival of the missionaries there, to learn more perfectly the prospect of missionary operations in that city.

HARD ACCUSATION.—The London Patriot states, that the object of the movement introduced ostensibly to improve the system of general education in Great Britain, is, in fact, to break up the Sunday school system, and to exclude the Bible from all secular schools by law. They say, "An intense hatred of Evangelical Protestantism is, we have good reason to believe, the mainspring of the zeal affected by many of the advocates of Government education for the improvement of secular instruction. In this warfare, Papists and Latitudinarians go hand in hand."

AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.—This Society held its 23d Anniversary in Philadelphia last week. The contributions to the Society's funds during the year have been $24,500. With this sum it has employed 22 missionaries, 6 of whom have labored in Ohio, 3 in Illinois, 2 in Kentucky, 2 in Pennsylvania, and 1 in each of 9 other States. Their services have cost $7,268, or an average of 91 cents a day for the time employed. They have put in circulation the publications of the Society to the value of $10,216, of which a little more than half has been contributed by the schools themselves, and the balance has been the Society's donation. Three missionaries, in the progress of their labor, have traveled upward of 33,000 miles, mostly in new and rough sections of the country. They have delivered 1,213 sermons and addresses to Sunday-School assemblies on subjects connected with their mission. They have established 529 new Sunday-Schools in places where none existed, and ~~where~~ there was no prospect of one, except by ~~such~~ a Union agency. In these schools have been gathered 15,000 children, (or an average of 30 pupils to each school,) a majority of whom were incapable of reading, and without other means of instruction. By the same process, 2,000 persons have been set to work as teachers and doers of good, who were before unemployed in this or any other like form. Nearly three-fourths of the labor thus described has been bestowed on the large and important States of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky.

RESPECT FOR PARENTS IN CHINA.—By the following, it appears that Hwang, a friend of Mr. Cushing while he was an envoy to the Celestial Empire, has fallen upon evil days:—

"Hwang, the distinguished Lieutenant Governor of Kwangtung (Canton) province, has been degraded and sent a prisoner to Pekin. His offence is, having, when recently presiding at a literary examination, received intelligence of his mother's death, and kept it secret for a short time, instead of immediately denuding himself of his office, and retiring into private life for three years. The punishment of such 'impiety,' by the law of China, is death, but he will probably escape with a heavy fine. Hwang was the right hand of Keying, the Governor of the province."

☞ ELD. RAY GREEN, being about to remove from Alfred to Persia, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., wishes all communications for him addressed accordingly.

THE JEWS IN BOHEMIA AND MORAVIA.

An exceedingly vexatious restrictive enactment toward the Jews has existed in Bohemia and Moravia for a long time. According to the "Voice of Jacob," Dr. Frankel refers its origin to the period when the German Emperors, arrogating to themselves an absolute right over the persons and property of the Jews, allowed various noblemen, in consideration of services rendered, to receive a certain number of Jews on their estates. These were obliged to pay a tax, called protection money, to their landlords, and thus proved a source of revenue to the favored nobleman. The number of families which each district was allowed to receive, being fixed, as soon as this was completed no more were permitted to enter; but, at the same time, the lord of the manor was not allowed to expel those once settled on his property. If a family became extinct, he might receive another, but he was not compelled to do so. Nor was a Jew allowed to withdraw from one estate to another without the permission of the owners of both. The number of families being thus restricted, only one son of each family could establish a new one; that is to say, was permitted to marry; the others were doomed to emigration, celibacy, or to contract a marriage considered and treated by Government as concubinage. The scramble for obtaining such permission of marriage may easily be imagined. The heart-burning disappointment, ruin and misery thus entailed upon families, are beyond description. The rosy cheeks of many a young bride faded, the stout heart of many a young bridegroom broke, before such permission was granted; and many a hopeful man, after having spent his fortune in bribery, and his youthful years in alternate fears and hopes, found himself, at the verge of old age, disappointed and penniless. Cases are known in which engagements after a courtship of ten years have been broken off, because the law sternly refused to sanction the attachment. Notwithstanding all this, however, the morality of the Jewish population was upon the whole unimpeachable. This tyranic law has lately been mitigated in Bohemia; but it presses still, with all its demoralizing and crushing weight, upon the Jews of Moravia, and, but some few years back, several wives and mothers of families were condemned to hard labor in the public streets, with the outcasts of society, for having dared to obey the voice of nature in preference to the word of the law, by contracting marriages which, though sanctioned by religion, were not acknowledged by government.

From the National Era.

DANCING AND SABBATH BREAKING.

Now, as in the days of our Saviour, there are those who may be said to "strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel"—men who are sorely afflicted at the running of mails on the first day of the week, and are very solemn and emphatic in their condemnation of dancing, who can nevertheless look with complacency upon the sin and wrong of slavery, and upon the unutterable horrors of war.

Now, as to dancing in general, we shall undertake no defense of it, although we are scarcely prepared to subscribe to the stern sentiment of Luther, that "as many steps as one takes in a dance, he takes toward hell." We leave the matter to be settled between the Presbyterian General Assembly and the Shakers. But there is a dance going on at this time in Mexico, to which we particularly invite the attention of the respectable doctors of divinity who are weeping between the porch and the temple over the saltatory sins of the people. Did these reverend gentlemen ever hear of Holbein's Dance of Death? That dance, with the Arch-Fiend for piper, is now going on. It is an out-of-door dance, on a magnificent scale, with the whole universe for spectators. The plains and mountain slopes of Mexico are > "the ball-room,

> With the cannon's lightning lit;
> O'erspread with gay, green carpets,
> Which the dancing steeps in wet."*

Then, as to the desecration of the Sabbath day. The zeal which claps in prison a poor "Come-outer" for esteeming all days alike, and which runs a tilt at steam cars, and lays a taboo upon Sunday mail bags, may or may not be according to knowledge. We venture no opinion in respect to it, but would simply suggest, with the deference befitting one of the laity, that its attention might be very profitably turned to some recent transactions of our Christian army and navy, engaged in opening the way for the introduction of the Gospel into Mexico. If our Almanac does not deceive us, our navy spent a Sabbath at Tabasco some months ago, and performed "services" of an impressive but somewhat equivocal kind, sending messengers of peace and good will among the poor benighted Catholics, in the shape of red hot balls and shells. More recently, Gen. Scott has "kept the Sabbath" on the heights of Cerro Gordo, storming batteries, blowing whole squadrons into eternity, impaling men on bayonets, and tearing off their limbs with cannon shot. We should like to know what General Assemblies and Conferences think of this way of spending holy time. The occasions referred to were doubtless solemn enough to satisfy a Puritan tythingman—as much so, in short, as dying groans and ghastly corpses could make them. But, apart from this, we cannot see that the storming of forts, and slaughter of women and children on their own hearths, or while kneeling in their places of worship, is a more appropriate Sunday business than the running of the United States mail, or the delving of a Seventh-day Baptist in his potato field. We respectfully refer the whole matter to the Tennessee Methodists, who have made Capt. Walker, of the Texas Rangers, and the leading heroes of Monterey, life members of their Missionary Society; and to the Western Home Missionary Society of Baltimore, of which Gen. Taylor has just been made a life member; and to the Old and New School Presbyterian Assemblies—subject, as a matter of course, to the final action of the Evangelical Alliance. J. G. WHITTIER.

General Intelligence.

WAR NEWS.

No very definite or important news from the seat of war has been received since our last. There are reports, that disease is making great havoc in the American camp. It is also said that in consequence of this nearly all the volunteers whose term of service is soon to expire, will return home. The guerilla system of warfare has been adopted in many parts of Mexico, to the terror of not only the Americans, but the peaceably-disposed inhabitants of the country. Dispatches from Washington, dated May 21, say that the whole valley of the Rio Grande is under martial law, and every one capable of bearing arms is called upon to rally under penalty of a traitor's death. This does not exclude even the clergy. A bloody chapter is about to open upon all straggling parties of Americans near our places of occupation. The highest penalties are imposed upon military commanders for not carrying out Canales' orders.

Gen. Taylor will not move upon San Luis until reïnforced, as so large a number of volunteers are leaving him at the expiration of their term of service. Those already returned to New Orleans are in a wretched plight, sick, and their apparel worn out.

Private letters speak of the advance of Gen. Alvarez from the South of Mexico, with 25,000 men to be distributed in guerrilla parties.

Gerrit Smith and the Presidency.—The N. Y. Tribune says that Gerrit Smith declines peremptorily a call on him to be a candidate for the next President. He says he has all his life been weighed down by the charge of a great landed property left by his father, which has deprived him of a chance to fit himself for the Chief Magistracy; and, though there would be no prospect of his election if nominated, he does not consider it right to run for an office without the qualifications for worthily filling it. If he were President, however, he would first stop the Mexican War, and ask pardon of God and Mexico for our wholesale murders of the Mexican people, returning the territory we have taken by force; 2. Utterly abolish the Army and Navy; 3. Abolish all Customs or Commercial Restrictions whatever; 4. Establish a system of Direct Taxation alone; 5. Urge liberal expenditures for Light-houses, Harbors, improving Rivers, &c., but none at all for Fortifications, Ships-of-War, &c.; 7. Interpret and apply the Constitution as at deadly war with Slavery; 8. Stop selling the Public Lands, allow every man, who needs to take a portion of them without pay, and render the Homestead Inalienable; 9. Discountenance distinctions between Native and Adopted Citizens; 10. Appoint no man to office who bases the right of suffrage on Property or Color; 11. Give no office to a Slaveholder, any more than to any other pirate; 12. Nor to any man in favor of the traffic in Intoxicating Drinks; 13. Nor to any adhering member of a Secret Society.

The Descendants of Lafayette.—The patriotism of the illustrious friend of Washington is descending undiluted to his successors. His son, George Washington Lafayette, who inherits the name of one and the virtues of both his namesakes, has long held and still holds a seat among the liberal members of the French Chamber of Deputies, and at the last election his eldest son, Oscar, having scarcely become eligible by arriving at the age of 30, was elected a Deputy to the same Chamber by the District of Meaux, the same that his grandfather, the General, formerly represented. The contest was an active one, his antagonist and predecessor being a Ministerial candidate, sustained by powerful interests—but veneration for the memory of the grandfather, the gratitude of his old constituents, the opinion of the people, and we may presume the merit of the candidate, have prevailed over all obstacles; and now the son sits by the side of his father, on the same opposition bench, where he sat so long by the side of his father, the old General. In all this there would seem to be, in both representatives and constituents, examples of steadfastness and fidelity not always to be found in the political annals of countries reputed the most republican and free. [Tribune.

The Cost of Glory.—From an account of the battle of Cerro Gordo, in the Jalapa Star, we extract the following:—

"Capt. Roberts's company [A] went into action with 41 officers and men. His position was most exposed, being within the range of grape, canister and round shot of all the works, and the musketry of the principal hight; of the 41, 24 were left dead and wounded on the field. Every officer except himself was struck, and First Lieut. Ewell was killed. Not an instance, however, of scattering or hesitation was known among his men, and through showers of every kind of shot, they moved on and kept position with the coolness and precision of men on drill. Probably in the history of American arms not one instance is recorded where men were kept in order under destruction and carnage so terrible. Those left unhurt were unable to carry off the wounded."

Relic of Washington.—In tearing down the large antique buildings owned and occupied in his lifetime by that eminent jurist—Judge Patterson, at New Brunswick, N. J.—the following card was found by one of the workmen:—"The President of the United States and Mrs. Washington, request the pleasure of Judge and Mrs. Patterson, and Miss Patterson's Company to Dine, on Saturday next, at 4 o'clock, 6 May, 1795. An answer is requested." The words and figures in Italics are in the neat bold hand of Washington himself. The note bears date the 6th of May, 1795, and was found on the 6th of May, 1847, just fifty-two years after its date.

A gentleman who has just returned from a tour through the States of New York, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, informs us that in the northern part of the two last mentioned States, (particularly Illinois,) the fall-sown wheat is a good deal winter-killed; but that with this exception the crop looks well throughout the whole region. He is of the opinion that the crop of Ohio and New York bids fair to be as large as last year.

SUMMARY.

A fire broke out in the Ohio Penitentiary Yard, on Friday, P. M., May 7th, by which all the work-shops on the eastern side of the yard were destroyed, together with most of their contents. These shops were occupied by Mr. P. Hayden, in the manufacture of saddle-trees, hames, plating and machinery. Mr. Hayden's loss is supposed to be in the neighborhood of $20,000. The fire originated in one of Mr. Hayden's shops, and is supposed to be the result of accident. The prisoners, 450 in number, rendered efficient aid to the fire companies in extinguishing the fire. Order and subordination prevailed among them. At the signal given that the fire was subdued, every prisoner was promptly at his accustomed place, and they marched in order to their cells.

A letter from Hanover says, that on the 16th ult., Miss Caroline Herschell, sister and for a long time assistant of the illustrious astronomer, celebrated the 97th anniversary of her birthday. The King sent to compliment her; the Prince and Princess Royal paid her a visit, and the latter presented her with a magnificent arm chair, the back of which had been embroidered by her royal highness; and the minister of Prussia, in the name of his sovereign, remitted to her the gold medal awarded for the extension of the sciences.

On a farm called West Hill, about two miles from Burlington, N. J., is a grape vine, which, at three feet from the ground, measures 6 feet one inch round the trunk, and at ten feet is positively three feet in circumference! It is a native male grape, and has been the wonder of the neighborhood as long back as the memory of man reaches. It is still healthy, and its giant folds run over and cover four trees, one of which is a full-sized white oak, and the others are quite large.

There is said to be a perfect glut of wheat in the markets of the Russian capital. There was on hand a superfluity of supply sufficient to load 800 or 1,000 vessels. In the markets of Russia foreign orders to the extent of 3,000,000 hectolitres had been executed. Navigation was still impeded by the presence of the ice, and the utmost anxiety for its break up was expressed. So says the Petersburgh correspondent of the London Times—latest dates.

The European Times says that the news of Gen. Taylor's last victory was received with great enthusiasm in France. "Old 'Rough and Ready's' reply to Santa Anna's demand to surrender is greatly admired for its noble simplicity, and I have heard several Frenchmen declare that it will live in history like Napoleon's address to his soldiers at the battle of the Pyramids, or like his spirit-stirring remarks on seeing the sun rise on the field of Austerlitz."

Petitions for the immediate and total abolition of slavery have been presented to the French Chamber of Deputies. 8000 persons have signed them; more than 800 of these were Catholic priests and Protestant pastors. Three of the Councils-General, including that of the Seine, have expressed their wish for the abolition of the system.

A few weeks since, Mr. James Callan, Sen., residing near Yazoo city, Miss., was fatally poisoned, and all his family partially so, by eating pies which were seasoned with peach leaves—the prussic acid contained in the leaves, having become concentrated by baking.

Two receiving ships, the Omega and Caroline, were boarded in Chinemo Bay on the 6th of March by Chinese Pirates—the captains, officers, and part of both crews murdered; and booty, in opium and treasure, £36,000 in amount, taken away.

The Emperor of China is the oldest monarch in the world; Mehemet Ali, King of Egypt, is next to him; Ernest Augustus, King of Hanover, born June 6, 1761, is the third in his age; and Louis Phillippe, born October 5, 1762, the fourth.

The Irish lately were not a little amused by the ceremony of "hanging Judas," performed by Portugese sailors, who happened to be in the harbor at cork, on the anniversary of this event. An effigy was suspended from the yard-arm, hanged, shot, drowned, kicked, guillotined, scourged, and bastinadoed!

The Great Tower at Westminster, into the lower part of which the Queen's state carriage and eight horses will be driven, is 80 feet square, and to the top of the octagon turret, with which each of its four angles will be furnished, will be 346 feet high, or a little less than the height of the top of the cross which surmounts St. Paul's Cathedral!

A gentleman who passed through Savoy, Berkshire Co., Mass., on the 13th or 14th inst., informs us that in some places snow-banks were still to be seen, two or three feet deep. The season has been colder than usual throughout the country. Wheat and rye generally do quite as well in cool, backward seasons as in warmer ones.

The plan of an overland expedition to the North Pole, under the direction of Dr. Sir John Richardson, of Haslan Hospital, has been submitted by him to the English Government, and approved of, and directions have been issued to commence providing the necessary supplies of stores and provisions for the party.

The seal fishery this season has been unusually prosperous off the coast of Newfoundland. The ship Magellan, of New London, on the 18th of March, had taken 700, and was in the midst of thousands.

The Emperor Nicholas, it is stated, has ordered one hundred and fifty Russian students, in Prussia, to return to their own country, it being his intention to forbid any of his subjects to receive their education abroad.

The Marlborough (Md.) Gazette states that considerable destitution exists among the poor of Prince George's County. A worthy clergyman in the lower part of the county has been making collections to buy corn for the suffering poor in the parish.

Advices have been received in this city from Japan, via Batavia, that on the 10th of February, 1846, a most destructive fire broke out in Yedo, which raged two days, covering a space three miles long by one and a half wide, consuming the residences of several princes, and a vast number of houses.

A statute passed at Albany, on the 1st inst., provides that: Whenever a suit shall have been or shall be commenced against any officer of a School District, for any act performed by virtue of their office, and such suit shall have been finally determined, it shall be the duty of the Trustees to ascertain the amount of the costs and expenses paid by such officer, and to cause the same to be collected of the taxable inhabitants of the District, like other taxes, and pay the same over to the officer. The act authorizes the Board of Supervisors to examine and audit such accounts and check excesses.

By a recent act of the Legislature of New York, to go into effect about the 1st of June, parties in a civil suit, in addition to the challenges for cause now allowed, will be entitled to two peremptory challenges of the Jury before empanneled. This appears to be the most judicious law, as cases might possibly occur where a personal enemy of one of the parties in the suit would be drawn, and the Jury-box made, through him, the medium of private revenge rather than justice.

The Liverpool Mercury, of May 4, says that the number of immigrants from Ireland since the 1st of January, is about 150,000; of whom about 45,000 have emigrated. A few have wandered away; but 102,564 are believed to be still in this town! During the last four weeks only, no fewer than 45,216 have been landed here, and most of them have applied for relief. In the same period last year, the immigrants applying for relief were only 1,824.

The Seminary under the care of the Presbyterian Church, at Princeton, closed its session on Monday night, 17th inst. The examining committee in attendance were Rev. Drs. Spring and Snodgrass of New York, and Murray of Elizabethtown, together with Elder Matthew L. Bevan of Philadelphia. The Diplomas of Graduation were given to thirty-five members of the Senior Class. Five of the class expect to become foreign missionaries, and some will go to the Far West.

Miss Beecher, the daughter of the venerable Dr. Beecher, is untiring in her efforts to promote education at the West. She is in a few days to meet, at Albany, twenty-six young ladies from New England, who are to go out with her as teachers, after having spent a season at the State Normal School. Her plan is to transfer a large number of educated young ladies to the West, and there employ them as teachers.

A new invention, a "Sub-marine Lifter," for the purpose of lifting wrecks from deep water, has just been discovered. The object is accomplished by generating gas, the materials of which have been previously prepared and attached to the object to be raised. It is put in operation from above by a string, the pulling of which discharges and causes the gas to generate; this forces the water out, and then lifts with great force.

According to a letter received at New Orleans from Shelby Co., Texas, the guests, sixty in number, at a wedding party at Wilkinson House, were all poisoned, bride's-maid, groom's-man, and all. Thirty will die; twelve dead at the last accounts, two of whom were sons of Rev. Mr. Britton. None of the family injured, and old Wilkinson had absconded. It was supposed that the negroes had been employed to poison the coffee, by a disappointed suitor.

Rev. Mr. Maffit has fallen into trouble. Man can not have all the good things of life at once. A young wife and the approbation of his elder brethren were too much for one mortal. Three clergymen of Philadelphia have presented a petition to the Methodist Conference, asking that Mr. Maffit may be no longer recognized as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has been suspended.

We noticed, a few days since, that the fare from Mechanicsville to Whitehall and any point on Lake Champlain, at which the steamers landed, was 37 1-2 cents. We see by the Montreal Herald, that the competition for travel on the St. Lawrence this season will be greater than it ever has been, no less than seven passage boats having been announced as ready to run.

The Niles (Mich.) Republican speaks favorably of the crop in that State. The editor says: The wheat fields in this vicinity never looked more promising at this season of the year, than at present. But we hear that on two or three prairies a few miles west, it is seriously injured. St. Joseph Valley has seldom failed to turn out a good yield, and this year promises more abundant than ever.

In Northern Ohio, the wheat crop looks promising. We understand that the fields give good promise in Stark, Tuscarawas, &c., but the general tone of the papers, in other parts of the State, is desponding. The editor of the Statesman observes: We do not believe, that under the most favorable circumstances, from this time till harvest, there can be any thing like a full crop of wheat in Ohio. It is not in the ground.

The New Haven County Bank has made an issue of $1 bills engraved on India rubber, prepared for the occasion. It is elastic, very little thicker than paper, impervious to water, and not easily torn or worn out. The signatures and filling up, in consequence of a previous preparation, have defied all effort at obliteration, even that of boiling in potash lye.

The steamer Ambassador, a large and beautiful boat, intended for the cotton trade, and heavily laden, was burned lately, on her passage from St. Louis to New Orleans. The boat cost $30,000, and her cargo was very valuable. The deck passengers lost all their baggage.

A line of stages is running from Matamoros to Point Isabel, taverns are opened, soda fountains invite the thirsty, commission merchants call for consignments, auctions are advertised, and large stocks of goods advertised, and collections are made for the relief of Ireland!

The London Times of the 14th ult., contains a card from Mr. Cunard, in which he expresses regret on account of the "unpleasant circumstances respecting Mr. Douglass' passage," and states emphatically, that "nothing of the kind will again take place in the steamships with which he is connected."

It is estimated, now, that nine-tenths of the paupers supported by the corporation of New York are foreigners, and only one-tenth Americans, and that the alms-house expenses for the year 1847 will be about $300,000.

Baron DeRothschild has devoted $5,000,000 to the purchase of grain and flour for the supply of Paris, to be sold at current prices. If the operation proves a losing one, the loss is to be his; if there be a profit, it is to be converted into bread to be distributed to needy families in the capital.

A mother, at Greenupsburg, Kentucky, was murdered, a few days ago, by her husband and her own son. They were both intoxicated; and the son shot his mother through the head while she was asleep! Rum and war make demons of men.

The fishing smack Calhoun, of Charleston, was struck by lightning a few days since, killing Arthur Lynch and injuring several others. A house in Charleston was struck by lightning at the same time, when a female slave was killed and several other persons badly injured.

The Racine (Wisconsin) Whig says: The winter crop is entirely destroyed, and farmers are now busily engaged in sowing spring wheat, on the same ground sowed last fall. The earth is dry and dusty, and every thing is languishing for the want of water.

Sir Walter Scott, Bart., son of the "Great Magician," is dead, without issue. The barony, created in favor of the author of the Waverly Novels, becomes, therefore, extinct. Mr. Lockhart's son is heir-at-law to the estate.

The Springfield (Ill.) Register says: The weather, for a few days past, has been as warm as mid-summer; the fruit trees are in full bloom, and vegetation of every description is coming forward with flattering rapidity.

A well-known political economist says: "We pay best, first, those who destroy us—generals; second, those who cheat us—politicians and quacks; third, those who amuse us—singers and musicians; and, least of all, those who instruct us."

A new cab has made its appearance in London. The wheels are covered with vulcanized India rubber, instead of iron tires, which renders springs unnecessary, and prevents jolting and rattling.

CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE.

REV. J. T. HEADLEY, EDITOR.

THE CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE, formerly under the care of Rev. D. Mead, commences its fourth volume under the editorship of Rev. J. T Headley, author of "Napoleon and his Marshals," "Sacred Mountains," "Letters from Italy," &c. We hazard nothing in saying that this Magazine, so deservedly popular hitherto, is destined to fill a large place in public estimation; that it will not only maintain its present enviable distinction, but earn to itself a far higher popularity, and become the companion of many a circle to which it is now a stranger, gladdening by its presence, while it exerts an influence pure, elevating, and healthful. The Editor will bend his energies to make this the most popular Magazine of the day, and while he avails himself of articles from the best writers, he will draw freely from his own exhaustless store.

It will continue to maintain its high moral tone, and nothing will be admitted into its columns which will minister to the corrupt passions and tendencies of youth, or which "the author dying would wish to blot."

The design of the Editor and Publisher, is to present a Magazine containing all the facination and interest of the lighter Periodicals, while at the same time it moves in a different path, and is not exposed to the same objections. It is issued monthly, containing 32 pages of original matter, printed on fine paper, in handsome covers, with a splendid steel engraving, and a beautiful colored flower, and music, to each number, and got up in every respect in the best style of the art, making a yearly volume of 384 pages, full of choice illustrations, and forming a handsome ornament to the Parlor Table, or a rich and valuable present to a friend.

☞ Price, two dollars a year. Three copies for five dollars.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

Board of Instruction.

IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Miscellaneous.

SANTA ANNA.

In person, Gen. Santa Anna is about six feet high, well made, and of graceful bearing, though he stumps along on an old-fashioned wooden leg, rejecting as uncomfortable, all the "mock legs," with patent springs and self-moving inventions, which have been presented to him by his flatterers from all parts of the world. His dress, as I have said before, is on all occasions that of a high officer of the army; and his breast is covered with richly gemmed decorations.

His brow, shaded with black hair somewhat sprinkled with gray, is by no means lofty, but narrow and smooth. Although his whole head is rather small, and perhaps rather too long for its breadth, it has, however, a marked and boldly-defined outline, indicating talent and resolution. His nose is straight and well shaped, and his brows knit in a line over his close and brilliant eyes, which are said to flash with fire when aroused to passion. His complexion is dark and sallow, and his temperament evidently bilious. His mouth is the most remarkable feature. Its prominent expression, when at rest, is that of mingled pain and anxiety. In perfect repose, you would think him looking on a dying friend, with whose sufferings he was deeply but helplessly sympathizing. His head and face are those of an attentive, thoughtful, melancholy, but determined character. There is no ferocity, vindictiveness, nor ill temper in his expression; and when his countenance is lighted up by pleasant conversation, into which he appears to enter eagerly, though with a timid and subdued voice; and when he puts on that sweetly wooing smile, which seems too tranquil to ripen into a laugh, you feel that you have before you a man who would be singled from a thousand for his quiet refinement and serious temper; one who would at once command your sympathy and your respcet; a well-bred gentleman, and a resolute soldier, who can win by the solicitation of an insinuating address, or rule by the authority of an imperious spirit.

Such is the portrait of the person who, since the outbreak of the Mexican revolution, has played a chief part in the drama of the time, and has fought and forced his way to eminence from the humblest rank. The destroyer and builder up of many systems and men, he has not always been on the side of republicanism, according to the liberal and enlightened notions of the north; but it is sincerely to be hoped, that he is too deeply pledged as an old soldier and a brave fighter in the cause of liberty, now to shrink back into the folly of despotism.

CHINESE PAGODAS.

Near the foot of the grassy slope, at about the centre of the hill, on the road to Nankin, a large jos-house stands, fronting an avenue of colossal granite figures of men and animals, extending in a semicircular sweep, for about a mile, to two square brick, Egyptian-shaped buildings, which are hollow, open on each side, and empty. These, we were told, were the tombs of the emperors of the Ming dynasty; but our guide also said, that there was a large excavation in the rock behind the jos-house, containing coffins; so I fancy that it must be the place of general interment, and that the huge figures were merely intended to dignify the approach to the cemetery. We had not time to visit the jos-house, but we trotted our startled horses between these silent guards, and examined with great interest the sculpture or a departed age. They are about three times the size of life. A tablet-gate marks the commencement of the avenue; then in succession appear two upright shafts of granite, in single blocks; four warriors, dressed in long, loose shirts of scale armour, leaning with folded hands upon their swords (they front each other, as do all the statues;) next to them lions, bears, horses, camels, and elephants; and so on to the two buildings, a repetition of the same figures, each alternate pair, with the exception of the men, crouching. Most of them have been hewn into shape from single blocks; they rest upon flat slabs of granite, on unleveled ground; and, strange to say, although centuries have passed since they were first placed there, no weeds are growing around, nor have they sunk three inches. The elephants are acurately shaped, and fairly sculptured; the rest are all most rudely executed. * * * * * The porcelain pagoda is an octagonal building of nine stories, rising to the height of 261 feet; bright with many-colored porcelain, which throws off a glittering light like the reflected rays from gems. It is in a perfect state of preservation. The porcelain is fastened to the tower with mortar, as Dutch tiles are upon a stove, except the projecting cornices and bas-reliefs of grotesque monsters, which are nailed. The various colors are white, yellow, red, and green; the roofing tiles are all of the imperial yellow. It stands in a spacious court, surrounded on three sides by a wall, the fourth open to two extensive flights of granite steps, descending to the jos-house attached to the pagoda facing the town. Another large enclosure, planted with regular rows of trees, extends to the road and suburbs. The projecting flanges, if I may so term them, of the separate stories, curve upwards at the points; to which are suspended bells, of size proportioned to the taper of the tower. A priest assured me that, when they were first hung up, after the complete repair of the paouta, or pagoda, in the last century, they used to ring forth charming melodies at the command of the mistress of the tower, "the queen of heaven;" until she, wrathful at the indifference and falling off of her followers, in a fit of anger, deprived them of sound. The greater portion are certainly tongueless, and all of them cracked; which is not surprising, for the bells and cast gongs in China (made of the same metal) are very brittle, from the absence of an adequate proportion of alloy. The internal part is square and elaborately ornamented with figures of the Budha faith, in bas-relief; the whole profusely gilt; each story contained a shrine with the universal idol, the sitting figure of "the queen of heaven." A single door, under the niche in which the principal deity was placed, leads into a square chamber in the shaft of the building occupied by another image. The walls are all lined with square porcelain tiles, each separate one embossed with a small device in the centre; those upon the ground floor are entirely covered with gilding. The others of the eight upper stories differ, by having a black edging round the gilded device, which has a good effect; the concluding step of each story is of stone, the flooring and stairs of wood. The ample view from the summit surpassed our expectations. Facing the south, a little river from the distant hills came winding, like the Forth, near Stirling; it passes by the south and western walls, and helps to supply the canal with water. Towards the south-west, as far as the eye could reach, flowed the princely Yang-tze-kiang, leaving, between us and it, as it passed Nankin, a richly-cultivated flat of paddy land, about three miles in breadth. Facing the north, we looked down upon the walls and roofs of a dense cluster of houses—the Chinese city; through the centre, eastward, ran a canal. The streets seemed very narrow; the buildings principally of two low stories; and, upon every slight rise of ground, public temples, granaries, and government offices, surrounded by spacious yards or courts, were discoverable.

[Loch's Campaign in China.

FEET OF CHINESE WOMEN.

The means taken to effect the alteration of the women's feet in China are decidedly prejudicial to the health, and frequently attended with fatal consequences. The fact was ascertained by a clever young naval surgeon, who was for some time stationed at Chusan. It happened that, during an excursion into the country, he one day entered a house where he found a child about eight years old, very ill, and suffering under severe hectic fever. On examination, he discovered that her feet were undergoing the process of distortion; he was informed that she had been a year under this treatment. Moved by pity for the little sufferer, he proceeded to remove the bindings, and fomented the feet, which were covered with ulcers and inflammation. The change in shape had already commenced by the depression of the toes. The child was much relieved by, and evidently grateful for, his treatment. On taking his leave, he warned the mother that she would certainly lose her child if the bands were replaced; but his remonstrances were of no avail. Whenever he returned (and this happened frequently) he always found them on again; the woman urging as an excuse that her daughter had better die than remain unmarried, and that, without improved feet, such a calamity would be her inevitable lot. As might be expected, the child grew worse and worse. After a longer interval than usual, he again revisited the house; but found it untenanted, and a little coffin lying at the door, in which he discovered the body of his poor young patient. [Lock's Campaign.

"RESIST NOT EVIL."

Most people, and, I am sorry to say it, a great many who call themselves Christians, say this course is not consistent with personal safety. But how do such facts as the following put to the blush the timidity and sinful fear of these professed disciples of the Prince of Peace!

When Capt. Back went to the polar regions in search of Gen. Ross, he fell in with a band of Esquimaux, who had never before seen a white man. The chief raised his spear to hurl it at the stranger's head; but when Capt. Back approached calmly and unarmed, the spear dropped, and the rude savage gladly welcomed the brother man who had trusted in him. Had Capt. Back adopted the usual maxim that it is necessary to carry arms in such emergencies, he would probably have occasioned his own death, and that of his companions.

Raymond, in his Travels, says:—"The assassin has been my guide in the defiles of Italy, the smuggler of the Pyrenees has received me with a welcome in his secret paths. Armed, I should have been the enemy of both; unarmed, they have alike respected me. In such expectation, I have long since laid aside all menacing apparatus whatever. Arms may indeed be employed against wild beasts; but men should never forget that they are no defense against the traitor. They may irritate the wicked and intimidate the simple. The man of peace has a much more sacred defense—his character."

A WHALING INCIDENT.

On the 9th of January last, the bark Harriet, of Freetown, Capt. Durfee, cruising on the line, lowered her boats for sperm whales. The first and third mates had each secured a whale and made them fast along side, when they returned to assist the second mate, who was fast to another. They came up with him about nine o'clock at night, and succeeded in killing the whale. They could then see the ship, but it soon began to blow, and they were obliged to lay by the whale all night. In the morning the ship was not in sight, it still blowing a gale and raining hard. They lay by the whale three days, when they ventured to stand off to the westward, in hopes of falling in with some ship. On the seventh day they caught a shark, which they ate with a good relish. They were then standing for the King Mill Group of Islands, but a new gale coming on, they were obliged to reef down, and stand to the eastward, and finally to heave to, where they lay for thirty-six hours in a gale unusual for those latitudes. On the morning of the tenth day, they again stood west. Early on the eleventh day they discovered a sail, and stood for her, which proved to be the bark Hanseat, of Hamburgh. They were taken on board and treated with great kindness. They had had nothing to eat during the eleven days, except the shark they had caught and a few flying fish, and no water except what they had caught in the line tubs. Some of them had lain down to die, two days before they saw the ship, and all of them were so weak that they could scarcely support their weight. Capt. Durfee, after cruising for several days in the vicinity, was making the best of his way to this port with the remnant of his crew, having given up all hopes of ever seeing any of his officers or crew again, when the bark Hanseat spoke him, January 20. He was not more surprised than delighted to find his men all safe, and receiving all attention possible, as the third mate was a brother.

The Laugh of a Child.—Miss Isabel Athelwood, of Frankfort, Pa., writes thus of the mirth of a child. Isabel should, says the Reveille, conduct the laughing chorus of a household of them:

> "I love it—I love it—the laugh of a child,
> Now rippling and gentle, now merry and wild;
> Ringing out on the air with its innocent gush,
> Like the trill of a bird at the twilight's soft hush;
> Floating up on the breeze like the tones of a bell,
> Or the music that dwells in the heart of a shell,
> Oh! the laugh of a child, so wild and so free,
> Is the merriest sound in the world for me!

SPRING.

Spring, the favorite of the year,
Spring, the first-born, draweth near.
Loved by maid, by poet sung,
Spring, the joyous spring is come!
Time of truest, purest pleasure,
Source of sure, unfailing treasure,
Time of fair up-springing flowers,
Time of bright and sunny hours—
Spring is the creative season,
Time of Love, of Hope, of Reason.

[Salem Register.

A Remarkable Printing Press.—We had an opportunity of seeing in operation a truly splendid specimen of machinery, which has just been introduced into the establishment of our neighbors of the Ledger. It is a printing press on a new principle, the contrivance of Richard M. Hoe, Esq., of the well-known house of Hoe & Co., of New York. It is in its way quite a triumph of genius and art, being at once simple, comprehensive, and capable of producing truly extraordinary results. Thus, when in full and perfect operation, it throws off from 10,000 to 12,000 impressions per hour, or at the rate of three or four per second of time. The workmanship, too, while we were looking on, was truly admirable—each impression being distinctly marked, and the whole machinery moving like clock-work. The inventor has obtained a patent, and we believe that it is the first machine of the kind that has been manufactured and put into successful operation.

In ordinary presses, the types are laid upon a bed, the surface of which is flat, and are thus printed upon, either with a platen or cylinder. But with this, the type are placed upon a large cylinder, four and a half feet in diameter, which is surrounded by and revolves within four other smaller cylinders, revolving in an opposite direction. Each of these smaller cylinders receives from its supplying attendant the sheet of paper, with which, in its revolution, it meets the form of type as it comes round, and, in passing, gives the impression, and instantly throws it out into the receiver's hands.

It is really a curious and instructive sight to look on and see this machine in motion—the sheets passing in with the utmost rapidity, receiving the impression, and thrown off with a velocity and regularity really astonishing.

Mr. Hoe may well be congratulated on his achievement. He has in this matter kept progress with the spirit of the age. The very idea of taking from 10,000 to 12,000 impressions per hour, is startling; and to the uninitiated in the mysteries of a printing office, such a result would appear almost impossible. [Phil. Inq.

Quantity of Corn to an Acre.—We have often heard it remarked that 100 bushels of shelled corn never were raised upon an acre of land at a single crop; and if we recollect rightly, we read in the reported proceedings of a late meeting held in Boston, of the Legislative Agricultural Society, that there were several individuals present, who would be willing to go a long distance to see an acre of corn containing a crop of one hundred bushels. For the benefit of all who may be sceptical on this point, we give the result of a little experiment, made by us a few weeks ago, which has since been repeated by others, with but a trifling variation.

From five ears of brown corn, nine or ten inches in length, we shelled a full quart, Winchester measure, which, when counted, contained 2,000 kernels, or 64,000 grains to a bushel. In referring to Mr. Brown's article on the cultivation of this corn, in our March number, it will be seen that he plants his corn in hills, three feet apart one way, and two feet the other; and that at the first hoeing, he reserves three stalks to a hill, each of which, we may reasonably conclude, will produce one ear, and in many cases, two or more. Admitting that an acre thus planted will contain 7,250 hills, and that each hill will produce an equivalent of three ears, ten inches in length, the result, according to the premises above, will give 136 1-8 bushels of shelled corn! [Am. Agricult.

The Isthmus of Tehuantepec.—The Washington Union says: Among the great topics connected with the commercial and territorial advantages and prospects of the country, which the present position of our foreign relations brings into view, the plan of uniting the Atlantic and the Pacific through this isthmus, is certainly one of the most important. It will go far toward changing—and that to the signal profit of our country—the main stream of the commerce of the world. The whole subject is no doubt receiving that careful consideration at the hands of the administration, to which it is entitled. It will be productive of great benefit to the world at large, as well as to the United States. It will be by far the shortest and most direct route between the United States and our territories on the Pacific. It will stimulate the resources and exertions not only of the western side of the American continent, but of the eastern portion of Asia, and all the intermediate lands on the broad Pacific.

A Curious Safety Lock.—We seldom meet with a more novel and quaint invention, than that of a new bank and safe lock invented by Mr. J. Y. Savage, of this city. The lock itself is very simple, having a stout bolt attached to the inside of the door, and which is projected forward by a spring whenever the door is closed, and without the least possible communication with any thing outside, no aperture, nor even an indication of the situation of the lock. But a simple clock movement is attached to the door inside, and so arranged as to be adjusted to let off a spring at any required hour and minute, on the principle of the common alarm clock; and this spring, when thus liberated, withdraws the bolt inside. But neither the burglar nor the lawful proprietor can possibly obtain access to the interior till the faithful sentinel inside gives the word. [Scientific American.

The Wrath to Come.—An irreligious young man heard Mr. Whitfield without interest, until the preacher suddenly paused, then burst into a flood of tears, lifted up his hands and eyes, and exclaimed, "Oh, my hearers! the wrath to come!" "These words," said the young man, "sunk deep into my heart, like lead in the waters. I wept, and when the sermon was ended, retired alone. For days and weeks I could think of little else. Those awful words would follow me wherever I went—'The wrath to come! the wrath to come!'" The result was, that the young man soon made a public profession of religion, and became an eminent preacher.

VARIETY.

Milbury, a little town in Massachusetts, manufactured last year to the amount of $1,000,000. It has six cotton mills, four woolen mills, two paper mills, three machine shops for making cotton and other machinery; two iron foundries, one sash and blind factory, one scythe establishment, one factory for making bevels, hoes, trowels, hay-cutters, &c.; one for making railroad cars, one for black lead, one for tanning leather, besides many small shops.

A poor Irishman, in New York, picked up $1,000 in bank bills in Wall-street, and delivered the money to a broker who had lost it. In the fullness of his generosity, the broker gave the finder a York shilling for his pains and honesty. The latter, however, threw back the gift—the commission was too small for the extent of the operation—and left the broker utterly astonished at the refusal of his benefaction.

It is stated, in a letter from Naples, that the ancient amphitheatre of Pouzzoles has been freed from the earth that surrounded it, and may now be examined in all its parts. The dens of the animals, which are situated under the arena, are of extremely solid masonry, and in a state of excellent preservation. Lamps, parts of columns, and remains of architectural ornaments, have been found in them.

The Cincinnati Chronicle describes a Yankee curiosity in that city in the form of a machine driven by steam to make shoe pegs. The engine is below—in the second story the green wood is taken—sawed into lengths and planed off. The next operation is to crease the top; after, comes the splitting process. The next is to grind the pegs and separate them. Lastly, they are dried by steam; in fact the pegs are all from the green, made by steam, and the proprietor makes daily about eight bushels!

One of the papers which took notes states that there were two hundred and two suicides committed in the United States last year. Of this number 38 were by cutting the throat; 51 hanging; 29 shooting; 25 drowning; 22 poison; 10 jumping from a hight; 6 stabbing; 6 under railroad cars. Of this number 59 were insane; 15 drunk, and 18 filled with remorse and despair.

A female congregation in China is an extraordinary thing, as it is in all heathen lands; but Mr. Roberts, in his Journal of Aug. 10, speaks of such a religious assemblage gathered by him in Canton—one of them an encouraging inquirer; she had read the Christian books, and desired to be taught, and become a disciple of the Saviour.

The Impartial, of Smyrna, states that the Egyptian Government has recently promulgated a law for the abolition of slavery after the space of fifty days. At the slave mart there was in consequence a decline in prices of sixty per cent. No sales could be made, as after this interval of fifty days, every slave will be free to stay with or to leave his present owner at pleasure.

ALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly, and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the bestexegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

SABBATH DISCUSSION.

From the Christian Chronicle of April 28.

Mr. Editor:—I am sorry that my view of the relation of the new covenant to the Sabbath, should have given pain to my friend "E. W. D.;" and I cannot but think that if I had made myself more clearly understood than, from his comments, I seem to have done, he would have found less occasion for anxiety. Certainly, whatever modifications may be required in subordinate particulars of the statement given in my last, and whether I rightly apprehend its bearings on the subject in dispute or not, of the correctness of that view in general, I have not the slightest doubt. Did time and space permit, I should like to enlarge on the points of difference between him and myself, as he has skillfully presented them; but as it is, I must be content with merely requesting any who may be interested in the discussion, to compare our respective articles with each other and with the Scriptures. I surely have no wish but that Christ's truth may prevail.

In proceeding to speak a few words concerning the Lord's Day, as being avowedly not the seventh, but the first, I do not know but I must shake hands with "E. W. D." though I shall be glad if possible, still to have his company. He holds, if I understand him aright, that the seventh day alone, the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, persents any scriptural claim upon us as a day of worship. Rather, perhaps, he hardly recognizes an essential distinction—any day being possibly the seventh. So that with him I cannot speak ad hominem, in regard to the first day, as such. But some may say to me, you who hold that the Sabbath is abolished and gone with all the other "rudiments" and "shadows," yet probably observe Sunday as specially devoted to religion. If so, on what authority do you proceed—the fourth commandment being according to your view, as null and void for Christians as if it had never existed? This is a fair and most important question, which I shall endeavor to answer, as accounting, be it observed, simply for my own practice.

I would say then first of all, that I feel constrained both by the Law and by the Gospel, to exclude from my conception of the first day, almost every notion properly appertaining to the ancient Sabbath. That this day is more especially devoted to God than any other, that He requires of us particularly this time for His service, that what we do on this day really is God's service more than what we, as Christians, do consistently every day and minute, appears to me not only not taught in the Bible, but in direct contradiction to what is taught there. It is one of the offspring of that pernicious distinction between things sacred and secular, which has no ground in the development of the Christian spirit. It was the noble answer of an English clergyman (whose very appelation, by the way, points to the error of which I speak—clergy!) who had been rebuked by his diocesan for preaching in an unconsecrated place—"Pardon me, my Lord, I thought that when my Divine Redeemer had traveled and wept and bled on this sinful earth, every spot here was consecrated to efforts for extending the benefit of his sacrifice." I think, Mr. Editor, that when a soul has entered into an inseparable union with that Redeemer, by faith in his blood, so that he lives in it, and it does every thing both in word and in deed, in the name of the Lord Jesus, then every thing is consecrated to God in Christ, the ploughing of the field as well as the preaching of the Gospel, or nothing is. This is not rhetoric. Nor can there be any distinction between days as to their intrinsic appropriateness for God's service, or the holiness (spiritually considered) of exercises performed in them. To the evil heart there is no holy time—to the heart which lives by the faith of the Son of God, all time is holy. After carefully considering what my brother has said on this point, I must reiterate the sentiments which I before expressed; and while I take his admonitions of error gratefully, he will bear with me if I say that I think the discrimination which he attempts to draw between different exercises of the renewed spirit right in themselves, as not equally God's service to be one of the very limbs of Antichrist.

Having thus cleared the way for a positive statement of my view of the Lord's Day, I shall be obliged, much to my regret, to suspend the remainder till next week. Having waited several days for leisure to devote to this article, I am again broken off at the last moment for reaching the press this week. INDAGATOR.

From the Christian Chronicle of May 5.

Mr. Editor:—In pursuing the train of thought in which I was broken off last week, I wish to say, that while I hold every moment of the Christian's time, to be due to the service of God, and so all equally holy; yet from the incapacity of the human mind to be occupied with more than one thing at once, time must be taken specifically for exercises of devotion. God's servant is to be employed each moment about just that thing which He, for the time being would have him to do. But among all the departments of his Father's business, exercises of devotion, in their due proportion to the rest, constitute the most desirable and grateful share. In these the believing soul is brought into sensible intercourse with the great source of blessings—thus reänimating that fervor of spirit which should warm all his diligence in business, and drinking in exhileration and strength for the toils and trials of his pilgrimage.

Had it been God's will that he should stand unassociated and alone in his profession, of Christianity, it seems to me highly probable that it would have devolved on each individual to determine for himself in the Lord what time he would spend in acts of devotion. But Christians do not stand independent and alone. They are united together in churches, each of which is at once an epitome and a member of the church universal. This involves the necessity, according to Christ's plan of social religious exercises for the mutual edification of His body, and subordinately for the good of those who are without. In this relation, it no longer remains for the Christian to say for himself independently, how much and what time he must devote to God's worship. He is a part of the church; and the ends of the church require that some definite season should be fixed upon for religious communion, and generally understood.

This necessity might very likely be less felt by the earliest Christians, while remaining in Jerusalem, and, as would appear, almost constantly engaged in religious affairs. So far as it was felt, I have little doubt that it was met by the Sabbath and other sacred seasons of the Hebrews, all of which were plainly observed by them externally for a time as they had been before. But when the apostles were scattered abroad from Jerusalem, and the Gospel, emancipated from the fetters of nationality, began to multiply its converts among the Gentiles, who knew not the Sabbath; when, too, it was neither possible nor desirable that the whole time should be given to devotion, it became necessary to appoint some periodical season for worship and the spiritual activity of the congregation. And in order that this arrangement might be most extensively beneficial it was plainly of the highest importance that it should be uniform throughout the churches; that there should, in a word, be a stated and well-known time for the general celebration of God's praise through His Son, and the discharge of those duties which are involved in the church relation.

Thus far we can discern, I think, a clear moral requirement, (of the same nature precisely, as that by which Christians are held to unite in some form of church organization;) and just as we learn what particular form of the church is countenanced in the New Testament, in the same way do we learn what particular season, if any, whether monthly, semi-monthly, or weekly, is set apart by divine authority for Christian worship in the churches. That there is any express command on this subject, like that given to the Israelites with reference to their use of the seventh day, can (and in this view, ueed) no more be pretended, than that the other parts of the outward frame work of Christianity are prescribed with the distinctness and particularity of the pattern given in the Mount. The question before us is a question of fact, which may be answered by sacred and profane history.

The necessity of some recognized season of worship being thus palpable, and that of a weekly season scarcely less so, it would follow from the view of the Gospel before taken, as it respects the equality of days, that this season might fall, so far as any intrinsic propriety is concerned, on any day of the seven. But the Sabbath was liable to great objection owing to its connection with that system from which the early attempts of the Juduizers to harass the Gentile churches, made it important to divorce Christianity as perfectly as possible. It was not, indeed, thought necessary that the Sabbath, any more than other holy days, or even circumcision itself, should be openly and absolutely discountenanced for the Jews, so long as they avoided a superstitious and unchristian spirit, in its observance, and refrained from urging it on the conscience of others. Hence it is highly probable that the Sabbath was reverenced by the Jewish Christians for a considerable time, often, if not always, in connection with the Sunday festival; while among the Gentiles, Sabbath-keeping was entirely disused. The seventh day being naturally discarded on this account, the first could hardly fail to commend itself to the special regard of all Christians, as such, from its association in their minds with the resurrection of their Lord,* and so with the full completion of his work and sufferings—his final triumph over death and hell. Not to remember this day with singular honor and joy would have been contrary to human nature; and it would not be without influence on their minds, we may conceive, that this day had been signalized by their risen Lord himself through several gracious appearances to his disciples before his ascension to glory.

Now, that the apostles did sanction the use of Sunday for the special celebration of Christ's love, and the cultivation of that spirit which was derived from him, is sufficiently evident to my mind, first from the designation given it by John, Rev. i: 10—the Lord's Day; for that the first day of the week is here pointed out, I conclude from the absence of any other rational explanation—from this application of the term at a later period—and especially from the allusion to it so early as in one of the epistles of Ignatius.† We here see that the day was held in peculiar esteem by apostolic Christians from its relation to their Lord's work; and, being thus honored, I find the proof furthermore, that it was held as a day of worship and the performance of church duties, in the well-known passages, Acts xx: 7, 1 Cor. xvi: 2. As throwing light on these, it is proper to notice the celebrated letter of Pliny to Trajan (about A. D. 110) in which he states, after diligent inquiry into the practices of Christians, that they were accustomed to meet on a stated day to worship Christ; which stated day is definitely ascertained by the declaration of Justin Martyr (about A. D. 150) that Christians used to meet for solemn worship on the day called Sunday.

My authority, then, for observing the first day of the week, not as a Sabbath, for I doubt the propriety of calling it by that name, but as a day of fraternal communion with the saints in Christ Jesus, and the commemoration, in all appropriate methods, of His finished work, is the example of the apostles. The obligation which I recognize to do this, and which I suppose to rest on all Christians, is the same as that which binds us to conform in other respects to the polity or discipline which they did, according to our belief, institute or approve. If it were granted that there is not absolute certainty of their having approved the religious use of the Lord's Day in particular, the same may be said of many other important points of organization and order not explicitly prescribed; while each has in its favor a paramount probability of the same practical force as certainty itself. This I firmly believe to be the case with the Lord's Day. To justify myself in this observance of Sunday, the Sabbath being abrogated, I imagine the simple fact of this being so generally held as a day of worship in the churches, would be amply sufficient; and when to this is added the natural fitness of the season to awaken devout feelings and the strong probability (to say no more) that the inspired apostles introduced this usage, I see not how a direct precept to this end, could make my duty plainer.

According to this view, the appropriate duties of the Lord's Day are devotional acts, and the direct use of means for the edification and extension of Christ's Church. Rest from worldly employments becomes a duty, not primarily as of old, on the Sabbath, but by consequence; since this is essential to the fullest efficacy of a season thus set apart for worship and refreshment of the weary spirit.

This view, if practically carried out, would lead Christians to consider their whole time, without any reserve, as consecrated to the Lord—result in a wider ditinction outwardly between them and others—necessitate some important changes in the mode of their operations on the world—and render the profession of Christianity more trying to the natural heart, and therefore a more decisive test of character than it is at present. But let those who think the interests of God or men would thereby suffer, reflect that by all this difference the Church would be brought into the position which she occupied at first, when surely the world was without a Sabbath, when, however, the triumphs of the cross were most wonderful and glorious. Hand in hand with the decay of faith proceeded the transfer of Jewish notions of sanctity to the Christian Sabbath, (as it began to be called;) until at last, under the almost total eclipse of the luminous simplicity of the Gospel, the observance of Sunday, as the Sabbath, was enjoined by the edicts of a semi-christian emperor.

Here I would remark, in conclusion, that while I hold the error of our Sabbatarian friends to be part and parcel of that system which the apostle denounced at Galatia, as inconsistent with the Gospel, and leading logically to an entire renunciation of the faith, I freely admit that the grievances which they suffer at the hands of our civil Legislatures are as iniquitous as they are severe. For the magistracy whether imperial or republican, to enforce by temporal sanctions, the supposed obligations of God's law; or to discriminate by a mere civil arrangement (if they so call it) in its inevitable operation, between the tenets of different religious bodies, as entitled to equal privileges, is unjust, oppressive and impious.

I shall be glad to see the discussion of this subject go on in an earnest and truth-loving manner, but it is not my intention to take any farther part in it at present. INDAGATOR.

[*] It is plainly enough for this argument, that they should have supposed their Lord to have risen on the morning of the first day, even though he had actually left the tomb the night before. But I have wondered how the Sabbatarians could spend precious time in framing cloudy arguments to prove that Christ was crucified on Wednesday, and rose on Saturday after lying in the grave three full days, (see Carlow's Defense of the Sabbath,) thus making Sunday the fifth day from his death—in the very teeth of Matt. xvi: 21, compared with Luke xxiv: 21.

[†] The passage is in the Epistle ad Magnesios, c. 9, and partially quoted I believe (I have not the book at hand) by Giesler in his Church History. Here I would add, that in several allusions to the Sabbath as contrasted with the first day of the week, in what are called the Apostolic Fathers, it is invariably disparaged and treated as belonging to an obsolete dispensation. This, whether these writings be genuine or not, proves, at least, since they are unquestionably of great antiquity, first, that many of the earliest Christians held the observance of the Sabbath to be mere superstition, and secondly, that in devoting the Lord's Day to Christian worship they did not consider it as in any sense a Sabbath.

SILENT LABOR.

Silent, patient, continuous labor, does more than noisy talk or vain boasting. Silent labor accomplishes and makes visible something that is enduring, while idle talk, like the babbling of a shallow brook, evinces more noise than strength. This is good encouragement, for well directed labor will triumph over difficulties and obstacles, and result in the consummation of something useful. Thomas Carlyle says, speaking of work, "My friend, all speech and rumor is short-lived and foolish, untrue. Genuine work alone, what thou worketh faithfully, that is eternal. Stand thou by that, and let fame and the world go prating." Another writer adds, Courage, then, raise the arm, strike home, and that right lustily; the citadel of Hope must yield to noble desire, thus seconded by effort.

Work, work, with right endeavor,
Walls of brass resist not
A noble undertaking—nor can vice
Raise any bulwark to make good a place
Where Virtue seeks to enter.

A Touching Incident.—A month or two since, we received the following story in a letter from a private correspondent in New York:—

A visitor of the City Tract Society called, a few days since, on a family suffering with extreme poverty. A little child that had died the day before, was lying on the bed in its everyday clothes, the parents being unable to pay for suitable grave clothes. The visitor promised to attend to its burial, and as he was leaving, a little brother of the deceased asked,

"Where is Jamie now?"

"God has taken him away," said the visitor.

"Is Jamie cold now?" he inquired.

"No. God has taken him where there is no more cold, or hunger, or suffering."

The poor boy looked up and exclaimed, "Won't you ask God to take me too? I am so cold!" [Hartford Courant.

"GOD IS LOVE."

Oh! Child of Grief, why weepest thou?
Why droops thy sad and mournful brow?
Why is thy look so like despair?
What deep, sad sorrow lingers there?

Thou mourn'st, perhaps, for some one gone—
A friend, a wife, a little one;
Yet mourn not; for thou hast, above,
A friend in God, and "God is love."

Is it remorse that lays thee low?
Is it for sin thou mournest so?
Then dost thou bear a heavy grief;
Yet, mourner, still there is relief.

There's One on high can pardon give,
Who gave his life that thou might'st live;
Seek, then, for comfort from above,
And hope in God, for "God is love."

Has cold unkindness wounded thee?
Does thy lov'd friend now from thee flee?
O turn thy thoughts from earth to heav'n,
Where no such cruel wounds are given.

In all the varying scenes of woe—
The lot of fallen man below—
Still lift thy tearful eye above,
And hope in God, for "God is love."

Sweet is the thought, time flies apace,
The earth is not our resting-place;
And sure the promise of the Lord
To those who love and trust his word.

Then, weeping pilgrim, dry thy tears;
Comfort on every side appears;
An eye beholds thee from above,
The eye of God, and "God is Love." E. J.

HAPPY DEVOTIONAL FEELINGS OF DODDRIDGE.

In turning over the pages of a recent number of Chambers' Cyclopedia of English Literature, we met with the following interesting letter written by Dr. Philip Doddridge to his wife, during his absence from his home. The letter bears date, Oct., 1742. Doddridge was at this time, 40 years of age:—

I hope, my dear, you will not be offended when I tell you that I am, what I hardly thought it possible, without a miracle, that I should have been, very easy and happy without you. My days begin, pass, and end in pleasure, and seem short because they are so delightful. It may seem strange to say it, but really so it is, I hardly feel that I want any thing. I often think of you and pray for you, and bless God on your account, and please myself with the hope of many comfortable days, and weeks, and years with you; yet I am not at all anxious about your return, or indeed about any thing else. And the reason, the great and sufficient reason is, that I have more of the presence of God with me than I remember ever to have enjoyed in any one month of my life. He enables me to live for him, and to live with him. When I awake in the morning, which is always before it is light, I address myself to him, and converse with him, speak to him while I am lighting my candle and putting on my clothes, and have often more delight before I come out of my chamber, though it be hardly a quarter of an hour after my awaking, than I have enjoyed for whole days, or, perhaps, weeks of my life. He meets me in my study, in secret, in family devotions. It is pleasant to read, pleasant to compose, pleasant to converse with my friends at home; pleasant to visit those abroad—the the poor, the sick; pleasant to write letters of necessary business by which any good can be done; pleasant to go out and preach the gospel to poor souls, of which some are thirsting for it, and others dying without it; pleasant in the week day to think how near another Sabbath is; but, oh! much, much more pleasant, to think how near eternity is, and how short the journey through this wilderness, and that it is but a step from earth to heaven.

I cannot forbear, in these circumstances, pausing a little, and considering whence this happy scene just at this time arises, and whither it tends. Whether God is about to bring upon me any peculiar trial, for which this is to prepare me; whether he is shortly about to remove me from the earth, and so is giving me more sensible prelibations of heaven, to prepare me for it; or whether he intends to do some peculiar services by me just at this time, which many other circumstances lead me sometimes to hope; or whether it be that, in answer to your prayers, and in compassion to that distress which I must otherwise have felt in the absence and illness of her who has been so exceedingly dear to me, and was never more sensibly dear to me than now he is pleased to favor me with this teaching experience; in consequence of which, I freely own I am less afraid than ever of any event that can possibly arise, consistent with his nearness to my heart, and the tokens of his paternal and covenant love. I will muse no farther on the cause. It is enough, the effect is so blessed.

SPOKEN AGAINST.

What if people do speak against you? Let them feel that you are able to bear it. What is there gained by stopping to correct every word that is whispered to your discredit? Lies will die if let alone; but if you repeat them to this one and another, because your enemies had the impudence to make them, you but keep the fire burning, and the way open for a dozen slanders. Keep your course, and go straight forward, and trouble not your head about what is repeated, and feel all the better, and wear a less frightful face. Slander never killed a sterling character, and it never will; her coat will not sit upon him, without a pull here and a jerk there, and a twist below; and while this work is going on, the false words are forgotten by the multitude. Let us, you and I, reader, repeat what another has said in rhyme, and if we have been talked about or slandered, it will do us as much good as a fry at Diamond Cove:

"Not all they say or do, can make
My head, or tooth, or finger ache,
Nor mar my shape, nor sear my face,
Nor put one feature out of place;
Nor will ten thousand lies
Make one less virtuous, learned, or wise;
The most effectual way to baulk
Their malice is, to let them talk."

HENRY MARTYN.

Toward the middle of the last century, John Martyn of Truro, was working with his hands in the mines near that town. He was a wise man, who, knowing the right use of leisure hours, employed himself for higher and more lucrative pursuits; and who, knowing the right use for money, devoted his enlarged means to procure for his four children a liberal education. Henry, the younger of his sons, was accordingly entered at the University of Cambridge, where, in January, 1801, he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Arts, with the honorary rank of senior wrangler. There also he became the disciple, and as he himself would have said, the convert of Charles Simeon. Under the counsels of that eminent teacher, the guidance of Mr. Wilberforce, and the aid of Mr. Grant, he entered the East India Company's service as a chaplin. After a residence in Hindostan of about five years, he returned homeward through Persia, in broken health. Pausing at Shiraz, he labored there during twelve months, with the ardor of a man who, distinctly perceiving the near approach of death, feared lest it should intercept the great work for which alone he desired io live. That work (the translation of the New Testament into Persian) accomplished, he resumed his way toward Constantinople, followed his mimander (one Hassan Aga) at a gallop, nearly the whole distance from Tabriz to Tocat, under the rays of a burning sun, and the pressure of continual fever.

On the 6th of October, 1812, in the thirty-second year of his age, he brought the journal of his life to a premature close, by inscribing in it the following words, while he sought a momentary repose under the shadow of some trees, at the foot of the Caramanian mountains: "I sat in the orchard and thought with sweet comfort and fear, of God—in solitude my company, my friend and comforter. Oh! when shall time give place to eternity? When shall appear that new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness and love? There shall in no wise enter any thing that defileth; none of that wickedness which has made men worse than wild beasts; none of those corruptions which add still more to the miseries of mortality, shall be seen or heard of any more." Ten days afterward, these aspirations were fullfilled. His body was laid in the grave by the hands of strangers at Tocat, and to his disembodied spirit was revealed that awful vision, which it is given to the pure heart, and to them alone, to contemplate. ENTER IN AT THE STRAIT GATE.

An excellent missionary thus relates one of the last sermons he addressed to the Hindoos at Benares: "I spoke on the words, 'Enter ye in at the strait gate.' The chapel was full, and the hearers very attentive. I explained to them the meaning of the strait gate, and what they must do in order to get through. First, I spoke, according to the Hindoo way of thinking, of a worldly-minded person, who cares nothing about religion, and hopes, nevertheless, at the end to go to heaven. 'There,' I said, 'is one coming along on an elephant, he appears in grand style, but cares nothing for God and eternity, he wants to enjoy the world, and yet he hopes to get to heaven in the end. Thus he is riding on toward the strait gate, hoping he may get through.'

"While speaking thus, one of my hearers called out, 'He must come down from his elephant, or he will never get through.' 'You are right,' I replied; 'yes, he must forsake his worldly mind, and descend from his height, and humble himself, or else he will never enter heaven.

"Then I described another character, belonging to those of whom our Saviour said, 'Ye cannot serve God and mammon.' 'Here, my friends,' said I, 'comes a man who appears desirous to go to heaven, he has his eyes fixed on the strait gate, and is walking up to it, but on his back he carries a large bundle of various things—see how he groans under it! Will he succeed?' 'No,' said another man, 'he must leave his bundle behind, or else he will never get through!' 'You are perfectly right, if he wishes to get through the strait gate into heaven the heart must be wholly given up to it, a divided heart God will not accept; he will either drive sin out of the heart of man, or sin will drive him out.' The people understood this very well, and were pleased.

"The third class I wished to represent were the proud and self-righteous. Here I had nothing to do but to allude to a certain class of people who are constantly seen at Benares—I mean the haughty disciples of Mohammed. Without mentioning names, however, I continued—'There comes another; you see he gives himself the air of a great and holy man. He says, I do no man any wrong, I repeat my prayers daily, I fast often and give every one his due. Thus conscious of his righteousness he lifts up his head, and with a firm step you see him walking up to the gate.' A man called out, 'He must stoop down, he must bow down, or else he will break his head.' I replied, 'Do you understand what you say?' 'Yes,' said he, 'he must leave his pride behind, and come as a poor sinner—stooping signifies humility, and if he is not humbling himself he will never enter through the strait gate!'"

Boisterous Preaching.—A celebrated divine, who was remarkable in the first period of his ministry for a loud and boisterous mode of preaching, suddenly changed his whole manner in the pulpit, and adopted a mild and dispassionate mode of delivery. One of his brethren, observing it, inquired of him what had happened him to make the change? He answered—"When I was young I thought it was thunder that killed the people, but when I grew wiser, I discovered that it was the lightning—so I determined to thunder the less and lighten the more in future."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, June 3, 1847.

THE RIGHT DAY TO SABBATIZE.

The discussion of the Sabbath question appears to be widening and deepening the conviction that there is no scriptural law for any other Sabbath than the seventh day. Hence it has now become common for persons to say, 'If we knew when the seventh day is, that is the right day to keep.' Others say, 'Saturday is no more the seventh day than Sunday is; it may be reckoned from any point.' I suppose some persons do really think, that we do not know, and cannot know, which is the seventh day in rotation from the first day of creation. It is presumed that it is lost; and hence it is inferred, that if we keep a seventh day, it is all that will be required of us. If the matter really were so, that certainty respecting the true time were lost irrecoverably, the only rule of action in such case would be the apostolic decision, 2 Cor. 8: 12—"If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." We should still keep that day which we have most reason to believe is the seventh day in rotation from that which God himself sanctified and blessed. But is it so with the objectors? Do they not rather adopt the theory of lost time, in order to cover the palpable inconsistency of pleading the fourth commandment for the Christian Sabbath, while they neglect Jehovah's Sabbath on the reputed seventh day?

For the sake of those who have never examined the subject, we offer the following considerations to show that their theory is false—that the sabbatic time has not been and cannot be lost. It is secured against all vicissitudes.

The theory is wrong, because it proceeds upon false views of the Sabbath itself. It is supposed to be a mere rest day, and therefore that one day is as good as another. But both the institution (Gen. 2: 2, 3,) and the law, (Ex. 20: 8, 9, 10,) show that it is a commemorative institution; they point out what God did, and the reason for it, and require man to remember and observe the same. Any other day, and for any other object, cannot fullfil the law. To suppose that the law requires what cannot be done, is to reproach its author. Let the candid reader disabuse his own mind of the false associations thrown around the subject, and he will see more readily the true merits of the question. It is not a question of how many years, or weeks, or days, have transpired since the foundation of the world. That, we confess, we cannot certainly tell. The holy Scriptures do not profess to give it. The sacred chronologists give us the generations of men, and to the time of Jacob their several ages; but after this time the series of years is left out, and it is exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to supply it. But the commencement and termination of a week has never affected the annual reckoning of any people. Of course it follows that the change of yearly epochs or eras could not necessarily affect the weekly division of time.

We are not informed at what season, or in what sign of the Zodiac, the primitive year commenced! doubtless because there was no religious institution dependent upon it. When annual festivals were enjoined upon Israel, God fixed the beginning of their year. When the Sabbath was made for man, it was made in a fixed order of time. A daily succession is given that could not be mistaken. The Bible gives us the history of the religion of the world, not of its philosophy. Did God appoint and enjoin such an institution, and make no provision for its perpetuation? Shall His word return unto him void? Who can believe it? The seventh day commemorated the only great event in which the earliest ages of men had any interest. It had no rival during the earliest ages, and its perpetuation was secured for sixteen hundred and sixty-six years by the lives of Adam and Methuselah; by Shem, from Methuselah to Abraham; by his posterity to the giving of the manna. That it was so perpetuated is manifest from the weekly division of their time. When God threatened the deluge, (Gen. 7: 4,) he said, "Seven days, and I will cause it to rain." In Gen. 7: 10, it is said of Noah, "It came to pass, after seven days." Gen. 8: 10, "He staid yet other seven days." Verse 12, "He staid yet other seven days." In all these instances the Hebrew is a heptade of days, or, in plain English, a week. The same division of time was prevalent in Laban's family in Haran. Gen. 29: 27, 28; and with Joseph and his brethren in Egypt, when they buried their father Jacob. The plagues sent upon the Egyptians by the hand of Moses, commenced weekly. Ex. 7: 25. The same division of time obtained with Job and his three friends in the land of Uz. Job 2: 13. Here is positive proof that the weekly division of time obtained among all those primitive families. No other kindred division of time is ever mentioned as occurring or regarded among them. Was it not the same that God made at the beginning, marked by the return of the Sabbath?

The number seven has always been a sacred number, from the remotest antiquity; and we know of no way to account for it, but by reference to the early and general observance of the seventh-day Sabbath, appointed by God at the beginning. It is seen in Noah's seven clean beasts, Gen. 7: 2. In Abraham's seven ewe lambs, Gen. 21: 28. In Pharaoh's seven kine and seven ears of wheat, Gen. 41: 26. In Balaam's seven altars, and in Balak's seven bullocks and seven rams. Num. 23: 1—4, 14, 29. Here, then, after the deluge, we have Noah and his sons, in the land of Armenia, Abraham in Beersheba, Jacob and Laban in the land of Haran, Pharoah King of Egypt, Balaam a Mesapotamian; Balak, King of Moab; the Elders of the Midianites; Job in the land of Uz; Eliphaz from Teman; Bildad from Shoah; and Zophar the Naamathite, all doing reverence to the sacred number seven. Whence did this originate, if not from the perpetuation of that division of time which God made at the begining?*

Mr. S. J. Buckingham says, "The Egyptians venerated the Nile, as the seven-mouthed stream, because, among them, this number seven was regarded as a sacred number. Nor were the Egyptians singular in this respect; for among the Hebrews, the Chaldeans, the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Persians, the same regard was shown to this number, and the Greeks and Romans after them partook of the same feeling." Indeed, nothing is better established in ancient history, than the general regard shown to the number seven as a sacred number.

The Bible gives an account of a succession of godly men, from Adam to Moses, whose characters were formed by a code of laws received by revelation from God; and by their veneration for the sacred seven, it is fair to infer that they regarded the institution mentioned in Gen. 2: 2, 3. Enoch, (Jude 14,) Noah, (2 Peter, 2: 5,) are particularly mentioned as preachers of righteousness. Melchisedeck (probably the patriarch Shem) was a priest of the most High God. Abraham is expressly honored for keeping the charge, the commandments, the laws and the statutes of God, Gen. 26: 5. Eliphaz said to Job, "Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart," Job 22: 22. Job answers him, "My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept, and not deceived, neither have I gone back from the commandment of His lips; I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food," Job 23: 11, 12. Joseph, in Potiphar's house, speaks as one instructed in God's law; adultery, he said, was a sin against God. In the darkest period of Egyptian bondage, there were those in Israel who so feared God that they refused to do as the King of Egypt commanded. Moses himself chose affliction with the people of God rather than the riches of Egypt. These facts prove two things:—1st. There was a divine law by which good men were guided during that period. 2d. There was a succession of good men through all that period, who kept the law; consequently the Sabbath time could not have been lost for want of godly men to keep it.

Veneration for sacred things was a prominent feature in patriarchal piety. It is seen in their celebration of divine interpositions; and in their regard for the places where they occurred; as Noah's altar in Ararat, Abraham's between Bethel and Hai, Isaac's on Beershaba, and Jacob's pillar at Bethel, with many other circumstances in their history which show that they were not wanting in that feature of a devout man, which would lead him to perpetuate a divine institution like the Sabbath.

Jehovah's care of his own institutions is a sufficient guaranty that he would never suffer the Sabbath time to be lost. He called Abram out of Hur of the Chaldeans, that he might raise up of his seed a perpetual succession of witnesses to the institutions of religion. That this was his design in all his dealings with them, is many times declared in holy Scripture; as in Deut. 7: 6, "The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people upon the face of the earth." Also, Isaiah 44: 6, 7, 8, "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord." It is thus that Jehovah has associated in covenant and promise, the perpetuation of the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with the perpetuation of the times which he hath appointed. "The word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, Considerest thou what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord, If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob and David my servants, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them." Jer. 33: 23—26. "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon unto another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." Isaiah 66: 22, 23. No prediction is being more strikingly fullfilled than this respecting the preservation of the seed of Jacob. It may truly be said of this people, "Sing ye unto her, A vineyard of red wine I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment; lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day." Isaiah 27: 2, 3. Their preservation is not more remarkable than the tenacity with which they hold the seventh-day Sabbath. And their doing so in all countries, makes the loss of Sabbath time plainly impossible. I suppose it was in pursuance of this determination of Jehovah to perpetuate his own institutions, that Jesus Christ said, "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than for one jot or tittle of the law to fail." Luke 16: 17. The institution of the Sabbath certainly specifies a fixed day in a defined series; the law proclaimed from Mount Sinai as certainly specifies the same fixed day in the same successive series. If the day was not then known, and it is not now known, and perpetuated, our Lord's words are not true. If the seventh day in order of time is not known, then more than a tittle, the very substance of the law itself, has failed, while the heavens and the earth continue as they were. But "let God be true, and every man a liar," whose theory contradicts his word.

There are many other reasons going to show that the present reckoning of the weekly division of time is the true one. But more are not necessary. It is plain from the above, that God has established his witnesses on high. If any people, therefore, have lost the true time, it is their own fault. They are no more excusable than the nations who have forgotten God their Maker. S. D.

EASTERN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

The Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association held its Eleventh Anniversary with the church at Rockville, (3d Hopkinton,) R. I., on the fifth and sixth days of the week, May 21st and 22d. It was opened with a discourse by Eld. S. S. Griswold, pastor of the 2d Hopkinton church, neither of the persons previously designated having arrived at the appointed hour. He chose for his text Heb. 11: 1—"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

There were present about fifty delegates and visiting brethren. After the reading of the letters, the Association was organized by the reäppointment of A. D. Titsworth, of Middlesex Co., N. J., Moderator. T. B. Brown and Paul Stillman, of New York, were appointed Secretaries. The usual committees were appointed by the Moderator.

From the communications, the following statistics of the Association, are collected, viz: churches 13, ordained ministers 18, added during the year 116, dismissed by letter 19, excluded 25, died 27; whole number of members 1,685. Increase of members 45. Three churches only reported their contributions for benevolent operations—the Pawcatuck, Piscataway, and the 2d Hopkinton. These three have contributed above $620. The letters, however, show that an interest is felt generally for the prosperity of the benevolent operations conducted by the denomination.

The consideration and adoption of the report of the Committee appointed at the last meeting of the Association to revise the Constitution and By-Laws, occupied nearly all the remainder of the day, and a part of the following day. The Association, by the adoption of the new Constitution, has made a great advancement in its ostensible object, and in its organization to carry out its purposes. It is now a Missionary Association, with its Executive Committee, composed of the officers of the Association and one from each church, to transact its business during the interim of its sessions. It may also engage in such other benevolent operations, within its bounds, as may be determined upon at its annual meetings. If the Association carry out the spirit of its present Constitution and By-Laws, it will compare well with any similar association in the country. It was the general impression, that the time devoted to the consideration of the Report, was most profitably bestowed.

Interesting reports were made by the Associational Massenger to the churches in New Jersey, by the Messenger to the Tract Anniversary, and by the delegates to the General Conference.

Bro. T. B. Brown, as one of the Committee appointed at the last session to examine the compilation of a Hymn Book, reported that a satisfactory compilation had been made, and that it was now in press; that he hoped it would be ready for publication in August or September; that it would contain about one thousand judiciously selected hymns, and that he doubted not that it would be satisfactory to the denomination generally.

The Business Committee presented a series of resolutions, which were severally moved and adopted, as follows:—

1st. Moved by D. Clawson; seconded by A. B. Burdick:

Resolved, That this Association appoint a suitable person to deliver a discourse before it during the present session on the subject of Missions, and that a collection be taken at the time for the Foreign Mission.

2d. Moved by L. Crandall; seconded by T. B. Brown:

Resolved, That the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, in its efforts to propagate the gospel in foreign lands, is entitled to our warmest sympathies; and that we commend the mission in China, commenced under their auspices, to the prayers and liberalities of the churches.

3d. Moved by W. B. Gillett; seconded by S. S. Griswold:

Resolved, That the American Sabbath Tract Society is an institution which claims the vigorous support of our entire denomination, and that the churches of this Association be requested to aid it liberally by their prayers, their contributions, and by efforts to circulate its publications.

4th. Moved by Isaac More; seconded by T. B. Brown:

Resolved, That we consider it the duty of every Christian who sustains the responsible relation of the head of a family, to maintain the regular and daily worship of God in his own house; and that the neglect of this duty is a deplorable feature in the character of those professors of religion who are guilty of it, calling for the earnest labors of pastors and ministers to correct the evil.

5th. Resolved, That this Association deprecate the unchristian and anti-republican principles which have thrust this nation into a war with Mexico, and that we deeply deplore the principles and evils of war, and the increase of slave influence.

These resolutions were severally sustained by able speeches from their movers and seconders. The fourth resolution was also spoken to with much effect by several others, among whom were the venerable Dea. William Stillman, A. B. Burdick, D. Clawson, and W. B. Gillett. The influence of this discussion, if the heads of families and the young people present particularly, remain steadfast in the resolutions they must have formed, can not fail to be of lasting benefit to themselves and to the church.

A sixth resolution was reported by the Committee, and moved by Paul Stillman, seconded by David Dunn, as follows:

Resolved, That in view of the evils arising among brethren from the formation of secret combinations, we earnestly recommend to the churches composing this body, that they withhold their aid or fellowship from all secret societies.

This brought out a very animated discussion, in which the following brethren took part: Paul Stillman, L. Crandall, P. L. Berry, B. F. Langworthy, and others, affirmatively; E. B. Titsworth, S. Dunham, and D. Clawson, negatively; and I. More, enquiringly. The brethren in the negative complaining that the tendencies of the societies to which they belonged had been misrepresented, and the Association wishing to give them all the opportunity desirable to defend the societies, a motion prevailed nem. con. to lay the resolution on the table—the Association not having more time then to devote to its consideration—and subsequently, no time being left before the adjournment for its consideration, on motion, it was ordered to be stricken from the minutes.

A resolution from the Committee fixing a time for the primary and first semi-annual meeting of the Executive Committee, was also passed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Executive Committee of this Association meet at this house on first-day next, (23d inst.,) at 9 o'clock A. M., to carry into effect the resolutions of this Association and to consider such other business as may come before them; and that it hold its first semi-annual meeting at Pawcatuck, R. I., on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in November next ensuing.

Resolutions fixing the time and place for the next annual session were passed—the next Anniversary to be at Plainfield, N. J., on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1848. T. B. Brown to preach the Introductory Discourse; A. B. Burdick, alternate.

David Clawson and S. S. Griswold were appointed Messengers to visit the churches. Paul Stillman was appointed delegate to the Tract Anniversary.

The Chairman of the Business Committee laid before the Association a letter which he had received at a late hour from the Principals of the DeRuyter Institute, designed to call out some action on the part of the Association in regard to education. The letter, on motion, was read, and ordered to be favorably noticed in the minutes. A proposition contained in the letter, offering to give the benefits of the Institution gratuitously every third term to charitable students, was well received, and on motion of L. Crandall, it was—

Resolved, That this Association receive thankfully the proposition of the Principals of the DeRuyter Institute, and recommend that the friends of education avail themselves of the favorable opportunity it affords them to promote the education of the young.

Eighteen dollars were contributed for printing the Minutes, and after the usual vote for the Secretaries to superintend the printing, &c., the Association adjourned.

On Sabbath morning, a Missionary Discourse was preached by Bro. T. B. Brown, from Mark 16: 15, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" after which a collection of $41 97 was taken in aid of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association for the Foreign Mission. On first-day morning, a discourse was preached by Bro. Isaac More, from John 10: 27, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me;" after which a collection of $21 07 was taken in aid of the American Sabbath Tract Society.

All the meetings during the Anniversary were numerously attended, and calculated to be very happy in their effect. P.

From Burmah.—A letter dated at Maulmain, Feb. 20, 1847, and published in the N. Y. Recorder, says that Dr. Judson has removed to Rangoon. But there is at that place no opening for missionary work, the present king being a bigoted Boodhist, who goes so far even as to himself submit to the menial work of pounding rice to feed the priests, as an example to his people. The ruling power at Rangoon is glad to have Dr. J. reside there as a minister to the English, and has offered to build him a church for that purpose, but will admit of no proselyting. However, Dr. J. has hopes of doing good in a quiet way, by oral instruction, to such as may gain access to him, and in the mean time prosecute his work in preparing the dictionary for the press.

The same letter gives an account of a fire at Maulmain, supposed to be the work of an incendiary, by which the house of Mr. Stevens, with all its contents, was destroyed. Mr. Brayton, who was about to start for America, was stopping at the house, and lost all his outfit for the voyage. The most valuable goods of Mr. Bullard, and two boxes of valuables belonging to Mr. Judson, were also deposited in the house, and were lost. The Mission Library, the records of the Burman church, the communion service, &c., met the same fate.

GERMAN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

Snowhill, Franklin Co., Pa., 28th of 5th mo., 1857.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The German Seventh-day Baptist brethren having appointed a general meeting of their order at this time and place, and having kindly extended an invitation to me, I was permitted, in the favors of a kind Providence, to arrive last evening, and find them enjoying their usual health and other mercies of the Lord; and, notwithstanding the persecutions they endure at the hands of unjust men, who are encouraged by the sanction of unjust and unconstitutional laws, they are unwavering in their attachment to and defense of God's holy law. Their case is before the Supreme Court of the State, and is expected to come up during the present session, at Harrisburg, on the 10th of next month; in view of this case, they and we request prayer for the direction and interposition of Jehovah the God of nations, and Jesus Christ who has all power in heaven and earth. It may be interesting to the world, and is certainly so to us, to know that even while this matter is pending, other prosecutions are commenced in this and another part of the denomination and of the State. On the 7th day of the 3d month, two others of this settlement were complained of and fined. One of them being a poor man, upwards of three score years and ten, and without property to pay the fine or be levied upon, was, acccording to the law of this State, to be imprisoned, to suffer which he was prepared in heart and mind. But as this would not satisfy the cupidity of his persecutors, he has not been since disturbed, and is therefore yet with his brethren here. Bro. King and others of Morrison's Cove, being now here, inform me that six of their number were complained of on the 10th inst., and brought into court on the 17th, among whom was one sister. On account of some informalities in the summons, they may probably escape this time, and live to testify for God and their Saviour at another time. I will write again in a few days, God willing,

Yours &c., Samuel Davidson.

Revival in South Kingston, R. I.—We are informed of a refreshing revival of religion in the first-day Baptist church in Perryville, South Kingston, R. I., under the faithful labor of Eld. C. Chester, of the First Hopkinton Seventh-day Baptist Church. Bro. Chester's labors there some four years since resulted in a revival, and in the organization of the church at that place, with forty members, nearly one-half of whom were received by baptism; since which they have had no revival until the effort made by Bro. Chester in February and March last, when his labors were again blessed with the outpouring of God's Spirit in the awakening of the church, and in the conversion of sinners. Bro. C. baptized twenty-five before he left. Seven have since been baptized, and others are expected to go forward soon. What may be regarded as evidence of its being a good work, is the fact that the law of the Lord has not been overlooked. The Sabbath question, therefore, has occupied much attention, and one of their deacons and his family have declared for the Lord's Sabbath while others are thought to be ready to follow their example.

Christianity in Jerusalem.—A letter from Jerusalem says:—"The Jews in this city are greatly alarmed at the progress of Christianity, which is secretly spreading amongst them, almost from house to house; they therefore use all the means in their power to stop it. Secret tribunals are formed, whose business it is to search after those who read Christian books, or who visit our houses. Not satisfied with that, they have recently issued two excommunications against the missionaries, against the hospital, and against all who are in connection with us."

An Ancient Custom.—Graham's Colonial History of the United States, says that at Boston, in 1637, it was the custom of every congregation to hold weekly meetings for the purpose of re-considering the sermons of the preceding Sunday—to discuss their doctrinal instructions, and to revive and extend the impressions they had produced.

* Mrs. Somerville, in her work on the Physical Sciences, says, "The period of seven days, by far the most permanent division of time, and the most ancient monument of astronomical knowledge, was used by the Brahims, in India, with the same denominations employed by us, and was alike found in the calender of the Jews, Egyptians, Arabs, and Assyrians. It has survived the fall of empires, and has existed among all successive generations, a proof of their common origin."

General Intelligence.

WAR NEWS.

Nothing very definite or important has been heard from the seat of war for a week past. At the last accounts, Gen. Scott was contemplating a march to the city of Mexico, but was embarrassed by the diminishing of his army from the returning of volunteers whose terms of service have expired. Santa Anna's whereabouts was not known.

Latest accounts from the capital are to the 1st of May. Martial law existed there. Peace was denounced, and the citizens were moving off, anticipating the assault of our army. The vicinity of the city of Mexico was infested by robbers.

A party of eleven dragoons, encamped at Santa Fe, near Vera Cruz, were attacked by guerrilleros. The dragoons were all sleeping but the sentinel. His gun missed fire, and before he could give the alarm he was cut down. The Mexicans then rushed on the dragoons just as they were arousing. A severe conflict ensued. Seven of the dragoons were killed. All the rest but one were wounded. When the tidings reached Vera Cruz, a detachment of Capt. Walker's rifles were sent out in pursuit.

The Matamoros Flag of May 8 gives the following intelligence: "General Cushing met with an accident of a very serious nature on Thursday evening, which, we are sorry to hear, is likely to prevent his moving about for some time. Accompanied by a lady, he was taking a walk through the streets after night-fall, and in going out of the Plaza at the south-east corner, where the street is fortified so as to leave only a foot-path not exceeding two feet wide for egress, he placed his foot upon a loose brick, which gave way, and precipitated him into the ditch, breaking the bone of his leg, just above the ankle. He was taken to his quarters immediately, and Dr. McPhail called to his assistance, from whose surgical skill expectations are created that the broken bones may be speedily healed.

The Season and Crops.—The backwardness of the season is the source of universal remark in New England. Farther south and west less complaint is made. The crop of wheat in Ohio and Maryland promises a full average, while the editor of the United States Gazette, who has been traveling in the interior of Pennsylvania, estimates the wheat crop of that State only one-fourth of the usual average. In this vicinity, corn is but out of the ground. The Newburyport Herald has the following upon the appearance of vegetation in that vicinity:—

The spring continues rather backward, but a few moist and warm days would bring it up very fast. The cherry and peach trees have been in full bloom for two or three days past, and the pears and plumbs begin to unfold, but the apples show no immedite signs of blooming. The latest period at which the apple trees have been in full bloom, within our recollection, was on the 1st day of June, which occurred in 1835 or 1836, we are not certain which. The peach trees in gardens in town, as far as we have observed, are uniformly dead, except at the tops; the tops look bright and thrifty, but another winter will probably finish almost every peach tree now standing, which is more than three years old. The prospect of a good crop of fruit, as is usual in backward seasons, is very good. One year ago this morning ice made in the gardens, and cut off the crop of fruit on a great many trees. We had trees then on which the young pears were formed as big as large beans, which were uninjured by the frost, but on other trees of apples, pears, and cherries, just casting off the bloom, the fruit was nearly all, and on some entirely, lost.

Notorious Robber Discovered.—"Thunderbolt," the celebrated English robber, who has a number of years past successfully eluded all search, died a few days since at Brattleboro', Vt., where he had resided for a number of years, and enjoyed much celebrity as a physician, entirely unsuspected, but much respected. The Barre Patriot gives the following account of the discovery of who he really was:—

"During his last illness he refused to be undressed, and when near his end, hired two men to bury him in his clothes, just as he died, a contract which was not fulfilled on their part, in consequence of the neighbors, who were desirous of giving his remains a more decent and befitting burial. On removing his clothes, previous to his being laid out, the cause of this eccentric desire of his was manifest—the withered leg and cork heel, the shot marks, and the sear which witnessed a previous attempt at suicide—precisely as laid down in Lightfoot's description of him—mark him as the Thunderbolt who had gained such notoriety in England and this country, as one of the most daring and successful highwaymen that ever graced the annals of crime.

"On his person were also found a dirk and pistol, and among his effects, arms of all descriptions, together with watches, diamonds, jewelry, &c., &c., to an enormous value, packed away in sawdust. He always went dressed in three suits of clothes, to make his figure more portly, and to prevent recognition, and his withered leg was found wound with cloths, to make it appear the size of the other."

Shocking Accident.—On the 13th inst. Mr. Charles Gackenback, a very respectable citizen or Upper Macungry township, Lehigh county, came to his death in a most shocking manner. He left home in the morning, with a four-horse team, and came to Allentown, for the purpose of procuring some building timber. Having loaded his wagon, he started for home. When about half a mile from town, while descending Griesemer's Hill, the gearing of his long-coupled wagon caused the lock to fly out of the notches. He immediately ran back, and a second time drew up the lock, with all his strength; by this time the heavy load of the wagon had pressed so hard against the horses that they took fright, the bar block flew out, and off they ran at full speed. Before the horses broke into a full run, however, he succeeded in seizing the saddle horse by the bridle, in which act he is supposed to have become entangled in the check-line, thrown upon the ground, and after being dragged more than a perch, finally run over by two wheels of the wagon. The wheels passed from behind his ears to his forehead, completely severing his skull from his head, and causing instant death. He was a sober and industrious citizen, respected by all who knew him. He leaves a family of four small children, and a bereaved widow, to mourn an irreparable loss. His age is said to be about thirty-six years.

Hostile Indians—Trouble Ahead.—The St. Louis Reveille, of May 19, says that we learn from the gentlemanly clerk of the John T. Harden, that parties of the Camanche and Pawnee Indians had come in from the plains to Caw River, for the purpose of holding a Council with the border tribes. Their object is to unite the Caws, Kansas, Delawares, Sacs, Sioux and other immediate tribes together, for the purpose of plundering the United States trains and emigrating parties crossing the prairies. They have in every way manifested the most open and bitter hostility; and trains, unless well guarded, will most certainly be robbed, and their drivers be murdered. When Captain Cook and Acting-Quartermaster Prince heard of this Council, they started with a company of dragoons to ascertain its object, but the Indians, hearing of their approach, broke up their encampment and fled. Capt. C. sent them word that he would give them a fortnight to bring in the articles they had stolen from our from our trains, and if they failed to account for them, he would attack the tribes wherever he could find them. The measles have been spreading terribly among the Camanches and Pawnees, carrying off nearly all of their children. It has assumed a very virulent and fatal character among them. They first charged it upon the Mexicans, from whom it undoubtedly came, but the latter succeeded in persuading the Indians that the Americans had spread it among the tribes for the purpose of destroying them, and hence arises their increased hostility to our countrymen.

Sufferings of the Mormons in California.—The St. Louis Republican, of May 19, says that in looking over a file of the Californian, brought to this city by the party of gentlemen who recently arrived from that quarter, we met with the following account of the condition of a party of Mormons, who were emigrating from this section of the country to California. We copy from a paper of the 13th of February:—

The brig Francisca, three days from Yerba Buena, brings news of the extreme suffering of a party of emigrants who were left on the other side of the California mountain, about sixty in all, nineteen of whom started to come into the valley. Seven only have arrived, the remainder died, and the survivors were kept alive by eating the dead bodies. Among the survivors are two young girls. A public meeting was held at Yerba Buena, and about eight hundred dollars raised for the relief of the sufferers who still remain in the mountain. Messrs. Ward and Smith kindly offered the use of their launch, and a party, under the direction of Passed Midshipman Woodworth, have left, with the intention of disembarking at the foot of the mountain, and then going on foot, with packs of provisions. It is to be hoped they will succeed in reaching them with sufficient provisions to get them in. Such a state of things will probably never again occur, from the fact that the road is now better known, and the emigrants will hereafter start and travel so as to cross the mountain by the 1st of October.

From the River La Plata.—By the bark Wm. Schroder, at Salem, from Montevideo, letters have been received to April 13, and from Buenos Ayres to the 5th. The blockade of Buenos Ayres by the English and French squadrons continued, but all active operations against the Argentine Government had ceased. The country was quiet in possession of the troops under President Oribe. The inhabitants of Montevideo were daily expecting the arrival of the English and French Envoys sent out to supersede Ousley and Deffaudis, when it was thought that President Oribe would assume the Government with their consent. In anticipation of this event, the most influential of the opponents to President Oribe had taken measures to promptly remove with their property to Brazil. All provisions were very dear, and fresh beef was only received from the Rio Grande. [Jour. Com.

Late from Rio Janeiro.—The brig Orbit, Captain Higgins, arrived here on the 23d ult., from Rio Janeiro, which port she left on the 19th of April. Capt. H. informs us that the whale-ship Sarah Esther, from Norfolk for the Pacific Ocean, had been seized by the Brazilian Government, who were discharging her cargo. The cause of her seizure was that she put into Rio Grande and sold a little oil to pay charges incurred. The U. S. store-ship Southampton, from Norfolk, had arrived, all well, and was to sail the next day for California. The U. S. ship Columbia, Com. Rosseau, was in port—all well. The U. S. brig Brainbridge, Captain Williamson, sailed on the 17th of April on a cruise. No news at Rio. [Jour. Com.

From Bermuda.—We have our dates to the 5th of May. The Royal Gazette of the 4th, says of the potato crop, that—"It is a most gratifying circumstance to be able now to observe, that we have not up to the present period heard of one instance where the rot has attacked the potatoes in these Islands this year. In the early part of the season some apprehension was entertained that the plague had reäppeared, but such proved not to be the case. The potatoes now gathering, though excellent, are not so numerous or as large as usual—this may be attributed to the want of seasonable weather soon after planting. The quantity of seed planted this season was less than it would have been, had not the rot attacked the potato the past year. It is to be hoped the crop, in other quarters of the world, will prove as sound as the Bermuda crop.

Elijah Burbank, aged 85, died at the residence of his son, Col. Burbank, in William-st., Brooklyn. At the early age of sixteen he served in the war of the Revolution, and fought bravely with many others in "the days which tried men's souls." He was highly respected by all who knew him, and leaves a large circle of relatives and friends to lament his death. They are fast passing away, those brave old patriots. In a few years more they will all be gathered to the "homes of their fathers."

Fire and Distressing Loss of Life.—On the night of the 22d ult., the house of Mr. Stephen Ingram, near Lancaster, Schuyler county, in one of the south-western States, was discovered to be on fire. The alarm was given by Mrs. Ingram; and the husband, upon awakening, found that two sides of the house, including the door and every thing contiguous to it, were in flames. The only alternative to escape was through the roof, (the house was a small cabin,) and they agreed that Mr. Ingram should open a hole and jump out, and that the wife should hand out the children, six in number. But, as soon as air was given, the whole house was enveloped in the flames, which rushed out at the opening which he had made. Only one scream was heard, which was when the mother roused the children from their sleep. Mr. I. instantly burst open the door, but was unable to render any assistance to the unfortunate inmates. He could only look in and see that they had all sunk together, under their mother's outstretched arms. The fire is supposed to have communicated to some shavings from ashes which were thrown under the house. A more distressing calamity has rarely been witnessed.

Fraud upon Immigrants.—The Philadelphia Ledger narrates the following case of fraud which took place in this city:—

A very interesting family from Germany was defrauded by an individual in New York, who obtained some seven or eight dollars in payment of passage from this city to Baltimore, giving them a receipt for the amount, which purported to be good for the fare, and was taken as such by them in good faith. On presenting this ticket or receipt at the office of the Baltimore Company, it was utterly unavailable, the transaction being a fraud, as the Company have no agent there, nor any connection or interest with individuals or companies, in receiving fare for continuous travel or transportation. The family had expended nearly all their means, and, upon learning that they had been cheated, the husband, wife, and children were thrown into the greatest possible distress.

Dreadful Tragedy.—The Liberty (Mo.) Tribune gives the particulars of a suicide committed by Mr. N. Summers, of that town, on the 8th inst., which was effected by an explosion of gunpowder. Mr. Summers' store was a large two story frame building, aud was exceedingly shattered by the explosion. Mr. Summers lived till the next day, acknowledging that he fired the powder. The stock of goods were but little damged; and have been removed to another building. They have been placed in the hands of M. Miller, G. L. Huges, and E. M. Samuels, Esqrs., who will liquidate his affairs as the means will allow. The desk in which the money was kept was blown into atoms, and the money scattered far and wide. Mr. Summers thinks there was about $416 on hand; $211 was found.

Another Desperate Assault.—A French pedlar, named Manuel Felt, who resides at 223 South Third-st., in the village of Williamsburgh, was struck in the head with a brickback by a negro, on Saturday morning, in Concord-st., near Adams. It appears that he had visited him to collect a debt. Some misunderstanding occurred, when the negro was joined by an associate, and they both threw him out of the house. He was then struck with a brick by Benjamin Baily, the first-mentioned, and prostrated upon the pavement. He was immediately taken into a druggist's shop near at hand, where his wound was dressed. He is very severely injured, and may, perhaps, never recover. The negroes have not yet been arrested.

SUMMARY.

The Boston Courier says that a meeting of Machinists was held at Faneuil Hall on Thursday evening, the 20th ult., for the purpose of establishing the ten hour system of labor in the machine shops and foundries of Boston, and vicinity. The assembly was not very large, and those present were apparently unprepared to take any conclusive step in the matter, or were indecisive as to the most proper method of obtaining their object. No definite project was acted upon. Some of the speakers acquitted themselves well, and although their language was very plain upon the subject of difference between themselves and their employers, no harsh or disrespectful language, so far as we heard, was used while speaking of the latter.

The barque Bachelor sailed from Richmond, Virginia, a short time since, laden with provisions, clothing, &c., for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland. The cargo is valued at about fifteen thousand dollars, and consists of the following articles, viz: 2,434 barrels and 150 bags corn meal, 242 barrels corn, 52 barrels flour, 2 hogsheads and five barrels bacon, 19 boxes and two bales clothing, and one barrel rice. Another vessel is to be dispatched from the same port next month on a similar mission.

Breadstuffs appear to be scarce in all quarters. The St. John (N. B.) Courier of the 16th, states that "good American flour is held at eleven dollars per barrel in St. John, owing to the scarcity of the market—the prevalence of easterly winds having delayed the arrival of vessels from the United States, and the orders from the upper part of the Province on the opening of the river navigation, creating a large demand upon the small stocks of breadstuffs held by our dealers."

We perceive by the cataloguo just published, that there are connected with the Harvard University, graduates—28 theological students, 102 law students, 164 students attending medical lectures, and 9 resident graduates; undergraduates—72 seniors, 57 juniors, 82 sophomores, 66 freshmen, and 5 university students; making 303 graduates, and 272 under-graduates; total, 575.

The brig Lima, Capt. Higgins, cleared at New Orleans on the 9th inst., for Cork, with a relief cargo valued at $14,000. This is the second vessel dispatched by the New Orleans committee, exclusive of $15,000 remitted to our minister at London for the same object.

The Mexican accounts of the battle of Cerro Gordo say that Santa Anna sustained himself with 6,000 against 14,000, and finally being entirely surrounded, cut his way through the Yankees with a column of the fourth infantry.

More than three-quarters of the excavation for the aqueduct, from Long Pond to Brookline, is completed; and the laying of the brick aqueduct is begun on several parts of the line. Three parties are now engaged in laying the iron pipes for the distribution of the water in the city, and the pipes are already laid through several streets. Preparations are in progress for the commencement of the reservoirs, and all the important works.

The colored population of New London Co., Conn., assembled on the 11th inst., at the usual place of holding their annual election of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, at a tavern on the road leading from Norwich to New London. Here they were assaulted by a gang of rowdies from Norwich, who put the entire negro collection to rout, breaking up the meeting, and attacking every thing that came in their way.

In the year 1272, the wages of a laboring man were just three half pence per day; and at the same period, the price of a Bible well written out was £30 sterling. Of course a common laborer, in those days, could not have procured a Bible with less than the entire earnings of thirteen years! Now, a beautifully printed copy of the same book can be purchased with the earnings of half a day!

The Binghampton papers state that Mr. Kiddy, of Ithaca, has purchased the right to construct a Telegraph from Ithaca to Binghampton, and is at present engaged in obtaining stock subscriptions in Ithaca to further the enterprise.

The Havana correspondent of the Schnellpost says that a United States ship with troops for Mexico that came into that port, reported its cargo at the Custom House as "400 heroes." "Happily," adds the writer, "these wares were in transitu, and not designed for our consumption."

A son of the late Fakir of Ava has recently made his appearance in Philadelphia as a juggler, and it is said that he is not a whit inferior to his father, who was one of the most successful of his class that we have ever seen.

The Queen of starving England is allowed for her support, $1,700,000; for Prince Albert, her husband, $133,000; and for her horses and hounds, $310,000—making in all $2,193,000.

The durability of oak may be known from the fact that the throne of Edward the Confessor is 800 years old; and the oldest wooden bridge of which we have any account is of oak—and which existed 400 years before Christ.

The noble steamship Washington, of 2000 tons burden, the first of the U. S. Mail Line to England and Germany, made her trial trip last week, and proved equal to the highest expectations. She started from New York on her first voyage on Tuesday last.

Thirteen fugitives, says the Cleavland American, arrived here three or four days since, and immediately found means of embarking for Canada. They were from Virginia, and we suppose are running away from "contentment and happiness."

The most frightful mortality prevails in the Canton of Grisons. There is scarcely a humble dwelling in the Canton, a physician writes, in which fever, dysentery, and death, have not entered. Graves cannot be prepared sufficient to inter the dead.

Universal love is like a glove without fingers, which fits all hands alike, and none closely; but true affection is like a glove with fingers, which fits one hand only, and sits close on that one.

A discontented man, who was in the habit of telling his second spouse of the good qualities of her predecessor, was at length silenced by the retort, "I'm sure nobody regrets her death more than I do."

Five children, two boys and three girls, aged from 8 to 15, have been arrested in Boston for stealing furniture and opening an untenanted house on their own hook.

The Builder says that to put on the silver edging to muslin, which is always torn off and thrown away before converting the material to use, costs the people of England £20,000 a year.

DIED,

In Alfred, N. Y., August 25, 1825, Col. Nathan Potter, in the 57th year of his age. Also, in Alfred, May 22, 1847, Lucy Potter, in the 73d year of her age.

The subjects of the above obituary removed from Hopkinton, R. I., in the early settlement of this country, and united with the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in this place. Although Bro. Potter was soon removed by death, yet he was permitted to remain long enough to endear himself to his brethren in Christ on account of his truly Christian character. Sister Potter was also one of those whose motto was, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain;" and in every situation, and under all circumstances, she showed herself worthy of the love and respect she so largely shared. ALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

Miscellaneous.

THE REFORMER.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Happy he whose inward ear
Angel-comfortings can hear,
O'er the rabble's laughter;
And, while Hatred's fagots burn,
Glimpses through the smoke discern
Of the good hereafter.

Knowing this, that never yet
Share of Truth was vainly set
In the world's wide fallow;
After hands shall sow the seed,
After hands from hill and mead,
Reap the harvest yellow.

Thus, with somewhat of the Seer,
Must the mortal pioneer
From the future borrow;
Clothe the waste with dreams of grain,
And on midnight's sky of rain,
Paint the golden morrow!

A PRAYER FOR YOUTH.

"My Father, thou art the Guide of my youth."

Almighty Father, I am weak,
But thou wilt strengthen me,
If, from my heart I humble seek
For help and light from thee.

When I am tempted to do wrong,
Then, Father, pity me,
And make my failing virtue strong—
Help me to think of thee.

Let Christian courage guard my youth,
That courage give to me,
Which ever speaks and acts the truth,
And puts its trust in thee.

THE CHILDLESS MOTHER.

BY J. E. SNODGRASS.

After practicing my profession for a year or two in Virginia, amid the scenes of my boyhood's mountain-circled home, I removed to Williamsport, a quiet little village on the Maryland side of the romantic Potomac. During my residence in the latter place, an incident occurred, the result of which will, perhaps, serve a useful purpose, while furnishing, as I have been requested to do, "a page for the Liberty Bell."

At the dawn of day in early spring, I was started from slumbers rendered, perhaps, unusually profound by the labors of the previous day. The cause was a scream which violently cleft the cold air with its piercing agony. I instantly sprang to my feet, only to have my ears saluted by shrieks still more startling. So loud had the voice now become, that it seemed to startle from the bosom of the quiet river echoes, such as perhaps had never been heard since the days when its glassy tide used to reflect the war-hoop of the Indian, and the scream of the panther.

The voice could readily be distinguished as a female, though coarse and harsh in its tones. It soon ceased, however, as if stifled by the very intensity of the agony it had expressed. On subsequent inquiry of a servant, I obtained the following solution of the soul-troubling mystery.

In a hut a square or two distant, had lived, for some time, a colored woman, the mother of two children, whose wants she had supplied with the labor of her own hands. She had regarded herself as a 'free woman'—free as the air of the surrounding hills—and she was so regarded by all who knew her. But she had no 'free papers,' having omitted to secure them, it was said, through over-confidence in the source from which she had received a verbal pledge of freedom. Fatal omission, too frequently made by the virtually freed!

Little did that sable woman dream, amid the quiet darkness which enwrapped her toil-worn frame in unconsciousness, that a still harder lot—O, how hard a one—was so near its awaiting! She was aroused at early dawn by a rap at her humble door. She responded to the signal, and bade the visitants enter. They did so; but for what purpose, suppose you, reader? To talk of work to be done by those who are glad to 'ask leave to toil,' or utter other words of cheer? No—alas! No. Far different the errand on which they came. One of them claimed her as his 'chattel,' and ordered her to be seized as his slave. It was done, and she was conveyed with her oldest child to the county jail, some six miles distant, there to await the highest bidder for the blood and bones of his fellow men!

"Was it the fact of being sold in Georgia that caused those unearthly shrieks?" you ask. "Is that not a common thing in Maryland?"

It is far too common, I answer with shame; but it was not that which caused such intense agony. The cause was far worse even than that. I will tell.

Nestling warm in that mother's bosom through that sadly terminated night, had lain a babe but a few weeks old—a babe which, though colored it was, and doomed to become as deep-hued as its sable mother, was her baby still, with all the tender and helpless ways of a baby—and that mother loved it as fondly as the fairest skinned mother of this land could love her own. But it was deemed an incumbrance to its mother in the slave mart. So they tore it rudely from her bosom! It was that which caused the shriek of agonized affection—the speechless utterance of a bereaved and tortured soul! Yes, they tore that tender child from its mother, and she became the inmate of a gloomy prison!

"For what cause?" you ask. "Had the woman committed any crime?"

Not the least possible crime was she guilty of, except it really be a crime to wear a black skin. But she was a slave, at least she was claimed as such. Besides you see they only transferred her from one prison to another; for what is slavery but imprisonment? In fact, it is generally imprisonment of the worst kind—imprisonment for life.

"What became of the babe?" some anxious mother impatiently asks.

I cannot answer further than that it was left with a colored woman, who promised its mother to take care of it. This, it is probable, she was allowed to do until it was old enough for the southern market.

Mothers of the land—ye who have borne children, and felt the feeble pulsations of their little hearts respond to your own—know you not how to commiserate that cruelly bereft mother? I trust that you do. Then plead earnestly for the cause of the slave! Strengthen the hands of your husbands, and fathers, and brothers, amid their stern conflict with the giant Wrong—amid their self-denials and their sufferings—in the face of private malice and public storm! Woman can do much, if faithful to her mission—so much that with the coöperation of the wives, and mothers, and daughters of our guilty land, the "Liberty Bell" would soon cease to send forth such heart-rending tones as the shrieks of the Childless Mother.

MEXICO.

As the eyes of the nation are now turned to the army movements in Mexico, all that relates to that country will be read with interest. The road from Vera Cruz to Mexico, along which the army of the United States is now progressing, is said to be excellent. Gen. Waddy Thompson, in his volumes upon Mexico, says of it:—

A line of stages built in Troy, N. Y., and driven by New York 'boys,' leaves Vera Cruz every night, and drives for twenty miles along a good road on the beach; it then commences the ascent of the mountain, the road being for fifty miles an excellent one to Jalapa, 4,000 feet above the level of the sea, and seventy miles from Vera Cruz. For the whole seventy miles this road runs through the lands of Santa Anna, who owns from 40 to 50,000 head of cattle that graze upon it. From Jalapa, the road leads 35 miles in an ascent of 4,500 feet to Perote. Leaving Perote, the stages travel 80 miles over a broad fertile plain, covered with farms, to Puebla; and the road continues to Mexico itself. The stage which leaves Vera Cruz at 11 o'clock at night, reaches Jalapa at 3 o'clock next day. Nothing can prevent the advance of the army to that point, which it may hold the year round, and by so doing, effectually hold Vera Cruz without having a reserve in the latter place.

THE GREAT CITY.

Mexico, the capital, for richness and grandeur has no parallel in the New World and very few in the Old. Its situation is the most picturesque imaginable, occupying the bottom of a valley containing sixteen hundred square miles, the whole surrounded by a battlement of mountains ranging from two to ten thousand feet in height. In the centre of this vast oval basin is a lake, or rather a chain of lakes, through the midst of which the road now passes for about eighteen miles, on a raised causeway, and over which an army will have to feel its way with artillery. The city stands in the north-eastern quarter of the valley, not more than three miles from the mountains, at an elevation of seven thousand four hundred and seventy feet. The plan of the city was laid out and the greater portion of its public buildings designed by Cortes. The principal square is the pride of the Mexicans and the admiration of travelers. It has an area of twelve acres—the whole paved with the most beautiful marble, and forming one of the most glorious parade grounds that American soldiers were ever summoned to manœuvre or encamp on. But it is the public buildings after all, that form the distinguished characteristic of this majestic and opulent city. The Cathedral fills one whole side of the great square, the Palace another, and the sites of both are memorable and historical, the Cathedral standing on the ground where once stood the great idol temple, and the Palace on the ground of the Montezuma. The latter building is 500 feet long, and contains the public offices, besides the apartments of the President. The Cathedral is of a striking Gothic architecture, and after all the pressures and plunderings of these latter days, still retains immense wealth. The high altar is covered with plates of silver, interspersed with ornaments of massive gold. This altar is enclosed with a balustrade a hundred feet long, not less precious than the high altar itself. It is composed of an amalgam of gold, silver, and copper, richly flourished and figured. It is said that an offer had been made to purchase it at its weight in silver, giving a half million of dollars besides. Of this balustrade there are not less in the building than 300 feet. Statues, vases, and huge candlesticks of the precious metals, meet the eye everywhere; and yet it is said that the still more precious portion of the treasure is hidden from the popular eye. Such is a brief description of the city of Mexico.

AN ABYSSYNIAN CHURCH FESTIVAL.

Early on the 14th of November, accompanied by Lik Atkum and Getana Mariam I rode to Koskam, in order to be present at the festival in memory of Christ's return from Egypt, which is celebrated with peculiar solemnity in the church at that place. Numerous groups of people, some on foot, others mounted on mules, but all with clean clothes, were proceeding along the road from Gondar to Koskam; and when we arrived there we found the church already so crowded that it was only through the influence of Lik Atkum that we obtained a place, which, as it was close to the ark, enabled us to take a share in the festival. Outside the church were stretched awnings, with blue, white, and red stripes, a foot in breadth, in order to screen the crowd from the sun. The attention of those present was directed to a group of priests in the foreground, who, with a fearful howl, which in this country is called singing, convulsively moved their bodies and sprang up by turns wildly in the air. This dance was intended to glorify the Deity. Each priest had in one hand an Egyptian rattle, in the other a long staff resembling a crutch, and most of them had also a book, containing the text of the hymns. The rattle is shaped like a two-pronged fork, which is closed at the top by a small cross stick; and on it are fixed several metal rings, which, when shaken, serve by their rattling noise, to beat time to the singing and dancing priests. In the midst of these contortion-making priests, one sat on the ground and beat a large Turkish drum, made of silver plates. After this religious diversion had lasted some time all the priests formed a procession within the church, round the sanctuary containing the ark. Two of them wore on their heads very large semi-spherical helmets of gold plates, richly embossed. These are the two crowns which the Emperor Joas, and his father, the Emperor Jasu, wore during great solemnities, and which were presented to the church of Koskam by Jasu's mother, Itegeh Mantouab. Some of the priests wore a kind of chasuble of brocade, which was very thread-bare; others carried staffs with large Greek crosses of bronze, and over the superior was carried a large blue satin canopy, fringed with gold. The whole solemnity was disorderly, and excited, at least in me, rather an inclination to laughter than any religious feeling. [Reise in Abyssinien, von Dr. Ruppell.

THE HEBREW RACE.

No one can visit Dantzic without being struck with the vast number of that excommunicated race, the Jews; as to whom the divine prediction has been so signally accomplished. They positively swarm in this place, and come forth in clusters at the hour when the exchange opens and "monish" transactions commence. Their dress is peculiar; they wear broad hats, larger than those of the "Society of Friends;" long "robes," or black gowns, tied round the waist with a sash; have long beards, and long walking-sticks; and their chattering on the exchange was quite deafening. It is impossible, however, to touch upon this class of our fellow-creatures, without offering some observations of a serious nature. Singular as they appear in our eyes, yet they unquestionably have some claim on the attention of Christians. Although many ages have elapsed during which they have been "without a king, a prince, and a sacrifice;" and notwithstanding they have always been a scattered race, "dispersed through many countries," and hooted at, yet they continue, as originally, a separate body, different from all other people. Their fall and most degraded state afford the most powerful confirmation of the truth of God's word, being a visible punishment for their rejection of the Lord of glory—that only name under heaven by which men can possibly be saved from that wrath which has been denounced against sin and iniquity.

Catching a Runaway.—Not long since, as an omnibus from Ellicott's Mills, was coming to the city, the driver, soon after starting on his trip, observed a colored man with a bundle over his shoulder, upon the road, and acting in a manner calculated to excite his suspicions; on coming up with him, the omnibus was stopped and the compliments of the day interchanged; upon inquiry, however, relative to the freedom of the colored man, his answers were so vague and unsatisfactory that the driver was soon convinced that he was a runaway, and accordingly took him up on the seat, in spite of some remonstrances on the part of the negro against the operation. Upon arriving in the city, the prize was taken to the office of Justice Wright, when suddenly the negro proved to be quite a smart, intelligent chap; produced his free papers on the first suggestion, named a number of gentlemen in the city, who he alledged knew him well, said he had been out to the Mills to see his friends, and was really very much obliged to the gentleman of the omnibus for his ride home. But the omnibus was not to be thrown off so, and accordingly demanded his three levies. "No, no," said the negro, "you made me ride for your gratification, and I shall refuse to pay for my own." The case was a plain one, and the omnibus backed out, a little the worse for the enterprise. [Balt. Sun.

The Ancient Tusculans.—The Tusculans opposed the Roman arms by a method so entirely new, that it made it impossible to commit hostilities against them. When the troops entered their country, the inhabitants neither abandoned their places in the line of their march, nor desisted from cultivating their lands. A great number of citizens, dressed as in the time of peace, came out to meet the generals. Camillus, having encamped before the gates, which were open, and desiring to know whether the same tranquility prevailed within the walls as he had found in the country, entered the city. All the houses and shops were open, and all the artificers were intent upon their trades; the schools resounded with the voices of the children at their books; the streets were full of people going backwards and forwards upon business, without any sign of terror or amazement, and not the least trace of war. Every thing was tranquil and pacific. Camillus, surprised at such a sight, and overcome by the enemy's patience, caused the assembly to be summoned by the magistrates. "Tusculans," said he, "you are the only people who till now have found the true arms and forces capable of securing them against the anger of the Romans."

A Spirited Irish Lass.—A whimsical incident happened on board one of the emigrant ships lying at the Custom-house Quay, Dublin. Among the passengers were a strapping country girl and her sweetheart, who intended to be married on the other side of the Atlantic. The fair emigree had a little fortune of £200, which she had discreetly placed in the hands of the captain. She had hardly done so, when her intended asked her for some it, and on her refusal, coolly bade her good morning, and disembarked. The deserted damsel rushed to the side of the vessel, but instead of throwing herself overboard, she addressed the crowd on the quay, telling her story, and finished by offering herself on honorable terms to any young fellow who would take the place of her faithless swain. A handsome young mason, who happened to be among the standers by, immediately offered himself, and was accepted on the spot. The Captain very properly sent to make inquiries about him, and found that he was, as he represented himself to be, a single man; and the parties to this extempore match sailed with that very tide for the shores of America.

Revolutionary Anecdote.—Mr. B., a merchant of Providence, R. I., and a man quite celebrated afterwards for his liberality and public spirit was the owner of a most fortunate privateer which sailed out of the port of Providence. On one occasion, when she had just unshipped a cargo of sugar, &c., taken from a very rich prize, in rolling it into the yard, one of the hogsheads stove, and a quantity of sugar fell out. A poor woman in the neighborhood, seeing the disaster, ran and filled her apron. Mr. B., from the loft of his store, called out, "What are you doing there?" The poor woman looking up, answered, "Privateering, sir." The retort was so forcible, that the merchant immediately made her a present of the entire hogshead.

A shrewd Qeustioner.—"Friend," said a shrewd Quaker, to a man with a drove of hogs, "hast any hogs in thy drove with large bones?"

"Yes," replied the drover, "they all have."

"Hast any with long heads and sharp noses?"

"Yes, they all have."

"Hast any with long ears, like those of the elephant, hanging down over the eyes?"

"Yes, all of my drove are of that description, and will suit you exactly."

"I rather think they would n't suit me, friend, if they are such as thou describest them. Thou may'st drive along."

VARIETY.

Mr. Rush, our Embassador, dining one day with the eccentric Jeremy Bentham, had a long conversation with him respecting the United States. "Keep your salaries low," said Bentham; "it is one of the secrets of the success of our Government. But what is this," he inquired, "Called the Board of Navy Commissioners, that you have lately set up? I don't understand it." Mr. Rush explained it to him. "I can't say that I like it," replied Bentham; "the simplicity of your public departments has hitherto been one of the recommendations, but boards make screens! If any thing goes wrong, you don't know where to find the offender; it was the board that did it, not one of the members; always the board—the board."

A lady in England was recently visited by a female servant who had been married, and, seeing that she presented an appearance of having very much bettered her circumstances, she inquired the nature of her husband's profession. To this interrogatory the young woman replied, "He is an asker, ma'am." "An asker!" inquired the good lady with amazement; "and what in the world is that?" "Oh, ma'am, he stands on the street, and asks." "Why, you don't mean to say you have married a beggar, do you?" "Yes, ma'am; but it's a very good business. My husband thinks it very hard work, indeed, if he don't bring home more than five shillings a day.

There is, perhaps, no feeling of our nature so complicated, so vague, so mysterious, as that with which we look upon the cold remains of our fellow mortals. The dignity with which death invests even the meanest of its victims, inspires us with awe no living creature can create. The monarch on his throne is less awful than the beggar in his shroud. The marble features, the powerless hand, the stiffened limb, the eye closed and glazed—oh! who can contemplate these with feelings which can be defined? These are the mockery of all our hopes and fears—of our fondest love, and our fellest hate.

Two hundred years ago, as we learn from a musical article in the Boston Post, a solo for the voice was unknown. But of late the cultivation of the female voice has been carried to such perfection as nearly to surpass every instrument in its powers of execution and expression, conferring upon the musical art a charm never contemplated by our early composers. We have no account of women appearing as singers upon the stage till 1692, when we find it announced in the London Gazetteer, that "the Italian lady just come over the sea, who is so famous for her singing, will perform."

Important as cheap fuel may be, to be able to do without it altogether is more important still. A Hungary chemist, perhaps a cold one too, has taken some promising steps toward making this possible. He places in contact two iron and one copper cylindrical plates, highly polished, turning on an axis at the end of a lever, with a balance weight at the end, to keep the plates in contact, when, by means of very simple apparatus and trifling exertion, a glowing red heat may be produced in five minutes, and maintained with ease.

Jean Paul says of children: "The smallest are nearest God as the smallest planets are nearest the sun. Were I only for a time almighty and powerful, I would create a little world especially for myself, and suspend it under the mildest sun—a world where I would have nothing but lovely children, and these little things I would suffer to grow up, but only to play eternally. If a seraph were weary of heaven, or his golden pinions drooped, I would send him to dwell for a while in my happy infant world; and no angel, so long as he saw their innocence, could lose his own."

Horace Walpole tells the following anecdote of Dodington. Dodington was in a habit of falling asleep after dinner. One day dining with Sir Richard Temple, Lord Cobham, &c., he was reproached for his drowsiness. He denied having been asleep, and to prove his assertion, offered to repeat all that Cobham had been saying. He was challenged to do so. In reply he repeated a story, and Cobham acknowledged that he had been telling it. "Well," said Dodington, "and yet I did not hear a word of it, but I went to sleep because I knew that about this time of day you would tell that story."

A reverend clergyman from Ohio, lately preaching in a neighboring city, observed two young ladies talking together. Stopping suddenly in his discourse, and looking seriously at them, he said: "I observed two young ladies earnestly engaged in conversation; and as it is not a mark of politeness for more than one to speak at a time in church, I will remain silent for a moment, to give them an opportunity to finish their discourse, when I will resume mine." The worthy minister, after a brief silence, resumed his subject.

The editor of the Albany Knickerbocker says, that in passing through the walks of a grave-yard in that city, recently, he witnessed a scene which would have drawn tears from a heart of stone. Seated beside a new-made grave were three children, their eyes bedewed with tears, strewing evergreens over the spot where lay entombed that which, to them, was the most loved object on earth—their mother.

The English Naval and Military Gazette says, that the moustache is a great hygiene measure. "It contends that moustachios are effectual as an appendage of the respiratory organs; that they absorb the air before it enters the nostrils, and are consequently a preservative against consumption." If the exclusion of air is so important to the consumptive, a more effectual preservative would be the use of an air pump at his nose.

Governor Bissel states, in his recent message to the Legislature of Connecticut, that the State Prison supports itself, and contributes a surplus of $3,472 12 to the treasury. This fund, arising from the constrained labor of the guilty, he advises to be applied to the relief of the unfortunate—the insane, the deaf, the dumb and the blind.

Daniel Isaac was both a great wag and a great smoker. "Ha! there you are," cried a lady, who surprised him one day with a pipe in his mouth, "at your idol again!" "Yes, madam," replied he coolly, "burning it."

CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE.

REV. J. T. HEADLEY, EDITOR.

THE CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE, formerly under the care of Rev. D. Mead, commences its fourth volume under the editorship of Rev. J. T. Headley, author of "Napoleon and his Marshals," "Sacred Mountains," "Letters from Italy," &c. We hazard nothing in saying that this Magazine, so deservedly popular hitherto, is destined to fill a large place in public estimation; that it will not only maintain its present enviable distinction, but earn to itself a far higher popularity, and become the companion of many a circle to which it is now a stranger, gladdening by its presence, while it exerts an influence pure, elevating, and healthful. The Editor will bend his energies to make this the most popular Magazine of the day, and while he avails himself of articles from the best writers, he will draw freely from his own exhaustless store.

It will continue to maintain its high moral tone, and nothing will be admitted into its columns which will minister to the corrupt passions and tendencies of youth, or which "the author dying would wish to blot."

The design of the Editor and Publisher is to present a Magazine containing all the facination and interest of the lighter Periodicals, while at the same time it moves in a different path, and is not exposed to the same objections. It is issued monthly, containing 32 pages of original matter, printed on fine paper, in handsome covers, with a splendid steel engraving, and a beautiful colored flower, and music, to each number, and got up in every respect in the best style of the art, making a yearly volume of 384 pages, full of choice illustrations, and forming a handsome ornament to the Parlor Table, or a rich and valuable present to a friend.

☞ Price, two dollars a year. Three copies for five dollars.

A few good, responsible agents wanted to circulate this work; to whom the best inducements will be offered.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

INFANTICIDE IN CHINA.

BY DR. DIVES.

To ascertain the extent of female infanticide in China, a course of inquiry was commenced near the close of 1842, by the Rev. David Abeel, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. His investigations were confined chiefly to the province of Fukien. It may be useful to some readers, to mention that the province of Fukien is on the sea coast, and includes ten large and two smaller counties, or departments; it contains fourteen millions seven hundred and seventy-seven thousand four hundred and ten inhabitants, on an area of fifty-three thousand four hundred and eighty square miles, or two hundred and eighty on a square mile.

From a comparison with many other parts of the country, there is reason to believe that a greater number of children are destroyed at birth in the district of Tungan than in any other of this department, probably more than in any other district of the province of equal extent and populousness. The number destroyed varies much in different places, the extremes extending from seventy to eighty per cent., to ten per cent.; and the mean of the whole number, the average number destroyed in forty different towns, amounts to exactly thirty-nine per cent.

In seventeen of these forty towns and villages, the informants declare that one half or more are deprived of existence at birth. In one district the average number destroyed is more than one-third, or just thirty-six per cent. In another district of the same province, the proportion is somewhat reduced. Taking eight places as a standard, it lies between one-fourth and three-tenths, or not far from thirty per cent. In two other districts, it is a relief to find that the practice is less prevalent. From the inhabitants of ten cities in these two districts, it was ascertained that the victims of infanticide do not exceed sixteen per cent.

According to investigations made in eighteen towns and villages, the number of victims is rather more than one-fourth, and less than three-tenths.

From the testimony of persons belonging to the several other towns and villages, between one-fourth and one-fifth are not allowed to live. Taking these inquiries as a fair specimen of the department, there is reason to believe that about thirty-five per cent. are suffocated at almost the first breath.

There are several facts which shed light on the subject of the present inquiry, and go to prove that these conclusions are not wide of the truth regard'ng the whole subject. On one occasion, there was a literary examination before the highest civil magistrate at Amoy, which brought together hundreds of grad'iates and aspirants for degrees. They expressed themselves freely on this topic, some of them affirming that in their own villages, the majority were cruelly murdered. This class of men almost universally give a less favorable aspect to this subject than their uneducated neighbors. The reason probably is, that many of them have not only been guiltless in this respect, but have exerted themselves to arrest the evil, while their neighbors, in too many instances, have practiced it. The commandant of Amoy and his officers, on a visit to the English authorities, were much impressed with the equal fondness of the English ladies for children of both sexes. They introduced the subject, and drew a contrast between their own women and those they had seen and heard of, greatly to the disadvantage of the former. The second officer in command, who appeared the most intelligent in the party, in reply to inquiry, said that four-tenths of the children in the surrounding country were destroyed. This is the general opinion of the most intelligent and judicious persons met with. One of the principle men in the office of the subprefect of Amoy, mentioned that since the arrival of the English at Amoy, infanticide has prevailed ~~to a~~ far greater extent, on account of the closing of the foundling hospital. He himself has dissuaded two of his neighbors from putting their offspring to death, having pointed out a way in which they could be provided for. There is a river at Amoy called "Dead Infant's River." Whatever this name may prove, female infants are more valued there than in almost any other place in the country.

There is a kind of testimony to which great value should be attached, in the present inquiry. It is the confession of parents who have destroyed their own children. There are a very few sunk so low in the scale of degradation, as not to know that this practice reflects no credit on the unfeeling parent. Neither a sense of guilt, nor a sentiment of humanity, may prevent the act; yet a very large majority are sufficiently convinced of its impropriety, at least in the eyes of others, to induce them to conceal rather than disclose such a fact.

A native of a village about ten miles from Amoy, said that he had killed two out of four of his own; another confessed that he had destroyed three out of five; a third was candid enough to acknowledge that he himself had killed two, preserving alive three; a fourth said that the inhabitants of his native town were very poor, and rice dear, that a large majority of females were early put to death, and that he had killed two, saving but one alive. A Chinese nurse, engaged by a European family, acknowledged that she had murdered two of her own children.

One of the most convincing evidences of the prevalence of infanticide was obtained from ocular demonstration in a village six or seven miles from Amoy. Dr. Cumming had extirpated a large tumor from the neck of one of its inhabitants, which excited universal curiosity to see "so bold and skillful a surgeon." From the number of women in the crowd which turned out to meet the Missionaries, it was very evident that they were under as little restraint as the men. While Dr. Abeel was addressing the crowd, one man held up a child, and publicly acknowledged that he had killed five of these helpless beings, having preserved but two. I thought, says Dr. Abeel, that he was jesting; but as no surprise or dissent was expressed by his neighbors, and as there was an air both of sincerity and regret in the individual, there was no reason to doubt its truth. After repeating his confession, he added with affecting simplicity, "It was before I heard you speak on this subject; I did not know it was wrong; I would not do so now." Wishing to obtain the testimony of the assembled villagers, the question was put publicly, "What number of females in this village are destroyed at birth?" The reply was, "More than one half." As there was no discussion among them, which is not the case when they differ in opinion, and as there was a great numerical inequality of the sexes, the proportion of deaths they gave did not appear extravagant.

A man of large fortune, after the birth of two daughters, destroyed five others in succession. On being asked the cause of such inhuman cruelty, in one so able to provide for them, he ascribed it frankly to avarice, adding that men in his situation were obliged to spend considerable sums in dress, ornament and marriage presents, and that he was unwilling to submit to such a dead loss.

An intelligent man, in reply to the query, whether the crime prevailed to any great extent among the rich, said he thought they exceeded their poorer neighbors in this revolting practice, and gave the same reason as assigned above.

These inquiries have confirmed the sad fact that infanticide is practiced to a greater or less extent, in every part of the country. The independent testimony of men of all classes, from nearly every section of the country, can not be set aside. Another result of these inquiries is of a more gratifying character. The practice is declining. To what extent, it is impossible to say; but the character and number of the witnesses, place the fact beyond question. Since twenty or thirty years ago, there has been a great change, at least in some places. This is ascribed in a measure to the exertions of literary men who write against it, or re-publish what has been written, and, according to Chinese custom, paste their admonitions in the most public places. The foundling hospitals, which only grace the large cities, are too limited in number and resources to check the evil. They are supported by the authorities, and men of wealth. They are always spoken of with favor, and no doubt exert a good influence, but under the best administration, what can be expected from one such institution, for a large city and populous country, and where the benevolence of the patrons is frustrated by the cupidity of the nurses?

It will be seen from the facts here given, that the reasons assigned, and the excuses offered for this horrid practice, are various. Many affirm, that they cannot procure the means for the support of their female children, and are consequently obliged to adopt this expedient. If this were the only alternative to a lingering death from starvation, it might be regarded as a dictate of humanity; but even the heathens themselves do not believe that this desperate resort is ever necessary. There is a variety of ways of disposing of their children which can not all fail. They can generally sell them to those who have no offspring, or to parents who thus provide wives for their sons. This is a common custom among the poor. Instead of paying comparatively a large sum for an adult daughter-in-law, they prefer obtaining an infant for a little or nothing, and bringing them up in ways which render their services valuable to the family, or at least preclude much additional expense. If they can not sell their children, it is said there is no difficulty in giving them away. And if these experiments should fail at one time, and in one place, they need but keep the children a little longer, and go a little farther to gain their object. Another way of preserving them which is adopted by some, is to put them in baskets, with a dollar, or what money they can spare, and place them by the road-side; or sending them in water-tight vessels, where they are most likely to be seen and rescued.

But alas! "without natural affection" it still continues a feature of heathenism. It is said that rather than subject themselves to the least trouble or apprehension, multitudes prefer destroying them at once. Even many of these brutal parents think it necessary to furnish themselves with some excuse for their conduct. They are not willing to give them to others, from the fear that they might be ill treated, or bought up for improper purposes. They refuse to take them to the asylum, lest they should be involved in future expense or trouble. There is no disgrace connected with infanticide, but they are ashamed to give away a worthless child, and to have it known that they are unwilling to preserve it until its years give it value. These are the paltry reasons assigned by the poor.

What apology can be offered for the rich? With them it is a subject of heartless calculation—a balancing of mere pecuniary profit and loss. True, some of them profess to be grieved by the selfish fear that their daughters may bring disgrace by their future conduct, but the common course of reasoning is that they will cost much, both before and at their marriage; that they will then be transferred to another connexion, (not being allowed to marry in the same clan,) which will be of no advantage, but may be of detriment to their parents; and that if their husbands die, they will probably be thrown upon them, as a dead weight for future support.

To a heart ignorant of its relations and obligations to the true God, destitute of natural affection, and perfectly alive—and alive only—to its worldly interests, the temptations to infanticide must be very powerful. It does not come under the cognizance of the oriental laws. Society imposes no restraints, it never frowns upon such acts; the perpetrators lose nothing of respect or influence. They rid themselves of expense and trouble, by an act to which they trace no serious consequences; and for which the only visitation, than a reception of birth of the same sex, must be to them very problematical.

Amid the ignorance and depravity which prevail in the heathen world, and particularly where pecuniary interests are involved, there is no reason to wonder at the existence of infanticide; and we may expect it to continue until it is found to conflict with an advanced state of society. But how is this change to be effected? What but the "glorious Gospel of the blessed God" can elevate this unfortunate sex?

MY MOTHER'S VOICE.

BY JONES VERY.

My mother's voice! I hear it now!
I feel her hand upon my brow
As when, in heartfelt joy,
She raised her evening hymn of praise,
And called down blessings on the days
Of her loved boy.

My mother's voice! I hear it now!
Her hand is on my burning brow
As in that early hour,
When fever throbbed through all my veins,
And that kind hand first soothed my pains,
With healing power.

My mother's voice! it sounds as when
She read to me of holy men—
The patriarchs of old;
And gazing downward in my face,
She seemed each infant thought to trace,
My young eyes told.

It comes—when thoughts unhallowed throng,
Woven in sweet deceptive song—
And whispers round my heart,
As when, at eve, it rose on high;
I hear and think that she is nigh,
And they depart.

Though round my heart all, beside—
The voice of friendship, love, had died—
That voice would linger there,
As when, soft pillowed on her breast,
Its tones first lulled my infant rest,
Or rose in prayer.

THE EDINBURGH CLERGY—DR. CHALMERS.

Mr. Turnbull's Genius of Scotland, just published, is an exceedingly entertaining and agreeable book. It enters, with native enthusiasm and a discriminating spirit, into the detail of Scottish life and character. Mr. T. thus describes the clergy of Edinburgh, and that prince of living preachers, Dr. Chalmers:—

Taken as a whole, the Edinburgh clergy are fair representatives of the Scottish preachers generally. Those therefore who wish to form a just estimate of the spirit and power of the pulpit in Scotland, have only to hear them repeatedly, in their respective places of worship. They hold doctrinal views somewhat diverse, though essentially one, adopt different styles of preaching, and in certain aspects different styles of life. Yet they manifestly belong to the same great family, and preach the same glorious gospel. They are remarkably distinguished for their strong common sense, laborious habits, pious spirit, and practical usefulness. Occasionally they come into keen polemical strife; but it amounts to little more than a gladiatorial exhibition, or rather a light skirmishing, without malice prepense, or much evil result. Generally speaking, they are not preëminently distinguished for their learning, though certainly well informed, and devoted to the great work of their ministry. They are more practical than speculative, more devout than critical, more useful than renowned. They live in the hearts of their flocks, and the results of their labors may be seen in the integrity, good order and industry of the people.

But enough of general speculation and description. Dr. Chalmers is to preach at Dr. Candlish's church, so let us go to hear him. He has lost something of his early vigor, but retains enough of it to make him the most interesting preacher in Scotland or in the world. Let us make haste, or we shall fail of obtaining a seat. Already the house is filled with an expectant congregation. The Doctor comes in, and all is hushed. He is dressed in gown and bands, and presents a striking and venerable appearance. His serious, earnest aspect well befits his high office. He is of the middle height, thick-set and brawny, but not corpulent. His face is rather broad, with high cheek-bones, pale, and as it were care-worn, but well-formed and expressive. His eyes are of a leaden color, rather dull when in a state of repose, but flashing with a half-smothered fire when fairly roused. His nose is broad and lion-like; his mouth, one of the most expressive parts of his countenance, firm, a little compressed and stern, indicating courage and energy, while his forehead is ample and high, as one might naturally suppose, covered with thin, straggling grey hair. He reads a psalm in a dry, guttural voice—reads a few verses of Scripture, without much energy or apparent feeling, and then offers a brief, simple, earnest, and striking prayer. By the way, the Doctor's prayers are among his most interesting exercises. He is always simple, direct, reverent, and occasionally quite original and striking. You feel while joining in his devotions, that a man of genius and piety is leading your willing spirit up to the throne of God. How striking, for example, when he calls us to remember 'that every hour that strikes—every morning that dawns, and every evening that darkens around us, brings us nearer to the end of our pilgrimage.' Yet he has no mouthing or mannerism, in this solemn exercise. He is not making, but offering a prayer. His tones are earnest and solemn; most manifest it is that his soul is holding intimate fellowship with the Father of spirits.

But he announces his text—1 John 4: 16. 'God is love'—a text from which he has preached before; but no matter for that. He commences with a few broken sentences, pronounced in a harsh, tuneless voice, with a strong Scottish accent. The first feeling of a stranger would be that of disappointment, and apprehension that the discourse was to prove a failure. This was the case with Canning and Wilberforce, who went to hear Dr. Chalmers, when he preached in London. They had got into a pew near the door, when the preacher began in his usual unpromising way, by stating a few nearly self-evident propositions, neither in the choicest language, nor in the most impressive voice. 'If this be all,' said Canning to his companion, 'it will never do.' Chalmers went on—the shuffling in the congregation gradually subsided. He got into the mass of his subject; his weakness became strength, his hesitation was turned into energy; and bringing the whole volume of his mind to bear upon it, poured forth a torrent of most close and conclusive argument, brilliant with all the exuberance of an imagination which ranged over all nature for illustrations, and yet managed and applied each of them with the same unerring dexterity, as if that single one had been the study of his whole life. 'The tartan beats us,' said Mr. Canning, 'we have no preaching like that in England.'

THE CHARITIES REQUIRED BY THE JEWISH LAW.

The Jews were required to give one-tenth—a tithe—of all their income to the Lord.

There are probably many who are in the habit of regarding the tithe system, or the dedication of one-tenth to religious uses, as a part of the Mosaic or Jewish economy, and only intended, like many other of their laws, to serve a temporary purpose, and abrogated on the dissolution of that economy. It will be perceived, however, by reference to the 14th chapter of the book of Genesis, that this principle was admitted and this practice maintained before the era of the Jewish Institutes. For, on his return from the slaughter of the kings, and before the change of his name, Abram was met by Melchisedek, priest of the most high God; and having received his benediction, the patriarch gave him tithes of all.

Again, we have another illustration in the case of the patriarch Jacob, recorded in the 28th chapter of Genesis. After the vision of the ladder, which he had at Bethel, (or Luz,) "Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God; and this stone which I have set for a pillar shall be God's house; and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee."

Grotius argues very justly, that those virtues required by God under the ancient economy, ought to be fulfilled by Christians now, in a greater degree, from their superior knowledge and higher motives, and because the promises of heaven are more clear. And he instances the law of the Sabbath, and of tithes.

But their tithes were far from being all the charity required of the Jews. They never came before the Lord in public worship without an offering of some sort. They had laws of compulsory giving and laws of voluntary giving—the one necessary, and the other left to the liberality of the donor. There were two chests in every synagogue, and regular weekly collections, when each member was solicited individually to give.

The real amount the Jews gave in charity could not, therefore, have been less than one-third of all their income.

ANECDOTES OF REV. JAMES HERVEY.

While once traveling, Mr. Hervey met with a lady who largely expatiated on the amusements of the age as being, in her opinion, superior to all other pleasures. She remarked that there was the pleaure of thinking on the play before she went, the pleasure she enjoyed while there, and the pleasure of reflecting on it afterwards. Mr. Hervey, who had heard her remarks without interruption, now said, with his usual mildness, there was one pleasure more which she had forgotten. "What can that be?" she eagerly asked, for she thought she must have included them all. With a grave look and a striking manner, Mr. H. replied, "Madam, the pleasure it will give you on a death-bed." The remark took her by surprise, but went to her heart. She had no reply to make. The rest of the journey was occupied in deep thought. She abandoned the theatre, and heartily pursued those pleasures which can afford satisfaction on a death-bed.

Mr. Hervey, writing to his friend shortly before his death, says, "Were I to enjoy Hezekiah's grant, and have fifteen years added to my life, I should be much more frequent at the throne of grace. We sustain a mighty loss by reading so much and praying so little. Were I to renew my studies, I would take my leave of those accomplished trifles, the historians, the orators, and the poets of antiquity, and devote my attention to the Scriptures of truth. I would sit with much greater assiduity at my Master's feet, and desire to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified. This wisdom, whose fruits are everlasting salvation after death, this I would explore, through the spacious and delightful fields of the Old and New Testaments." [Christian Herald.

A HINT TO PREACHERS.

We are told that when Kean first came out on the London stage, the veteran Kemble, who had retired from it, went to see him, and being asked afterward by his friend Boaden, how he liked him, "Why," said he, "his manner is so totally different from mine, that you can hardly expect me to like him altogether; but I must say one thing for him—he is always terribly in earnest." This was the remark of a player, but it may serve to suggest a good hint to preachers. There is manifestly no point of public speaking so important and effective as earnestness, and it happens, somehow or other, most unfortunately, that it is the very one in which the generality of our performances in the pulpit appear to be most deficient. Another player said of them, "They speak of the most awful realities as if they were indifferent fictions." They do not appear, at least, to be in earnest, when we are bound to believe that they are most entirely so. The fault lies, no doubt, in their delivery, rather than in their hearts; but it should be corrected, if possible, without delay. They ought, in fact not only to be, but to appear also to be, always thoroughly, and sometimes even "terribly in earnest."

THE PERSONAL CHARACTER OF NEANDER.

Dr. Neander, the most distinguished theological professor of the University, is a reformed Jew, and his name, chosen by himself, after the manner of the old scholars, from the Greek, has reference to this change of sentiment. He is now engaged in writing a Church History, of great labor and learning, and has already completed ten volumes. He has also published a "History of the Apostolic Age," and "The Life of Jesus," the latter having been called forth by the celebrated work of David Strauss, called the "Life of Jesus," which occasioned, not many years since, so much movement in the theological world. Professor Neander, though one of the most amiable, kind-hearted, and excellent of men, is nevertheless quite eccentric in his appearance and manners. It is a singular sight for a stranger to behold him for the first time at his desk in the lecture room. He is rather an undersized man, and wears a long black frock coat or surtout, and high boots reaching to his knees. His complexion is swarthy, his hair black and thick, coming down over his forehead, and his shaggy eyebrows wholly conceal his eyes from view. He always stands when he lectures, fastens his eyes upon the floor, and leaning his arms on the desk above his head, he pulls to pieces a quill which is invariably provided for him, and which seems to be necessary to secure to him an easy flow of thought. He speaks with a strong voice, in measured and almost evenly-timed sentences. When more than usually excited by his subject, he wheels off from the desk, and turns his back to the audience, his face all the while working, and his mouth opening, as if his ideas came to him in spasms. But the unfavorable or undignified impression which this odd manner may at first excite, soon wears off, when one has listened for a short time to the beautiful, flowing and scholastic language, the noble and original style of thought, and the sincere, suggestive, and impressive teachings, of this truly learned and great theologian.

NAMES OF THE DAYS THE WEEK.

The ancient Greeks and Romans had no division of time properly answering to our weeks; the former had their decades or periods of days; and the latter their nundinæ, or market days, occurring every nine days. But the Egyptians and oriental nations had a week of seven days. This division (hebdomades) was introduced among the Romans, it is said, not far from the beginning of the third century after Christ. Dion Cassius, who lived at Nicaea in Bithynia about this time, speaks of the Egyptians as having not long previously originated the practice of calling the days of the week by the names of the seven planets. The days were called Dies Solis, day of the Sun; Dies Lunae, day of the moon; Dies Martis, day of Mars; Dies Mercurii, day of Mercury; Dies Jovis, day of Jupiter; Dies Veneris, day of Venus; Dies Saturni, day of Saturn.

It is worthy of notice that our names for the days had a similar origin, as will be seen from a glance at their Saxon origin. Surnadaeg, Sun's day; Monandaeg, Moon's day; Tuesdaeg, day of Tuisco, (i. e. Mars, god of war,) Wodnesdaeg, day of Wodin or Odin, the Scandinavian Mercury; Thorsdaeg, day of Thor the Northern Jupiter; Freydaeg, day of Freya, the Venus of the North; Saeterdaeg, day of Saeter or Seater, the name of Saturn among the ancient Germanic tribes.

THE CONTRAST.

We know a pastor, who settled a few years ago, with a young church, too poor to support him without help from the Missionary Convention of the State. He had seen a cordial willingness in the little church, however, to give what they could for the cause of missions; and this was, in his estimation, a sort of bond for the growth of the church. It was his aim to foster this spirit, even if it cost him some sacrifices. A neighboring pastor, who knew all about the poverty of the infant church, said one day to his brother pastor, "Your church must keep back what they pay for missions, and let it go towards your salary, for it is more than is paid by any other church in the association." The advice was not deemed good at the time, and certainly nothing has occurred in the subsequent history of the two churches to make it look better. The little church has been growing in its liberality and in strength. They have added something every year to their pastor's salary, and have given more than one-fourth of the same sum every year to the missionary cause. The other church, which was taught to keep all for the pastor, has been diminishing his salary every year; and now, though worth three or four times as much money, it pays the pastor less than one-half as much as does the church which sought a blessing for itself in blessing others.—Macedonian.

Christ and the gospel are light, and there is no darkness at all in them; if you say, that you 'know Christ' and his gospel, and yet keep not 'Christ's commandments,' but dearly hug your private darling corruptions, 'you are liars and the truth is not in you;' you have no acquaintance with the God of light, and the Gospel.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, June 10, 1847.

THE "SABBATH DISCUSSION."

One of the strangest spectacles we witness, is that of men of acute minds groping blindly after truths, which to others of even less intellect are as obvious as the light of the sun. We have seen this in the case of the "Sabbath Discussion" recently carried on through the columns of the Christian Chronicle, in which "E. W. D." and "Indagator" seem at a loss to know how to dispose of that plain Scripture, "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

"E. W. D." admits the binding nature of the fourth commandment, but maintains that it does not designate any one day in particular, to the exclusion of all others, as the Sabbath, but that it requires simply the observance of an entire day after six days labor, no matter from what point of the hebdomadal cycle the reckoning is commenced. Any day thus set apart every week, he supposes to be the seventh day required by the law. If this is not his meaning, it is difficult to tell what it is.

"Indagator," on the other hand, regards "the seventh day" of the fourth commandment as "the seventh in some well-understood order then existing, which order, if it still exists, as is commonly allowed, will teach us at once what day is the seventh, and therefore the Sabbath." He thinks that, according to "E. W. D.'s" position, "if each seventh portion of the citizens of this city had fixed on a different day of the week to observe as their Sabbath, each day that passes over our heads would be the Sabbath of Jehovah our God. And this might well be, perhaps, if the law in question had been an independent statute, communicated without any history of the circumstances, or statement of its design. But when we consider the circumstances, that a day had already been set apart, * * * the order of whose recurrence was fixed and well known, how can we suppose that the law meant any thing more than to give the solemn sanction of Sinai to this very order which had already been divinely enjoined?"

This answer of "Indagator" is to the point; it is just what it ought to be. It is an idea, which, if its full development had not been restrained, and its force neutralized, by his otherwise erroneous views, might have been used to the complete discomfiture of his opponent. But see how he is fettered even in the statement of it. The reader is requested to fill the blank in the above quotation with the words "in the wilderness," and then he will have the ungarbled sentence, just as "Indagator" wrote it. But the filling of the blank spoils the beauty of his argument, which, for the honor of truth, we would be glad not to do. It makes him teach, by more than a bare insinuation, that the sabbatic institution had its origin in the wilderness—a sentiment which he keeps carefully in view throughout the discussion—while the commemoration of God's rest-day was but an "incidental object of its appointment."

We wish to put the respective peculiarities of these disputants to the test of truth. "To the law and to the testimony." What God requires in the fourth commandment, is the observance, not merely of a day, but of a sanctified day—a day which He himself had already "sanctified and blessed." Now unless God sanctified every day alike, it cannot be a matter of indifference which one of the hebdomadal cycle is observed. If he sanctified one in particular, to the exclusion of all the rest, that one, and that only, is the day which the commandment requires. What then is the fact?—for it is a question of fact rather than of argument. The fact is, as Moses records it, that "God rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." Gen. 2: 2, 3. This is the fact to which the fourth commandment alludes, and which it substantially expresses. But can "E. W. D.," or any other man of common discernment, with this recorded fact before him, say, that the day which God "blessed and sanctified" was any other than the identical day on which he rested from his work? And was not that day the last day of the first week of time? For God did not rest on any of the other days, but spent every one of them in work. Yet the seventh day was sanctified, "BECAUSE that in it he had rested." In the light of this recorded fact, is it not as clear as a sunbeam, that the seventh day of the fourth commandment is the last day of the week, and no other?

Now, "to make assurance doubly sure," let us read the commandment with the word Rest substituted for Sabbath. For every one knows, that Sabbath is only a Hebrew word in English letters. Let it be translated; our Baptist brethren are friends to the full translation of the Scriptures. Let us, however, place the recorded fact and the fourth commandment side by side. Some minds have been so long "entangled in the web of traditional interpretation" that it will do no hurt to use especial pains to make the matter plain.

And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he RESTED on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; because that in it he had RESTED from all his work which God created and made. Gen. 2: 2, 3.	Remember the Rest-day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Rest of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Rest-day, and hallowed it. Ex. 20: 9—11.

We see, then, that the law does, distinctly and specifically, enjoin the observance of the last day of the week. And as "the controversy must be settled by the law to which all direct us," we are not without hope that "E. W. D." may yet embrace the truth. Whether the law "enjoins an impossibility," we need not at present inquire. Be that as it may, if there is any meaning in languge, it enjoins the Saturday.

It being clear that God, in the fourth commandment, requires the commemoration of—not his working days, but—his rest-day; and as this is admitted by "E. W. D.," for he calls the Sabbath "a memorial of the rest of God, when a finished world swung from his creative hand;" we respectfully ask him how God's rest can be commemorated on any other day than the weekly return of that on which he actually did rest? Would there be any fitness in commemorating the declaration of Independence in the middle of winter? Would it be in place to celebrate the landing of the Pilgrims in March? Would it be suitable to commemorate the battle of Bunker's Hill in October? A mere child could tell, that there is no propriety in celebrating these events at any other times than the annual returns of the very days on which they respectively transpired. So in regard to God's rest; it must be commemorated on the last day of the week, otherwise there is no fitness in the celebration. How a man of so much acuteness as "E. W. D." appears to be, can maintain that the Sabbath is a memorial of God's rest at the close of his creative operations, and insist upon it with considerable earnestness too in opposition to the views of his opponent, and yet hold "that the 'seventh' may be reckoned from any point," is to us most surprising. We fear he is more "entangled in the web of traditional interpretation," than he supposes himself to be.

We forbear any farther remarks at present. We write short articles, because we wish them to be read. "Indagator" shall receive a share of our attention anon. In the mean time, as the Editor of the Christian Chronicle professes to be a friend of free discussion, we respectfully request him to let our remarks appear in his columns.

THE GERMAN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As much interest is felt by all Sabbath-keepers in the issue of the case before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, now in session at Harrisburg, I deem it proper to advertise our friends abroad of the prospects ahead, that they may be prepared to act, and act promptly, should it become necessary to carry the issue to the highest tribunal of the land; in which all will become alike personally interested.

The cause is now in good hands, one of the ablest Advocates in the State having been engaged, and not only engaged for a paltry fee, but one who has his feelings enlisted, as a true, genuine republican, contending for first principles. Until I became acquainted, which was not until quite recently, that a similar case had already been decided by the Supreme Court of that State, I was very sanguine of a favorable decision. About thirty years ago, it appears, a Jew was fined for exposing and selling goods on Sunday, and that fine, on an appeal to the Supreme Court, was sustained. That precedent may make against the cause of my brethren at Snowhill, as it is generally esteemed, among Jurists, sound policy, to secure stability to the Jurisprudence of a State, to regard one decision of the Supreme Bench as settling the principle of law at issue, if not being absolutely binding on their successors. However, they still find themselves obliged, occasionally, to reverse themselves, when a former decision is palpably erroneous; and our distinguished counsel thinks that that may be made evident to the present Bench, not more than one of them (there being five,) being on the Bench at the time of the former decision. Strong hopes are entertained of a favorable issue, and as strong a determination manifested, should they be cast, to carry it up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The readers of the Recorder recollect that, at the last General Conference, held at Shiloh, in September last, a Central Committee, consisting of Samuel Davison, T. B. Brown, Eli S. Bailey, Nathan V. Hull, and myself, was raised, to correspond with any State Committee where prosecutions should be entered against Sabbath-keepers, under any existing Sunday laws, and with the design of succoring, sustaining, and making common cause in case it should become necessary to appeal to the Federal Court.

Such a contingency may be at hand. A short time since, I received a letter from the Pennsylvania Committee, addressed to me as a member of the Central Committee, in which they inform me, that they issued the transcript to the Supreme Court in the name of one of the persecuted only, John Specht, an exemplary and beloved member of the Snowhill Society, of whom the Committee say, "He is a regular Sabbath-keeper. He sets apart the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, and conscientiously believes it is required of him by Divine commandment. This fact has been testified to and satisfactorily established in the County Court."

They then ask: "Should we fail in our case before the Supreme Court in our State, can we depend on the co-operation of the Central Committee; and do you think that the English seventh-day brethren will make common cause with us, and afford any aid in carrying our case up to the Supreme Court of the United States?"

Having also some correspondence with the Attorney engaged in the case, and hoping to be in Harrisburg at the time of the trial, and be prepared to act promptly and understandingly, I addressed the members of the Central Committee in reference to the matter, and have received answers from all of them; who are all decided on the propriety of carrying the case up to the Supreme Court of the United States, should they fail at Harrisburg. The Committee are as one man in the matter—ready to give the long pull and the strong pull—pledging their cordial co-operation and expressing their opinions confidently that the whole denomination will respond with enthusiasm and make common cause in this final test of religious liberty.

In haste, yours,

Wm. M. Fahnestock.

MISSIONS IN AFRICA.

Earnest efforts are being made by Christians of different denominations for the benefit of Africa. The Moravians led the way. It is now a little more than one hundred years since George Schmidt, the first missionary to South Africa, landed at Cape Town; they have at present seven stations and 1,550 communicants. The London and Wesleyan Missionary Societies have displayed much energy and zeal, and their efforts have been crowned with a considerable degree of success. The former have now thirty-three stations and 4,289 communicants, and the latter thirty-nine stations and 3,521 communicants. The French Evangelical Mission ranks the next; it commenced its operations in 1822, and the divine blessing has accompanied its efforts. Death has not once thinned the ranks of the missionaries; they are fourteen in number, having under their charge ten stations and 929 communicants. Other Missionary Societies are prosecuting, with more or less vigor, operations for the spread of the gospel in South Africa. The cheering prospects of some of these missions have been blighted during the last year by the devastations of war. A contest began last spring between the colonial government and the Caffres, which is still in progress, and the horrors of savage warfare have extended beyond Caffraria. Among the Caffres missionary operations are entirely suspended. A letter from Kat River, of October 15, says, "All the chapels, school-rooms, and mission-houses, in Caffreland, are burned to the ground; and the missionaries with most of their adherents are withdrawn within the colony. The loss of all the societies will be immense, as no fewer than twenty chapels must have been destroyed, and many mission-houses," &c.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.

The American Baptist Missionary Union held its Annual Meeting at Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22d of May. The delegation seems to have been quite numerous, considering the distance of the meeting from the head-quarters of the Society. The receipts of the last year were about $85,000, being $14,000 more than any previous year. There is at present a balance of $33,689 against the Board. They are anxious to raise $95,000 during the coming year. The whole number of missions under the direction of the Union is 16, with 50 stations and 93 out-stations, occupied by 101 missionaries and assistants, of whom 48 are preachers, and 144 native helpers. The number of churches reported is 108. 1,783 persons have been added to them by baptism the past year, making the aggregate of members about 10,000. The number of schools is 59, and of pupils from 1,500 to 1,600. The Union has two periodicals, the Magazine and the Macedonia; 4,000 copies of the former, and 20,000 copies of the latter, are regularly published. After an interesting session of five days, the Union adjourned to meet with the First Baptist Church in Troy, N. Y., on the third Thursday in May, 1848.

The Christian Chronicle.—Several weeks ago, we made some comments upon a skirmish between the editor of the Catholic Herald and the editor of the Christian Chronicle. The latter gentleman thinks we did him injustice by our concluding statement, that he had not replied to the Herald's question, "whether he professes to find, in the Holy Scriptures alone, a sufficient warrant for the change of the Sabbath?" To convince us of our wrong, he has sent us a copy of his paper of March 17, containing an article, more than half a column long, in reply to the Herald. But after carefully examining that article, we must confess ourselves unable to see wherein we have wronged him. He does not tell us any thing about the grounds upon which he advocates the abolition of the Jewish Sabbath, and the institution of Sunday in its place. In this article, as in several others which he has written upon the subject of the Sabbath, he exhibits a wonderful facility to talk about the thing in hand, without giving his readers the least clew to his own opinions upon it. We must still think, therefore, as we thought weeks ago, that the editor of the Chronicle has not answered the plain and reasonable question asked by the editor of the Herald. If he is not disposed to answer it—as we judge from the article under consideration that he is not—of course he has a perfect right to keep silent. But if he expects us to acknowledge that he has answered it, merely because he has talked about it, he will be disappointed.

A Modern Miracle.—The late English papers record a miracle of recent date. According to the story, the Virgin Mary appeared, on the 19th of Sept., 1846, to two shepherd boys who were together on the mountain of La Salette, in the Diocese of Grenoble. She spoke to each in his native tongue—to one in French, to the other in the German patois of the frontier, giving to each a very long exhortation on the diligence among the people of Corps—the village to which they belonged. "She wore a wreath of roses." When she went away they saw that the grass did not bend under the pressure of her feet. She disappeared gradually—the light of her countenance dazzling them. On the spot where her foot rested, a fountain sprung up, which has not since dried—and the water has proved a successful remedy for sick persons!

Sunday Railway Trains in Scotland.—The Liberator publishes a letter from Andrew Paton, of Glasgow, giving an account of a boisterous meeting held in that city to consider the course of the Directors of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway in stopping the Sunday trains which had run from the opening of the road until November last. It seems that the meeting was called to petition Parliament to enforce the running of at least one morning and one evening train on Sunday, on every passenger line in Scotland, at reasonable and convenient hours. But the opponents of the measure attended in such numbers as nearly to defeat the object of the meeting. Those who called it, however, have determined to hold another meeting, and to take measures to prevent a similar defeat. From this it would seem that the strife waxes hotter and hotter.

Sunday in India.—Among the Hindoos and Mohammedans it has always been customary to suspend labor on the public works during the holidays of the churches to which the workmen respectively belonged. But it has been the opprobrium of the English Government, that it presented to the heathen the appearance of being entirely indifferent to the ordinances of the creed which it was known to profess, because no relaxation to workmen was allowed on the Sunday. Recently, however, the Governor General of India has issued an order directing that all public works shall be suspended on Sunday, whether those works are carried on by its own officers, or by the agency of contractors. A similar regulation is said to have been in force in the Bombay Government since 1843. It is now extended to the whole of British India.

The Sunday in Hayti.—Rev. Mr. Graves, one of the editors of the Christian Reflector, writing from Hayti, says that all the holy days and religious festivals of Rome are observed; but to these in many parts of the island, are added certain heathen rites imported from Africa. Among these are religious dances of the most exciting and astounding character. Persons become perfectly insane, and so replete with nervous energy that they run up trees, and leap from place to place like wild animals. The Sabbath is the great business day of the week to the middle and lower classes, while the rich employ it as a holiday. It is the day especially devoted to military parade and to marketing. The public squares are crowded with buyers and sellers; and all the shops are thronged, as on no other day of the week, with customers.

Funerals on the Sunday.—One of our exchange papers says that a distinguished clergyman of Pittsburg proposes for the consideration of the religious public, the question whether funerals should be attended on Sunday. It was recently brought up for discussion at the first Presbyterian church in Pittsburg. Strange that the persons who are so conscientious about burying their dead on Sunday can never be brought to look at the question whether that day has any claim at all to peculiar sacredness. It is evident that the tithing of mint and cummin, while neglecting the weightier matters of the law, has not ceased in our day.

Sunday Work.—The following facts, says the National Era, are commended to the consideration of all patriotic war-and-glory clergymen, who are nothing loth, at the proclamation of Governors, to preach thanksgiving sermons over the triumphs of the American arms in Mexico:

"The battle of Palo Alto was fought on Sunday, the 8th day of May.

"The American army arrived and took position in front of Monterey on Sunday, the 20th day of September—the battle commenced the next morning.

"The battle of Del Norte, New Mexico, was fought on Sunday, the 24th day of January.

"The Battle of Buena Vista commenced on Sunday, the 21st of February.

"The surrender of the city and castle of Vera Cruz was made to General Scott on Sunday, the 28th day of February.

"The battle of Sacramento, Chihuahua, was fought on Sunday, the 28th of March.

"The battle of Cerro Gordo commenced on Sunday, the 17th day of April."

Bunyan Unmutilated.—The Hanserd Knolly's Society, in London, contemplate publishing an edition of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, in its original form, unmutilated and unadulterated. It is said that some of his editors have taken the liberty to erase certain portions of the work, particularly a passage in which washing or baptism is represented as preceding the Supper.

A Home in the West.—Bro. Dennis Saunders, of Farmington, Fulton Co., Illinois, writes to us that there is an inviting field of labor for a Seventh-day Baptist minister in the vicinity where he is located. Several Sabbath-keeping families have settled near him, and others are scattered about at a distance which would render it easy to itinerate among them. Would it not be well for some minister who is thinking of a home in the West to turn his attention to this neighborhood?

Where is the Far West?—In a home-missionary meeting recently held at Cincinnati, Ohio, Rev. Mr. Hatfield, of New York, said that the people of Cincinnati were no longer in the West. They were in the East. They had solved the problem, Where was the Far West? They had sent Missionaries—Home Missionaries—round Cape Horn, and half of the globe, to the mouth of the Columbia River in Oregon! They were in the East, and henceforward must expect to help those in the Far West, on the coast of the Pacific!

Popery Renounced.—The Dublin Evening Journal gives an account of the public recantation of popery, on Sunday, March 7, by twelve persons, nine men and three women. Two of the men were priests—Rev. Nicholas Beatty, D. D., late superior of the convents in Drogheda, Athlone, Waterford, and Mullifarnham; and Rev. Patrick Brennan, late parish priest of Creeve, Diocese of Elphin. Dr. Beatty thinks there is no doubt that many of his former brethren will follow his example of shaking off the unscriptural yoke of Rome. The occasion seems to have been one of uncommon interest, and drew together a large number of spectators.

War News.—A great many rumors, but not much reliable news, has reached us from the seat of war within a week past. Gen. Worth is said to have entered Puebla on the afternoon of May 15, after a sharp skirmish with a party of lancers sent out to oppose his advance. The town of Montala was taken by the sloop of war Germantown—was re-taken again by three hundred Mexicans, who were afterwards driven from it. Santa Anna has gathered another army, said to be some ten thousand strong, and seems to be making head again. Add to the foregoing an account of numerous murders and robberies, and you will have the sum of the war news for a week past.

Plan for Emancipation.—A Virginia slaveholder writes in the New York Observer, that he has adopted the following plan to deliver himself from slavery: "I open an account with each one of my slaves, charging him with the amount of his purchase—this bears a running interest of six per cent. At the end of each year from the date of his purchase, I credit him with the value of his year's service, (ascertained by the current value of like services in my neighborhood.) These credits are also entitled to a running interest of six per cent. per annum. When the credits to the slave thus entered with their seeming interest, amount to the sum I paid for him with its interest, he is free. Or, in other words, I allow my negroes to purchase themselves by the value of their labor, and at the price I pay for them.

"I respectfully suggest, if such a system was generally pursued by the owners of slaves, it would hasten that great desideratum—the banishment of slavery from our country—and my word for it, it will not make the slave less valuable to his master while he continues such."

Ragged School Union.—A London paper says that there are now about 30 free schools in connection with a society for the lowest and most destitute class of youths and children in London, attended by above 3,000 scholars, whose filthy appearance and depraved habits debar them from being admitted to any other school. These children are taught by above 300 teachers, who labor gratuitously. In some cases, these teachers pay the rent of the school-room and other expenses out of their own pocket, although it is often more than they can afford. This Union was instituted to assist them, and to open new schools in low neighborhoods, wherever such institutions seemed desirable. Already has pecuniary assistance been rendered to 25 schools, and also certain sums provided annually to aid in sustaining their operations. Annual subscriptions are therefore earnestly solicited, and especially at this time, for the object specified in the above paragraph, the establishment of a "Juvenile Refuge" in Westminster. In order to do this, even in the most economical way, £600 or £700 will be required.

Missionary Laborers in China.—The present number of Protestant missionaries is thirty-four, employed by five different societies, three American and two English. The Protestant missions are confined to the five open ports. The missionaries have opened a hospital at each station, where the natives may receive gratuitous medical treatment, and where they are in a position very favorable to the reception of religious instruction; and the missionaries embrace the opportunity to place good books in their hands, and by other means to impress the truths of Christianity upon them, which they carry abroad with them into all parts of the country. The Bible, and various religious books and tracts, have been translated into Chinese by the missionaries, and several schools have been established. There is an increasing desire for information on the subject of Christianity; and the missionaries now preach the gospel to five or six thousand in their own language. In addition to their instructions, thirty converted Chinese are already preaching the gospel and distributing books, from place to place, throughout the empire.

General Intelligence.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamship Hibernia, which arrived at Boston on the 3d inst., fifteen days later intelligence from Europe has been received. The following is a summary of the news:—

The financial difficulties in England have rather increased than diminished since our advices by the steamer preceding this. The newspapers are filled with lugubrious articles upon the subject. The Bank of England is beseiged with applications for discount, but it is chary of its accommodations.

The weather in England has been favorable to a good crop, and the accounts from the Continent are encouraging; and yet the price of grain rises. But, as the harvest approaches, a fall is confidently anticipated.

Deaths by famine in Ireland are happily becoming rare , but fever, in Kerry, Galway, Roscommon, and Longford, is thinning the population. In Enniskillen, Lurgan, and Belfast, fever is making fearful ravages.

Lord Besborough, late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, died early in May. The papers speak of his memory with respect; and under the circumstances in which Ireland is placed, it will be difficult to select as popular a successor.

A number of privates, and even corporals, had deserted from the English Guards for the purpose of going to Mexico, and taking a share in the warlike sport going on there.

That great Apostle of reform, Father Mathew, is likely to be appointed Bishop of Cork; a position demanded by his talents and services.

The Queen of Spain and her husband are on speaking terms again, and even persuade themselves to ride out together.

The Belgian journals state, that malignant typhus fever is very prevalent in the province of Flanders.

The Royal Government of Prague has decreed that the Jesuits shall not be permitted to reside in the capital of that kingdom.

The British Government has taken steps to send out Sir J. Richardson with his overland expedition to the North Pole.

The King of Denmark has granted the sum of £15,000 for the purpose of furnishing bread to the poor at a price below the market rate.

A great assemblage of German singers is about to be held at Bremen, which is to be attended by nine hundred vocalists.

Several German Engineers have arrived in Egypt, in order to make the necessary surveys for cutting a ship canal through the isthmus of Suez.

The quantities of wheat exported from the United Kingdom to foreign countries in the month of April amounted to 134,000 quarters; and the quantity simultaneously imported to 22,182 quarters.

At the end of April, the lakes and rivers near Stockholm, together with the port and roadstead, to the distance of four leagues, were so solidly frozen, that carts heavily laden could pass over.

The great lion of Europe is the Pope; he is making more converts to Liberalism than his predecessors have made to the Faith for centuries back. He has established a kind of representative body, composed of delegates from the different provinces, who are to assemble in Rome at stated periods, and discuss with his Holiness affairs of State. The measure has given unbounded hopes to the people, who expect to find in the successor of St. Peter another and better Rienzi—a true tribune of the people. Austria frowns on his proceedings, but as yet dares not interfere.

The London Herald says that on the 4th of April, one of those dreadful fires, which are the curse of Turkey, broke out in Bucharest, the capital of Wallachia. It was blowing a violent south-east wind at the time, and the fire, after raging most intensely for 24 hours, ceased for want of fuel, having consumed in its progress upward of 2,000 houses and 27 public establishments. The loss of property is immense, and has been variously estimated at from £1,000,000 to £2,500,000. To account for this apparently exaggerated loss, it is necessary to mention that not a single stone counting-house or fire-proof magazine resisted the intense fury of the flames. According to our correspondent, 500 miserable houses are all that remain of the once flourishing Bucharest.

A letter from Bombay, dated April 1st, says that there is great mystery respecting the death of Akhbar Khan, the notorious Wuzzeer of Cabal, who was first reported to have died of delirium tremens, but is now said to have been poisoned by order of his own father, who was unable to control his turbulence, and against whom he was preparing to raise a rebellion. The good Zuman Khan died at Cabul, of poison, about the same time.

The Moniteur Bedge of the 3d ult., states that the Chinese Repository gives an account of a civil war between the two neighboring departments of Charg-Ghao and Tseven-Chao, in the province of Gokein, in which 24,515 houses and 668 huts were pillaged and burnt to the ground and one hundred and thirty thousand six hundred and thirty-eight persons were killed or wounded.

The funeral of Sir Walter Scott, the last male of the House of the Scotts of Abbotsford, took place at Abbotsford in May. It was observed with much demonstration of popular sympathy, though considered private.

At or near the gap of the Green Swamp, in Brunswick county, N. J., a fight took place, about the first of last month, between a she-bear with cubs, and a four year old boar. The bear attacked the boar, with the design, probably, of obtaining fresh pork for her cubs—but there was a "slip between the cup and lip"—the boar killed the bear, and thus was the ordinary rule "in such case made and provided," reversed in favor of the swine.

The steamer Washington has five galvanized metallic life-boats, invented and patented by Mr. Joseph Francis, and made by machinery at the Novelty Works in this city. They have been tested and found to possess great strength combined with lightness, giving the qualities of safety and speed.

SUMMARY.

The brig Shamrock has brought over from Vera Cruz a trophy of the victory of Cerro Gordo more significant of the issue of the battle than any previous one we have seen. We allude to the cork leg of Gen. Santa Anna, which he left behind in his carriage when he mounted one of his mules and sought safety in flight. It is described to us as a very beautiful piece of work, worthy to be worn by a more valorous man than its owner. It belongs now to Company G. 4th Regiment Illinois Volunteers, who took the traveling carriage of the Mexican General, and is in the especial charge of A. Walden of said company.

The Baltimore Sun says that the territory of Minnesota is looking up—a large number of industrious New England settlers are going into it. Their mills are already making music in the wild woods. An immense amount of dressed lumber will be sent down from the Falls of St. Croix to St. Louis and New Orleans. Gen. Cushing and his Massachusetts regiment will settle in Min-ne-so-ta after the close of the war. It will be a favorite resort, too, for the soldiers of the New York and Pennsylvania, and many of the Western regiments, who will take their bounty lands in Minnesota, instead of selling them to a sutler for a mess of pottage.

Letters from Mosul, state that M. Layard, in continuing his researches at Nimrod, near Mosul, where he had already discovered some very fine bas-reliefs and a colossal lion, has since found a great many small bronze lions, some female ornaments for the neck, a copper helmet, a great variety of smaller articles in gold and silver, two hollow columns of great beauty, and a quadrangular pillar of a black material resembling porphyry, highly polished, and covered with inscriptions and designs. All these new discoveries are said to be in good preservation.

The Comercio of Montevideo of April 20, reports the murder of Don Manuel Rodriguez, Bolivian Minister at Buenos Ayres. He was found on the bank of the river before the house occupied by M. de Mandeville, the English Consul, with his skull cleft by a sabre blow. The deed is attributed to Rosas, who wished to free himself of a confidant too well acquainted with his secrets, and whom he suspected to have been indiscreet in relation to certain projects of retirement attributed to himself by rumor at Montevideo.

The physician of the Pennsylvania Insane Asylum has reported that among 936 patients, there were two insane for the dread of poverty; fright 14; religious excitement 14; political excitement 3; metaphysical speculation 1; want of exercise 1; engagement in a duel 9; want of employment 18; mortified pride 1; anxiety for wealth 1; use of tobacco 2; tight lacing, &c., &c.

The Utica and Schenectady Railroad raised its fare on the 1st inst., from $2 to $3 for a distance of 80 miles, or from 2 1-2 to 3 1-4 cents per mile. The Directors have felt constrained to justify this advance in a series of published resolutions, affirming that they reduced the fare in April of last year "in the expectation that the roads west of Utica would reduce their fare in proportion."

From January 1 to May 17, inclusive, 44,267 emigrants arrived at this port, and from May 17 to May 31, 16,047; total 60,667; during this time 680 died on the passage, and 1,250 were admitted to the Quarantine Hospital on their arrival, 1,040 of whom had the fever; of these 87 died. From April 2 to May 31, inclusive, the number of foreign passengers arriving here was 50,243.

A Bombay correspondent of the London Morning Herald estimates the gross charges of the three great Indian wars, between 1827 and 1847, at thirty-nine millions pounds sterling, or nearly one hundred and ninety-five millions of dollars! To these enormous expenditures are to be added the China war, Coorg, Gwalor, and Punjaub, for the expenses of which the English Government received some compensation.

The Barre Patriot published an account of the death at Brattleboro' of the celebrated English robber "Thunderbolt," who died there, it is said, under an assumed name, after practicing a number of years as a physician. The Brattleboro' Phœnix spoils this good story, by asserting that nothing of the kind has been heard of in Brattleboro'!

The Hartford Central Association of Congregational Ministers, at their annual meeting held at Bristol on the 1st inst., did themselves the honor to appoint Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, a colored man, and the pastor of the colored church (Congregational) Moderator for the ensuing year.

The materials already used in building the new House of Parliament in London, include eight to nine hundred thousand tons of stone, twenty-four millions of bricks, and five thousand tons of iron. So says an English paper.

About 1,000 new canal boats are estimated to have been added to the New York canals the present season, making, with those previously registered, say 3,500. These, at 80 feet in length to each, would make a line of boats over 53 miles in length!

A lady of West Newbury, Mass., lately sent three pecks of "nice" parched corn, and a couple of ears with explanation of the process of parching, to Queen Victoria, which she has been graciously pleased to accept.

The other day, in Cleveland, they decided the well-known Shaker case. It was a suit brought for wages for 15 years service, by a seceder from the brotherhood, a lady who had joined them when a child. The case was ably argued by D. Parish and B. B. Taylor, Esq., for the plantiff, and Messrs. Wood and Starkweather for defendants. The jury concluded, inasmuch as the plaintiff voluntarily joined the society, knowing its rules and regulations, (which are that all proceeds of labor by any of the fraternity go into a common fund, not to be withdrawn,) and had as voluntarily left, she was not entitled to damages.

A terrible fire has reduced to ashes the city of Rockemen, in Hanover. Not more than thirty or forty houses were left standing within the walls of the city. It spread with such frightful rapidity that the inhabitants none of them were able to save their effects. This place was principally noted for its beautiful church of great antiquity, which was built in the 14th century, and was destroyed. The unfortunate inhabitants are reduced to an almost hopeless state of destitution, and have been distributed about the neighboring towns.

Two large estates in England have fallen to American heirs; they are estimated to amount to five or six millions of pounds sterling each. The Townly estate is claimed by the Lawrence family in right of an ancestor who originally settled at Flushing, Long Island. The other is the estate of William Jennings, who died at an advanced age, a bachelor and intestate, leaving an estate which amounted in 1844 to over $30,000,000. Two individuals interested are Miss Burnett, now the wife of Mr. Lawrence, who becomes an heir of the Townly estate by her marriage connexion, and her cousin, William J. Burnett, one of the heirs of the Jennings estate by regular descent.

Lord Cowley, brother of the Duke of Wellington, died a few days ago in Paris; the Duke of Argyll on Monday morning, April 26; the Bishop of Sodor and Man, whose death was occasioned by sleeping in damp sheets in Liverpool; Lord Lurgan, and T. B. Martin, M. P., both by the famine-fever, which they caught in attending upon the suffering poor in Ireland. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland is thought to be lying at the point of death.

A drunken sailor leaped from one of the cars of the Norwich train on Friday of last week, while they were on their way to New York, going at the rate of 30 miles an hour. It was generally supposed by the passengers that he had either been killed or badly wounded, and they were therefore much surprised to see him rise from the ground, wholly unhurt, with the exception of a slight scratch—but perfectly sober.

Iron was first made in this country in 1815, in Virginia. In Orange county, N. Y., a furnace was erected in 1751, and 1,500 tons of pig and 1,000 of bar made annually. The great iron chain that crossed the Hudson during the Revolution, each link of which weighed 140 pounds, was made there. Peter Townsend made the first cannon there in 1816.

The Directors of the Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, under the recent act of the Legislature, have increased their capital to the sum of $780,000 to enable the Company to relay the track with heavy iron T rail, such increased stock to be distributed rateably to the stockholders, or such as shall hold stock on the 15th of June.

A tract distributor, in Philadelphia, has been bound over in the sum of $300 for his future good behavior, for disturbing the peace by standing, on the Sabbath, in front of the Universalist Church, Callowhill street, and distributing tracts, thereby gathering a crowd around him, to the great inconvenience of those going in and out of the church.

The skeletons of a pair of bucks have been found near Baton Rouge, (La.,) with their horns locked together. In the fierceness of their encounter the horns had sprung together, and defied all the efforts of the noble animals to separate them. The probability is, that, in exhaustation they lay down thus helplessly united, and pined away life in starvation.

The Legislature of Connecticut has rejected a proposed amendment to the State Constitution, striking the word "white" out of that instrument, so as to place negroes and whites on the same footing in regard to suffrage. The vote stood, yeas 142 to 68 nays—two-thirds being required.

The quarter of wheat or corn cited in accounts of the English markets, is generally estimated at eight bushels, and forty-eight one-hundredths of a bushel, or about eight bushels and a half. The quarter is a term used originally to express the fourth part of a load; grain or corn having been formerly, and is now frequently, estimated by the load.

DIED,

In Little Genesee, N. Y., April 8th, 1847, of typhus fever, Mrs. Eliza C. Boss, wife of Joseph Boss, and daughter of Ezekiel Crandall, in the 25th year of her age. Of the subject of this notice it is just to say, that in her character there was a rare assemblage of those virtues which adorn the wife, the mother, and the Christian. The place which she held in the affections of her family, of society, and of the church, was such as to render her death an occasion of deep mourning. But she, "being dead, yet speaketh." Her memory will live in the heart of every admirer of eminent piety.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Alfred, June 23, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

ORIGIN OF SLAVERY.

Mr. Bancroft, in the first volume of his history of the United States, gives an account of the early traffic of Europeans in slaves. In the middle ages, the Venetians purchased white men, Christians, and others, and sold them to the Saracens in Sicily and Spain. In England, the Anglo Saxon nobility sold their servants as slaves to foreigners. The Portuguese first imported negro slaves from Western Africa into Europe, in 1442. Spain soon engaged in the traffic, and negro slaves abounded in some places of that kingdom. After America was discovered, the Indians of Hispaniola were imported into Spain, and made slaves. The Spaniards visited the coast of North America, and kidnapped thousands of the Indians, whom they transported into slavery in Europe and the West Indies.

Columbus himself enslaved five hundred native Americans, and sent them into Spain, that they might be publicly sold at Seville. The practice of selling North American Indians into foreign bondage, continued for nearly two centuries. Negro slavery was first introduced into America by Spanish slaveholders, who emigrated with their negroes. A royal edict of Spain authorized negro slavery in America, in 1503. King Ferdinand himself sent from Seville, fifty slaves to labor in the mines. In 1511 the direct traffic in slaves between Africa and Hisponiola was enjoined by a royal ordinance. Las Casas, who had seen the Indians vanish away like dew before the cruelties of the Spaniards, suggested the expedient that the negroes, who alone could endure severe toils, might be still further employed. This was in 1518. The mistaken benevolence of Las Casas extended the slave trade which had been previously established.

Sir John Hawkins was the first Englishman that engaged in the slave trade. In 1625 he transported a large cargo of Africans to Hispaniola. In 1567 another expedition was prepared, and Queen Elizabeth protected and shared in the traffic. Hawkins, in one of his expeditions, set fire to an African city, and out of 8000 inhabitants, succeeded in seizing two hundred and fifty. James Smith, of Boston, and Thomas Keyser, first brought upon the colonies the guilt of participating in the African slave trade. In 1645 they imported a cargo of negroes from Africa.

Throughout Massachusetts, the cry of justice was raised against them, as malefactors and murderers; the guilty men were committed for the offence, and the representatives of the people ordered the negroes to be restored to their native country at the public charge. At the latter period, there were both Indian and negro slaves in Massachusetts. In 1620 a Dutch ship entered James River, and landed twenty negroes for sale. This is the epoch of the introduction of negro slavery in Virginia. For many years, the Dutch were principally concerned in the slave trade in the market of Virginia.

DESTRUCTION OF POMPEII.

Pompeii, the connecting link between the ancient and modern world, almost miraculous alike in its destruction in the year 79, and in its re-discovery in 1755, awakens feelings of curiosity in the breast of every one who has read of its extraordinary fate.

By an unusual good fortune, we are in possession of a faithful narrative, furnished by an eye-witness of the catastrophe which overwhelmed Pompeii. It is contained in two letters of Pliny the younger to Tacitus.

In a second letter, he says: "The letter which, in compliance with your request, I wrote to you concerning the death of my uncle, has raised, it seems, your curiosity to know what terrors and dangers attended me while I continued at Misenum.

"There had been, for many days before, some shocks of an earthquake, which the less surprised us as they are extremely frequent in Campania; but they were so particularly violent that night, that they not only shook every thing about us, but seemed indeed to threaten total destruction. My mother flew to my chamber, where she found me rising, in order to awaken her. We went out into a small court belonging to the house, which separated the sea from the buildings. Though it was now morning, the light was exceedingly faint and languid; the buildings all around us tottered, and though we stood upon ground, yet, as the place was narrow and confined, there was no remaining there without certain and great danger; we therefore resolved to quit the town. The people followed us in the utmost consternation, and, as to a mind distracted with terror, every suggestion seems more prudent than its own, pressed in great crowds about us in our way out. Being got at a convenient distance from the houses, we stood still, in the midst of a most dangerous and dreadful scene. The sea seemed to roll back upon itself, and to be driven from its banks by the convulsive motion of the earth; it is certain at least that the shore was considerably enlarged, and several sea animals were left upon it. On the other side a black and dreadful cloud, bursting with an igneous serpentine vapor, darted out a long train of fire, resembling flashes of lightning, but much larger. Soon afterwards the cloud seemed to descend, and cover the whole ocean; as indeed it entirely hid the island of Capreæ and the promontory of Misenum. My mother strongly conjured me to make my escape at any rate, which, as I was young, I might easily do; but I absolutely refused to leave her, and taking her by the hand, I led her on; she complied with great reluctance, and not without many reproaches to herself for retarding my flight. The ashes now began to fall upon us, though in no great quantity. I turned my head, and observed behind us a thick smoke, which came rolling after us like a torrent. I proposed, while we had yet any light, to turn out of the high road, lest she should be pressed to death in the dark by the crowd that followed us. We had scarce stepped out of the path, when darkness overspread us, not like that of a cloudy night, or when there is no moon, but of a room when it is shut up, and all the lights extinct. Nothing then was to be heard but the shrieks of women, the screams of children, and the cries of men; some calling for their children, others for their parents, others for their husbands, and only distinguishing each other by their voices; one lamenting his own fate, another that of his family; some wishing to die from the very fear of dying; some lifting their hands to the gods; but the greater part imagining that the last and eternal night was come, which was to destroy the gods and the world together. At last this dreadful darkness was dissipated by degrees, like a cloud of smoke; the real day returned, and even the sun appeared, though very faintly, and as when an eclipse is coming on. Every object that presented itself to our eyes seemed changed, being covered over with white ashes, as with a deep snow. We returned to Misenum, where we refreshed ourselves as well as we could, and passed an anxious night between hope and fear."

PREPARING WOOL FOR MARKET.

Mr. Morrell, in the "American Shepherd," gives particular directions in regard to preparing wool for market. He recommends that the fleeces, as fast as they are taken from the sheep, should be spread on a table, the outside uppermost. The fleece is then carefully spread out, the ragged portions from the neck, head, and skirts, separated, and then made as compact as possible, by pushing the sides toward the center. "The loose wool is then thrown upon the fleece, which is followed by turning over the sides and ends so as to form an oblong stripe, say about two to three feet long, and one and a half wide, which is moved to the front edge of the table. He then commences to roll the long stripe, aided by a boy at the other end of it, who lay their arms flat from the elbow to press the wool as the rolling proceeds, till the stripe is reduced to six or nine inches in width, depending on the size of the fleece. The boy then mounts upon the table, and each commences rolling from the end of the stripe till the parts meet, when the boy rolls his portion on the top of the assistant's, firmly pressing it till the twine is passed round both ways and tied, which effectually secures the fleece, no matter how roughly handled. After it receives a slight pressure it presents somewhat the form of a cheese." He earnestly enjoins that the fleeces should be thoroughly cleansed, and nothing put within them but "clean things."

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. Whitney has been lecturing in this city upon the expediency of making a railroad from Lake Michigan to the Pacific Ocean. Mr. Whitney asks Congress to set apart a strip of the public lands 60 miles wide, from the lake to the ocean. The land for 800 miles, he says, is good, but for the remainder of the distance it is worthless. The road will be 2,400 miles in length, and its cost is estimated at $70,000,000. If Mr. Whitney can, by the toil of all his life, induce Congress to produce the means to accomplish this great work, who can hesitate to say, by all means let him have them—let him try? If he fails, we lose nothing—the lands still belong to the nation—if he succeeds, it is all gain to us—it will be an addition of so much as the road costs to the actual capital of our country, and give us the entire control of the commerce of the world.

A single glance at the results of this great work, says the Albany Argus, must convince every one of its vast importance. With this road completed, at 30 miles per hour for the railroad, we can reach the Pacific, at the Columbia river or San Francisco, in 5 1-2 days, allowing almost a day for delays. Thence to Japan, is but 4,000 miles, which with steamers at 12 miles per hour, would be reached in 14 1-2 days from New York—from the Pacific coast to China 5,400 miles, requiring but 20 days, or from New York, but 25 1-2 days. The sea voyage around the Cape 16 or 17,000 miles, now requires from 100 to 160 days. From the Pacific coast to Australia, 6,000 miles, could be reached by steam in 22 days, or from New York in 27 1-2 days. The sea voyage, more than 14,000 miles, consumes from 100 to 130 days. From the Pacific coast to Singapore, 6,660 miles, reached by steam in 25 days, or from New York in 30 1-2 days; now, the sea voyage, nearly 15,000 miles, 100 to 130 days.

The magnificent results promised by this work overwhelm the mind, it is true; but they are comprehensible nevertheless, and appear to be within our grasp. Mr. Whitney seems to have the surest foundation to build upon—the earth, the wilderness earth—and we all know that when the labor of man is applied to it, with such means as a railroad for getting its products to market, the reward is sure and rich.

"MASON AND DIXON'S LINE."

What was the origin and purpose of it? We hear it frequently spoken of as connected with slavery, and as originally relating to that subject. Nothing can be farther from the truth. At the time that line was established, slavery existed on both sides of it. A brief account of its origin may be of some interest just at this time.

As early as the year 1682, a dispute arose between William Penn and Lord Baltimore, respecting the constructions of their respective grants, of what now form the States of Delaware and Maryland. Lord Baltimore claimed to and including the 40th degree of north latitude; and William Penn mildly, yet firmly resisted the claim. The debatable land was one degree of 69 English miles on the south of Pennsylvania, and extended west as far as the State itself. The matter was finally brought into the Court of Chancery, in England, and, after tedious delays, on the 15th day of May, 1750, Lord Chancellor Hardwicke made a decree awarding costs against Lord Baltimore, and directing that commissioners should be appointed to mark the boundaries between the parties. The commissioners so appointed met at Newcastle, on the 15th day of November, 1755, and, not being able to agree, separated. After a further litigation and delay, the whole matter was settled by mutual agreement between the surviving heirs of the original litigants.

In the year 1761, Mr. Charles Mason, of the Royal Observatory, was sent to Pennsylvania, with all the needful astronomical instruments, to measure a degree of latitude. That duty he performed, and a report of his proceedings was made to the Royal Society of London, for the year 1767.

This Mr. Mason and Jeremiah Dixon were appointed to run the line in dispute, which appears to have been done in conformity with the Lord Chancellor's decree. This is the famous "Mason and Dixon's line," and the boundary between Pennsylvania on the south and Maryland on the north. Any one desirous of more detailed information will find it in Douglass' History of America, published in Boston, in 1751; Proud's History of Pennsylvania; the Memoirs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania; and I. Vesey's Reports, 352, Penn, Lord Baltimore.

Little did the actors in this matter think that, in aftertimes, the line established with so much tronble and expense would ever be connected with a subject calculated to shake a great nation to its centre.

◆

DWELLINGS FOR THE WORKING CLASSES.—Where ground room is scarce, as in this city, the following plan, described in the Liverpool Mercury as being in operation on the opposite bank of the Mersey, might be tried with advantage:—

The buildings are erected on the plan of the houses in Scotland, each tenant occupying a "flat," and as they are four stories in height, eight families are accommadated in each house. Of course, there is a common staircase for the use of the eight families; but the stairs once ascended, each residence is quite distinct. Most of the cottages consist of three apartments, a kitchen and two bed-rooms. The kitchen is fiitted up with a grate, oven, &c. There is also a small scullery, containing a sink-stone, water-pipe, with the water constantly on, bunker for coal, shelves, &c. Adjoining is a water-closet, through which, to prevent offensive effluvia, all water from the pipe and sink-stone passes, and there is a dust-hole in each scullery, into which sweepings, cinders, and all rubish may be brushed, the occupants having no farther trouble with them. The bed-rooms are supplied with iron bedsteads and wash-stands. Each room has a ventilator at the bottom and top, and the windows are so constructed that they can be easily opened for the farther admission of air. There is also a cupboard in every cottage, and all the apartments are neatly papered, painted, and fitted up with shelving, iron hooks for clothes, &c. The building is fire-proof, there being no possibility of the fire in one flat extending. In fact, beyond consuming the furniture in the flat, little damage could be done to the building by any fire which broke out. The roof of each house is flat, and covered with asphalte. It is also surrounded by a parapet wall, several feet high, and will form an excellent play-ground for children, who will thus be placed beyond the danger of accidents from horses and carts. It may also be used for the drying of clothes, and the workmen, at the close of their day's labor may, in the summer time at least, spend an hour or two in smoking their pipes, in reading, or in enjoying the extensive prospect before them.

EXECUTION OF ANNE BOLEYN.—This unfortunate Princess, who consented to marry that Blue Beard King, Harry the Eighth, after he had already killed something less than half a dozen of his former wives because he was tired of them, was humanely allowed for her executioner, a Frenchman of Calais, who was supposed to be uncommonly skillful in cutting off heads. It is probable, that the following incident may have been proved by tradition in France, from the account of the executioner himself:—Anne Boleyn being on the scaffold, would not consent to have her eyes bandaged, saying that she had no fear of death. All that the minister who assisted in the execution could obtain, was that she would shut her eyes. But as she was opening them every moment, the executioner was fearful of missing his aim, and was obliged to invent an expedient to behead the Queen. He drew off his shoes, and approached her silently; while he was at her left hand, another person advanced at her right, made a great noise while walking; so that this circumstance drew the attention of Anne. She turned her face from the executioner, who was enabled by this circumstance to strike the fatal blow without being disarmed by that spirit of affecting resignation which shone in the eye of the lovely but unfortunate victim. THE TWO SPRINGS—A Fable for the Young.—Two springs which issued from the same mountain, began their course together; one of them took her way in a silent and gentle flowing stream, while the other rushed along with a noisy and rapid current. "Sister," said the latter, "at the rate you move, you will probably be dried up before you advance much farther; whereas, for myself, I shall probably become navigable within two or three hundred furlongs, and, after distributing commerce and wealth wherever I flow, I shall majestically proceed to pay my tribute to the ocean. So farewell, and patiently submit yourself to your fate." Her quiet sister made no reply; but calmly descended to the meadow below, and patiently proceeding on her way, she increased her strength by numberless little rills, which she collected in her progress, till, at length, she was enabled to rise into a considerable river; while the proud stream, who had the vanity to depend solely upon her own sufficiency, continued a shallow brook; and was glad, at last, to be helped forward by throwing herself into the arms of her despised sister.

ACQUIRED TALENT.—The following story is recorded of Cecco d'Arcoli and Dante:—"They were discussing the subject of natural and acquired talent, and Cecco maintained that nature was more potent than art, while Dante asserted the contrary. To prove this principle, the great Italian bard referred to his cat, which, by repeated practice, he had taught to hold a candle in its paw, while he supped or read. Cecco desired to witness the experiment, and came not unprepared for his purpose; when Dante's cat was performing its part, Cecco lifted up the lid of a pot which he had filled with mice; the creature of art instantly showed the weakness of an art merely acquired, and dropping the candle, flew on the mice with all its instinctive propensity. Dante was himself disconcerted; and it was adjudged that the advocate for the occult principle of natural faculties had gained his cause."

ACCOMMODATING.—The Heyford Journal, as quoted by the Bath Journal, states that 'a novel and interesting feature has lately been introduced into Trevethin Church, Monmouthshire, under the sanction of the Bishop of the diocese. A baptistry, measuring 8 feet by 3 feet 6 inches and 4 feet deep—has been placed near the south door, wherein, it is intended, should any person—(and in this district there are many such)—having conscientious objections to the Sacrament of Baptism by sprinkling, to perform the ceremony of immersion.'

The Washington (Pa.) Patriot says that a small colony of emancipated slaves passed through that place on their way to Ohio. There were forty-nine of them, and they stated that they had been emancipated on the Saturday previous, by their owner, Esq. Cochran, in Hampshire County, Va., who gave them $500 to pay their expenses, and started them off for Ohio. There appeared to be three or four families of them, and they were well equipped for traveling—a four-horse wagon carrying the furniture, and another wagon the women and children. They were bound for Fayette Co., Ohio.

The London Times of April 30, states, that on a previous day, a complaint was made against Wellesley Pole Long, Earl of Morrington, by Helena, his Countess, before Mr. Bingham, the Marlboro magistrate, that she married his lordship in 1828, was now without the means of subsistence, and refused any support by him. She trembled violently, but swore to her state of destitution, and brought evidence of its truth with her. The relieving overseer of St. George's, Hanover square said that the parish authorities had done all they could to avoid this. Mr. Bingham first ordered a warrant to be made out to bring lord M. before him, but finally determined to send a summons in the first instance.

CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE.

REV. J. T. HEADLEY, EDITOR.

THE CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE, formerly under the care of Rev. D. Mead, commences its fourth volume under the editorship of Rev. J. T. Headley, author of "Napoleon and his Marshals," "Sacred Mountains," "Letters from Italy," &c. We hazard nothing in saying that this Magazine, so deservedly popular hitherto, is destined to fill a large place in public estimation; that it will not only maintain its present enviable distinction, but earn to itself a far higher popularity, and become the companion of many a circle to which it is now a stranger, gladdening by its presence, while it exerts an influence pure, elevating, and healthful. The Editor will bend his energies to make this the most popular Magazine of the day, and while he avails himself of articles from the best writers, he will draw freely from his own exhaustless store.

It will continue to maintain its high moral tone, and nothing will be admitted into its columns which will minister to the corrupt passions and tendencies of youth, or which "the author dying would wish to blot."

The design of the Editor and Publisher is to present a Magazine containing all the facination and interest of the lighter Periodicals, while at the same time it moves in a different path, and is not exposed to the same objections. It is issued monthly, containing 32 pages of original matter, printed on fine paper, in handsome covers, with a splendid steel engraving, and a beautiful colored flower, and music, to each number, and got up in every respect in the best style of the art, making a yearly volume of 384 pages, full of choice illustrations, and forming a handsome ornament to the Parlor Table, or a rich and valuable present to a friend.

☞ Price, two dollars a year. Three copies for five dollars.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.

THE GERMAN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

BY WM. M. FAHNESTOCK, M. D., BORDENTOWN, N. J.

About the year 1694, a controversy arose in the Pr[illegible]nt churches of Germany and Holland, in which vigorous attempts were made to reform some of the errors of the church, and with the design of promoting a more practical, vital religion. This party, at the head of which was the pious Spener, ecclesiastical superintendent of the court of Saxony, was opposed, violently, and after having bestowed upon them, in ridicule, the epithet of Pietists, they were suppressed in their public ministrations and lectures, by the Consistory of Wittemberg. Notwithstanding they were prohibited from promulgating, publicly, their views and principles, it led to inquiry among the people. This state of things continuing, many learned men of different universities left Europe and emigrated to America, whilst others remained and persevered in the prosecution of the work they had commenced with so much dilligence. In the year 1708, Alexander Mack, of Schriesheim, and seven others in Schwartzenau, Germany, met together, regularly, to examine carefully and impartially, the doctrines of the New Testament, and to ascertain what are the obligations it imposes on professing Christians; determining to lay aside all preconceived opinions and traditional observances. The result of their inquiries terminated in the formation of the society now called the Dunkers, or First-day German Baptists. Meeting with much persecution as they grew into some importance, as all did who had independence enough to differ from the popular church, some were driven into Holland, some to Crefelt in the Duchy of Cleves, and the mother church voluntarily removed to Serustervin, in Friesland; and from thence emigrated to America in 1719, and dispersed to different parts of Pennsylvania, to Germantown, Skippack, Oley, Conestoga, and elsewhere. They formed a church at Germantown in 1723, under the charge of Peter Becker. The church grew rapidly in this country, receiving members from the Banks of the Wissahiccon and from Lancaster county, and soon after a church was established at Muehlbach, (Mill Creek,) in that county. Of this community was one Conrad Beissel, a native of Germany. He had been a Presbyterian, and fled from the persecutions of that period. Wholly intent upon seeking out the true obligations of the word of God, and the proper observance of the rites and ceremonies it imposes, stripped of human authority, he conceived that there was an error among the Dunkers, in the observance of the day for the Sabbath—that the seventh day was the command of the Lord God, and that day being established and sanctified, by the Great Jehovah, for ever, and no change, nor authority for change, ever having been announced to man, by any power suficient to set aside the solemn decree of the Almighty—a decree which he declared that he had sanctified for ever—he felt it to be his duty to contend for the observance of that day. About the year 1725, he published a tract entering into a discussion of this point, which created some excitement and disturbance in the Society at Mill Creek; upon which he retired from the settlement, and went secretly to a cell on the banks of the Cocalico, (in the same county,) which had previously been occupied by one Elimelich, a hermit. His place of retirement was unknown for a long time to the people he had left, and when discovered, many of the Society at Mill Creek, who had become convinced of the truth of his proposition for the observance of the Sabbath, settled around him in solitary cottages. They adopted the original Sabbath—the seventh day—for public worship, in the year 1728; which has ever since been observed by their descendants, even unto the present day.

In the year 1732, the solitary life was changed into a conventicle one, and a Monastic Society was established as soon as the first buildings erected for the purpose were finished—May, 1733—constituting, with the buildings subsequently erected by the community, the irregular, enclosed village of Ephrata. The habit of the Capuchins, or White Friars, was adopted by both the brethren and sisters; which consisted of a shirt, trowsers, and vest, with a long white gown and cowl, of woolen web in winter, and linen in summer. That of the sisters differed only in the substitution of petticoats for trowsers, and some little peculiarity in the shape of the cowl. Monastic names were given to all who entered the cloister. Onesimus (Israel Eckerlin) was constituted Prior, who was succeeded by Jæbez, (Peter Miller,) and the title of Father—spiritual father—was bestowed by the Society upon Beissel, whose monastic name was Friedsam; to which the brethren afterwards added Gottrecht—implying, together, Peaceable God-right. In the year 1740, there were thirty-six single brethren in the cloister, and thirty-five sisters; and at one time, the Society, including the members living in the neighborhood, numbered nearly three hundred.

The community was a republic, in which all stood upon perfect equality and freedom. No monastic vows were taken, neither had they any written covenant, as is common in the Baptist churches. The New Testament was their confession of faith, their code of laws, and their church discipline. The property which belonged to the Society, by donation, and the labor of the single brethren and sisters, was common stock; but none were obliged to throw in their own property, or give up any of their possessions. The Society was supported by the income of the farm, grist-mill, paper-mill, oil-mill, fulling-mill, and the labor of the brethren and sisters in the cloister.

The principles of the Seventh-day Baptist Society of Ephrata, but little understood, generally, and much misrepresented abroad, may be summed up in a few words, viz:—

1. They receive the Bible as the only rule of faith, covenant, and code of laws for church government. They do not admit the least license with the letter and spirit of the Scriptures, and especially the New Testament—do not allow one jot or tittle to be added or rejected in the administration of the ordinances, but practice them precisely as they are instituted and made an example by Jesus Christ in his word.

2. They believe in the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the trinity of the Godhead; having unfurled this distinctive banner on the first page of a hymn book which they had printed for the Society as early as 1739, viz: "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one."

3. They believe that salvation is of grace, and not of works; and they rely solely on the merits and atonement of Christ. They believe, also, that that atonement is sufficient for every creature—that Christ died for all who will call upon his name, and offer fruits meet for repentance; and that all who come unto Christ are drawn of the Father.

4. They contend for the observance of the original Sabbath, believing that it requires an authority equal to the Great Institutor to change any of his decrees. They maintain that, as he blessed and sanctified that day for ever, which has never been abrogated in his word, nor any Scripture to be found to warrant that construction, it is still as binding as it was when it was reïterated amid the thunders of Mount Sinai. To alter so positive and hallowed a commandment of the Almighty, they consider would require an explicit edict from the Great Jehovah. It was not foretold by any of the prophets, that with the new dispensation there would be any change in the Sabbath, or any of the commandments. Christ, who declared himself the Lord of the Sabbath, observed the seventh day, and made it the day of his special ministrations; nor did he authorize any change. The Apostles have not assumed to do away with the original Sabbath, or give any command to substitute the first for the seventh day. The circumstance of the disciples meeting together to break bread on the first day, which is sometimes used as a pretext for observing that day, is simply what the seventh day people do at this day. The sacrament was not administered by Christ nor by the Apostles on the Sabbath, but on the first day, counting as the people of Ephrata still do, the evening and the morning to make the day.

5. They hold to the apostolic baptism—believers' baptism—and administer trine immersion, with the laying on of hands and prayer, while the recipient yet remains kneeling in the water.

6. They celebrate the Lord's Supper at night, in imitation of our Saviour;—washing at the same time each other's feet, agreeably to his command and example, as is expressly stated in the 13th chapter of the Evangelist John, 14th and 15th verses. This is attended to on the evening after the close of the Sabbath—the Sabbath terminating at sunset of the seventh day; thus making the supper an imitation of that instituted by Christ, and resembling also the meeting of the Apostles on the first day to break bread, which has produced much confusion in some minds in regard to the proper day to be observed.

Celibacy they consider a virtue, but never require it, nor do they take any vows in reference to it. They never prohibited marriage and lawful intercourse between the sexes, as is stated by some writers, but when two concluded to be joined in wedlock, they were aided by the Society. It (celibacy) was urged as being more conducive to a holy life, for Paul saith: "They that are after the flesh, do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit." And again: "He that is unmarried, careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord; but he that is married, careth for the things of the world, how he may please his wife. There is this difference between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy, both in body and in spirit; but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband;—I say therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I." And they also consider that those who sacrifice the lusts of the flesh, and live pure virgins, for Christ's sake, will be better fitted to, and will enjoy the first places in glory. St. John, in the Revelation, says: "I looked up, and lo, a Lamb stood on Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps; and they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders; and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they that are not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and unto the Lamb." This was a fond, cherished subject, and was constantly inculcated. It may be considered the ground of the institution at Ephrata, whose prosperity and advancement was dependent on its being properly appreciated. It was sedulously kept before them, by their ministers, in its brightest colors; and all the Scripture, which was not a little, was brought to bear upon it, to inspire them with perseverance and faithfulness. It promised capabilities which others could not possess in the divine life, and also held out the brighter rewards of heaven. It was a prolific subject for many of their hymns, which seemed to hallow and sanctify virginity. I have seen one, an occasional hymn, for they multiplied new hymns for every particular meeting or celebration—one of which is very beautiful indeed, and which was a prophecy respecting Ephrata—a prophecy which has been verified. It invokes steadfastness of purpose among the brethren and sisters of the Cloister, and laments the downfall, in prospect of any declension, in most affecting strains. The following is a stanza from the hymn above alluded to:

> Auch Ephrata, wird hier so lange stehen,
> Als Jungfrauen darinn am Reihen gehen;
> Wann aber dieser Adel wird auf hœren,
> So wird die Rache diesen Ort verstœren.

They do not approve of paying their ministers a salary. They think the gospel was sent without money and without price, and that every one called to preach the word, should do it from the love of the cause, and in this matter to follow the advice and example of Paul. However, they never had any scruples in affording their ministers with such supplies of life as they possess themselves, and they gave them the same support the other bethren enjoyed. Individual members may give, as presents, what to them seemeth fit, in money, goods, &c.; and whenever the minister travels for religious purposes, if needy, he is supplied with money out of the treasury to bear his expenses.

These are the great and leading tenets and principles of the German Seventh-day Baptists of Pennsylvania. There are many other minor points of not sufficient importance to enumerate in detail, which may better be adverted to in replying to some errors which writers have saddled upon them, and which cannot, properly, be considered as tenets and principles, but only as peculiarities. I cannot, here, go into an exposition of the peculiar views of this people, nor enter into the minutia of the manner of performing all the ceremonies and ordinances. I would merely remark in regard to their regular worship, that they commence with a hymn, then prayers, (kneeling,) and after a second hymn, the minister requests one of the brethren (any one) to read a chapter out of the Scriptures, which they are at liberty to choose from any part of the Bible—he then expounds the chapter; tracing its bearings and historical connection with the prophets and the New Testament; after which the Exhorters enforce the duties it inculcates, and should any member, brother or single sister, be able to improve the subject still farther, or have any remarks relative to the topic to make, is at perfect freedom to express them. Prayer and singing, with the reading of a psalm, instead of a benediction, conclude the service. At another time, and in another place, I may enter into a full exposition of the principles and ordinances of this Society, and exhibit at length their doctrines, and the grounds on which they are predicted.

This Society has been much misrepresented by writers who know but little of them, and mostly draw on their imaginations and the libels of the persecutors of the Society, for the principles of this people. In a short notice of Ephrata in Gordon's Gazetteer of Pennsylvania, drawn from an account published by one not very friendly to the Society, in the Transactions of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, several errors were inadvertently and unconsciously promulgated by the respected author. The good and devout Founder is represented as a crafty, designing usurper of ecclesiastical authority, and as assuming titles, honors, and power. This is not the place to enter into a full refutation of these charges, which are without foundation, and could only have originated in gross ignorance, or shameful wickedness. Beissel, who had been educated in the Calvinistic faith, left Europe that he might enjoy freedom of opinion in America; he withdrew from the Society of Dunkers at Mill Creek, because his views on the Sabbath produced some dissension; and after he was drawn from his seclusion by love for those who came and settled around him, and entreated his ministry, he devoted his whole life and property to advance the welfare of the Society; giving the management of the secular affairs entirely into the hands of others, while he gave his attention wholly to instructing them in the Word of Life, and establishing the gospel in its truth and simplicity. The title of "Father," and "Gottrecht," were conferred upon him by his brethren, and was not a presumptuous assumption of Beissel. Their principles are equally misrepresented in that as well as most other English accounts of the Society. In Buck's Theological Dictionary, we are told, that "the principal tenets appear to be these: that future happiness is only obtained by penance and outward mortification in this life; and that Jesus Christ, by his meritorious sufferings, became the Redeemer of mankind in general, so each individual of the human race, by a life of abstinence and restraint, may work out his own salvation. Nay, they go so far as to admit of works of supererogation, and declare that a man may do much more than he is in justice or equity obliged to do, and that his superabundant works may therefore be applied to the salvation of others;" and a great many other things equally ridiculous and unfounded. The account in that book is a tissue of misrepresentation, unworthy a place in a work of that character.

It is not one of their customs to wear long beards, as is frequently said of them; this is more the case with the Dunkers and Menonists. They are often represented as living on vegetables, the rules of the Society forbidding meats for the purpose of mortifying the natural appetite, and also as lying on wooden benches, with billets of wood for pillows, as an act of penance. The true reason and explanation of this matter is, that both were done from considerations of economy. Their circumstances were very restricted, and their undertaking great. They studied the strictest simplicity and economy in all their arrangements; wooden flagons, wooden goblets, turned wooden trays, were used in administering the communion; and the same goblets are still in use, though they have been presented with more costly ones. Even the plates, off which they ate, were octangular pieces of thin poplar boards, their forks and candlesticks were of wood, and also every other article that could be made of that material, was used by the whole community. After they were relieved from the pressure of their expensive enterprise in providing such extensive accommodations, they enjoyed the cot for repose, and many others of the good things of life; though temperance in eating and drinking was scrupulously regarded. And it may be well to remark, there were not any ardent spirits used in building the whole village, the timber of which was hewn, and all the boards sawed by hand during the winter months. The Society was a social community, and not a cold, repulsive, bigoted compact; though it has been sometimes represented as reserved and distant, and even not giving an answer when addressed on the road. Morgan Edwards, in his "Materials towards a History of the American Baptists," (published in 1770,) bears a different testimony; he says: "From the uncouth dress, the recluse and ascetic life of these people, sour aspects and rough manners might be expected; but on the contrary, a smiling innocence and meekness grace their countenances, and a softness of tone and accent adorn their conversation, and make their deportment gentle and obliging. Their singing is charming; partly owing to the pleasantness of their voices, the variety of parts they carry on together, and the devout manner of performance." And of Beissel, he gives the following character, which he says he had from one who knew him well. "He was very strict in his morals, and practiced self-denial to an uncommon degree. Enthusiastic and whimsical he certainly was; but an apparent devoutness and sincerity ran through all his oddities. He was not an adept in any of the liberal arts and sciences except music, in which he excelled. He composed and set to music (in two, four, five, and seven parts) a volume of hymns, another of anthems. He published a dissertation on the fall of man, in the mysterious strain; also a volume of letters. He left behind him several books in manuscript, curiously written and embellished." One writer has made a remark, as invidious as it is unfounded, on the sisterhood, in stating that "the sisters, it would seem, took little delight in their state of single blessedness, and two only (aged and ill-favored ones we may suppose) continued steadfast in renunciation of marriages." They never had to renounce matrimony on entering the convent; and but four or five of the whole number that have been in the cloister, in the period of one hundred and ten years, left and were married. One of these married a gentleman in the city of Philadelphia, and afterwards much regretted her change, as did all others who left the "stille einsamkeit." The rest continued steadfast in that state of single blessedness, and now, save those remaining in the convent, lie beside each other in the beautiful cemetery in the foreground of the village. BAPTISTS IN LONDON.

The Christian Chronicle says that the number of Baptists in London and its environs, is not large compared with its vast population of nearly two millions. The present number of churches is 97—the number of members 13,326, giving an average of nearly 140 members to each church. Of these churches, nine were formed previous to the year 1700—in the following years: 1633, 1638, 1644, 1657, 1664, 1674, 1675, 1691, 1692. Of these, two are Seventh-day Baptists—one formed in 1664, and now containing five members, the other formed in 1675, having at present six members. The other seven contain an average of 260 members at present. Twenty-one were formed between the years 1700 and 1800—as follows: 1713, 1719, 1720, 1737, 1754, 1760, 1773—one-third of the number during the first three-fourths of the century—from 1780 to 1790, eight; from 1790 to 1800, six. This shows that there was a rapid increase from the year 1775. Why they increased at that time, may be an interesting question. We, however, have not the means of settling it, at hand. During the next ten years, from 1800 to 1810 only three churches were formed; from 1810, to 1820, thirteen; from 1820 to 1830, thirteen; from 1830 to 1840, nineteen; from 1840 to the present, eighteen.

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.

Life is beautifully compared to a fountain fed by a thousand streams that perishes if one be dried. It is a silver cord twisted with a thousand strings that part asunder if one be broken. Frail and thoughtless mortals are surrounded by innumerable dangers, which make it much more strange that they escape so long, than that they almost all perish suddenly at last. We are encompassed with accidents every day to crush the mouldering tenement that we inhabit. The seeds of disease are planted in our constitutions by nature. The earth and the atmosphere whence we draw the breath of life is impregnated with death—health is made to operate its own destruction! The food that nourishes contains the elements of decay; the soul that animates it by a vivifying fire tends to wear it out by its own action; death lurks in ambush along our paths. Notwithstanding this is the truth, so palpably confirmed by the daily examples before our eyes, how little do we lay it to heart! We see our friends and neighbors perishing among us, but how seldom does it occur to our thoughts that our knell shall, perhaps, give the next fruitless warning to the world?

RAPIDITY OF TIME.

The moments fly—a minute's gone!
The minutes fly—an hour is run!
The day is fled—the night is here!
Thus flies a week, a month, a year.

A year, alas! how soon it's past!
Who knows but this may be my last!
A few short years, how soon they're fled,
And we are numbered with the dead.

SINGULAR RACE OF PEOPLE.

The Christian Observer of Calcutta gives a notice of a singular race of people, called the Cathies, who inhabit a part of Guzerat. They are worshipers of the sun as are the adoring Parsees:—

"These people are supposed by some to be the ancient Cathies; who in the time of Alexander's invasion occupied a portion of the Pojaub, near the confluence of the five rivers. Among the Cathies there is no distinction of caste. Besides priests they have an official class of persons called bards, who possess authority almost equal to that of the Druids. They become security for the payment of debts, the conduct of individuals who have misbehaved, and the appearance of persons in pending actions, either civil or criminal. On the same terms they conduct travelers and caravans through districts infested with robbers, or in a state of war. If a troop of predatory horse appear, the bard commands them to retire, and brandishing his dagger takes a solemn oath, that if they plunder the persons under his protection, he will stab himself to the heart, and bring upon their heads the guilt of shedding his blood. Such is the veneration in which he is held as a person of celestial origin, and such is the horror of being the cause of his death, that the threat in almost every instance deters them from making the meditated attack, and the party is allowed to pass on unmolested. The religion of these people consists of little else than an adoration of the sun. They invoke this object of their worship before commencing any great undertaking, and if a plundering expedition be successful, a portion of the money stolen is consecrated to the service of religion. The only functions of the priests are to celebrate marriages and funeral solemnities. They have but one sacred building—a temple—situated near Thaum, dedicated to the sun—and containing an image of that luminary. The size of the Cathies is about the average, often exceeding six feet. The women are tall, and often handsome; generally speaking, modest and faithful to their lords. The Cathies have no restrictions of any sort regarding food or drink.

THE GAY YOUNG SPORTSMEN.

On one occasion, when Rev. Mr. Brown, and others, were assisting a brother minister in services preparatory to the celebration of the Lord's Supper, which services in Scotland usually take place on the last day of the week preceding the "sacramental Sabbath," and are frequently held in the open air, a couple of gay young men had been out hunting, and on their return drew near to the large congregation who were listening at that moment to the preaching of an eloquent, but somewhat showy divine. After standing a few moments, the one said to the other, "Did you ever hear such preaching as that?" "No," he replied with an oath, "but he don't believe a word of it." After this preacher had closed, there stood up in the "tent," (a temporary pulpit erected in the open air for the accommodation of the ministers,) an old, humble-looking man, who announced his text in a trembling voice, as if he were afraid to speak in God's name. He went on, and became more and more interesting, more and more impressive. The young men were awed, and listened with reverent attention to the close, when the one, turning to the other, said, "And what d'ye think of that?" "Think of it," he replied, "I don't know what to think. Why, didn't you see how every now and then he turned round in the tent, as if Jesus Christ were behind him, and he was asking, 'Lord, what shall I say next?'" This preacher was John Brown, the secret of whose pulpit eloquence was, the inspiration of an humble and contrite heart, touched by the finger of the Almighty; an eloquence as far transcending that of the mere orator, as the divine and heavenly transcends the human and earthly.

"YE WILL NOT COME TO ME."

There are some men who wish to go to Heaven with the understanding that they are entitled to the favor, or else not at all. They do not feel willing to accept Heaven as a boon granted by the infinite love of a merciful God, but they desire to merit it through their own good works. They will not go up to heaven's gate and plead the atoning blood of the blessed Lamb of God, as their passport into the heavenly land—the home of the redeemed, but they offer in exchange for the delights and the pleasures of eternity, the meagre catalogue of their own actions here on earth. Is it strange that their offer is not accepted? As for myself, I know what I will do when God calls my soul to judgment. I know when I shall look back upon my life it will be folly to attempt to justify any thing that I have ever done. I will turn to Christ, and say, Thou hast promised to save me if I would trust in Thee, and I have trusted in Thee, and now I claim the fulfillment of Thy promise, O Lord. Here I am, and my only hope is in Thee. And then Christ will throw around about me the shield of His righteousness, and I shall enter heaven, not because I am not a sinner, but because I am a sinner, loved and shielded of Christ. But you refuse to take this Christ at his word, you reject his proffered mercies, and therefore He will reject you.—Rev. H. W. Beecher.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, June 17, 1847.

THE "SABBATH DISCUSSION."

The notion of "Indagator," that the Sabbath was instituted in the wilderness of Sin, is contrary to the reasoning of the Apostle Paul. In the 4th chapter of Hebrews, Paul urges his brethren "to labor to enter into a rest," by an argument, which would be without force, on the supposition that the Sabbath was not instituted "from the foundation of the world." To render this clear, let us enter into an examination of the place.

The language, in which the Apostle presses the duty, is not his own, nor is it newly framed for the occasion, but it is language which he finds already prepared for him; it is the language of the Holy Spirit by the mouth of David more than a thousand years before. "To day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, . . . when your fathers tempted me, . . . unto whom I sware in my wrath that they should not enter into my REST." Ps. 95: 7—11. The point now is to determine what rest David referred to. And from the fact that the Israelites were already in the actual possession and enjoyment of two rests, when David used this language, it is evident that he cannot refer to either of them. For his language is that of admonition or warning to the people, lest, by their wickedness, they should shut themselves out of a rest which was yet future. The two rests, of which they were already in possession, were the Sabbath and the land of Canaan. The Apostle argues that it was not the rest in Canaan which David referred to; for, long after the Israelites had obtained possession of that under the guidance of Joshua, he said, "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Whereas, "if Joshua had given them the rest, then would he not afterwards have spoken of another day." Heb. 4: 7, 8. Still less was it the sabbatic rest to which David referred; for that the Israelites were also enjoying, it having been instituted—when? at the falling of the manna? no, but—"from the foundation of the world." v. 3. It is clear, therefore, that whatever be the "rest" to which David refers, it is something to which the Israelites had not yet attained when he addressed them as he did.

Such is the Apostle's reasoning upon the language employed by the royal prophet. But what force, what point or appositeness, is there in his reasoning, if the Sabbath was not actually instituted "from the foundation of the world?" If it originated in the wilderness, why does the Apostle carry it any farther back than that? Why does he mention the "foundation of the world" at all? If the Sabbath was instituted in the wilderness, it was not necessary to carry it any farther back than that, in order to show that the Israelites were already in the enjoyment of it when David wrote. For even that was of more ancient date than the occupancy of Canaan. If truth, therefore, makes that the origin of the Sabbath, truth required the Apostle to go no farther back than that for it. But from the fact that he does go farther back, even to "the foundation of the word," the inference is irresistible, that truth required him to do so. We should like to see "Indagator" attempt an answer to this argument. "E. W. D." alluded to it, and, as far as he went with it, was very pertinent. But as he did but barely touch upon it, probably "Indagator's" attention was scarcely arrested by it. We take the liberty of pressing it home upon him.

While we have this passage under review, as it is one from which Sunday-keepers of all classes endeavor to derive support, we shall take the liberty of offering an additional remark. Let it be observed, that the Apostle is himself urging the Hebrews to labor after a rest, as David urged the Israelites. But he regards David's language as exactly adapted to his purpose. He had, however, labored to show that David could not, by any congruity in the use of language, be supposed to speak of any rest the people had already received; for he uses the future tense. Well, would he, after seeking to relieve David from the charge of incongruity of language in the use of the future tense about something already possessed, heedlessly pitch into the same blunder himself? Yet of this blunder do Sunday-keepers make the Apostle guilty, when they try to make it appear, that by the "rest," which he exhorts the Hebrews to labor after, he means the gospel dispensation; or, when they strain to make it appear that he meant a new Sabbath appropriate to the gospel dispensation. For, surely, the Hebrew believers were already in the enjoyment of the gospel dispensation; and if a new Sabbath had been instituted, whether under the name of "Christian Sabbath," or "Lord's Day," they were also in the enjoyment of that. The truth is, that both David and the Apostle meant the heavenly rest. In this view, the whole argument is clear and beautiful; in any other view, dark and inconsistent.

But to return to our disputants. Upon the supposition that the Sabbath was first instituted in the wilderness, what construction are we to put upon Gen. 2: 3. "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it?" In all the previous chapter the historian appears to be giving a record of facts in their order, just as they occurred. And what unprejudiced mind would suppose any thing else of this passage? Taking him in this light, however, would be ruinous to the notion that the Sabbath was instituted in the wilderness. For as the terms, "blessed" and "sanctified," evidently mean something; and as their meaning is so obvious, "that the wayfaring man, though a fool," need not mistake it; it would never do to admit that the blessing and sanctification of the seventh day actually took effect at the finishing of creation. No, no; the historian must be differently interpreted. It is a "foregone conclusion" that the Sabbath is a Jewish institution, and Moses must be construed accordingly. To be sure, he does mean that the other events, connected with the creation, took place just as he says they did. He does mean that the work of God in forming light actually took effect on the first day; that his work in stretching out the firmament took effect on the second day; that the formation of the earth and seas, and the production of vegetation, took place on the third day; that the heavenly bodies were made on the fourth day; that fish and fowl were called into being on the fifth day; and that beast and man were made on the sixth day. All these works actually took effect on the very days when they are said to have occurred. But when the historian comes to speak of what was done with the seventh day, he does not mean that it was actually done then, but more than two thousand years afterwards! Wonder if God actually rested that day, or whether that was put off for more than two thousand years also? We agree with "E. W. D." that such explanation is "unnatural and inconsistent, adopted only for the sake of a theory; but for which it would never have been thought of."

We wish to refer "Indagator" to the fact that "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, BECAUSE that in it he had rested;" Gen. 2: 3; and, in connection with this, to the express declaration of the fourth commandment, "God blessed the Rest-day [Sabbath-day] and hallowed it." Please look these words full in the face, and then tell us, Did God bless the Rest-day, or did he not? Did he bless the very day on which he rested, or only a return of that day which took place two thousand years afterwards? According to our understanding, God blessed the identical day on which he rested, and the weekly return of it became hallowed from that very circumstance. But, according to "Indagator's" theory, God did not bless his own rest-day, but the weekly return of it after a very, very long interval. And if this theory is not flatly contradictory of the express words of Scripture, we are not able to conceive of any thing that would be. *

USE OF THE TERM "SABBATH-KEEPERS."

A correspondent, who signs himself "J. B. S.," has written us a long communication in relation to the use of the term "Sabbath-keepers," to describe Seventh-day Baptists. It seems that in a recent number of the Recorder something was said about "the Sabbath-keeping church of Independence." This led to his being asked, if Seventh-day Baptists believe that nobody keeps the Sabbath but those who keep the seventh day. Hence this communication, in which the writer opposes the use of the term, unless the General Conference has sanctioned or recommended it. The gist of his opposition may be comprised in three objections. The first is, that "it is indefinite in regard to our views, and therefore inappropriate." The second is, that "it seems a little wanting in Christian charity." The third and last, that it "serves to lower us in the esteem of other Christian denominations," who sincerely and devoutly keep the first day of the week as the Sabbath, and ought therefore to be regarded as only in error, not as keeping no Sabbath at all.

In reply to the first of these objections, we have but little to say. The term Seventh-day Baptist seems to us more descriptive of the views of the denomination than the term Sabbath-keepers, and on that account we prefer it as our distinguishing title. There are many cases, however, in which writers and speakers wish to describe a man or body of men as keeping the seventh day for the Sabbath, without any reference to the question whether they are Baptists or Pedobaptists. In such cases, the term Sabbath-keepers seems exactly adapted to the purpose, and we think it may be used, not only innocently, but very profitably.

In respect to the second objection, that the use of the term seems uncharitable, we have somewhat more to say. Throughout the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, the term Sabbath is abundantly used in reference to a weekly rest-day, and is applied exclusively to the seventh or last day of the week. This position will not be disputed by any man acquainted with his Bible, however strenuous he may be in the advocacy of a first-day Sabbath. Then if we look into Church history, we shall find that for more than one thousand years after the canon of Scripture was closed, the term Sabbath was applied almost exclusively to the seventh day of the week. Indeed, it was not until after the Reformation, some two hundred and fifty years ago, that the term began to be applied to the first day; and even now it is so applied only in a small part of the world, and principally by persons who will frankly acknowledge, when the subject is pressed upon them, that there is no propriety in such an application of it. Here then we have the testimony of Scripture, of history, and of a vast majority of the observers of the first day, that the term Sabbath belongs of right to the seventh day of the week. In such circumstances, we put it to our correspondent to say, whether it shows any want of Christian charity to claim for the seventh day its appropriate title of the Sabbath, and for those who observe that day the title of Sabbath-keepers? By doing so, we do not unchristian or pass sentence upon those who observe the first day of the week. We simply call things by their right names, and leave upon others the responsibility of perverting or misapplying the terms which inspired men have used to describe divine institutions. This seems to us much more like Christian charity than the opposite course of changing and modifying terms to suit the conflicting practices of fallible men.

The objection to the use of the term Sabbath-keeper on the ground that it "lowers us in the esteem of other Christian denominations," seems to us unfounded. Indeed, we have good reason to believe, that its use, instead of lowering, has raised us in their esteem. There are very few persons who can withhold respect from those who carry out their principles to their natural results. If we believe the seventh day of the week to be the Sabbath, no man, whose good opinion is worth having, will esteem us the less for speaking and acting consistently with our belief. A failure to do this, has given just occasion for repeated rebukes from those who differ from us. There is one fact to establish our theory. The Baptists, by adopting their name, have said indirectly that no persons are baptized except such as are immersed. Does the use of the term Baptist lower them in the esteem of other Christian denominations? Is it regarded as a good reason for charging them with a want of Christian charity? We think not. So will it be in due time respecting the use of the term Sabbath-keepers.

The foregoing remarks are not made by way of recommending or justifying a change of our denominational title. We are quite satisfied with the one we have at present. But at the same time we can not consent to the doctrine that it is uncharitable or dishonorable to use another term in proper connections which more distinctly brings out our peculiarity as keepers of the Sabbath.

THE GERMAN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

Shiloh, N. J., 4th of 6th month, 1847.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Having just returned from my visit to Snowhill, permit me to add a few lines to my former notice of the German Seventh-day Baptists. I regard the issue of the prosecutions which they are suffering for Sunday labor, as one of great importance to their future interests, and still more as affecting the religious rights of every minor sect in the country—of our own especially. While the State Statute remains, as it now does, the acknowledged law of the State, the local magistracy can hardly do any otherwise than convict and sentence Sabbath-keepers when they are complained of for laboring on the first day of the week; for it makes no exception of Jews, or Seventh-day Baptists, or those who reject all holy times as articles of religious faith and matters of observance; and should the Supreme Court re-affirm the constitutionality of that law, and sustain the validity of those prosecutions at present had under it, then Pennsylvania will exhibit a scene of as bitter and cruel persecution as England did in the days of the Stewart monarchs; or as Denmark has done within the last five years, in the case of the persecuted Baptists. I could not find any of our brethren who entertained the remotest idea of abandoning their principles, or of setting up a sham observance of the first day to avoid consequences, should the decision be against them. They do not now abstain from pursuing their secular callings on the first day, as the last prosecutions show, nor have I the least expectation that they will do so should the prosecutions be continued. Every man who spoke on the subject, spoke with a calm and Christian decision, which was worthy of the martyrs who suffered under Nero and Domitian. I am persuaded in my soul, that should these prosecutions be encouraged by the Supreme Court of the State, there will be as holy and constant martyr confessors in Pennsylvania in the nineteenth century as ever graced the first three centuries of the Christian era, or as ever endured the papal fires of the middle centuries and the dark ages. And to whom is this owing? Let facts in the case show. The informers are men of bad characters. One of them had a suit on the day I was in Chambersburg, for a fight between himself and a neighbor, with an axe-helve and other clubs. Yet this man says that a neighboring clergyman said of the prosecution of the Sabbath-keepers of Snowhill, "It ought to have been done before." Whether he tells the truth respecting the clergyman, I know not; but the following I know to be facts, from which your readers may draw their own inferences: At the time that the brethren at Snowhill applied to the Legislature for relief, clergymen of the county, and their followers, got up remonstrances, and sent them to the Legislature. The representatives of their own county spoke favorably of the Seventh-day Baptists at home; but for some cause or other, worked against them in the Legislature. While I was in Chambersburg, last week, I saw it announced in the county newspaper, that the Chambersburg Christian Sabbath Committee had made arrangements to have a series of sermons on the Sabbath, in the different churches, by the several clergymen of the place; one has been preached, and the second is appointed for the next first-day evening. This is while the Supreme Court of the State is sitting at Harrisburg, and when the Sabbath case is to come before that Court. Whether there be a designed coincidence, I know not. When the rioters who disturbed the Snowhill meetings were sentenced to imprisonment, numerously-signed petitions were forwarded to the Governor for their pardon. The Governor had the good sense not to grant the prayer of the petitioners. So far as I could learn, however, not a petition, not a letter, in favor of the Seventh-day Baptists, or Jews, or Quakers, has been forwarded to the Bench, or any officer of the State, who is charged with any part in the pending question of rights, from any one of that class of citizens. On the other hand, I was introduced to several distinguished civilians, who have more office in the State than in the Church, who boldly advocate the rights of the Seventh-day Baptists, as broadly as we can ask it. I was informed that the Judge who sentenced our brethren, said that to do so was like driving a dagger to his heart. Another gentleman of the legal profession, whom I met with in the State, gave his unqualified opinion in favor of our rights, and added, there would be no difficulty in gaining the private opinion of every Judge on the Bench, if they had not to pronounce a decision against that Christian public sentiment which is made in the churches. I could not help thinking of the words of the Lord Jesus, Matthew 23: 29, 30—"Ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous, and say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets," &c. How many publications have been issued and distributed within a few years, detailing the sufferings of the martyrs who dissented from the popular churches of their day for conscience sake. Yet the same men who do this, are advocating and urging the most stringent measures against more than one class of Christian men who differ from them in keeping the commandments of God—measures which they know arm wicked men with power to afflict and distress their righteous neighbors! Brother King, of Bedford county, told me that he and other brethren waited on the man who informed against them, and asked if any member of the denomination had ever injured him? He replied, No. Have any of us ever offended you? No. Can we do any thing to avoid your prosecuting in future? Leave off working on Sunday, said he! Yet this man rarely goes to any place of worship; he more commonly spends his Sundays in hunting on the mountains! Indeed, there is no likelihood of there being any want of informers against us, so long as the popular clergy and members of Christian Churches teach the necessity and duty of punishing Sunday labor, and the law of Pennsylvania pays such men two dollars on every such conviction. Had the man at Morrison's Cove succeeded in making his complaint lie against the six there accused, I suppose he would have made twelve dollars out of the affair, unless they had gone to jail, as some, at least, would rather do than pay the fine. I am utterly astonished to see the total indifference of the various Christian denominations in this land of boasted liberty, to the persecutions our people are called to endure! What if the Catholics of Canada or Mexico had fined and imprisoned so many Protestants for pursuing their secular labors on Christmas-day, or any of their other holy days! Would not the religious press of the United States, with many secular prints, have sounded this thing in every city and town, from Nova Scotia to Texas? Oh, but these trangressed against Protestant traditions! I said to the brethren at Snowhill, Fear not; He who caused the earth to quake when Paul and Silas were imprisoned at Philippi, will doubtless in good time cause Pennsylvania prison doors to fly open, and every man's bonds will be loosed. Trust in the Lord, be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thy heart. What a spectacle will the United States present to the world by and by. Liberty and captivity, freedom and persecution, unto imprisonment for religion's sake. So would the enemy have it.

"Rhode Island Sabbath Union."—The Annual Meeting of this body was held at Providence about three weeks ago. A newspaper report of the matter says that "though all which its friends anticipated, and hoped to effect, has not yet been accomplished, still it is encouraging to know that a large amount of good has been achieved, and that its prospects of future usefulness are of the most cheering character." The Rev. Francis Wayland, who had been President of the Union from its foundation, positively declined a reëlection; and his Excellency Elisha Harris, Governor of the State, was chosen to fill that post. Addresses were delivered by several gentlemen during the regular meeting, and the annual discourse was delivered by Dr. Hopkins in the evening.

The Baptists in France.—Some account has already been given of the persecution of the Baptists in France. There seems to be a disposition on the part of Government to favor these proceedings, although many able and influential statesmen oppose them. The affair has recently been discussed before the Royal Court of Amiens. Two distinguished advocates plead the cause of the Baptists, both maintaining that it is contrary to the principles of religious liberty, and to the express provisions of the Charter, to forbid these Christians to celebrate their worship. But such was the power of prejudice, that they were condemned by the Royal Court of Amiens, as they had been by the inferior tribunals. They have appealed to the Royal Court of Cassation, and the case will be argued before the supreme tribunal of the kingdom. But their hopes of success are not high, as the judges have shown that they are far from being disposed to favor religious liberty. The following are the reasons assigned by the Court of Amiens for its extraordinary decision: "This sect," say the judges, "has separated itself from Protestantism, and the State does not recognize these divisions of the Protestant Church. The ministers of this sect have not received from the State any kind of license, nor from the consistories any commission. The Baptists, therefore, are deficient in that which legally constitutes a recognized form of worship."

The Bible among Slaves.—During "Anniversary Week" in Boston, a meeting was held in the Hall of the Tremont Temple, to consider the subject of Bible distribution among the slaves. Rev. Mr. Colver presided. Mr. Leavitt made some very interesting statements, showing that a field of important usefulness is here opened, in which all Christians may unite their labors, however much they may have been divided and alienated in respect to some questions. He stated, that in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Missouri, there are no laws which prevent the master from teaching his slaves to read. In these six States, therefore, very many were taught, and were entirely accessible through the word of God. Examples of an interesting nature were adduced, in proof that in other States as well as these, there was already a full preparation to receive the advantages of such an effort as is now proposed, viz. to place funds in charge of the American Bible Society, for the special object of circulating the Scriptures among the slaves, wherever it is found to be practicable. A resolution was passed with great unanimity, approving of the object for which the meeting was called.

Statistics of the Baptists.—The Richmond Christian Herald publishes some interesting statistics of the Baptist denomination in the United States for the last two years, since the division of the Triennial Convention on the slavery question. The total increase of the whole body during the past year, in both sections of the Union, has been 10,271 members. The increase in the South and South-west has been 15,950. The decrease in the North and West has been 5,680. Of all the free States, there has been an increase only in Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin; while there has been an increase in every one of the slave States except Maryland. Of course the inference which Southern Baptists draw from these facts, is that the Lord favors them for adhering to the "peculiar institution," and frowns upon their northern brethren for opposing it. See to what results men are led by arguing from what they misname God's blessing or frown.

Missionary Intelligence.—The Christian Chronicle says that the Missionary Herald contains an appeal from the Mission at Madras, for more missionaries to occupy a new field recently explored by Dr. Scudder. This field is Arnee, 80 miles from Madras. It contains from 8,000 10,000 inhabitants, and is surrounded with a great number of villages. A circle drawn around Arnee with a radius of ten miles would inclose a population of 100,000. This makes a fine field for a missionary. There are already two Baptists at Arnee, one a native has labored there eleven years, the other, an East Indian, has been there two years. Both preach and distribute books and tracts, and have done much good. They are connected with no missionary society for support.

Fu Chau as a Missionary Station.—A letter written by Mr. Johnson, a missionary of the American Board in China, gives some account of his visit to Fu Chau. He arrived there on the 2d of January, and was so much pleased with the place, that he at once engaged in preparations for commencing a mission there.

War Against the Bible.—In the reign of Henry the Fifth, a law was passed against the perusal of the Scriptures in England. It was enacted, "That whosoever they were that should read the Scriptures in the mother tongue, they should forfeit land, catel, lif, and godes, from they're heyres forever; and so be condemned for heretykes to God, enemies to the crowne, and most errant traitors to the lande."

Missionaries to China.—Five missionaries have recently left England for China, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. Four of them will be stationed at Shanghai, and one at Hong Kong.

WAR NEWS.

The following items contain the principal news received from the seat of war within the past week:—

An arrival at New Orle[illegible] on the 2d inst., from the Brazos, confirms [illegible] news of Doniphan's arrival at Parras, after a march of 1,500 miles, with about 1,000 men and 16 pieces of artillery. Col. Mitchell, with the advance of Doniphan's command, including a picked party, was expected at Buena Vista on the 15th. Passing through Durango, they took possession of a small fort, one captain, 21 privates, and 46 stands of arms. The captain and his men were released on parole, and Col. Doniphan was to furnish them with arms to defend themselves against the Camanches. At Massey he found 125 muskets and 85 lances. The troops fled on his approach.

Gen. Cushing has received orders to join Gen. Taylor immediately at Monterey, with the Massachusetts regiment. Capt. Edward Webster has been appointed his aid.

Three men of the Massachusetts regiment recently deserted and were all murdered by the Camanches.

A letter from San Luis Potosi says the hospital there is crowded with Mexican soldiers, who are dying by scores of starvation and neglect. Even the citizens are suffering for want of the common necessaries of life. The enemy has evacuated San Luis. The troops have all left.

A letter to the Delta, from Monterey, May 15, states that Gen. Taylor was actively preparing for a move, and would probably start for San Luis about the 1st of June, where another great battle was expected, which would probably be the final struggle.

A most deplorable duel occurred at China on the 21st of May, between two Virginia lieutenants, one named Mahan. They fought with muskets loaded with buckshot, and both parties were killed.

Productions of the United States.—The Patent-Office Report furnishes the following important information:—

Wheat, oats, rye, Indian corn, potatoes, hay, and tobacco, are raised in every State and Territory of the Union.

Barley raised in all except Louisiana.

Buckwheat raised in all except Louisiana and Florida.

New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, and Wisconsin, do not raise cotton.

The States that do not raise cotton, together with Maryland, Delaware, and Indiana, do not raise rice.

Every State and Territory except Iowa raises silk.

Every State except Delaware makes sugar.

New York raises the most barley, viz: 1,802,282 bush.

New York raises the most potatoes, viz: 24,907,553 bush.

Tobacco Proscribed.—The Baptists and Presbyterians are holding general Conventions in Cincinnati, and the citizens of that place appear to be unwilling to extend the hand of hospitality to the delegates, unless they give up their tobacco. The Gazette says:—

"Our theological friends, the delegates to the Convention, seem to have brought their partiality for tobacco to a poor market. It is said that the proprietors of the Second Presbyterian Church hesitated long before giving their consent to its being used for a Convention, not wishing to have it besmeared with tobacco juice. A distinguished physician offered to entertain four of the delegates at his house, during their stay, if that number could be found who did not use the filthy weed. The Rev. Mr. Magoon, on extending Prof. Mitchel's invitation to the Baptist Convention, to visit the Observatory, begged that the delegates 'would leave their tobacco at the foot of the hill.' In view of this general unpopularity, in all decent society, the editor of the Watchman of the Valley entreats his reverend friends to forego its use altogether."

Elegant Carpeting for Ninepence (12 1-2 cts.) per Yard!—We called on a friend the other day, and our attention was attracted to what was apparently a canvass carpet, of very fine texture, of fresh colors, and with a handsome border. On inquiry we were surprised to learn that it was what might be called homespun, and that it cost but ninepence per square yard. As no letters patent have been taken out for the invention, we give the directions as we received them. Sew together strips of the cheapest cotton cloth of the size of the room, and tack the edges to the floor! Then paper the cloth as you wound the sides of a room, with any sort of paper. The paste will be stronger if gum-arabic be mixed with it. After being well dried, give it two coats of varnish, and your carpet is finished. It can be washed like canvass carpets, without injury. Such carpets of course will not bear the rough usage of a kitchen, but in chambers and keeping rooms, our informant tells us, he has seen them after being used for two years and frequently washed, retaining a most beautiful polish, smoother than canvass.

[Portsmouth Journal.

It is said that there are at least a dozen Americans at Rome preparing for Holy Orders—among them Mr. Cummings of Washington, Messrs. Shaw and Brown of Massachusetts, and Mr. Wilcox of Pennsylvania.

Age of Plants.—Some plants, such as the minute funguses termed mould, only live a few hours, or at least a few days. Mosses, for the most part, live only one season, as do the garden plants called annuals, which die of old age as soon as they ripen their seeds. Some, again, as the foxglove and the hollyhock, live for two years, occasionally prolonged to three, if their flowering be prevented. Trees again, planted in a suitable soil and situation, live for centuries. Thus the olive tree may live three hundred years, the oak double that number; the chestnut is said to have lasted nine hundred and fifty years; the dragon's blood tree of Teneriffe may be two thousand years old; and Adamson mentions banians six thousand years old. When the wood of the interior ceases to afford room, by the closeness of its texture, for the passage of sap or pulp, or for the formation of new vessels, it dies, and by all its moisture passing off into the younger wood, the fibres shrink, and are ultimately reduced to dust. The center of the tree thus becomes dead, while the outer portion continues to live, and in this way trees may exist for many years before they perish.

SUMMARY.

A correspondent of the Syracuse Star, who has just returned from a trip through a portion of the State of Ohio, says that there is yet great abundance of every description of produce in the Buckeye State. On all the principal thoroughfares which he traveled, he constantly met trains of wagons laden with wheat and corn, on their way to market, and from all he could gather, the unusual demand occasioned by the late rise in prices, (great as it was,) was not equal to the supply on hand. In regard to the coming crops, the opinion was universal among the farmers that they were unusually promising—never more so. Wheat, corn and potatoes look exceedingly well throughout Huron and Lorain counties, and equally promising in different sections of the State as far as he could learn.

The editor of the New Haven Journal says that he has in his possession a snuff-box which was brought to this country by one of our Puritanic ancestors, in the original ship the Mayflower. It is made of steel, japanned, of a circular form, and is as well preserved for use as the most modern articles of the present day. It is the property of an old lady in Fairfield county, now nearly ninety years of age, of the name of Comstock, and has descended in the family, through all its generations, from the landing at Plymouth of its first possessor. The old lady has several other relics of the same description, and among them an iron pot which has been in use more than two hundred years.

Hon. Abbott Lawrence has recently made a donation to Harvard University, of $50,000, for the purpose of erecting needful buildings, and in part creating a fund to sustain two Professors of practical science at Cambridge. His proposition is, to have a department established and furnished with three professors, including the Rumford Professor already appointed, for the purpose of furnishing young men with an extensive practical, scientific education. He proposes that special attention be given to engineering, mining, and the invention and manufacture of machinery.

A Hartford (Ct.) paper says that on Sunday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Pennington (colored) preached in the Fourth Congregational Church, the pastor, Rev. Mr. Patton, (son of Dr. Patton of New York,) exchanging with him. This is the first instance in which the courtesy of an exchange has been tendered to Mr. Pennington, by any of his ministerial brethren in this city. We hear of no disaffection on the part of Mr. Patton's people; on the contrary, the propriety of the exchange seems to be generally recognized, and satisfaction is expressed that it has taken place.

The country adjacent to San Luis Potosi was completely stripped of all its produce to feed the army of 30,000 Santa Anna kept up there for many months prior to the battle of Buena Vista, and now even the citizens of the place are suffering for want of the common necessaries of life. The Mexican Government makes no provision whatever for the wounded soldiery, and they are to be seen dragging their mangled limbs along the streets, and begging—alas! too often in vain—for bread.

The production of wool in Germany has taken such a remarkable development that Germany now takes the lead of all nations in the production of that article. In the states of the Customs' Union alone there are 21,961,554 sheep, yielding at the lowest calculation 48,500,000 pounds of wool per annum. Austria produces 700,000 quintals per annum, two-thirds of which comes from Hungary, Transylvania and Bohemia.

The leading article of the London Agricultural Gazette, May 8, is on the employment of steam in farming, to which the editors are favorable, considering it a more docile and less costly power than either man or horse. Every hundred acres of plowing involves the passage of over 1,000 linear miles, by 500 consumers of food. They calculate the saving by steam on every ploughing at $1 per acre, or $100,000,000 on as many acres.

The latest reports from the Quarantine station at Grosse Island, near Quebec, are unfavorable. There are thirteen hundred sick, and about thirteen thousand in 40 vessels at the stations. According to all accounts, death and starvation are making nearly as fearful ravages at Grosse Isle as in Ireland. The number of orphans is now about a hundred.

Giles B. Blodgett, the young man who was sent to the State Prison at Auburn, three years since, for stealing $2,800 (U. S. deposit fund) from the mail in the post office in that village, while a clerk in the same, nearly two years previously, received his pardon from President Polk on the 7th of May.

The flavor of coffee may be improved by adding forty to fifty grains of carbonate of soda to each pound of roasted coffee. In addition to improving the flavor, the soda makes the coffee more healthy, as it neutralizes the acid contained in the infusion.

The Roman Catholic priesthood in India exceed in number the ministers of the Protestant Church, in the proportion of 300 to 1; and the population of each persuasion differs in equal ratio.

Captain Trofatter, of brig Deposit, from Cape Verde Islands, states that the volcano on the Island of Fogo, commenced burning on the evening of the 9th ult., and continued eight days, during which the blaze was distinctly seen at Porto Praya, and the earth was felt to tremble violently, at intervals, during the remaining six days.

A cow from Blarney Castle, Ireland, brought to this country by Capt Forbes, in the U. S. ship Jamestown, was sold at auction for $115. She was purchased by John Marland, Esq., of Andover. The whole amount will be for the relief of the suffering Irish. No charge was made for advertising or selling.

We understand, says the Springfield Republican, that Amos Lawrence, Esq., of Boston, has recently made another donation to Williams' College, for the purpose of founding four scholarships, and $1,000 to be expended in the erection of a fountain in front of Lawrence Hall, and in fitting up bathing rooms for the students.

The Northern railway of the Emperor Ferdinand was opened on the 7th ult., as far as Odenburg, in Prussian Silesia. It completes the largest line of railway projected in Germany, and unites Vienna, Berlin, and Hamburg, three of the most important mercantile towns in the Germanic confederation.

The price of freight upon a barrel of flour from Buffalo to Albany, since the opening of the canal, has been from $1 12 1-2 to $1 62 1-2 until Saturday, when it fell to $1 00. The boats generally carry 700 barrels, seldom less, on which a clear profit of $500, at the above prices, is realized.

A poor man on the Ohio canal bought a scow for $550, and freighted it with flour to Cleveland, his profits paying for the scow. He then hired it towed to Buffalo, and in a few hours sold the old scow for $1,000! So much for 20 days' work and a little enterprise.

The Rev. Mr. McQueen has been restored to his position in the Presbyterian church, by the action of the General Assembly. He had been suspended from the ministry for marrying the sister of his deceased wife. The Assembly, however, on restoring him, did not sanction the act for which he had been suspended.

The Springfield Gazette says that a man was sentenced to the House of Correction in that town, by Judge Wells, on Thursday, for stealing a watch from the store of Jonathan Bangs. The same man was sent to the State Prison 16 years ago, for stealing the same watch from the same nail in the same store belonging to the same man.

It is stated in the Wilmington, Del., papers, that Ann Maria Jones, a very pretty young white girl, was convicted of larceny and sentenced to receive twenty-one lashes on the "bare back, well laid on," by the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, sitting at New Castle, Delaware.

It is computed that there are in France 2,400,000 dogs, each of whom consumes, on an average, per day, half a pound of bread. If so, the total consumption of flour by French dogs, in a year, amounts to as much as the total annual export of the United States.

Mr. Eckert Myers, of West Earl Township, O., has invented a curious kind of trace, which is fastened to the shafts of the carriage, and the horse harnessed in the usual way, and then hitched by rings fastened to the carrier of the shaft in such a manner that should the horse become ungovernable, all the driver has to do is to draw back the spring fixed to the traces and the vehicle is set free.

A very important item of foreign news by the Hibernia, is that Her Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, in consideration of the famine in Ireland and the high price of breadstuffs, has been graciously pleased to order that the individuals dieted in her palace shall be allowed but one pound of bread per day!

A German artist, named Meinhard, residing in Brooklyn, has introduced a method of making metalic letters for signs, which are formed by pressing plates of brass in a mould—these are afterwards gilt or plated with silver or japanned in a peculiar manner so as to resist the weather of any climate.

A patent has recently been secured for an invention of what is called "Ventilating Glass." It consists of panes of glass through which small holes are drilled obliquely, an inch or an inch and a half apart, thus giving an upward direction to the current of air.

The Buffalo Courier tells a good story of a farmer who sold his stock of corn much below the market price, all because he could not afford to take a newspaper! If he had expended $2 for a good paper he might have pocketed $160 more for his corn.

John Baxter, one of the murderers of Col. Davenport, has been again sentenced to death. The Court then read to him the act of the last Illinois Legislature, granting him the choice of being hung or imprisoned in the penitentiary for life. He chose the latter punishment.

At a recent illumination in Pittsburg, a tailor, named Worth, had his shop ornamented with two transparencies—one bearing the motto, "Worth makes the man;" the other, "It takes nine men to make a Taylor."

On the 2d inst., the Rt. Rev. D. Fitzpatrick, Catholic, confirmed five hundred and twenty persons in the Cathedral of the Holy Cross, Boston. Among the persons confirmed were many converts.

Mr. Matthew Wright, who died lately at Washington, bequeathed ten thousand dollars to the Catholic Orphan Asylum of that city.

Father Mathew, it is said, affords refuge to three hundred houseless poor in Cork, nightly every week.

The amount received at the Treasurer's office of Boston, for dog licenses, within three months, is seven hundred and eighty-four dollars. Besides this sum, about two hundred dollars have been received as fines for keeping dogs without license.

The last descendant of Martin Luther, now living in Germany, and very poor, lately abjured the Reformed, and adopted the Catholic religion.

One ton of "Bologna Sausages," were shipped from Cincinnati, for London, a few days since.

Jerome Faba, an Italian priest, and a native of Calabria, exercised himself in a species of industry, wonderful from its difficulty. He finished a work of box-wood, which represented all the mysteries of the passion, and which might be put in the shell of a walnut. To him was attributed a coach the size of a grain of wheat, within which were to be seen a man and woman, a coachman who drove it, and horses who drew it. These were presented to Francis I. and Charles V.

Mexico owes the United States $2,000,000, which she is too poor to pay. Uncle Sam undertook to collect the debt by compulsory means; and the attempt has already cost the creditor $74,000,000, according to his statement, and probably more than $100,000,000, or five hundred per cent., by the lowest estimate. And what is the worst part of the business, the longer the attempt to collect the debt is continued, the less able Mexico will be to pay it.

The balance spring of a chronometer is now made of glass, as a substitute for steel, and possesses a greater degree of elasticity and a greater power of resisting the alternations of heat and cold. A chronometer with a glass balance spring was sent to the North Sea, and exposed to a competition with nine other chronometers, and the result of the experiment was a report in favor of the chronometer with the glass spring.

Poland is probably the most productive in honey of any country in Europe. A cotemporary remarks: There are cottages in that country with very small portions of land attached to them, on which are to be seen as many as fifty hives, while there are farmers and landed proprietors who are in possession of from 100 to 10,000 hives! There are some farmers who collect annually more than 200 barrels of fine honey, each barrel weighing from 400 to 500 pounds, exclusive of the wax.

A new plan of locomotive is about to be introduced upon the Reading Railroad. The boiler is intended to be placed upon one set of wheels, and the engine upon another, working free and independent of it, with the connection between the engine and boiler formed by means of a copper pipe working flexibly by means of a universal joint. It is intended to be used upon the principle of low pressure, by condensing, similar to the plan now most approved upon steamboats.

The Queen of Belgium had been to attend her royal consort to the Prussian frontier, and was returning by railroad on the 12th of May in a train of three carriages, when she came in collision with the ordinary passenger train from Brussels. She received no other damage than a severe fright. Nevertheless the medical men being called, thought it their duty to bleed her. General Chazal, the King's aid de camp, had a rib broken and several severe contusions, and a royal valet had to have his skull trepanned.

Out of the fifty-four persons who were poisoned at a wedding in Shelby, Texas, a few weeks since, twenty-three had died at the latest accounts, and fifteen or twenty more were considered in a dangerous condition. It is now thought that the party was poisoned by accident, the proprietor of the house having given asenic in the place salæratus to be used in making the cakes, pastry, &c.

The Delta states that a number of the returned volunteers, paraded the streets of New Orleans on the 22d of May, arrayed in captured Mexican uniforms. It seems that 6,000 of these uniforms were taken from the Mexicans at Cerro Gordo, and divided by Gen. Scott among our ragged and ill-clad volunteers. The uniforms are said to be nearly new, and to be comfortable and tasteful.

We learn from a gentleman from New Hampshire, that an accident happened to two members of the Hutchinson family of singers on Sunday last, as they were riding in the vicinity of their residence in Milford, N. H. The carriage was upset, and Miss Hutchinson and the wife of one of the brothers were injured. The injury to the latter is said to be serious.

Close of the Volume—Advance Payments.—The present number closes the third volume of the Sabbath Recorder. We are sorry to say, that our payments this year have not been so prompt as heretofore. Perhaps the fact may be attributed to other circumstances than a want of interest in the paper or the cause it pleads; at any rate we hope so. But be that as it may, the effects are of course felt by us, and are any thing else than pleasant. In squaring up our bills for the past year, and purchasing paper for the coming year, we need the money which is due us from subscribers whom we have faithfully served. Will they not bear this in mind, and at once forward us what is due? We hope, also, that advance payments for the fourth volume will be forthcoming immediately. There are many among our subscribers who have in times past made us glad by their promptness. It is now in their power to do so again. We trust they will embrace the opportunity. A very little trouble on their part would be of great service to us just at the present time.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

LINES ON THE STATUE OF HIS DEAD CHILD.

BY RICHARD LANE, ESQ.

I saw thee in thy beauty! bright phantom of the past,
I saw thee for a moment: 'twas the first time and the last;
And, though years since have glided by of mingled bliss and care,
I never have forgotten thee, thou fairest of the fair!

I saw thee in thy beauty! Thou wert graceful as the fawn,
When in wantonness and glee, it sports along the lawn;
I saw thee seek the mirror: and when it met thy sight,
The air was very musical with thy burst of wild delight.

I saw thee in thy beauty! with thy sister at thy side;
She a lily of the valley, thou a rose in all its pride:
I looked upon thy mother: there was triumph in her eyes;
And I trembled for her happiness, for grief had made me wise.

I saw thee in thy beauty! with one hand among her curls:
The other with no gentle grasp had seized a string of pearls;
She felt the petty trespass, and she chid thee though she smiled,
And I knew not which was loveliest, the mother or the child.

I saw thee in thy beauty! and a tear came to mine eye,
As I press'd thy rosy cheek to mine, and thought e'en thou could'st die:
My home was like a summer bower, by thy joyous presence made;
But I only saw the sunshine, and felt alone the shade.

I see thee in thy beauty! for there thou seem'st to lie,
In slumber resting peacefully! but, oh! the change of eye:
That still serenity of brow, those lips that breathe no more,
Proclaim thee but a mockery of what thou wert before.

I see thee in thy beauty! with thy waiving hair at rest,
And thy busy little fingers folded lightly on thy breast;
But the merry dance is over, and thy little race is run,
And the mirror that reflected two, can now give back but one.

I saw thee in thy beauty! with thy mother by thy side:
But her loveliness is faded, and quell'd her glance of pride;
The smile is absent from her lips, and absent are the pearls,
And a cap almost of widowhood conceals her envied curls.

I see thee in thy beauty! as I saw thee on that day,
But the mirth that gladden'd then my home, fled with thy life away;
I see thee lying motionless upon the accustom'd floor,
But my heart hath blinded both my eyes, and I can see no more!

A KISS FOR A BLOW.

BY H. C. WRIGHT.

I once lived in Boston, and was one of the city school committee. I used to visit some of the public schools of the city almost every day, and spend a few minutes in each school, talking to the children on Peace and Temperance. The children understood that when I came into the schools, they were at liberty to ask me questions pertaining to temperance or peace. They generally had some questions to ask.

One day I visited one of the primary schools. There were about fifty children in it, between four and eight years old.

'Children,' said I, 'have any of you a question to ask to-day?'

'Please tell us,' said a little boy, 'what is meant by overcoming evil with good?'

'I am glad,' said I, 'you have asked that question; for I love to talk to you about peace, and show you how to settle all difficulties without fighting.'

I went on, and tried to show them what the precept meant, and how to apply it and carry it out. I was trying to think of something to make it plain to the children, when the following incident occurred:—

A boy about seven, and his sister about five years old, sat near me. As I was talking, George doubled up his fist and struck his sister on her head, as unkind and cruel brothers often do. She was angry in a moment, and raised her hand to strike him back. The teacher saw her, and said, 'Mary, you had better kiss your brother.' Mary dropped her hand, and looked up at her teacher as if she did not fully understand her. She had never been taught to return good for evil. She thought if her brother struck her, she of course must strike him back. She had always been taught to act on this savage maxim, as most children are. Her teacher looked very kindly at her, and at George, and said again, 'My dear Mary, you had better kiss your brother. See how angry and unhappy he looks!' Mary looked at her brother. He appeared very sullen and wretched. Soon her resentment was gone, and love for her brother returned to her heart. She threw both her arms about his neck, and kissed him! The poor boy was wholly unprepared for such a kind return for his blow. He could not endure the generous affection of his sister. It broke his heart, and he burst out crying. The gentle sister took the corner of her apron and wiped away his tears, and sought to comfort him by saying, with most endearing sweetness and affection, 'Don't cry, George; you did not hurt me much.' But he only cried the harder. No wonder. It was enough to make any body cry.

But what made George feel so bad and cry? Poor little boy! Little did he dream that his sister would give him such a sweet return for his wicked blow. Would he have cried if his sister had struck him back with her fist, as he had struck her? Not he. He would rather she had beaten him black and blue than kiss him as she did; for striking him back again would not have made him feel sorry at all. It was that sweet, sisterly kiss—that gentle wiping away his tears with her apron—that generous and anger-killing affection, that led her to excuse him, and seek to comfort him by saying, 'Don't cry, George; you did not hurt me much.' These were the things that made him cry. So it would break any body's heart, and make him weep, to receive such kind generous treatment from those whom he had injured. No man could withstand it.

A KISS FOR A BLOW! All the school saw, at once, what was meant by overcoming evil with good; and they needed no farther instruction on the subject. They will never forget it. Had Mary struck her brother, there had been a fight. It was prevented by a kiss!

* * * * * * * *

Dear children, arm yourselves with Mary's weapons; throw away your anger, your sullen looks, your provoking nick-names, your clenched fists, furious blows, and take the sweet love, and kiss, and kind words, of little Mary; then go forth to meet your enemies, and you may be sure of an easy and bloodless victory.

There ought to be a school in every family to teach the children how to use these weapons. Parents ought to be the teachers. I have often thought, if the nation would furnish us the money to establish schools to teach all our children how to conquer their enemies with these powerful but gentle weapons, which it now furnishes to establish schools to teach them how to fight and kill them with swords and guns—our property, liberty, and lives would be safer, and it would not cost half so much to keep safe. But now, instead of being taught to meet their enemies and subdue them with love and kindness, they are taught to meet them with deadly weapons, and to 'kill, slay, and destroy' them! Children never will be safe—parents never will—towns, cities, States, and nations never will, till all these murdering instruments are thrown away, and children are taught never to hunch those who crowd, and always to give—A KISS FOR A BLOW!

NEVER FRIGHTEN ANY ONE.

The following article from the London Magazine, administers a solemn warning against the practice, in which the young are sometimes tempted to indulge, of frightening their companions by way of pastime:—

The sister of a medical man in London had, in the presence of two young gentlemen, who were studying medicine with her brother, ridiculed the weakness and folly by which some people are governed. She said, for her part, she had no superstitious fears, and had courage for any emergency that might happen. The young men doubted the truth of her boastings, and one of them proposed to the other, that merely by way of joke they would put her courage to the test. In a glass case in the doctor's study was a human skeleton. This they removed, and placed in the young lady's bed. She retired at the usual hour, and they stealthily followed her to listen. Some time elapsed, and no sound was heard. They were about descending the stairs, thinking that their jest had failed, and that in reality she was as courageous as she had boasted herself to be. Scarcely had they come to this conclusion, ere their ears were assailed by a most appalling shriek, after which all became silent. They retired, pleased with their success, and thinking of the laugh and joke they would have with her in the morning at breakfast.

Morning came—but she did not come down as usual. They suffered an hour or so to elapse, and her brother, thinking she might have overslept herself, knocked for admittance, calling her by name at the same time. No answer being returned, he and the young men forced her door, and sad to relate, there sat the poor girl, playing with the bony fingers of the grim and appalling skeleton, quite unconscious of the presence of the intruders—there the poor thing sat a confirmed idiot for life! When she gave that fearful shriek, her reason fled, never to return. It is needless to remark on the remorse that attended the after lives of the two young men.

GERMAN ADVERTISEMENTS.

Something of the character of a people may be guessed from the advertisements in their papers. The Germans appear to have leisure to be sentimental or complimentary, even in their newspaper advertisements, which contain elegies for the departed, congratulations for birthdays, and various other private matters, with which one would think the public have no concern whatever. The Cologne Gazette contained some curious advertisements lately, from which we cull a few specimens:—"We beg Herr Beurer for a repetition of 'Linda;'" or "To Herr Gertsel—We should like to see you again in the character of Melchoir." Signed, "Two Gentlemen from Wiesbaden." Compliments and criticisms are offered to actresses in a similar style. Congratulations on birthdays are common; the following are two samples:—"To my dear fat friend and his good wife in Meurs, I wish much joy on the birth of their first daughter." "Many good wishes to Mdle. Francisca, on this her birthday, from her good friends in Cologne." Inuendoes, apparently directed against personal enemies, frequently appear. Of such advertisements the following are mild specimens:—"Maria! Why so pale? Do you tremble at the word?" Another is in rhyme:—

"The owl avoids the light of day,
And hides herself in night;
Like ——, who never dare display
His actions in the light."

The following is aimed at some parsimonious gentleman: "Is it not the duty of gentlemen, when they receive a barrel of ale from the brewer, to treat the porters to a quart? Signed by several brewers' porters." The advertisements for maid-servants are generally brief, only laying stress on "good sewing and ironing;" but sometimes religion is included, as in the following: "Wanted, a solid, young, evangelical maiden of all work." The next two refer to some delicate affairs. "Sir Robert—I beg you will let me know the contents of the billet you received by the postillion d'amour." "To T. N. Must I not see you until Sunday? Ah, that you could know how tediously the hours will pass till the time arrives, which will be the most important (may I hope the happiest also?) in my whole life?" (No. 49.)

A TITLE PAGE.

It it were inquired of any ingenious writer what page of his work had occasioned him most perplexity, he would point to the title page. Of all our periodical publications the "Tatler" and the "Spectator" have a priority of conception, and have the most characteristic titles. The copious mind of Johnson could not discover an appropriate title for his "Idler," as he acknowledges in the first number; and the title of the "Rambler" was so little understood, that a foreigner drank Johnson's health, innocently addressing him by the appellation of "Mr. Vagabond." The Jewish, and many oriental authors, were fond of allegorical titles as "The Heart of Aaron," "The Bones of Joseph," "The Garden of Nuts." The Greeks and Romans have shown a finer taste in titles. They had their "Cornucopia," or horns of plenty; "Pinakidions," or tablets; their "Pancarpes," or all sorts of fruits. The Puritan writers had a curious taste for titles, "Matches lighted at the Divine Fire," "The Gun of Penitence," "The Shop of the Spiritual Apothecary." A rodomontade title page was a great favorite in the last century. The republic of letters was overbuilt with "Palaces," "Temples," "Gardens," "Pictures;" and at one time every book was recommended by the title of novelty, "A New Method," "New Elements of Geography," "The New Art of Cookery," &c., &c.

It costs more trouble to disguise what we are than it would to do what we ought.

INSURANCE AGAINST SICKNESS.

The New York Evangelist says that the Legislature of Massachusetts, at its late session, chartered a company, called the Massachusetts Health Insurance Company. The institution is the first of its kind which has been recognized by civil enactment in the United States. Similar societies have existed in Great Britain for a long period of time, and as early as 1793 laws for their regulation and encouragement were made by Parliament. The object of the society recently chartered, is the protection of a large and deserving class of people, mechanics, clerks, laborers, and other men of limited income, against the expenses of sickness. The society was not incorporated without the most mature consideration, nor until it had been guarded against abuse by every salutary restriction. It was the impression of both branches of the Legislature, that the company would do a very large amount of business, and a proviso was incorporated in the act, restricting the dividends to ten per cent. per annum. No risk exceeding $400 per annum can be taken by the company, and the officers are required to make, under oath, an annual statement to the Legislature, showing, precisely, the financial condition of the society.

WARRIORS.—The Bonaparte family was a nursery of warriors; yet from Louis Bonaparte we have, after years of experience and reflection, this indignant testimony against war: 'I have been as enthusiastic and joyful as any one else after victory; still I confess that even then the sight of a field of battle not only struck me with horror, but even turned me sick. And now that I am advanced in life, I cannot understand, any more than I could at fifteen years of age, how beings who call themselves reasonable, and who have so much foresight, can employ this short existence, not in loving and aiding each other, and passing through it as gently as possible, but in striving, on the contrary, to destroy each other, as though time did not do this with sufficient rapidity. What I thought at fifteen years of age, I still think, that war, and the pain of death which society draws upon itself, are but organized barbarism, an inheritance of the savage state, disguised or ornamented by ingenious institutions and false eloquence.'

AFFECTION OF BEES.—An elderly lady at Nantes, who had an estate in the neighbohood of that town, where she used generally to pass the summer, had a remarkable partiality for bees, and kept a great number of them upon her estate. She took great pleasure in attending these little insects. Toward the end of May, 1777, this lady, having been taken ill, was conveyed to Nantes, where she died a few days after. On the day when she was to be interred, an enormous number of bees made their appearance in the house where the body lay, and settling upon the coffin, would not be driven away. A friend of the deceased, wishing to ascertain whether these were the same bees that she had taken such tender care of when living, repaired immediately to the estate, where he found all the hives emptied of their inhabitants.

ORIGIN OF THE CAP OF LIBERTY.—In former ages, when old age was honorable, caps became emblems of honor. By degrees they became the badge of freedom, for none were deemed honorable who were not free, and when a slave was made a freeman, he had a cap given to him, which he was permitted to wear in public. The pilius, or cap of liberty, was simple in its form, in the shape of a sugar-loaf, broad at the base, and ending in a cone. This prefigures that freedom stands on the broad basis of humanity, and runs up to a pyramid, the emblem of eternity, to show it ought to last forever. It was simple, for liberty is in itself the most shining ornament of man. It has none of the gilded trappings, that make the livery of despotism. The cap of liberty was white, the native color of the undyed, showing that it should be untainted by sanction of tyranny.

HONESTY.—That 'honesty is the best policy,' was illustrated some years since, under the following circumstances, related by the Rochester Democrat. A lad was proceeding to an uncle's to petition him for his sick mother and her children, when he found a wallet containing fifty dollars. The aid was refused, and the distressed family was pinched with want. The boy revealed his fortune to his mother—but expressed a doubt about using any portion of the money. His mother confirmed his good resolution—the pocket-book was advertised, and the owner found. Being a man of wealth, and uniting with that a generous heart, upon learning the condition of the family, he presented the 50 dollars to the sick mother, and took the boy into his service, and he is now one of the most successful merchants in the State of Ohio. Honesty always brings its reward—to the mind, if not to the pocket.

MODEL POLICE.—"Kendall, in the account of his Santa Fé expedition, speaks of some remarkable dogs used by Mexicans to guard their sheep. He says, 'There are very few men along with this immense herd of sheep; but in their stead were a large number of noble dogs, who appeared to be peculiarly gifted with the faculty of keeping them together. There was no running about, no barking nor biting, in their tactics; but, on the contrary, they walked up gently to any sheep that happened to stray from the field, took it carefully by the ear and led it back to the flock. Not the least fear did the sheep manifest at the approach of these dogs; and there was no necessity for it. They appear to me to be a cross of the Newfoundland and St. Bernard species, of very large size, and with frank open countenances, and from what I could learn, extremely sagacious.'"

DECLINE OF MONASTERIES.—Rev. Dr. Baird stated in a recent lecture, that in the single city of Seville, containing a population of 110,000, there were once seventy monasteries; now there are but three. It is so over the country of Spain. In this Protestant country, the papists buy up church property. In Roman Catholic Spain, they sell it. In the two most Protestant countries in the world, England and the United States, Romanism is rapidly increasing. In Spain and Italy, two of the most Roman Catholic countries in the world, there are strong tendences toward Protestantism. Truly it is an age of extraordinary changes.

VARIETY.

Some startling disclosures have been made in England in regard to tea. Sir George Larpent, the Chairman of the East India Association, stated in his evidence before Parliament, that "the whole of the supply of tea for the European market was a manufactured article. There was not a pound of tea which came to this country from China which did not undergo a coloring process. Tea which we called green here was colored green, and might as well be colored yellow or blue. The tea underwent that manufacture with the view to adapt it to the market in this country, and the process might to some extent alter the quality of the tea."

Not long ago, as I was on my way from Newark to Jersey City, in the cars, I observed a young lady sitting opposite to me, who seemed very much annoyed by the conversation of a young naval officer, which was continually intermingled with oaths. She at length, (having sat as long as she could without reproving him,) said, "Sir, can you converse in the Hebrew tongue?" He replied, "that he could," expecting, no doubt, to hold some conversation with her in that dialect. She then politely informed him that if he wished to swear any more, he would greatly oblige herself, and probably the rest of the passengers, if he would do it in that language.

The Salem Gazette has a description of the Mino, a native bird of Sumatra, now in Salem, which makes very rapid progress in the art of speech. It has already acquired the ordinary forms of expression, "How d'ye do?" "How are you?" "Good morning," &c., in a manner creditable to the human species. It is almost the size of a carrier pigeon; its plumage is a brilliant purple, and aside from its remarkable gift of the power of speech, is a most beautiful bird. It is said to be exceedingly difficult to obtain one of this species, as very few will stand the hardships of the voyage.

Creosote is a vegetable principle discovered by Dr. Reichenbach—it being the essential principle of the pyroligneous acid, well known for its antiseptic properties. It is an oleaginous liquid, clear, colorless and transparent, and powerfully refractive. Its odor is very penetrating and disagreeable, resembling that of smoked meat. Its taste is very caustic and burning. The most important property of creosote is that of retarding animal decomposition. Fresh meat and even fish, soaked in a solution of creosote, is incapable of putrefaction.

At a recent fire in Dayton, there were some three thousand bushels of flaxseed in one of the consumed houses, of which not more than three hundred bushels were destroyed, though exposed of course to great heat. The outer surface was baked into a hard coat, while all within this covering was saved. This same flaxseed was in the cellar at the time of the great flood in Dayton a few months since, and after the subsiding of the water was found uninjured, a slimy coat having formed over it, effectually preventing the entrance of water. Thus it seems that flaxseed is fire-proof and water-proof!

A few years ago Gen. Taylor visited the Northern States, and made this remark in conversation with a friend: "In the Florida war I preserved my health solely by temperance. Where the water was very impure, some of the officers and men insisted on the absolute necessity of using ardent spirits with it. But I always observed that they fared the worse for it. As for myself, I would mix the swamp water with coarse meal so as to clear it from sediment, and content myself with such a beverage."

The philanthropic Howard was blessed with a wife of singular congenial disposition. On settling his accounts one year, he found a balance in his favor, and proposed to his wife to spend the money on a visit to the metropolis, for her gratification. 'What a beautiful cottage for a poor family might be built with the money,' was her benevolent reply. The hint was immediately taken, and the worthy couple enjoyed the greatest of all gratifications, the satisfaction of having done good for its own sake.

Mr. Matthew Wright, who died in Washington, D. C., on the 24th inst., has bequeathed to the Washington and St. Vincent Orphan Asylums, each, the perpetual interest of $10,000. Five slaves are also manumitted, with a portion of $200 each, on condition that they emigrate to Liberia. Mr. Wright was 80 years of age; was a native of the county of Tyrone, Ireland, whence he emigrated in 1795, and became a citizen of Washington in 1804.

An English writer remarks, 'It is curious enough that nations should be distinguished by so trifling a circumstance as the mode of using the fork at the table. An Englishman is remarkable for placing his fork at the left side of his plate; the Frenchman is recognized at the table for using the fork alone without the knife; a German by planting it perpendicularly in his plate; and the Russian by using it as a pitchfork.'

The Chancellor of the British Exchequer has issued orders that a new coin shall be struck off and put into circulation. It is to be a two shilling piece, and to be called Queens, or Victorias, or Victorines, as her Majesty shall direct, the latter being decidedly the best sounding designation.

A witty auctioneer of Norfolk, a night or two since, finding his company slow at bidding for clocks, put up 'the last,' and said: 'Now, gentlemen, I present you with a new kind of clock, it is called the Santa Anna clock, and warranted to run without stopping."

The Laird of Dumbiedykes was a sensible man and a true philosopher. He, in the most solemn manner, advised his son to be setting out a tree when he had nothing else to do—for it would be growing while he would be sleeping!

A negro bought a hat, and upon going out in the rain was observed to take it off his head and try to keep it from the wet, and on being asked why he did so, answered, "Hat mine, head massa's."

It is estimated that the surface planted with corn this year in the State of New Jersey, exceeds that of last year by 100,000 acres, which ought to yield three or four million bushels.

The product of maple sugar in 1846, in the United States, is estimated to have reached 22,000,000 pounds.

CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE.

REV. J. T. HEADLEY, EDITOR.

THE CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE, formerly under the care of Rev. D. Mead, commences its fourth volume under the editorship of Rev. J. T. Headley, author of "Napoleon and his Marshals," "Sacred Mountains," "Letters from Italy," &c. We hazard nothing in saying that this Magazine, so deservedly popular hitherto, is destined to fill a large place in public estimation; that it will not only maintain its present enviable [illegible]ction, but earn to itself a far higher popularity, and b[illegible] the companion of many a circle to which it is now a[illegible]ger, gladdening by its presence, while it exerts an influ[illegible] pure, elevating, and healthful. The Editor will bend his energies to make this the most popular Magazine of the day, and while he avails himself of articles from the best writers, he will draw freely from his own exhaustless store.

It will continue to maintain its high moral tone, and nothing will be admitted into its columns which will minister to the corrupt passions and tendencies of youth, or which "the author dying would wish to blot."

The design of the Editor and Publisher is to present a Magazine containing all the facination and interest of the lighter Periodicals, while at the same time it moves in a different path, and is not exposed to the same objections. It is issued monthly, containing 32 pages of original matter, printed on fine paper, in handsome covers, with a splendid steel engraving, and a beautiful colored flower, and music, to each number, and got up in every respect in the best style of the art, making a yearly volume of 384 pages, full of choice illustrations, and forming a handsome ornament to the Parlor Table, or a rich and valuable present to a friend.

☞ Price, two dollars a year. Three copies for five dollars.

A few good, responsible agents wanted to circulate this work; to whom the best inducements will be offered.

COMMENTARY FOR THE PEOPLE!

NOW PUBLISHING, THE ECLECTIC COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE, from the works of Henry and about one hundred other writers. The work is printed on fine paper, and with large, clear type. It will be completed in twenty-four parts, of eighty pages each, imperial size, all of which is now stereotyped. It will be beautifully illustrated by accurate views of scriptural scenes, designed especially to embellish a Commentary, and executed by the most eminent artists. Tables and charts are likewise added, where necessary, for purposes of illustration; the whole comprising as valuable a series of illustrative engravings and embellishments as have ever been united in any similar work. It may be used with any edition of the Bible. Will be published semi-monthly. Price, 25 cents per part.

The design of the Committee of the London Tract Society, under whose supervision the English work was prepared, has been to cover that ground where all evangelical denominations meet, and to make a plain and practical exposition of religious truth and duty.

This work is based on the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, and more than one hundred other writers in the various departments of Biblical Literature; the most important observations of these eminent divines being quoted, constituting a digest of the most valuable results at which the learned men of all ages have arrived in their critical study of the Holy Scriptures. Reference has been had to the wants of Sunday School Teachers, and of families engaged in the systematic study of the Scriptures.

Perhaps there never was a juncture of time when true religion more greatly needed a safeguard against attacks which are both boldly and insidiously aimed at her vital principles; perhaps true religion was never in a more perilous position between open enemies and pretended friends, than at this particular crisis; and surely never was it more incumbent than now, on every true friend of her holy precepts, every conscientious master of a household, every anxious parent, guardian and protector, to be provided with antidotes to the poison which is so unscrupulously scattered abroad, or an argument against each dangerous fallacy which is propounded to the injury and detriment of that religion, which is the faithful oracle of the Divine Creator, and the best exponent of His will.

The object of the compilers has been to provide a Commentary compact in size, moderate in price, and suited to Christians of every station, rank, and denomination.

"The family into whose hands this work comes, have in their possession a store of biblical science and practical instruction, of more value than gold. The republication is a great undertaking, and we hope it will receive an adequate support."—New York Observer.

"This Commentary has enjoyed extraordinary popularity as a practical exposition of God's Word. It differs from any other, presenting the best exegetical, illustrative and practical comments which the editors were able to select from the best scholars, on each passage, in course. The text being omitted, it is enabled to present a vast amount of learning in a small space. The sources from which it is compiled afford a perfect guaranty of its soundness, both of doctrine and interpretation, while the advantage of having the opinion of different commentators, is apparent and very great."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"We regard the Eclectic Commentary, now in course of publication by Mr. Shannon, as especially deserving the patronage of Protestant Christians. Its cheapness, beautiful finish of mechanical workmanship, and its comprehensiveness, embracing, as it does, the cream of all the commentaries, all entitle it to very high consideration."—Christian Parlor Magazine.

We have received the most favorable notices from many distinguished clergymen of various denominations of this country, and also from the press, which cannot be inserted in a newspaper advertisement on account of their length; they will be found on the cover of each part.
